To the thyrd, being an Interrogatory and beginning thus. * Item, whether. &c. And ending thus, ye did preach. I doe aunswere and say that I beganne to write a piece of my Sermon, and being soone weary thereof, I did leaue off and did make onely certayne notes of my sayd sermon and put the same notes in writing of myne owne hand without helpe or Counsell of anye other, and the same notes did shewe vnto my Chaplaynes Mayster Gylbert bourne, and Mayster Iohn Harpsfielde, both before and also since my sayd Sermon onely desiring them to put me in remembraunce of my sayde notes, and processe to bee made thereupon and also to searche out for me the names of such kinges as were in theyr minority, when they began to raigne.

To the fourth Article beginning thus. Item, that ye haue not declared. &c. * And ending thus, as it is in your Article. I doe aunswere and say that this Article doth dedepend vpon the first and seconde Articles here before denied, deduced in suche sort, maner, and forme, as is expressed in the same, and moreouer I saye that already aunswere is made hereunto by me, in my former aunsweres made to the sayd pretended denunciation.

To the fifth article beginning thus. Item that ye haue not. &c. And ending thus, declared it. I doe aunswere and say, * that this Article also doth depende vpon the first and second Articles, and that aunswere is made thereunto by me already in my former aunsweres, made vnto the sayd pretended denunciation, and moreouer I doe say, that for the better aduauncement and setting forth of the kings Maiestyes royall power and authority, euen in his mynoryty, and for the dew obedience of his Maiestyes Subiectes vnto his highnesse euen during the sayd minoritye, I had collected together aswell out of historyes, as also out of the Scripture of the olde Testament, the names of diuers kinges being in minority, who notwithstanding theyr sayd minority, faythfully, dewly and reueren••y obeyed, honoured, serued, taken and reputed, for very true and lawfull kinges, as Henry the third, being but nine yeares olde whē he entred to reigne and gouerne as king, Edward the thyrd being but thirtene yeares of age. Richard the second being but eleuen yeares of age. Henrye the sixt being not fully one yeare of age. Edward the 〈◇〉 being but eleuen yeare olde. Henry the eight being about eightene yeare olde, and so all these Kinges being in theyr minority as the Kinges Maiesty that now is, and yet hauing authority and power regall, as apperteyneth, and in the olde Testament Osias and Achaz, were verye true kynges in theyr minority, being but sixtene yeares of age. Salomon and Manasses being but xij. yeares of age. Iosias and Ioachim being but eight yeares of age, and I •as being but eight yeares olde, all which thinges I say I had collected, in notes communicating the same with my sayde two Chapleynes, and praying them to put mee in remēbraunce, if in numbring of them, or in setting forth my other notes at the tyme of my Sermon, I did faile,* or haue defaulte of memory in any wise, and all these thinges I would haue specially set forth in my sayde Sermon if they had come to my memory, as in deede they did not partlye for disturbaunce of my memory not accustomed to preache in that place, partly also by reason of a certeyne writing, that was sent to me from the Kinges Maiestyes priuie Counsel being of good length to declare to the people, touching the victory agaynst the rebels, specially in Norfolk, Deuonshyre, and Cornewall, confounding my memorye in thinges which before I had set in good order, and partly also for the falling away of my booke in the time of my said Sermon, in which were contened diuers of my sayd notes, touching the Kinges Maiestyes minority, as is aforesayd, hauing yet neuerthesse, otherwise in generality, and speciality, perswaded the people to obedience, vnto the kinges sayd Maiesty, whose minority to them and all other, is notoriously and manifestly knowne, and hys Maiesty sauing of these late Rebelles, faythfully, truely, and reuerently obeyed of all the rest of his Subiectes.

To the sixte, which beginneth, whether ye will. &c. And ending, the opinion or no. I do aunswere and saye, that not knowing certaynely of which Rebelles the Articles meaneth,* ne yet what theyr opiniō is in deed I ought not to be driuen to make aunswere hereunto, ne yet can make good and perfect aunswere therin though I would.

To the seuenth Article being thus. Item that ye know &c. And ending thus. The Kinges Maiesties booke. I doe answere and say that albeit I haue by the space of these 5. weekes, last past and more, bene in maner continually in businesse and trouble, aswell in prouiding for my said Sermon, as otherwise, specially by reason of my family, much vexed with sicknesse, to my great disquietnesse and charge, and also by reason that I haue bene so much troubled and combred, by informations and complayntes vniustly and vncharitably made agaynst me, ouer & besides the hauing of diuers and sondry persons, which dayly resort and come vnto me for theyr suites and businesse, both in matters of Iustice & otherwise, yet I haue not omitted to send forth to my Archdeacons and other my Officers, to enquire and search diligently in this behalfe, and to certify me accordingly, and yet I can not heare certaynely of any that haue heard, bene at, or celebrate Masses, or Euensong in the Latine tongue, after the olde rite and maner except it be in the house of my Lady Maryes Grace▪ or in the houses of the Ambassadors, ne yet there nor in any of them, but by flying & not assured report, & w^tout knowing the names & persōs that so haue heard, bene at, or celebrate the same, and in this behalfe how farre I can and ought to Page 1320 proceed and after what sort,* I do referre me vnto the statute, late made in that behalfe.

To the seuenth Article beginning thus. Item that ye haue. &c. And ending thus: punishment vnto them, I do aunswere and say that this Article doth depend of the next Article going before,* and so consequently answer is already therunto made.

To the ninthe Article beginning thus. Item, that ye know. &c. And ending thus: nor see them punished. I do aunswere and say that touching such as eyther hath bene denounced or detected for suche crimynous and culpable persons to me or my office there hath bene processe already made before my sayd offices as it appeareth in my Register,* and the Actes of my Courte, and moreouer I haue geuen expresse Commaundement to my sayd Officers, to enquire and search for more suche Offenders, and to cer••y me thereof, that I maye proc•ede agaynst them accordingly.

To the tenth Article beginning thus. Item ye were &c. And ending thus. The kinges Maiestyes authority in his minority.* I doe aunswere and say, that as touching the tyme mentioned in the Article, and the declaration to be made by Doctour Coxe. I doe not well remember, neither the sayd tyme nor yet the speciall poyntes, & substaunce of the sayd Doctour Coxes declaration, trueth it is, I was at a Sermon made at Paules Crosse by the sayd Doctour Coxe, wherein he inuayed against my Lord of Winchester, and as farre as I can now call to my remēbraunce, it was touching disobedience, wherewith my Lord of Winchester by the sayd Doctour Coxe seemed to be charged, and for a Sermon also that my Lord of Winchester was seemed to haue made before the kinges Maiesty in the Court of Westminster.

To the eleuenth Article beyng by it selfe deliuered vnto me the 14. of this present September. 1549. in the night at my house at London beginning thus.* Item that the rites. &c. and ending thus. The misuses thereof. I doe aunswere and say that I haue already geuen commaudemēt to mine officers to make diligent search and inquiry herein and to certify accordingly, to the intent I may proceede therein as apperteineth, and woulde before this time my selfe haue also enquired, and proceeded, had I not bene so of al sides opprest and postred, with multitude of other necessary busines as I haue bene to my great disquietnesse & trouble.

When he had ended the reading of these answeres, the Commissioners sayd vnto him that he had in the same very obscurely aunswere vnto the 5. Article ministred the 13 of Septēber:,* wherefore they willed him there expressly to aunswere by mouth, whether he had according to the Iniunctions deliuered vnto him, declared the Article beginning thus: You shall also set forth in your Sermō that our authority. &c. Whereunto he agayne answered, that he had already made a full and sufficient aunswere in writing, as he was bound to make by law.

*The Iudges then replied, that the aunsweres already made in that part were obscure and insufficiēt, so that it appeared not certaynely whether he had preached in deed according to the same Iniunction or not: and therefore they eftsoones willed him (as before) directly to aunswere whether he had so accordingly preached or no, the Byshop still yet aunswering as before.

The Iudges agayne demaunded of him, whether hee would otherwise aunswere or no.* To the which he sayde no, vnlesse the law did compell him. Then they asked hym whether he thought the law did compell him to aunswere more fully or no? He aunswere no: adding farther that he was not bound to make aunswere to such positions.

The Commissioners then seeing his froward contumacy, told him playnly that if he persisted thus in his frowardnes, and would not otherwise answere, they would according to law, take him pro confesso, and ex abundanti re|ceiue witnesse agaynst him, & therewithall did agayne recite vnto him 6. of the first and principall articles, demaūding his final answere therunto. Who said (as before) that he had already fully answered them by writing, but where they requested to haue his notes, which he sayde he hadde made of his sermon, they should haue thē if they would sēd for thē. And whereas in his aunswere to the 6. Article he doubted what the opinion of the rebels was, the Iudges declared vnto him that theyr opinion was: That the kinges majesty before his grace came to the age of 21. yeares, had not so full authority to make lawes and statutes,*as when he came to farther yeares: and that his subiectes were not bound to obey the lawes and statutes made in his young age. Whereunto the byshop aunswere that he was not of the opinion of the Rebels mentioned in that Article, as did well appeare by his aunsweres aswell vnto the denunciation, as also vnto the 5. Article objected agaynst him.

Which ended they perceiuing his scornfull carelesnes, presently did admitte for witnes vpon the Articles objected agaynst him, Mayster Iohn Cheke, Henry Markehā,* Iohn Ioseph, Iohn Dowglas, and Richard Chambers, whome also they onerated with a corporall othe vpon the holy Euangelistes, tru•ly to aunswere and depose vppon the same Articles in the presence of the Byshop, who vnder his former Protestation, like a wilye Lawyer, protested of the nullity of the re•eiuing, admitting, and swearing of those witnesses, with Protestation also to object agaynst the persons & sayinges of the witnesses for the time and place conuenient:* demaunding also a competent and lawfull time to minister Interrogatories agaynst them, with a copy of all the Actes to that day. Wherwith the delegates were wel pleased, and assigned him to minister his Interrogations, agaynst Maister Cheeke on that present day, and agaynst the rest the next day before noone.

All whiche Interrogatories who so listeth to peruse, may here vnder read the same as foloweth.

¶Certayne Interrogatories exhibited by Boner to be ministred agaynst the foresayd witnesses, vpon the Articles aboue mentioned 18. September.

I Edmund Byshop of London vnder my Protestations heretofore made, before you, doe minister these interrogatoryes ensewing, agaynst all and singuler the pretenced Witnesses already receiued and sworne as hereafter to be receyued and sworne agaynst me the sayd Byshoppe in thys matter, requiring and desiring vnder the sayd Protestation, that all and singuler the sayde pretended Witnesses may be examined in vrytue of theyr othe vppon the sayde Interrogatoryes, and euerye part and percill of them.

1. First that all and singuler the sayd Witnesses in vrytue of theyr othe be examined generally and specially of al and singuler Interrogatories, commōly vsed and accustomed to be made in such matters, especially touching their age, theyr condition their dwelling place, now and heretofore. by the space of these 12. yeares last past, with whom all thys tyme they haue also dwelled, and bene familiar or conuersant with all, with the names of the places and persons and other circumstances expedient in this behalfe, and by whom they haue bene foūd and mayntained, and for what purpose. Et interrogetur coniunctim, diuisim, & de quolibet.

2. Item, touching the pretended Articles made in thys behalfe, and Iniunctions mentioned in the same, that they and euery of them in virtue of theyr sayd othe, maye be examined whether they knowe the sayde Articles and Iniunctions to be true in all parts, how they know them to be true, by whom, when, and in what place deposing the formall wordes of the sayd pretended Articles and Iniunctions in especially as they are deduced. The first Article. And therein let them depose,* how he or they knew the said Articles and Iniunctions to be receiued from the Kyngs Maiesty, how also he or they knewe that I the sayd Byshoppe receiued the sayde Iniunctions at the handes of the Lord Protectors Grace. How also they were sitting in the Counsell Chamber, moreouer which were the rest of the Counsell then sitting, specifiyng theyr names and surnames, or titles. Also whether the x. of August this present yeare, or of the last yeare, moreouer whether the Articles or iniunctions were ioyned together, or apart, whether the tenor thereof, and the forme and maner of the doing and folowing, touching me the sayd Byshop and also touching the preaching therunto, as is deduced in the first Article, declaring moreouer, when, where, and how I the sayd Byshop accepted the sayde Iniunctions or promised to obserue and folow the same, and by what expresse wordes. & interrog. vt supra.

3. Item, whether they or any of them, were present at my last sermon, made at Paules Crosse, where they then stode, by whom, when they came to it, and at what part of the sayd Sermon, how long they taryed therat, at what part thereof or in all they were offended, what were the formall wordes, or at the least wise in substaunce that I the sayd Byshop then vttered, or wherewith they were offended, and by what occasion, and who with him or then did heare it, & in what place theyr contestes did stand how long they taryed, and at what part they came thither or departed thence. & interrog. vt supra.

4. Item, whether the sayd witnesse or any of them, were desired or required, by any person or persons, to be Wytnesse in this matter, and by whom, when where and how the same was done, and in whose presence. & interrogetur vt supra.

Page 13215. Item, whether they or any of them had consulted wyth other to come vnto my sayd sermon, for what purpose, by whom they were induced and moued and how they agreed, and what they did after my sayd sermon for the impugnation or deprauiing therof & interrog. vt supra.

6. Item, whether they or any of them haue bene or be conuersant or familiar, with any that hath bene knowne, noted, or reputed, for a sacramentary, in denying the veritye of Christes true and corporall presence in the sacrament of the aultar, and whether he and they detest and abhorre & absteine from the company of all suche persons, as be vnknowne, noted, or suspected, for sacramentaryes in that be halfe, and what opinion he and they haue with theyr contestes touching the sayd presence. & interrog. vt supra.

7. Item, whether they or any of them, haue wished me the sayd Bishop to be depriued or put in prison, and whether they or any of thē, haue reported and sayd that I shall be depriued or imprisoned, reioysing thereof, and for what cause they haue so wished or reported, or any of theyr contestes. & interrog. vt supra.

8. Item, whether they or any of them haue bene in times past, a Frier, Preacher minorite, Augustine, or Carmelite, Monke, Canon obseruant, or religious person, professing solemnely pouerty, chastitye, and obedience, according to the lawes, customes, or ordinaunces of this Realme, then vsed and obserued. & interrog. vt supra.

9. Item, whether they or any of them, being so professed haue bene or be since that time maryed to any person, hauing likewise or otherwise bene professed or lose, or bene a widow and how oft they haue bene maryed, and whether any of theyr wiues bene yet alieue. & interrog. vt supra.

10. Item, whether they or any of them haue read the commission in this matter, and whether they or any of them do know or thinke, that the commission, Iniunctions, Articles, and denunciation do agree togethers or no, & wherin they thinke or knowe discrepantes, or diuersityes to be betwene them in this behalfe. & interrog. vt supra.

11. Item, if they or any of them do depose, that I haue not sincerely and wholly declared as is contened in the second article,* let him and euery of them be examined in vertue of theyr othe, how they do know it, and by what meanes, declaring how they thinke to haue knowledge therein with them. & interrogetur vt supra.

12. Item, if they or any of thē do depose that I haue trangressed and offended in the fourth article beginning thus. Item that ye haue not declared.* &c. Let them and euery of them be examined in virtue of theyr othe, whether they know that these wordes folowing, as Mattens, Masses, now sayd after that sort in this Realme: were and be put in the Iniunction pretended to be ministred vnto me the sayd Bishop or no. & interrogetur vt supra.

13. Item, if they or any of them do depose that I haue tran'gressed and offended touching the 5. Article, let them and euery of them be examined in virtue of theyr othe,* whether the Iniūctions pretended in this behalfe were signed with the kinges vsuall signet, or rather at all, whether it was sealed with any seale, whether it was subscribed by the L. Protectors grace, or any of the priuie Counsell, whether it was in full Counsell sitting deliuered vnto mee by the Lord protector, whether it was deliuered to me, the rest of the kinges Maiestyes priuie Counsell there then sittynge, whether the sayd dayes as is contened in the first Article, by whom it was written when and where. & interrogetur vt supra.

14. Item, if they or any of them do depose, that I do defēd the opinion of the rebels,* let them be examined, & euery of thē what rebels they be, what is their opinion, & how the lawe of this Realme doth determine therein, declaring by what wordes & factes I the sayd Bishop did speake & do, and at what time and place, and in whose presence, suche wordes or act was spoken or done. & interrog. vt supra.

*15. Item, if they or any of them doe depose that I knowe or haue heard say crediblye that since the time of the sayde pretensed Iniunctions certayn persons within my dioces haue heard, bene at, or celebrate Masse or Euensong in the latine tongue, and after the olde rite and maner, other then according to the kinges maiestyes booke, let them and euery of them be examined in virtue of his sayd othe, how they know that I so know, or haue heard say, and of the name or names, of the partye or parties, and of the tyme and place when, and where it was, and whether any denunciation or detection were according to the statutes and ordinaunces of this Realme, made vnto me or no. & interrog. vt supra.

16. Item, if they or any of them doe say, that I knowe or haue heard say,* of such notable adulterers, & offences mentioned in the 9. article, let them and euery of them be examined in virtue of his and theyr othe, that they do knowe, that I do know, or haue heard say, and who be the persōs▪ where they dwell, who hath denounced or detected them▪ and how I could and ought to haue cited them & punished them in this behalfe. & interrog. vt supra.

17. Item if they or any of them doe say that I knowe certainly nowe,* what Doctour Coxe declared in hys Sermon at Paules Crosse, as is deduced in the 10. Article, let them be inquired and euery of them in virtue of theyr oth, how they can proue it, by whom, and after what sort. & interrog. vt supra.

18. Item, if they or any of them do say, that I do know, or heare certaynely of the diuersity of the rites of the commō seruice of the church, nowe set forth, and of the ministers▪* parsons transgressing therein, let them and euery of them in virtue of theyr othe bee examined, whether there hath bene any detection, or denuntiation made to me therupon, and how they know or can proue, that I haue bene culpable and negligent herein. & interrog. vt supra.

19. Item, whether they or any of them, haue bene spoken vnto, or solicited herein to testify and after what sorte•, by whom, when, and where, and what was theyr conference and communication therin. & interrog. supra.

20. Item that they and euery of them declare and shewe the true and sufficiēt cause of theyr testimony in all and singuler the premisses.

After this the Iudges delegate assigned the Bishop to appeare againe before them vpon Wednesday the next ensuing, betwene the houres of 7. and 8. of the clocke before noone, in the Hall of the Archbishops manor of Lambet•,* there to shew the cause why he should not be declared pro confesso, vpon al the Articles wherunto he had not thē fully answered, and to see farther processe done in the matter: and so (he still protesting of the nullity and inuadility of all theyr procedinges) they did for that present depart.

In this meane while the Commissioners certified the kinges Maiesty and his Counsell of the Bishops demeanour towards them,* and what obiections he had made agaynst theyr procedinges, making doubtes and ambiguities whether by the tenor of his maiesties Commission the Commissioners might proceed not onely at the denuntiation, but also of theyr meere office: and also whether they mought aswell determine, as heare the cause. Whereupon his Maiesty by aduise aforesayd, for the better vnderstanding therof, did the 17. of September send vnto the Commissioners a full and perfect declaration and interpretatiō of his will and pleasure in the foresayd Commission, geuing them hereby full authority to proceed at theyr owne discretions, as appeareth more at large by the tenor therof ensuing.

¶A certayne declaration or interpretation of the king touching certayne poyntes and doubtes in his former Commission, with licence geuen to the Commissioners, as well to determine as to heare in the case of Boner.

EDward the 6. by the grace of God king of England, Fraunce,* and Ireland, defendor of the fayth and of the Church of England and also of Ireland in earth the supreme head, to the moste reuerend father in God Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitane and Primate of England, the right reuerend Father in God Nicholas Byshop of Rochester, our trusty and right welbeloued Counsellours Syr William Peter, and Syr Thomas Smyth Knightes or two principal Secretaries, and William May Doctor of law Ciuill and Deane of Paules greeting. Where we of late, by the aduise of our most entyrelly beloued Vncle Edward Duke of Somerset, Gouvernor of our Person, and Protectour of our Re•lmes, Dominions and subiects, and the rest of our priuy Counc•, haue addressed vnto you. 5.4.3. of you our letters patentes of Cōmission bearing date at Westminster the 8. daye of September in the third yeare of our raign, willing you by force therof to heare the matters and cause of contempt therein expressed, and calling before you, aswell the denouncers therof, as also the right reuerend Father in God, Edmund Bishop of London, agaynst whom such denunciation is made as in our sayd letters of Commission more at large doth appeare, we be now credibly informed that vpon the sayd Commission diuers doubtes & ambiguities hath and may arise.

As whether you by the tenour of the sayd Commission may proceed not onely at the denunciation, but also of mere office.

And also whether ye may aswell determine as heare the sayd cause.

For further declaration whereof, we doe now interpret and declare that our full minde and pleasure, by the aduise aforesayd▪ was by our Cōmission and now is, that you should proceede a•well by mere office, as also by the way of denūciatiō & by either of them, or any other wayes or meanes at your discretiōs, wherby Page 1322 the truth and merites of the cause may be most speedely and b•st knowne, and that ye might and may aswell finally determine as heare the sayd matters in all your orders and doinges, cutting away all vayne and superfluous delayes, & hauing respect to the onely trueth of the matter. And this our declaration we send vnto you of our sure knowledge and meere motion by the aduise aforesayd, supplying all default, ceremony and poynt of the lawe, which hath, shall, or maye arise of your doinges by reason of anye default of wordes in our sayde former Commission or any parte thereof, any law, statute, or act to the contrary notwithstanding, and therefore we will and commaund you to proceed in the sayde matters accordingly, aswell to our foresayd Commission, as thys our declaration, and so faile ye not. In witnesse whereof we haue made these our letters patentes. At Hampton Court, the xvij. day of September.

¶The fourth Session agaynst Boner Byshop of London before the kinges Commissioners in the great Hall at Lambeth the eight of September.

AFTER this declaration being sent downe and receyued from the Kyng, the Byshop of London (according to the Commissioners assignement the Monday before.) appeared agayne before them vpon Wednesday, the xvij. of September, in the great Hall at Lambeth. Where vnder his wonted Protestation,* first he declared that althoughe he had already sufficiently aunswered all thinges: yet further to satisfy the terme assigned vnto him, to shewe cause why he ought not to be declared pro confesso, vpon the Articles theretofore ministred agaynst him, and to the which he had not fully aunswered, he had then a matter in writing to exhibite vnto them,* why he ought not so to be declared, which he read there openly. Wherin first vnder his accustomed vnreuerent termes of pretended, vniust, & vnlawfull processe and assignation, he said he was not bound by the law (for good & reasonable causes) to obey the same, especially theyr assignation.

And first, for that the same was onely pronounced by Syr Thomas Smith, one of the pretended Commissioners, without the consent of his pretended Colleagues? or at the least he as a Commissioner did prescribe the Actuary what to write, whiche he ought not to haue done, because by law he ought not to haue intermeddled therein, for that his Colleagues did the first day begin to sit as Iudges agaynst him the Bishop, without the presence of the sayde Syr Thomas Smith.

And secondly because his aunsweres, aswell vnto the pretended denunciation,* as also vnto all the articles theretofore objected agaynst him, were as full and sufficient, as the law required (or at least wyse there was nothyng good in law apparant to the contrary) and therfore he was not enforced by lawe farther to aunswere without farther allegation.

And because also, that all theyr proceedings therto were so extraordinarily done, that they had confounded all maner of lawfull processe, sometimes proceeding ad denunciandū sometimes ex officio mero, and sometimes ex officio mixto, contrary vnto the kinges Ecclesiasticall lawes, and cōtrary also vnto theyr Commission in that behalfe.

And likewise because diuers of the Articles pretended were superfluous and impertinēt, not reuealing though they were proued,* conteyning in them vntruth and falsity, some obscure and vncertaine, some depending vpon other articles, either denyed, or at the least qualified, some captious and deceitfull to bring the aunswere into a snare, and some also beyng Articles of the lawe, in such sort, as by the Ecclesiasticall lawes of this Realme the kinges subiectes were not bound to make aunswere thereunto.*

And lastly, because that Syr Thomas Smith Secretary to the kinges Maiesty,* when that the Byshop was last with the Counsell in the Counsell Chamber at White Hall, after the departure of the Lorde Protectour and the rest of the counsell, did himselfe alone (without any other) write certayne Articles or Iniūctions (amongest the whiche was that of the kinges authority in his minority) and afterward did copy the same at a table within the sayd coūsell Chamber, and so himselfe did deliuer them vnto hym. By reason whereof that is not true, which in the Cōmission, denunciation and Articles was deduced and objected agaynst him.*

When these fonde and friuolous obiections were thus read, the archbishop seing his inordinate and vntollerable contempt towardses them, charged him very sharply saying: My Lord of Londō, if I had sittē here onely as Archbishop of Canterbury, it had bene your part to haue vsed your selfe more lowly, obediently & reuerently towardses me then ye haue: but seing that I with my Colleagues sit here now as Delegates from the kinges Maiesty, I must tell you plaine, you haue behaued your selfe to to much inordinately. For at euery time that we haue sittē in cōmission, you haue vsed such vnseemely fashions without all reuerence and obedience, geuing taūtes and checkes, aswell vnto vs, with diuers of the seruants and Chaplaynes, as also vnto certayn of the auncientest that be here,* calling thē fooles and Dawes, with such like, as that you haue geuen to the multitude an intolerable exāple of disobediēce. And I ensure you my Lord, there is you and one other Bishop whō I could name, that haue vsed your selues so contēptuously & disobediently, as the like I think hath not before bene heard of or sene: whereby ye haue done much harme.

At which wordes,* the grosse Byshop (a Beast a man might iustly terme him) sayd scornefully to the Archbishop you shew your selfe to be a meete Iudge.

The Archbishop then proceeding, •ayde to his charge how vndiscreetly the last day in the Chappell he had called all the the people Woodcockes.*

Whereunto he aunswered, that the last Session William Latimer one of the denouncers beyng there present,* had practised with the audience that when he lifted vp his hand to them, they shoulde (and did as it were by a token geuen them) say as he sayd, and doe as he did: as one tyme vpon the lifting vp of his hand, they cryed nay, nay, and at an other time yea, yea, & laughed they could not tell wherat, with such like fashions.

Unto which wordes Latimer seing his vayne suspition, replied,* saying that he lifted not vp his hād at any time but onely to cause them hold theyr peace.

Then Secretary Smith sayd to the Bishop, that in all his writings and aunsweres that he had hitherto layd in,* he would not once acknowledge them as the kings Commissioners, but vsed alwayes Protestations with diuers incke horne and naughty termes, calling them pretended Commissioners, pretended Delegates,* pretended Commission, pretended articles, pretended proceedinges, so that all thinges were pretended with him. In deede (sayde he) such termes the Proctors of churches vse, to delay matters for theyr Clientes when they will not haue the truth known▪ But you my Lord to vse vs the kinges maiestyes cōmissioners w^t such termes, you do therin very lewdly & naugh^ttely. And I pray you what other thing did the rebels.

For when Letters or Pardons were brought them from the King and his Counsell,* they woulde not credite them, but sayd they were none of the kinges or his Counselles, but Gentlemens doings, and made vnder a bushe, with such like termes. But now my Lord, because hitherto we can not make you confesse whether in your Sermon that you preached, ye omitted the Article touching y^e kinges maiestyes authority in his tender age or not, but still haue sayd that ye wil not otherwise answere then ye haue done, and that ye haue already sufficiently aunswered (with many such like delayes) so as we canne by no meanes induce you to confesse playnely what you did, yea or nay: therfore I say, to the intent we may come to the truth, we haue dilated the matter more at large, and haue drawne out other Articles whereunto you shall be sworne, and then I trust you will dally with vs no more as you haue done. For although you make your answers in writing, yet you shall be examined by vs and make your aunsweres by mouth to the same Articles, or els you shall do worse. In deede I do not (as I sayd) discommende your Protestations and termes of law, if it were in a young Proctour that woulde helpe his Clientes cause: but in you it may not be suffered so to vse the kinges Commissioners.

Then did the Delegates minister vnto him certayne new Articles and Iniunctions,* and did there onerate him with a corporall othe in forme of law to make a full & true aunswere thereunto. The Byshop notwithstanding still (according to his wonted maner) vnder his former Protestation protested of the nullity and inuadility of these articles, Iniunctions, & processe, desiring also a Copy therof, with a competent time to aunswere thereunto.* To whō the Iudges decreed a Copy, commaunding him to come to his examination to the Archbishop the next day at 8. of the clocke before noone.

Then the Commissioners did receiue for witnesse,* vpon those new Articles nowe ministred vnto the Byshop, Syr Iohn Mason, Syr Thomas Chalenor Knyghtes, Maister William Cicill, Armygell Wade, and Wylliam Hunninges Clerkes to the Kinges Maiesties Counsell, whom they onerated with a corporall othe in the presence of the Bishoppe, who still protested of the nullity of theyr receiuing and swearing, obiecing agaynst them and theyr sayinges: and therwith repeating his Interrogatories already ministred, sayde he had moe to minister by to morow at 8. of the clocke.

Page 1323The same day and time likewise the Bishop exhibited vnto the Commissioners an information, or rather cauillation agaynst William Latimer, for that he, notwithstanding that he had in all his talke pretended the great tranquility of this Realme,* which was greatly impeached and hindered when that any the kinges subiects should think that his maiesty hath not as full power and authority roiall in his minority, as when his Maiesty came to perfect age, or should thinke that his subiectes were not bound to obey the same, yet hath of late there in opē audience reported, that he hath heard with his cares diuers persons vnreuerently speak of the kings Maiesty saying: tush y^e king is but a babe or child, what lawes can he make? or what cā he do in his minority? let him haue a tost & butter or bread and milke, & that is more meter for him thē to make lawes or statutes or bind vs to obey thē: we are not bound to obey till he be past his minority, & come to his full and perfect age: with the hearing of which wordes the Byshoppe also charged the Commissioners, and that because Latymer at the recitall of the same in theyr presēce, was neither by them cōtroled, nor yet caused to bring forth the same per'sons, but was let passe in silence, sauing that he the sayd bishop did speake agaynst him in that behalfe, saying that he would detecte him, because that, as it appeared he had of long time cōcealed the wordes and not opened the same in such place and to such persōs as he ought to haue done, but had kept the person and sayinges of them secret,* either not taking the matter of such importaunce as he pretended, or els therby vnfaythfully behauing himselfe, towards his Prince, and therefore was worthy with his ayders, fauourers, and counsellors to be punished.

These vayne cauillations ended, the Commissioners for that day finished theyr Session, assigning the Byshop to appeare in that same place again vpon monday thē next folowing betwene the houres of 6. and 9. in the forenoone,* then and there to shew a finall cause why he should not be declared pro confesso. And so deliuering him a cōpye of the articles, they departed: the contentes whereof ensue.

¶Articles and positions geuen by the kinges Commissioners to the Byshop of London, to be answered by him ioynly and seuerally in euery poynt the second time.

1. THat ye were sent for to the Lord Protectors Grace, and the rest of the Counsell,* and came thyther into the Court at Westminster the x. of August, or some other day of the same moneth.

2. Item, that at the same time the Lord Protectour and diuers other of the Kinges Maiesties priuie Counsell, sitting in Counsell, ye were called in, and there the sayde Lorde Protectour did on the Kinges Maiestyes behalfe declare vnto you diuers faultes & abuses the which were found in you, and gaue you strait charge to amend them, adding and threatning that els you shoulde be otherwyse looked vnto.

3. Item, that the sayd Lord Protector's Grace did declare vnto you for better admonition & amendment of you, that ye should haue from the kinges Maiesty by his aduise and the rest of the priuy Counsell, certayne Articles, and Iniunctions to obserue and folow geuen you in writing.

4. Item, that there and then the sayd Lord Protectour commaunded Sir Thomas Smith Knight, Secretary to the Kinges Maiesty, to read a certayne proper booke of Iniunctions and Articles vnto you, the sayd Secretarye standing at the Counsell tables end, and you standing by, and hearing the same.

5. Item, that the sayde Lord Protectour there and then willed to be reformed certayne thinges in the sayd booke of Iniunctions, as where ye wer appoynted to preach sooner, at your request it was appoynted vnto you to preache the Sonday three weekes after the date of the sayd writing.

6. Item, that in the sayd Articles the Lord Protector's Grace found fault because an Article or commaundement vnto you set forth and declared of the Kynges Maiestyes authority now in his yong age, of his lawes and statutes in the same tyme was omitted, and therefore either immediatly before you came into the Counsell Chamber, or you being present and standing by, commaunded the sayde Secretary Smith to put it in writing and annexe it to the rest of the Articles.

7. Item, that the sayd Secretary Smith, then and there did immediately vpon commaundement, write into the sayd booke or paper, wherein the rest of the Articles were written, the sayd article: videlicet, you shall also set forth in your sermon, that the authority of our royall power is (as truth it is) of no lesse authority and force in this our yong age, then was of any of our Predecessors, though the same were much elder, as may appeare by example of Iosias & other young kinges in the scripture, and therefore all our subiectes to be no lesse bounde to the obedience of our preceptes, lawes, and statutes, then if we were of 30. or 40. yeares of age.

8. Item, that the Lord Protectour did so deliuer you the booke or paper, willing first the sayd Secretary Smyth to amend all thinges as he had appoynted.

9. Item, that ye then and there did promise to the Lorde Protector's grace, that ye would obserue & fulfill all in the sayd Iniunctions and articles contained.

10. Item, that all thinges in the sayde booke, put in and mentioned by the sayd Secretary Smith, and the same▪ so read vnto you by him & you first agreing that all that was by him so written, was by the L. Protector's appoyntmēt, the sayd booke was so deliuered vnto you then and there by the sayd Secretary Smith in the Councell Chamber.

11. Item, that you haue the sayd booke in your possession, or els know where it is, the true copy whereof in effect is annexed to these articles.

12. Item, that ye were commaūded in the sayd Iniunctions to preach the Sondag three weekes after the deliury therof at Paules, & there to entreat vpon certayn articles, as is specified in the sayd booke of Iniunctions, and specially the sayd article beginning. Ye shall also set forth, & ending. 30. or 40. yeares of age.

13. Item, that for the accomplishment of part of the sayde Iniunctions & commaundement, you did preach the fyrst day of September last past at Paules Crosse.

14. Item, that at the sayd sermon, contrary to your Iniunctions, ye omitted & left out y^e sayde article beginning: Ye shall also set forth in your sermon. &c. and ending 30. or 40. yeares of age.

15. Ye shall also aunswere whether ye thinke and beleue that the kinges Maiesties subiectes be bound to obey as well the lawes, statutes, proclamations, and other ordinaunces made now in this young age of the kinges maiesty, as the lawes, statutes, proclamations, & ordinaunces made by his highnes Progenitors.

These Articles being thus ministred to the sayd Byshop of London, the next day being Thursday and the 19. of September, the afore named Commissioners sat in the Archbishops chamber of presence at Lambeth, attendyng the cōming of the B. of London. Before whō there appeared Rob. Iohnson the Bishops Register, and there did de'clare vnto the Commissioners that the bishop his maister could not at that time personally appeare before thē without great daunger of his bodily health, because that he feared to fall into a feuer by reasō of a cold that he had takē by to much ouerwatching himselfe the last night before, wher^yby he was compelled to keepe his bed: neuerthelesse, if hee could without daunger of his bodely health,* he would appeare before them the same day at after noone. This excuse the Iudges were cōtēt to take it in good part. Yet said M. Secretary Smyth, that if he were sicke in deede the excuse was reasonable and to be allowed: but (quoth he) I promise you my Lord hath so dallied with vs, & vsed hitherto such delayes, that we may mistrust that this is but a fayned excuse: howbeit vpon your faythfull declaratiō we are content to tary vntil one of the clocke at afternoone, and so they did, willing M. Iohnson to signify then vnto them, whether the Bishop could appeare or not.

At whiche houre Robert Iohnson and Richard Rogers gentleman of the Bishops chamber appeared agayn before the Commissioners,* declaring that (for the causes afore alledged) their maister could not appeare at that tyme nether. Wherupon M. Secretary Smith sayd vnto them, my Lord of Londō your maister hath vsed vs very homely, and sought delayes hitherto, and now perhaps perceiuing these last Articles to touch the quicke, and therefore loth to come to his answere, he fayneth himselfe sicke.* But because he shall not so deceiue vs any more, we wyll send the Knight Marshall vnto him, willing him, if he be sycke in deed, to let him alone, for that is a reasonable excuse, but if he be not sicke, then to bring him forth with vnto vs: for I promise you he shall not vse vs as he hath done, we will not take it at his handes: and therefore M. Iohnson (sayd he) you do the part of a trusty seruant as becommeth you, but it is also your part to shewe my Lord of his stubborne hart and disobedience, which doth him more harme thē be is aware of. What, thinketh he to stand with a king in his own Realmes? Is this the part of a subiect? nay,* I wene we shall haue a new Tho. Becket. Let him take heede, for if he play these parts, he may fortune to be made shorter by the head. He may appeale if he thinke good: but whyther? to the Byshop of Rome? So he may helpe hymselfe forwards. I say he can not appeale but to the same king who Page 1324 hath made vs his Iudges, and to the Bench of his counsaile: and how they will take this matter when they heare of it, I doubt not. He would make mē beleue that he were called before vs for preaching his opinion of the sacramēt, wherein I assure you he did both falsly & naughtily, yea & lewdly, and more then became hym, and more then he had in commaundement to do, for he was not willed to speake of that matter, & perhaps he may heare more of that hereafter: but yet he will say no such thing to his charge, and therefore we wyll not haue hym to delay vs as he doth. Which ended, the delegates notwithstanding decreed to tary agayne for him vntill two of the clocke at after noone the nexte day, beyng Friday, and the twenty of September.

The v. Action or processe the xx. of September, agaynst Boner Byshop of London, before the kings Commissioners.

AT which day and tyme the Bishop appeared hymselfe personally before thē in the same chamber of presence.* Where first he did exhibite his answers vnto the last Articles ministred vnto hym the 18. of September. The contents wherof here vnder follow.

¶The aunswer of the sayd Bishop of London, made vnto the Articles ministred vnto hym the second tyme.

THE aunswers of me Edmund bishop of London, vnder myne accustomed protestation geuen vnto the Articles of late ministered and exhibited agaynst me here in this court, with speciall protestation also, that I doe not intend in any wise to make aunswere to any of the sayd articles, otherwise then the lawe of this Realme doth bynd me to doe, nor to speake or say contrary to any thyng that in my former aunsweres I haue sayd or done, and that if so chaunce me to do, it is not nor shall not be with my good will, or full consent, and that so soone as I shall perceyue it, I intend to reuoke it, and so now as than, and then as now, doe so in that case reuoke, to all honest and lawfull purposes.

To the first Article I do aunswere and say, that there was a Messenger whose name I knowe not,* that came vnto me to Fulham as I nowe remember, but I doe not remember the day thereof, and he sayd that my Lord Protectours grace required me to come by and by to speake with hym. And thereupon hauyng made the sayd messenger to breake hys faste, I repayred to the Court at Westminster, but not (vpon the tenth day of August, but some other day of the sayd month.

To the second Article I doe say, that it is obscure, incertayne and ouer generall,* especially in those at the same tyme, which may be referred to the tenth of August, and than aunswere already is made thereunto, and it may be referred to some other day of the sayd month of August, either before the x. of August or after. And because it remayneth vndeclared, I am not bound in law to aunswer vnto it, neyther yet to those wordes and sentence in the sayd Article (it is to wit) then and there, for they without declaration, are incertaine, obscure and generall, and I before the specification, and declaration thereof, not bound herein to make an aunswer, specially hauyng already made full and sufficient answer in this matter, accordyng to the commission as I do take it, and accordyng vnto the law which also willeth that if a certaine answer be looked for, the position and Article must before be certaine.

To the 3.4.5.6.7.8.9.10.11.12.13. and 14, Article, he answereth all after one maner and sort,* as thus. That it doth depend of the former Articles, to which for causes aforesayd, he sayth, he is not bound in law to make answer vnto, especially hauyng already made.

Sauyng that in the sixt he addeth thereunto, that he at no tyme heard the L. Protector find fault, nor commaunded as is deduced in the sayd Article, so farre as he doth finde.

Also sauynge the 7. Article where he addeth neuertheles confessing and knowledging with heart and mouth, the kings maiesties authoritie, and regal power in his minoritie, as well and full as in his maioritie.

Also sauynge the 8.9.10. and 11. articles, where he addeth as they be deduced, they are not true, as appeareth in conser•ing one with other.

To the 12. and 14. Articles, he addeth, as they be deduc•ed they are not true. Confessing neuerthelesse, the Kings Maiesties authoritie and power regall, as before is ex•resse•.

To the 15. Article he aunswereth and sayth, that it is a position of law, and that yet both now,* and heretofore he hath made aunswer thereunto in effect and substaunce, as appeareth in his former aunswers, and so shal do always according to the law and his bounden duetie, knowledging as he hath already done, the kings maiesties regall power in his minoritie, to be no lesse then in his maioritie. And the subiects bound to obey vnto his grace, his lawes, statutes, and ordinaunces, and his sayd authoritie, as well in hys minoritie, as in hys maioritie, not allowyng, but expresly condemnyng the opinion of all rebels holding the contrary.

After this perceiuyng that M. Secretary Smith was somewhat more quicke with hym then others of the Commissioners, and that he would not suffer him any longer to dally out the matter with his vaine quiddities and subtleties in law, but euer earnestly vrged him to go directly to his matter,* and therewithall sometymes sharply rebuking him for his euill and stubborne behaiour towards them: he to deface his authoritie (as he thought) did also then exhibite in writyng a recusation of the Secretaries iudgement against him. The forme and maner wherof, as he exhibited it vnto the iudges, I thought here also to exhibite vnto the Reader as here vnder followeth.

¶The recusation of the Iudgement of Syr Thomas Smith, made by the B. of London the first tyme.

IN the name of God, Amen. Forasmuch as equitie,* naturall reason, and all good lawes do require, that Iudges shall be of that integritie, wisdom, circumspection, learnyng and indifferencie, that exercising the office and rowme of a Iudge, they may & shall do it, without hatred, malice o• grudge agaynst any person conuented or called before them vprightly, sincerely, and duely executyng and doyng their office vnto them in any wyse committed: and for as much also as all iudgementes and processe ought to haue their due course, and proceede without suspition or corruption in any wyse: and finally, for as much as very dangerous it is to appeare and make defence before an incompetent Iudge, who commonly and accustomedly of priuate & vnlawful corrupt affectiō to the one side, & for malice, hatred and enuy borne against the other side, rather serueth his carnall, corrupt, and wilfull appetite,*then any thyng is mooued to obedience and keeping of good order, law, or reason, touching him that is conuented and compelled to make aunswer against his will: I therefore Edmond Bishop of London, hauing perceiued and felt by all the sayings, proceedings and doyngs of you sir Thomas Smith Knight, one of the two principall Secretaries to the kings Maiestie in this matter attempted and mooued agaynst me, that ye haue bene, and yet continually are a notorious and manifest enemy of me the sayd Edmond, and much offended that I should in any wyse alledge and say, or vse, any such things for my most defence, as the law geueth me licence and libertie to do, yea hearyng most fauourably and effectually my denouncers and enemies with both eares in any thyng that they shall alledge, purpose, attempt, or do agaynst me, though their persons in lawe are not in any wyse to be heard or admitted, ne yet their sayinges true, and not hearing me so much as with one eare in my lawfull saiengs and doinges in this behalfe, but contrarywise openyng your mouth at large, ye haue sundry tymes, against good wisdom and reason outraged in wordes and deedes against me the sayd Edmond, saying among other wordes, that I did as theeues, murtherers and traytors are woont to doe, beyng my selfe as ye vntruly did say, inward in deed, culpable, and yet outward otherwyse, vnable to defend the matter against me, but onely by takyng exceptions, and making friuolous allegations agaynst my Iudges and Commissioners, and that I haue bene and am as sturdye, wilfull, and disobedient, as may be in your iudgement and opinion, maintaining and vpholding the rebels and their opinions, and that I shall aunswer by mouth, or els smart and doe worse, or els ye will send me to the Tower, there to sit and be ioyned with Kette and Humfrey Arundell the Rebels: ouer and besides diuers other threatnings and comminatorie wordes by you pronounced and vttered vnseemely, and far vnmeet to proceed out of the mouth of you that are in such rowme and place as ye be in.

And moreouer, increasing your malice, euil will, and grudge borne agaynst me▪ ye haue amongst other thynges vntruly surmised, written, alledged, and sayd, that a certayne booke of Articles and Iniunctions by the Lord Protectours Grace in the full counsaile after a certayne prescribed fashion and fourme in the denunciation, commission, and Articles, which [de facto] were induced, brought in and obiected agaynst me,*was deliuered vnto me: and moreouer of an euill will and vngodly intent & purpose, contrary to the truth, ye haue withdrawen, added, altered, and qualified diuers thynges in the same, otherwyse then they were spoken or done, and yet ye are not ashamed to alleadge, Page 1325 write, and say, that all is true, and one consonant and agreeable in all poyntes with the other, where in deede it is not so. And ye haue further [de facto] agaynst the law, and agaynst the Commission to you directed, and agaynst my iust and lawfull allegations & saiengs, proceeded vnlawfully & vniustly agaynst me, attēpting many things agaynst me vnlawfully & vniustly as appeareth ni the acts of this matter, to the which I do referre me so far forth as they make for me,*and be expedient by me and for me to bee alledged and referred vnto your selfe also vnlawfully and vniustly [de facto] with your Colleagues, the which without you had begun the sayd matters, proceedyng, where by the law ye so ought not to haue done in deede, but abstained there from, as heretofore sondry tymes I haue alleaged, appearyng in the actes of this Court, doe vpon these iust and reasonable causes, accordyng to the order of the Kings Maiesties Ecclesiasticall lawes, refuse,*decline, and recuse you the sayd Sir Thomas Smith, as an vncompetent, vnmeete, and suspect Iudge, agaynst me in this behalfe, and decline your pretended iurisdiction in this matter for causes aforesayd, desiring nothyng but Iustice, and offeryng my selfe prompt and ready to prooue them so farre as I am bound, and accordyng to the order of the Kings Maiesties Ecclesiasticall lawes of this Realme in this behalfe, as tyme, place, and otherwyse shall require.

This recusation ended, the Secretary told him plaine, that that notwithstanding he would proceed in his Commission and would be still his Iudge,* vntill he were otherwise inhibited, and sayd vnto him farther: My Lord, where as you say in your recusation that I sayd, that you did like thieues, murtherers, and traytors, in deed I sayd it, and may and will so say agayne, since we perceiue it by your doings.

Whereunto the Bishop in a great and stoute rage replied,* saying: Well sir, because you sit here by vertue of the Kings Commission, and for that ye be Secretary to hys maiestie, and also one of his highnes counsail, I must and do honour and reuerence you: but as you be but sir Thomas Smith, & say as ye haue said, that I do lyke theeues, murtherers,* and traytors, I say ye lye vpon me, & in that case I defie you: and doe what ye can to me, I feare you not, and therfore quod facis, fac citius.

Whereat the Archbishop with the other Commissioners said vnto him, that for such his vnreuerent behauior he was worthy imprisonment.

*Then the Bishop in more mad fury then before, sayd agayne vnto them: A Gods name ye may do de facto, send me whether you will, and I must obey you, and so wil, except ye send me to the deuill, for thether I will not go * for you. Three things I haue (to wit) a small portiō of goods, a poore carcase, and myne owne soule: the two first ye may take (though vniustly) to you, but as for my soule ye get not, quia anima mea in manibus meis semper.

*Well, sayd then the Secretary, ye shal know that there is a kyng.

Yea Sir (saith the Bishop) but that is not you, neither I am sure,* will you take it vpon you.

No Sir, sayd agayne the Secretary, but we will make you know who it is:* and with that the Commissioners commanded the bishop and all the rest to depart the chamber vntill they called for him agayne.

Now, in the meane whyle that the Commissioners were in consultation, the Bishop with Gilbert Bourne his chapleine, Rob. Warrington his Commissary, & Rob. Iohnson his Register were taryng in a quadrant voyde place before the dore of the same chamber. Where the Bishop leanyng on a cupboord, and seying his Chapleins very sad,* sayd vnto them in effect as followeth. Syrs, what meane you? Why shew you your selues to be so sad & heauy in mynde, as appeareth to me by your outward gestures and countenaunces? I would wish you, and I require you to be as mery as I am (laying therewith hys hand vpon hys brest) for afore God I am not sad nor heauy, but mery and of good comfort, and am right glad & ioyfull of this my trouble, which is for gods cause, and it greueth me nothyng at all.

But the great matter that griueth me, & pierceth my hart, is for that this Hooper and such other vile heretikes and beastes be suffered and licenced to preache at Paules crosse, & in other places within my Diocesse & Cure, most detestably preaching and railing at the blessed Sacrament of the aultar, & denying the veritie and presence of Christs true body and bloud to be there, & so infecteth and betrayeth my flocke. But I say it is there in very deede, & in that opinion I will lyue and dye, and am ready to suffer death for the same. Wherefore ye being christen men, I do require you, and also charge and commaunde you in the name of God and on his behalfe, as ye wyll aunswere hym for the contrary, that ye goe to the Mayor of London and to hys brethren the Aldermen, praying and also requiryng them earnestly in Gods name and myne, and for myne owne discharge on that behalfe, that from hencefoorth,* when any such detestable and abhominable preachers (and especially those which hold opinion against the blessed Sacrament of the aultar) do come to preach vnto them, they forth with depart out of their presence and doe not heare them, least that they taryeng with such Preachers,* should not onely hurt themselues in receiuyng theyr poysoned doctrine, but also geue a visage to the encouragemēt of others, which thereby mought take an occasion to thinke and beleue that theyr erroneous and damnable doctrine is true and good: and this eftsoones I require and commaunde you to doe.

And then turnyng hymselfe about and beholdyng two of the Archbishops Gentlemen, which in the same place kept the Chamber dore where the Commissioners were in consultation, and perceiuing that they had heard all his talke, he spake vnto them also and sayd: And Syrs,* ye be my Lorde of Caunterburies Gentlemen, I knowe ye very well: and therefore I also require and charge you in Gods behalfe, and in hys name, that ye doe the lyke for your partes in places where ye shall chaunce to see and heare such corrupt and erroneous Preachers, and also aduertise my Lord your maister of the same, and of these my sayinges that I haue nowe spoken here before you, as ye are Christian men, and shall aunswere before God for the contrary.

With this the Commissioners called for the Bishop agayne. Who did read vnto them an instrument conteyning a prouocation to the king, which he made in manner and forme here followyng.

The first appellation intimated by Edmund Boner Bishop of London.

IN the name of God, Amen. It shall appeare to all men by this publike instrument, that the yeare of our Lord,* 1549. the xx. day of September, the third yeare of the raigne of our most high and renowned Prince Edward the sixt by the grace of GOD King of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the fayth, and in earth the supreme head of the Church of England and Ireland, in a chamber within the Pallace of the sayde Bishop situated in London▪ and in the presence of me the Notary publicke, and of the witnesses hereafter named, the foresayd Bishop did personally appeare, and there did shew forth in writing a certaine Protestation and Appellation, the tenor wherof ensueth.

In the name of God. Amen. I Edmund Byshop of London, say, alleadge, and propound before you beyng a publike Notary, and these credible witnesses here present, that although I the foresayd Edmund haue attayned the Bishoprike aforesayd by the beneuolence of the famous Prince of memory King Henry the eight, and was lawfully elected and translated to the same, wyth his rites and appurtenaunces, haue of long time possessed peaceably and quietly the same, and presently doe possesse, beyng taken as Bishop and lawfull possessour of the sayd bishopricke, and am lawfully called, taken, and reputed, notoriously and publikely: and moreouer doe keepe residence and hospitalitie on the same, accordyng to the order, state, person and dignitie, and as the reuenewes of the same would permit, and haue exercised and done all thynges appertainyng to my pastorall office as the lawes doe require, as hereafter I trust by Gods grace to doe and obserue, a man of good name and fame, neyther suspended, excommunicate nor interdicted, neyther conuict of any notable crime or fact, alwayes obeying readily the commaundement of the Church, and other my superiours in all lawfull causes, neuerthelesse fearing vpon certayne probable causes, lykely coniectures, threatnyngs and assertions of certayne iniurious men my enemies, or at the least, such as little fauour me, that great dammage may come to me hereafter about the premisses or part of them: and least any man by any authoritie, commaundement, denunciation, inquisition, office, or at the request of any person, or persons, may attempt, preiudice, or hurt to me or my said dignitie, either by my excommunication, interdiction, sequestration, spoyling, vexing, and perturbyng by any maner of meanes: doe appeale to the most hygh and mighty Prince our soueraigne Lord Edw. the 6. by the grace of God king of England, France &c. & in these my writings do prouoke & appeale to his regal maiesty. I do also require the Apostles so much as in this case they are to be required the first, secōd, & third tyme, earnestly, more earnestly, and most earnestly of all, that there may be geuen to me the protection, tuition, and defence of my foresayd most drede soueraigne Lord, for the safegard of me, my dignitie, title,*and possession in the premisses, and to all that will cleaue to me in this behalfe, I doe also protest that I will be contented to correct, reforme, and amend this my present protestation, and to the same to adde, to take away, and to bryng the same into the best forme and state that may be deuised, by the counsaile of learned men, or as the case shall require, and the same to intimate accordyng Page 1326 to tyme and place and the order of the law,*and still shall require, Vpon all the which premisses, the foresayd Edmund B. of London did require the Notary publike here vnder written, to make vnto hym, and the witnesses hereafter named, one, two, or more copies of this protestation.

These thynges were done the yeare, day, and tyme aboue-written, there beyng present Gilbert Bourne Bachelor of Diuinitie, Iohn Harpesfield, and Robert Colen, Maisters of Arte, Iohn Wakelyng, and Richard Rogers learned men, beyng of the Diocesse of Worcester, Westminster, Couentrie, Lichfield, and Glocester, and specially requested to be witnesse of the same. And I Fraunces Harward of the Diocesse of Worcester, and publicke Notary by the Kings regall authoritie, forsomuch as I was present when the foresayd Protestation, Appellation, and other the premisses were done, the yeare of our Lord, the yere of the raign of the kyng, the day of the moneth and place aforesayde, the witnesses abouenamed beyng present,*and for so much as I did enact the same, therefore to this present publicke instrument, written faithfully with myne owne hand, I haue put to my marke, beyng specially requested vnto the same.

Which thyng after he had read, he dyd vnder his protestation first intimate vnto the Archbishop,* the Byshop of Rochester, and Doctor May, and then protestyng also not to receede frō hys recusation, dyd likewyse intimate the same vnto Maister Secretarye Smyth, requiryng the Register to make an Instrument as well thereupon, as also vppon hys recusation, wyth witnesse to testifie the same.

Then the Delegates did agayne proceede to the examination of the last aunswers,* and findyng the same imperfect, they demanded of hym (according to the first Article) what speciall day of August, he was sent for by the L. Protector? To whom he obstinately aunswered, that hee was not bound to make other aunswere, then he had already made, vnlesse they did put theyr Articles more certayne: neyther would he otherwyse aunswer as long as Maister Secretary Smith was there present, whome he had before recused, and therefore would not receede from his recusation.

*The Secretary seeyng him so wilful and peruerse, said sharply vnto hym. My L. come of and make a full & perfect answer vnto these Articles, or els we will take other order with you to your payne.

In fayth Sir, then sayd the Bishop agayne, I haue thought ye had bene learned, but now before God, I perceiue well that eyther ye be not learned in deede, or els ye haue forgotten it: for I haue so oftē answered lawfully & sufficiently, and haue so oft shewed causes sufficient & reasonable, why thereunto I ought not by lawe to be compelled (you shewyng nothyng to the contrary but sensualitie and will) that I must needes iudge that you are ignorant herein.

Well sayd M. Secretary, ye wyll not then otherwyse aunswer?

No, sayd the B. except the law compell me.

Then sayd the Secretary, call for the knight Marshal, that he may be had to Ward.

With that all the rest of the Commissioners charged the B. that he had at that tyme sundry wayes very outrageously and irreuerently behaued hymselfe towards them sitting on the Kings Maiesties Commission, and specially towards Sir Thomas Smith his graces Secretary, & therefore and for diuers other contumelious words which he had spoken, they declared they would commit hym to the Marshalsey.

By this time the Marshals deputy came before them, whom M. Secretary commanded to take the B. as prisoner, and so to keepe hym that no man might come vnto hym, for if he dyd, he should sit by hym hymselfe.

When the Secretary had ended his talke, the B. sayd vnto him: Well sir, it might haue becōmed you right well that my Lordes grace here present, beyng first in commission, and your better, should haue done it.

Then the Commissioners assigning hym to be brought before them on monday next before noone, betwene 7. and 9. of the clocke in the Hall of that place, there to make full answer to these last Articles, or els to shew cause why he should not be declared pro confesso, did for that presēt break vp that Session.

*Nowe as the Bishop was departing with the vndermarshall, he in a great fury turned himself again towards the Commissioners, and sayde to Sir Thomas Smyth: Sir, where ye haue committed me to pryson, ye shall vnderstand that I will require no fauour at your handes, but shall willingly suffer what shall be put vnto mee, as boltes on my heeles, yea, and if ye wyll, irons about my middle, or where ye will,

Then departing againe, he yet returned once more, & fomyng out his poison, said vnto the Archbishop: * Wel my Lord, I am sory that I beyng a Bishop am thus handled at your graces hand: but more sory that you suffer abhominable heretickes to practise as they doe in London and els where, infecting and disquieting the Kings liege people: and therefore I do require you, as you will answer to God and to the king, that ye will from henceforth abstaine thus to do: for if ye do not, I will accuse you before God & the Kings Maiestie: answer to it as well as ye can. And so he departed, vsing many reprochful words against sundry of the common people, which stoode and spake to hym by the way as he went.

¶The sixt Action or processe vpon Monday, the 23. of September, had agaynst Boner Byshop of London, before the Commissioners, in the great hall at Lambeth.

IT was assigned as ye heard in the 4. Acte prosecuted the 18. of September, * that vpon Monday then next followyng, beyng the 23. of the same moneth, the B. should again appeare before the Commissioners, within the great Hall at Lambeth, then to shew a finall cause why he should not be declared pro confesso, vpon all the Articles wherunto he had not fully answered.

According to which assignement, the same 23. day of September, the B. was brought before them by the Undermarshall (to whome for his disobedient and obstinate behauiour he was before that tyme committed) and there dyd first declare vnto them, that hys appearaunce at that tyme and place was not voluntary, but coacted, for that he was agaynst his will brought thether by the keeper of the Marshalsey, and therewithall also vnder hys former protestation, recusation and appeale, did then again intimate a generall recusation of all the Commissioners, alledging in the same, that because the Archbishop with all his Colleagues had neither obserued the order of their Commission, * neyther yet proceeded agaynst hym after any laudable or good fashion of iudgement, but contrarywise, had sundry tymes as well in his absence, as in his presence, attempted many things vnlawfully against his person, dignity, and estate, especially, in committing him to strait prison, and yet commaunding him to make aunswere: & further, because that he with the rest had proceeded in Commission with Sir Thomas Smith Knight, supportyng and maintainyng all his euill doings (notwithstandyng that he the same Bishop had before iustly recused and declined from him) he therfore did also there refuse & declyne from the iudgement of the sayd Archbishop and hys Colleagues, and dyd except agaynst their iurisdiction as suspect, and they therby vnmeete persons to proceed against hym, and therefore accordyng to his former appeale, he intended to submit himselfe vnder the tuition, protection, & defence of the Kings Maiestie, for whose honour and reuerence sake (he sayd) they ought not to proceed any further against hym, * but quietly suffer hym to vse the benefite of all his recusations, prouocations, and other lawfull remedies before alledged, wyth other superfluous words at large, to be read and seen as followeth.

The second recusation made by Edmund Boner Bishop of London.

IN the name of God, Amen. For as much as both naturall reason and all good pollicies of lawes, especially of this Realme of England do admit and suffer hym that is conuented before an vncompetent and suspect Iudge, to refuse hym and to decline hys iurisdiction, in as much as the lawe and reason on the one side, willeth processe to run vprightly and iustly, and that in corruption and malice, and the other side earnestly laboureth to the contrary, and needeth therefore to bee bridleed. And for because ye my Lord of Caunterbury with your Colleagues in this behalfe (deputed as ye say Commissioners agaynst me) neither haue obserued your sayde Commission, neyther yet proceeded hetherto agaynst me, after any laudable, lawful, or any good fashion of iudgement, but contrarywise, contrary to your Commission, and agaynst the law, good reason, and order, haue at sundry tymes, and in sundry actes attempted and done many things agaynst me, vnlawfully, vnseemly, and vniustly, and suffer the like to be attempted and done by other not reformyng and amending the same, as appeareth in diuers and sondry thinges remayning in your actes.

And moreouer because you my sayd Lord, wyth your Page 1327 sayd Colleagues, both haue in myne absence, beyng let with iust causes of impediment, which accordyng to the lawes of this realme I haue fully alledged,* and very sufficiently and iustly prooued, accordyng to the order of the Kinges Ecclesiasticall lawes iniuriously, and much to the hinderaunce of my name, person, tytle, dignitie, and state, and also otherwyse, specially in my presence, agaynst all lawes, good order, and reason, without good cause or ground attempted and done many thinges against me, especially touching myne imprisonment, sending me to strait ward, and yet commaunding me to make answer, as appeareth in your vnlawfull actes.

I for these causes, and also for that ye my sayde Lorde and your sayde Colleagues proceeding with Syr Thomas Smith Knight, whom vpon iust and lawfull causes I haue refused, recused and declined, and fauoured, ye haue maintayned, supported, and borne, in hys vnlawfull and euill doings, do also refuse, recuse and declyne you my sayd Lorde, wyth the rest of your sayde Colleagues, agreeyng and ioynyng wyth you, and doe accept agaynst your proceedyngs, doynges, and iurisdiction as suspect, and thereby vnmeete personnes to proceede herein agaynst me.

And further do alledge, that hauyng bene prouoked to the Kings most excellent Maiestie, as appeareth by the tenor of my prouocation, remainyng in your actes, wherein I doe protest, that I intend to adheare and cleaue vnto, submitting my selfe vnto the tuition, protection, and defence of hys sayd Maiestie in this behalfe, ye in any wyse ought not (if ye regard the person and authoritie of hys graces royall power, as ye ought to doe) to proceede here in agaynst me, especially for the honour and reuerence, ye ought to haue vnto hys Maiestie in this behalfe. And because it appeareth that ye doe not duely and circumspectly consider the same, as ye ought to do, but more and more do grieue me, that not considered, I both here to all purposes repeat my former recusation, prouocation, and all other remedies that heretofore I haue vsed and mentioned in your sayd actes.

And also do by these presentes, refuse, recuse, and decline you my sayd Lord, and your sayd Colleagues, and your iurisdiction vpon causes aforesayd, offering my selfe prompt and ready to prooue all the same, afore an arbiter and arbitors, accordyng to the tenure and forme of the law herein to be chosen, requiryng you all, for that honour and reuerence ye ought to beare to our sayd soueraigne Lorde, and his lawes allowed and approoued in this behalfe, that ye doe not attempt or doe, ne yet suffer to be attempted or done, any thyngs in any wyse against me, or vnto my preiudice, but suffer me to vse and enioy the benefit of my said former, and this recusation, prouocation, allegation, and other lawfull remedies mentioned in your sayd acts. And in case ye doe de facto, where ye ought not to deiure, attempt or suffer any thynges to be attempted or done agaynst me in any wyse herein, I protest herewith, and hereby of my great griefe and hurt in that behalfe, & that not onely I doe intend to appeale from you, but also accordyng to the kynges Ecclesiasticall lawes to accuse and complayne vpon you, as iustly and truly I both may and ought to doe.

Notwithstandyng these recusations and former appellation, the Archbishop with the rest tolde hym playne that they would be styll hys Iudges, and proceed agaynst hym accordyng to the Kings Commission, vntil they dyd receiue a Supersedeas, which if he did obtayne, they would gladly obey.

Then the Bish. seying that they would still proceede agaynst hym,* did there likewise intimate an other appellation vnto the Kings Maiestie, expressing therein in effect, no other matter, but such as is already alleaged in the two former recusations and appeale: sauynge that he requireth, that letters dimissories or appellatories might be geuen him accordyng to law,* and that for his better safegarde he did submit himselfe vnder the protection of the kyng.

The Commissioners for all this, stucke stil vnto theyr Commission, and would not in any case deferre, but vrged him straitly to make a more full aunswer to his Articles, then he had done.

To whom the Bishop sayd, that he would stand vnto his recusations and appellations before made, and would not make other aunswer.

Then the Delegates demaunded of him what cause he had to alledge why he ought not to be declared pro confesso, vpon the Articles wherunto he had not fully answered: the B. still answering (as before) that he would adhere vnto his appellation and recusation.

Wherupon the Archb. with consent of the rest, seeying his pertinacie, pronounced hym Contumax,* and in payne thereof declared him pro confesso, vpō all the articles which he had not aunswered.

This done, Maister Secretary Smith shewed foorth a Letter, which the Byshoppe of London had before that tyme sente vnto the Lorde Mayor and the Aldermen of the Citie of London, the tenour whereof ensueth as followeth.

¶To the ryght honourable and my very good Lorde, the Mayor of London, with all his worshipfull brethren, my very deare and worshipfull friends, with speede.

Riight honourable, with my very humble recommendations, where I haue perceyued of late and heard with myne eares, what vyle beastes and heretickes haue preached vnto you,* or rather lyke themselues prated and rayled agaynst the most blessed Sacrament of the aultare, denying the veritie and presence of Christes true bodye and bloude to be there, geuyng you and the people libertie to beleue what ye lyst, teachyng you detestably that fayth in this behalfe, must not bee coacted, but euerye man to beleue as he will, by reason whereof, least my presence and silence myght vnto some haue bene seene to haue allowed their hereticall doctrine, and geuyng credite vnto them, betraying my flocke of the Catholicke sorte, ye knowe I departed yesterday from the hereticke praters vncharitable charitie, and so could haue wished that you and all other that bee Catholicke, should haue done,* leauyng those there with hym that be alreadye cast away, and will not be recouered. For your taryng with him still, shall not onely hurt your selfe in receauyng hys poysoned doctrine, but also shall geue a visage that their doctrine is tollerable, by reason that ye are contented to heare it, and say nothing agaynst it. And because I cannot tell when I shall speake with you to aduertise you hereof, therefore I thought good for myne owne discharge and yours, thus muche to wryte vnto you, requiryng and praying you agayne and agayne, in Gods behalfe, for myne owne discharge, that ye suffer not your selues to bee abused with suche naughtie Preachers and teachers, in hearyng theyr euill doctrine that ye shall perceyue them to goe about to sowe. And thus our blessed Lord long and well preserue you all with this noble Citie, in all good rest, godlinesse, & prosperitie. Written in hast this Monday mornyng, the xvi. of September. 1549.

Your faythfull Beades man and poore Bishop Edmund Boner.

This Letter beyng read, the Secretary demanded of hym whether he wrote it not. To whome he would not otherwyse aunswere, but that he would still adhere and stand vnto hys former recusations and appeales.* Whiche the commissioners seyng, determined to continue this case in state as it was vntill Friday then next followyng, betwene the houres of viij. and ix. of the clocke before noone, assignyng the bishop to be there at the same time and place then to heare a finall decree of this matter, he still protestyng as before.

¶The seuenth Session or appearaunce of Boner vppon Tewsday the first of October, before the Kynges Commissioners at Lambeth.

VPpon Friday the Commissioners for diuers vrgent causes lettyng them,* dyd not sit in Commission accordyng to their appoyntment, but deferred it vntill Tewsday the first of October then next followyng. Upon which day the Bishop appearyng before them, the Archbishoppe declared vnto hym, that although as vppon Friday laste, they had appointed to pronounce their finall Decree and Sentence in this matter, yet forasmuch as they thought that that Sentence (although they had iust cause to geue it) should haue bene very sore agaynst hym, they had not onely deferred the same vntill this day, but mindyng to be more friendly to hym then he was to hymselfe,* and to vse more easie and gentle reformation towards hym, had also made such sute and meanes for hym, that although hee had grievously offended the Kinges Maiestie, and verye disobediently behaued himselfe, yet if he would in y^e meane while haue acknowledged his fault, and haue bene contented to make some part of amends in submittynge hymselfe accordyng to hys bounden duety, he should haue foūd much fauour: so the Sentence should not haue bene so sore and extreme against him, as it was like now to bee: for which they were very sorry, especially to see the continuāce of such stubborn disobedience, wherby they were thē more Page 1328 inforced to geue such sentence against hym.*

The Bishop nothing at all regarding this gentle and friendly admonition and fauour, but persisting still in hys woonted contumacie, drew foorth a paper, wheron he read these wordes followyng.

I Edmund bishop of London brought in as a prisoner by hys keeper,*one of the Marshalsey, here before you my Lord of Canterbury and your pretended Colleagues, doe vnder my former Protestations heretofore by me made before you and remaining in your Acte, declare that this my presence here at this tyme is not voluntary, nor of myne owne free will and consent, but vtterly coacted and agaynst my will, and that beyng otherwyse sent for, or brought before you then I am (that is as a prisoner) I would not beyng at libertie, haue come or appeared before you, but would haue declined and refused to make any appearaunce at all, but would haue absented my selfe from you, as lawfully and well I might haue done, standing to, vsing, and enioying all and singular my lawfull remedies and defences heretofore vs^d, exercised, and enioyed, especially my prouocation and appellation heretofore interponed and made vnto the Kinges most excellent Maiestie, to whom eftsoones Ex abundanti, I haue both prouoked and appealed, and also made Supplication vnto, as appeareth in these writings, which vnder Protestation aforesayd, I do exhibite and leaue here with the Actuarie of this cause, requiryng hym to make an Instrument thereupon, and the personnes here present to beare record in that behalfe▪ especially to the intent it may appeare, I do better acknowledge the kings Maiesties authoritie euen in his tender and yong age, prouoking and appealyng to his Maiestie as my most gracious soueraigne and supreme head,*with submission to his highnes (as appeareth in my appellation and other remedies) for my tuition and defence, then other some, I doe meane you my Lord of Caunterbury and your sayd pretended Colleagues, which by law and good reason ought to haue deferred and geuen place vnto such prouocation, appellation, and Supplication, as heretofore lawfully haue bene by me interponed and made vnto his Maiesties most royall person and authoritie in this behalfe.

As soone as the B. had read these wordes, he did deliuer as well that paper, as also two other, vnto the Actuarie, the one conteining an appellatiō, and the other a supplication vnto the kings Maiestie: which appellation beginneth thus: In the name of God. Amen.

Wherein first he shewed how naturally euery creature declineth gladly frō that thing which goeth about to hurt it, and also seeketh helpe & remedy to withstand such hurts and iniuries.

Further he shewed that it is found by experience to be hurtfull and daungerous to trust hym that once hath hurt and beguiled, least he might adde more, rather then to take ought from.

Moreouer he shewed that he had found heretofore at the handes of the B. of Caunterbury and the rest of y^e Colleagues in this matter, much extremitie and crueltie, iniuries, losses and griefes, contrary to Gods law, and the lawes and statutes of this Realme, and agaynst Iustice, charitie, and good order, beyng well assured if they were not stayed but proceeded, they would adde more euill to euill, losse to losse, displeasure to displeasure, as (sayde he) their seruants haue reported, and they agreeable doe shew the same.

Agayne in the sayde appeale he shewed that the Byshop of Canterbury and the other Commissioners ought to haue considered and done better in that matter, for honour and obedience to the Kings Maiestie, which hetherto they haue not done (said he) in that they haue not giuen place to hys prouocations and appellations heretofore made vnto hys grace, iustly and lawfully, and vpon good and iust causes, namely, for the vniust griefes they did agaynst him, which he sayd to appeare in the Actes of that matter: as in pronouncynge hym contumacem vnreasonably without good cause, and further in assignyng the terme ad audiendum finale decretum, and in committynge hym to straight prisone, as appeareth in theyr Actes. Therefore he dyd not onelye Ex abundanti, ad omnem iuris cautelam, decline and refuse theyr pretended iurisdiction as before: but also by these presentes here shewed, he dyd appeale from the sayd Byshop of Caunterbury and the rest, vnto the Kinges Maiestie, askyng also those Letters of Appeale, which the lawe doth admitte, saying, he dyd not intend to goe from hys former prouocations and appellations,* but to ioyn and cleaue vnto them in euery part and parcell, submyttyng hymselfe to the protection and defence of the Kinges Maiestie, and he therein made intimation to the Byshoppe of Caunterbury, and the sayd Colleagues, to all intentes and purposes that might come thereof.

Furthermore, as touchyng the Supplication aboue mentioned, which Boner (as we sayd) put vp in wrytyng to the Commissioners, the Copie thereof here vnder likewyse ensueth.

PLEASE I• your most honourable good Lordships with my most humble recommendations, to vnderstand,* that albeit I haue accordyng to the lawes, statutes, and ordinaunces of this realme, made supplicatio• prouocation and appellation vnto the kyngs most excelle• Maiestie from the vnlawfull and wycked processe of the Archbishop of Caunterbury, the byshoppe of Rochester, Maister Secretary Smith, and the Deane of Paules, as also as well from their vniust interlocutorie, as also their diffinitive sentence whereby in law I ought to haue libertie to come abroad and prosecute the same yet such is the malignitie of the Iudges agaynst me, with bearing and maintenaunce of other, which sundry and many ways haue sought my ruine and destruction, that I am here penned and locked vp, vsed very extremely at their pleasure, and for the contentation of the sayd Maister Smith, and not suffred to finde sureties, or to goe abroad to prosecute and sue my sayd appellation.

In consideration whereof, it may please your said good Lordships, to take some order and redresse herein, especially for that it is now the tyme that the Kings subsidie now due, ought to be called vpon, and iustice also ministred vnto his Maiesties subiects which beyng as I now am, I cannot be suffered to doe. And thus without further extending my letter therein, consideryng that your great wisdomes, experience and goodnesse can gather of a little what is expedient and necessary for the whole. I doe beseech almighty God to preserue and keepe well all your honourable good Lordships.

Written in hast this 7. of October, 1549. in the Marshalsey.

Your honourable Lordshyps poore Orator & most bounden Bedes man, Edmund London.

These thynges ended, the Archbyshop said vnto him: My Lord, where you say that you come coacted,* or els ye would not haue appeared, I do much maruell of you. For you would therby make vs and this audience here beleue, that because you are a prisoner, ye ought not therefore to aunswer. Which if it were true, were enough to confound the whole state of this Realme. For I dare say, that of the greatest prisoners and rebels that euer your keeper there (meaning the Undermarshall) hath had vnder hym, he cannot shewe me one that hath vsed such defence, as you here haue done.

Well quoth the B. if my keper were learned in y^e lawes I could shew him my mynd therein.*

Well, sayde the Archbyshop, I haue read ouer all the Lawes as well as you,* but to an other ende and purpose then you did, and yet I can finde no suche priuiledge in this matter.

Then M. Secretary Smith did very sore burthen and charge hym, how disobediently and rebelliously he had always behaued himselfe towards the Kings Maiestie and his authoritie.

Whereupon, the B. vnder his protestation aunswered agayne,* that he was the kings Maiesties lawfull and true subiect, and did acknowledge his highnesse to be his gracious soueraigne Lord, or els he would not haue appealed vnto him, as he had, yea & would gladly lay his hands and his necke also vnder his graces feete, and therefore he desired that his highnesse lawes and iustice might be ministred vnto him.

Yea (quoth Maister Secretary) you say wel my Lord,* but I pray you what others haue all these rebels both in Northfolke, Deuonshire, and Cornewall, and other places done? Haue they not said thus? We be the kings true Subiectes, we acknowledge hym for our Kyng, and we will obey his lawes, with such lyke, and yet when eyther Commaundement, Letter or Pardon was brought vnto them from his Maiestie, they beleueed it not, but sayd it was forged and made vnder a hedge, and was Gentlemens doyngs, so that in deede they would not, nor dyd obey any thing.

Ah sir, sayd the B. I perceyue your meanyng:* as who should say, that the Bish. of London is a rebell like them. Yea by my troth (quoth the Secretary.)* Whereat the people laughed.

Then the Deane of Paules said vnto him, that he maruelled much, and was very sory to see him so vntractable, Page 1329 that he would not suffer the Iudges to speake.

To whome the B. disdainfully aunswered▪ Well M. Deane,* you must say somewhat. And likewise at an other tyme as the Deane was speaking, he interrupted him, and sayd, You may speake when your turne commeth.

*Then said Secretary Smith, I would you knew your duetie.

I would (quoth he agayne) you knew it as wel as I, with an infinite more of other such stubburne and contemptuous talke and behaiour towardses them,* which the Commissioners waying, and perceiuyng no likelihood of any tractable reason in hym, determined that the Archbishop with their whole consent, should at that pre••nt there openly read and publish their finall <◇> or Sentence definitiue agaynst hym. Which he did, pronouncing hym thereby, to be cleane depriued from the Bishopricke of London, and further as in the same appeareth▪ in tenou• as followeth.

Ye shall also set foorth in your Sermon, that our autoritie of our Royall power is (as of truth it is) of no lesse authoritie and force in this our younger age, then is and was of any of our predecessoures, though the same were much elder, as may appeare by example of Iosias and other young Kinges in Scripture. And therefore all our Subiectes to bee no lesse bounde to the obedience of our preceptes, lawes, and statutes, then if we were xxx. or xl. yeares of age.

Which ended, the B. immediately did therefrom appeale by word of mouth, alledgyng that the same sentence there geuē against him, was Lex nulla. The tenor of whose words I thought hereto expresse, accordyng as they were by him vttered, in this wise as followeth.

I Edmund Byshop of London,* brought in and kepte heere as a prisoner agaynst my consent and wyll, doe vnder my former protestation heretofore made, and to the intent it may also appeare, that I haue not beyng so here in this place, consented not agreed to any thyng done agaynst me, and in my preiudice, alledge and say that this sentence geuen here agaynst me, is Lex nulla, and so farre foorth, as it shall appeare to be Aliqua, I doe say it is Iniqua and Iniusta, and that therefore I doe from it, as Iniqua and Iniusta, appeale to the most excellent and noble king, Edward the sixt, by the grace of God, Kyng of England, Fraunce, and Ireland, defender of the fayth, and of the Church of England and also of Ireland, next and immediately vnder GOD here in earth supreme head, and vnto hys Courte of Chancerie or Parliament, as the lawes, statutes, and ordinaunces of this Realme, wyll suffer and beare in this behalfe, desiryng instauntly first,* second and third, accordyng to the lawes, Letters reuerenciall or demissories, to be geuen and deliuered vnto mee in this behalfe, with all thynges expedient, requisite, or necessarie in any wyse: and thereupon also the sayd Bishop required the Publike Notary or Actuary William Saye, to make an Instrument, and the witnesse aforesayde and other present to recorde the same. To whom so appealyng, and requiryng as afore, the sayde Iudges delegate sayd, that they wyll declare and signifie to the Kinges Maiestie, what is done in this matter, and thereupon will deferre or not deferre to his sayde appellation, accordyng as hys graces pleasure and commaundement shall be to them in that behalfe: and after all this, the sayd Byshop of London sayd to them, Iam •uncti estis officio. What wyll your grace doe with me now, touchyng my imprisonment? wyll ye keepe me still in prison? shall I not now be at liberty to prosecute myne appeale? To whom the Archb. aunswering, sayd, that they perceyued now more in that matter then they did at the first, & that this matter is more greater rebellion then he is ware of, and therefore said, that as yet they would not discharge him, and thereupon they committed him agayne to his keeper to prison.

This talke finished, the Archbishop considering that most of the audience there present, did not vnderstand the meanyng of the sentence beyng read in the Latin tongue, sayd vnto them: Because there be many of you here that vnderstand not the Latine tongue, and so cannot tel what iudgement hath bene here geuen, I shall therefore shewe you the effect thereof: and therewith did declare in English, the causes expressed in the sentence, adding then therevnto these wordes.

Because my L. of London is found guilty in these matters, therefore we haue here by our sentence depriued hym of our bishoprike of London: and this we shew vnto you to the intent that from henceforth ye shall not esteeme hym any more as B. of London.

Then Boner desired the Archbish. to declare likewise what he had done, and how he had appe^eed. But the other seing his froward contempt, refused it, saieng, ye may doe it your selfe. Wherupon very disdainfully againe he sayd, Iam functi estis officio. What will your grace do w^t me touching my imprisonment? will you kepe me stil in prison?

To whom the commissioners answered, that they perceiued now more in the matter then they did before, & that his behauiour was more greater rebellion then hee was ware of, and therefore they would not discharge hym, but committed him agayne to his keeper to be kept in prison. Where he most iustly remained vntil the deth of that most worthy & godly prince king Edward the sixt. After which time he wrought most horrible mischiefe and cruelties against the saints of God, as appeareth hereafter throughout Page 1330 the whole raigne of Queene Marie. From the executing of the which like tirannie, the Lord of his great mercy keepe all other such. Amen.

Now immediately after his deprivation, he writeth out of the Marshalsey other letters supplicatorie vnto y^e Lord Chancelor and the rest of the kings Counsaile. Wherein he thus complaineth, that by reason of the great enmity that the Duke of Somerset and sir Thomas Smith bare vnto him, his often and earnest suites vnto the King and hys counsaile could not be heard. Hee therefore moste humbly desireth their Lordships for the causes aforesaide, to consider him, and to let him haue libertie to prosecute his matter before them, and he woulde daily pray for the good preservation of theyr honors, as appeareth by the woordes of his owne supplication here vnder following.

Thus after the Commissioners had finished with Boner, he b^eing now prisoner in the Marshalsey, leauing no shift of the law vnsought how to worke for him self as wel as he mighte, drewe out a certaine supplication, conceiued and directed to the kings maiestie, out of the sayd prison of the Marshalsey.

To the right honourable, my Lorde Chancelor of England, with all the rest of the kings Maiesties most honorable priuie counsel.

PLease it your most honourable good Lordshippes wyth my moste humble commendations to vnderstande that all beit heeretofore I haue made such sute, and to such persons as I cannot deuise to make more, or to more higher, it is to wit, vnto the kings most excellent maiestie, and his most gracious persons in diuers sorts, and also vnto your most honorable good Lordships being of his priuie counsell▪ for redresse of suche notable and manifest iniuries and extremities as hath bene contrary to all law, honestie, and good reason inflicted vnto me by my Lord of Canterburie, my Lorde of Rochester, Doctor Smith, and Doctor May, yet because the sayd Doctor Smith being a minister to the Duke of Somerset, and they both my deadly ennemies, hath sondry wayes studied and laboured my ruine and destruction, staying and letting heretofore all my lawfull remedies and •utes, hauing therein helpe and furtherance of these two other aforesayd persons, being ready at foote and hand to accomplish all theyr desires and pleasures, I shall at th•• presence hauing for a time forborne to trouble (for good respectes) your moste honorable good Lordshyppes, with any my••tes, and especially for your other manifold great affaires in the kinges Maiesties businesse: my selfe yet the meane while, neither wanting good will, ne yet iust cause being where I am to make such sute, renue my sute, and most humbly beseeche your most honorable good lordshippes to geue me leaue to make most humble supplication againe to your sayd Lordshippes, for honest and lawfull 〈◇〉 to prosecute my appel•atiō and supplication hereto•ore made to the kings moste excellent Maiestie, and according •o the law to make my sute for redresse of the sayde 〈...〉, extremities and wrongs don 〈...〉 the sayd parsones. And your sayd Lordships ouer and besides the furtheraunce of iustice, many wayes 〈◇〉 me and other, and the collection of the kings maiestie Subsidie, nowe to be leuied of the Clergie in my diocesse 〈...〉 hath ben, and is staied by reason of the premisses, shall also binde me moste greatly and intirely to pray daily for the good preseruacion of your sayd moste honourable good Lordshippes in all honour, felicitie and ioy long to continue and endure vnto Gods pleasure.

Wrytten in the Marshalsey, the 26. of October. 1549.

Your Lordships most faithful & assured Bedes man. E. Lon.

A supplication made and directed by Edmund Boner late B. of London▪ to the kings Maiestie, out of the prison of the Marshalsey.

*In the which supplication, first after the vsed forme of stile, he praied for the prosperous estate of the king long to raigne. Then he shewed that his faithful heart and seruice to him, hath, is▪ and shall be, as it was to his father before.

Then •e declared how he had ben belied of euil men, and misreported not to •eare a true hart to his grace, but a rebellious minde, in denying his royall power in his minoritie, where in deede (he sayeth) his grace should finde hym alwayes during life, both in heart, woorde, and deede, to do and acknowledge otherwise, & to be most willing to shew. &c. and to doe all other thinges for his grace, as willingly as any other subiecte, or as those that were his denoūcers, who hee thought were not sent of his grace, but pretended Commissioners. &c.

Further, he complained of his denuntiation by certain commissioners (who sayde they were sent by his grace) alleaging the same not to be lawful: and of his long & sharpe imprisonment, & that the commissioners obserued neyther law nor reasonable order, but extremitie. And wher he had made appeale to his grace, and he coulde not haue it: he desired to haue lawe to prosecute & sue his appeale for his remedy, & that he cōsidering his vocation, might not be shut vp & put from libertie, which his meanest subiects haue.

Then he desired hys graces letters of Supersedeas against the commissioners, and that the matter might be heard before the counsaile, and then he doubted not but to be found a true faithfull man, and heerein to haue wrong. So in the ende hee concluded, this (prostrating him selfe euen to the very ground, and humbly kissing his graces fete) to be the thing onely which he humbly desired. &c.

This done, & the supplication perused, the King eftsoone geueth in charge and commaundement,* to certain men of honor and worship, & persons skilfull in the lawe, as to Lorde Rich high Chancelor, the L. treasurer, the L. Marques Dorset, the B. of Ely, Lord Wentworth, sir Anthony Wingfield, sir W. Harbert knightes. Doc. Nich. Wootton, Ed. Mountague Lorde chiefe Iustice, Sir Iohn Baker knight, with Iudge Hales, Ioh. Gosnold, D. Oliuer and also Doctour Leyson, that they scanning and perusing all such actes, matters, and muniments of the sayd Boner by him exhibited, produced, propounded and alleaged, with al and singular his protestations, recusations, & appellatiōs, should vpon mature consideration therof, geue their directed answer vpon the same.* whether the appellation of the said Boner were to be deferred vnto, and whether the sentence defined against him, stood by the law sufficient and effectual, or not. Who eftsoones after diligent discussion, and considerate aduisement had of all & singular the premisses, gaue their resolute answer, that the pretensed appellation of Edmund Boner aforesayde, was nought and vnreasonable, and in no wise to be deferred vnto, and that the sentence by the Commissioners against him, was rightly and iustly pronounced. And this was the cōclusion of Boners whole matter and depriuation for that time.

Thus then leauing doctor Boner a while in the Marshalsey with his keeper,* we will proceede (the Lorde permitting) further in the course of our storie, as the order of yeres and time requireth. And although the trouble of the Lord Protector falleth heere ioyntly with the depriuatiō of D. Boner: yet because he was shortly again deliuered out of the same throughe the Lordes mightye woorking, I will therefore delay the tractation thereof, till the time of his seconde trouble, whych was two yeares after: and so in the meane time returning ag•ine into our discourse, intēd by the Lords leaue, to collect and continue the matters begō, touching y^e kings godly proceedings for reformatiō of religion, in the foresaid yere of our lord, concurring. an. 1549.

And heere first a note woulde be made of Peter Martyr and of his learned trauels,* and disputation in the vniuersitie of Oxford the sayde present yeare, with doct. Chedsey, & other moe, about the matter of the sacrament: which was, that the substance of breade and wine was not changed in the sacrament, & that the body and bloude of Christe was not carnally and bodily in the bread and wine, but vnited to the same sacramentally.

In like maner some touch or mention here also woulde be made of the Ecclesiasticall lawes,* for the gathering and compiling wherof 32. persons were assigned by Act of parlament the sayde present yeare 1549. But because these bee rather matters of tractation, then Hystoricall▪ I meane, (God willing) to deferre the further consideration thereof vnto the ende of the historie of this kinges dayes, and so to passe forward to other matters in the meane while.

Bookes of Latine seruice called in and abolished.

IT followeth then in storie, that certaine of the vulgare multitude,* hearing of the apprehension of the Lord Protectour, and supposinge the alteration of publicke Seruice into Englishe, and administration of the Sacramente and other rites lately appoynted in the Church, had beene the Acte chiefly or only of the sayd Lorde Protectour, beganne vppon the same to noyse and brute abroad, that they shuld nowe haue theyr olde Latine seruice, wyth holy bread and holy water,* and theyr other like superstitious ceremonies againe, whereuppon the King wyth the body and state of the priuie Counsell then being, directed oute his letters of request and straite commaundement to the Byshoppes in their diocesse, to cause and warne the Deane, and Prebendaries of their Cathedrall Churches, all Persons, vicares and Curates: with the Churchwardens of euery Parishe Page 1331 wythin their Diocesse, to bring in and deliuer vp all Antiphoners, Missales, Grailes, Processionals, Manuals, Legendes,* Pies, Portuases, Iournals, and Ordinals after the vse of Sarum, Lincolne, Yorke, Bangor, Herforde, or any other priuate vse,* and all other bookes of seruice, the hauing wherof might be any let to y^e seruice now set foorth in English, charging also and commaunding all suche as should be found stubborne or disobedient in this behalf, to be committed vnto warde.

And because the Kinge moreouer was aduertised that there was a slacknes and a frowardnes among the people refusing to pay towarde the finding of breade and wine for the holy Communion, by reason wherof the Communion in many places was omitted, the Bishops in like manner had geuen in charge to prouide for redresse therof,* & to punish them which should refuse so to do. Wherby it may appeare to vs now, that no wafer cakes but common bread, was then by the kinges appoyntment ordinarily receiued and vsed in Churches. This was about the latter ende of December. An. 1549.

Taking downe of aultares, and setting vp of the table in steede thereof.

FURthermore, in the yeare nexte following .1550. other letters likewise were sent out for the taking downe of altars in churches,* and setting vp the table in steade of the same, vnto Nicholas Ridley, who being Bishop of Rochester before, was then made Bishop of London, in Boners place, the copie and contentes of the kings letters are these, as followeth.

The kings letters to Nicholas Ridley Bishop of London. &c.

RIght reuerende father in God, right trustie and well beloued, we greete you wel.* And where it is come to our knowledge, that being the altars within the more part of the churches of this realme, already vpon good and godly considerations takē down, there doth yet remaine altares standing in diuers other churches, by occasion whereof muche variaunce and contention ariseth amongst sundry of our subiectes, whiche if good foresight were not had, might perchance engender great hurt and inconuenience: we lette you wit, that minding to haue all occasion of contention taken away, which many times groweth by those & such like diuersities, and considering that amongst other thinges belonging to our royal office and cure, we do accompt the greatest to be, to maintaine the common quiet of oure Realme wee haue thought good by the aduice of our Counsaile to require you, and neuertheles especial to charge and commaund you, for the auoiding of all matters of further contention & strife about the standing or taking away of the said altares,* to geue substantiall order throughout all your diocesse, that with all diligence all the altars in euery church or chappell, as well in places exempted, as not exempted within your saide diocesse be taken downe, and in the stead of them a table to be set vp in some conuenient parte of the chancel within euery suche church or chappel, to serue for the ministratiō of the blessed cōmuniō.* And to the intēt the same may be done without the offēce of such our louing subiects, as be not yet so wel perswaded in that behalfe as we would wish, we sende vnto you heerewith, certaine considerations gathered and collected that make for the purpose, the whiche and such others as you shall thinke meete to be set foorth to perswade the weake to embrace our proceedings in this parte, we pray you cause to be declared to the people by some discrete preachers in such places as you shal thinke meete, before the taking downe of the said altars: so as both the weake consciences of other may be instructed and satisfied as muche as may be, and this our pleasure the more quietly executed. For the better doing whereof, wee require you to open the foresaid considerations in that our cathedrall church in your own person, if you conueniently may, or otherwise by your Chancelour, or some other graue preacher, both there, & in such other market townes and moste notable places of your diocesse, as you may thinke most requisite.

Reasons why the Lordes boorde should rather be after the forme of a table, then of an aultare.

The first reason.

First, the forme of a table shall more moue y^e simple from the superstitious opinions of the Popish Masse, vnto the right vse of the Lordes supper.* For the vse of an altare is to make sacrifice vpon it: the vse of a table is to serue for men to eate vpon. Nowe when we come vnto the Lordes boorde, what do we come for? To sacrifice Christe agayne, and to crucifie hym againe? or to feede vppon hym that was once onely crucified, and offered vp for vs? If wee come to feede vppon him, spiritually to eate his body, and spiritually to drinke his bloud, which is the true vse of the Lordes supper, then no man can denie, but the forme of a table is more meete for the Lordes boorde, then the forme o^r an aultare.

The second reason.

Item, where as it is sayde,* the booke of common prayer maketh mention of an aultar, wherfore it is not lawfull to abolish that which that booke alloweth: to this is thus answered:* The booke of common prayer calleth the thing whereupon the Lordes supper is ministred, indifferently a Table, an Aultar, or the Lordes boord, without prescription of any forme thereof, either of a Table, or of an Aultare. So that whether the Lordes boorde haue the forme of an Aultar, or of a table, the booke of common prayer calleth it both an Aultar and a Table. For as it calleth an Altar whereupon the Lordes Supper is ministred, a table, and the Lordes boord,* so it calleth the table where the holye Communion is distributed with laudes and thankes geuing vnto the Lorde, an Aultar, for that, that there is offered the same sacrifice of praise and thankes geuinge. And thus it appeareth, that heere is nothing neither sayde nor meant contrary to the booke of common praier.

The third reason.

Thirdlye, the Popishe opinion of Masse,* was that it might not be celebrated but vpon an aultar, or at the least vpon a superaltare, to supply the fault of the altare, which must haue hadde hys printes and charectes, or else it was thought that the thing was not lawfully done. But thys superstitious opinion is more holden in the mindes of the simple and ignorant by the forme of an aultar, then of a table: wherfore it is more meete for the abolishment of thys superstitious opinion, to haue the Lordes boorde after the forme of a table, then of an altar.

The fourth reason.

Fourthly, the forme of an aultar was ordained for the Sacrifices of the Lawe,* and therefore the aultar in Greeke is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Quasi Sacrificij locus. But nowe bothe the lawe and the Sacrifices thereof doe cease: Wherefore the forme of the aultare vsed in the Lawe, ought to cease wythall.

The fifth reason.

Fifthly,* Christe did institute the Sacrament of his bodye and bloud at his laste Supper at a Table, and not at an Aultare, as it appeareth manifestly by the three Euangelistes. And Saint Paule calleth the comming to the holy Communion, the comminge vnto the Lordes Supper. And also it is not read, that any of the Apostles or the Primitiue Church did euer vse any altare in the ministration of the holy Communion.

Wherefore, seeing the forme of a Table is more agreeable with Christes institution, and with the vsage of the Apostles and of the Primitiue Church, then the forme of an Aultar, therefore the forme of a Table is rather to be vsed, then the forme of an Aultare in the administration of the holy Communion.

The sixth reason.

Finally,* it is said in the preface of the booke of common prayer, that if any doubt doe arise in the vse and practising of the same booke, to appease all suche diuersitie, the matter shall be referred vnto the Bishop of the dioces, who by his discretion shall take order for the quieting and appeasinge of the same, so that the same order be not contrarye vnto any thing contained in that booke.

After these letters and reasones receyued, the forenamed Nicholas Ridley Byshop of London, consequently vppon the same did hold his visitation, wherein amongst other his Iniunctions, the sayde Bishoppe exhorted those Churches in his Diocesse, where the Aultars then did remaine, to confourme them selues vnto those other Churches whych had taken them downe, and had sette vp in the steade of the multitude of their Aultares, one decent Table in euery Church.

Uppon the occasion whereof there arose a greate diuersitie aboute the fourme of the Lordes boorde, some vsing it after the fourme of a Table, and some of an aultare. Page 1332 Wherein when the saide Bishop was required to saye and determine what was moste meete,* he declared he could doe no lesse of his bounden duetie, for the appeasing of such diuersitie, & to procure one godly vniformitie, but to exhorte all his Diocesse vnto that,* which he thought did best agree with Scripture, with the vsage of the Apostles, and wyth the Primitiue Church, and to that which is not onely not contrary vnto any thinge contained in the booke of Common prayer (as is before prooued) but also mighte highly further the kings most godly procedings, in abolishing of diuers vaine & superstitious opinions of the popish masse out of the hearts of the simple, and to bring them to y^e right vse taught by holy Scripture,* of the Lordes Supper, and so appoynted he the fourme of a right Table to be vsed in his Dioces, and in the Church of Paules, brake down the wall standing then by the high Aultars side.

Now we will enter, (God willing) into those matters which happened betweene kinge Edward and hys sister Mary, as by their letters here folowing are to be seene.

To my Lorde Protectour and the rest of the kings Maiesties Counsaile.

MY Lorde, I perceiue by the letters whyche I late receiued from you, and other of the kinges Maiesties Counsaile, that yee be all sorie to finde so litle conformitie in me touching the obseruation of his Maiesties lawes:* who am well assured I haue offended no law, vnles it be a late lawe of your owne making, for the altering of matters of Religion, whiche in my conscience is not worthy to haue the name of a Lawe, both for the kings honors sake, the wealth of the Realme, and geuing an occasion of an euill br•ite through all Christendome, besides the parcialitie vsed in the same, and (as my sayde conscience is very well perswaded) the offending of God, which passeth al the rest: but I am well assured, that the king hys fathers Lawes were allowed and consented to with out compulsion by the whole Realme, both Spirituall and Temporall, and all ye executours sworne vppon a Booke to fulfil the same, so that it was an authorised Lawe, and that I haue obeyed, and will doe with the grace of God, till the Kinges Maiestie my brother shall haue sufficient yeares to bee a Iudge in these matters hym selfe: Wherein my Lorde, I was plaine wyth you at my laste beyng in the Courte: declaringe vnto you at that time, whereunto I woulde stande, and now doe assure you all, that the only occasion of my stay from altering mine opinion, is for two causes.

One principally for my conscience sake: the other, that the king my brother shal not hereafter charge me to be one of those, that were agreeable to suche alterations in hys tender yeares. And what fruites dailye growe by suche chaunges since the death of the King my Father, to euery indifferent person, it wel appeareth, both to the displeasure of God, and vnquietnesse of the realme.

Notwythstanding, I assure you all, I woulde be as othe to see his highnesse take hurt, or that any euill should come to this his Realme, as the best of you all, and none of you haue the like cause, considering howe I am compelled by nature, beinge his Maiesties poore and humble Sister, moste tenderly to loue and pray for him, and vnto this his realme, being borne within the same, wishe all wealth and prosperitie to Gods honour.

And if any iudge mee the contrarye for mine opinions sake, as I truste none doth, I doubte not in the ende, wyth Gods helpe, to prooue my selfe as true a natural and humble sister, as they of the contrary opinion, with all their deuises and altering of lawes, shall prooue them selues true subiectes, praying you my Lorde and the rest of the Counsaile, no more to vnquier and trouble me with matters touching my conscience, wherein I am at a full poynte, wyth Gods helpe, what soeuer shall happen to mee, intendinge with his grace, to trouble you litle with any worldly sutes but to bestowe the short time I thinke to liue, in quietnes, and pray for the kinges Maiestie and all you, heartily wishing, that your proceedings may be to Gods honour, the safegard of the kings persone, and quietnesse to the whole Realme.

Moreouer, where your desire is, that I woulde sende my Controller and Doctour Hopton vnto you, by whom you woulde signifie your mindes more amplie, to my contentation & honour: it is not vnknownen to you al, that the chiefe charge of my house •e•teth onely vppon the trauails of my sayde Controller. Who hath not bene absent from my 〈◇〉 three who•e dayes since the settinge vp of the same vnlesse it were for my letters Patentees, so that if it wer• 〈◇〉 for his continual diligence▪ I thinke my litle portion would not haue stretched so farre. And my Chaplaine by occasion of sickenesse, hath bene long absent, and yet not able to ride.

Therefore like as I can not forbear my Controller, and my Prieste is not able to iourney: So shall I desire you my Lorde, and the rest of the Counsaile, that hauinge any thing to be declared vnto me, except matters of Religion, yee will either wryte your mindes, or sende some trustie person, with whome I shall be contented to talke, and make answeere as the case shall require, assuring you, that if any seruaunte of mine owne, eyther man or woman, or Chaplaine shoulde moue me to the contrary of my conscience, I woulde not geue eare to them, nor suffer the lyke to be vsed wythin my house. And thus my Lorde, wyth my hearty commendations, I wishe vnto you and the rest, as well to doe as my selfe.

From my house at Kinning hall, the 22. of Iune. 1549.

Your assured frend to my power, Mary.

A remembrance of certaine matters, appoynted by the Counsaile, to be declared by Doctor Hopton to the Ladie Maries grace, for answer to her former letter, which said Hopton was after shee came to her raigne B. of Norwiche.

Her grace wryteth, that the lawe made by Parliament, is not woorthy the name of a lawe, meaninge the statute for the Communion. &c.

You shall say thereto.

The fault is great in any subject to disallow a law of the king, a Lawe of a Realme, by long studie, free disputation, and vniforme determination of the whole Cleargie, consulted, debated, and concluded. But the greater fault is in her grace, being nexte of any subject in bloude and estate to the kings Maiestie her brother and good Lorde, to geue example of disobedience, being a subiecte, or of vnnaturalnesse, being his Maiesties sister, or of neglecting the power of the crowne, shee being by limitation of lawe nexte to the same. The example of disobedience is most perilous in this time, as shee can wel vnderstand, her vnkindnesse resteth in the kinges owne acceptation, the neglecting of the power, before God is answereable, and in the worlde toucheth her honour.

The executours, shee sayth, were sworne to king Henrie the eight his lawes.

You shall say.

It is true, they were sworne to him, his Lawes, hys heires, and successours, which oth they duely obserue, and should offend if they should breake any one iote of y^e kings lawes nowe being, without a dispensation by a lawe, and herein her grace shall vnderstand, that it is no lawe, which is dissolued by a law: Neither may her grace do that iniurie to the kinges Maiestie her brother, to diminish his authoritie so farre, that he may not by the free cōsent of a Parliament, amend and alter vnprofitable lawes, for the number of inconueniences which hereof mighte folowe, as her grace with consideration may well perceiue.

Offence taken by the sending for of her officers.

You shall say.

If her grace consider the firste letters of that purpose, they will declare our good meaning to her, and our gentle vsage, requiring the presence of her trusty seruant, because shee might geue more trust to our message.

Her house is her flocke.

You shall say.

It is well liked her grace shoulde haue her house or flock, but not exempt from the Kings orders: neither may there be a flocke of the kings subjects, but such as wil hear and folowe the voice of the king their shepheard. God disaloweth it, law and reason forbiddeth it, pollicie abhorreth it, and her honour may not require it.

Her grace deferreth her obedience to the kings lawe, till his Maiestie be of sufficient years.

You shall say.

Shee could in no one saying more disallow the authoritie of the king, the maiestie of his crowne, and the state of the Realme. For heerein shee suspendeth hys kingdome, and esteemeth his authoritie by his age, not by his right and title. Her grace must vnderstande he is a King by the ordinaunce of God, by descent of Royall bloude, not by the numbering of his yeares.

As a creature subiecte to mortalitie, hee hathe youthe, and by Gods grace shall haue age: but as a King he hath Page 1333 no difference by dayes and yeares. The Scripture plainly declareth it, not only young children to haue ben kings by Gods speciall ordinaunce, but also (whiche is to be noted) to haue had best successe in their raigne, and the fauour of God in theyr proceedinges. Yea, in their first yeares haue they most purely reformed the Church and state of Religiō. Therefore her grace hath no cause thus to diminish his maiesties power, and to make him as it were no king vntil she thinke him of sufficient yeares. Wherin howe much his maiestie may be iustly offended, they be sorie to thinke.

Shee saith, shee is subiecte to none of the Counsaile.

You shall say.

If her grace vnderstandeth it of vs in that acceptation as we be priuate men, and not counsailours, sworne to the kings maiesty, we knowlege vs not to be superiors: but if shee vnderstande her wryting of vs as Counsailors and magistrates, ordained by his maiestie, her grace muste be contented to thinke vs of authority sufficient by the reason of our office to chalēge a superioritie, not to rule by priuate affection: but by Gods prouidence, not to our estimation, but to the kings honour, and finally to encrease the kings estate with our counsaile, our dignitie and vocation: and we thinke her grace wil not forget the saying of Salomon, in the 6. chapter of the booke of Wisedome, to mooue a king to rule by counsaile and wisedome, and to builde his estate vpon them. Wherefore her grace must be remembred, the kings Maiesties pollitike body is not made onely of hys owne Royall material body, but of a Counsaile, by whom his maiestie ruleth, directeth, and gouerneth hys Realme. In the place of which Counsaile her grace is not ignorant, that we be set and placed. Wherefore the reputation shee shal geue vs, shee shall geue it to the kings honor, & that which shee shall take from vs, shee shall take from his Maiestie, whose maiestie wee thinke if it might take encrease of honour, as God geueth a daily abundance, it should receiue rather encrease from her beinge his Maiesties sister, then thus any abatement.

Shee receiued maister Arundel, and maister Englefelde.

You shall say.

All the Counsaile remembreth well her refusall to haue her house charged w^t any more number, alleaging the smal proportion for her charge, and therefore it was thought to come of their earnest suite, meaning to be priuiledged subiectes from the lawe, then of her desire, which refused very often to encrease her number. Their cautel the king might not suffer, to haue his law disobeyed, their countreis where they shoulde serue by them to be destitute, and hauing bene seruantes to his maiestie, the circumstances of their departure might in no wise be liked.

Shee refused to heare anye man to the contrarye of her opinion.

You shall say.

It is an aunswer more of will then of reason, and therfore her Grace muste bee admonished neither to truste her owne opinion without ground, neither mislike al others. hauing grounde. If hers be good, it is no hurt if shee heare the worse. If it be ill, shee shall doe well to heare the better. Shee shall not alter by hearing, but by hearing the better. And because shee shall not mislike the offer, lette her grace name of learned men whome shee will, and further then they by learning shal prooue, shee shall not be mooued. And so farre it is thought, reason wil compell her grace.

In the ende yee shall say.

The good willes and mindes of the Lorde Protectour and the Counsaile is so muche toward her grace, that how soeuer shee would her selfe in honor be esteemed, how soeuer in conscience quieted, yea how soeuer benefited, sauing their dueties to God and the king, they woulde as muche, and in theyr doings (if it please her to prooue it) will be nothing inferiours, assuring her grace, that they be moste sorie shee is thus disquieted: and if necessitie of the cause, the honour and suretie of the king, and the iudgement of theyr owne conscience mooued them not, thus farre they woulde not haue attempted. But their trust is, her grace wil alow them the more, when she shal perceiue the cause, and thinke no lesse coulde be done by them, where shee prouoked them so farre.

*¶These and other of like credite, more amply committed to you in speache, you shal declare to her grace, and further declare your conscience for the allowing of the manner of the Communion, as yee haue plainly professed it before vs.

At Richmund. 14. Iune. 1549.

The Lady Mary to the Lorde Protectour and the rest of the Counsaile. 27. Iune. 1549.

MY Lorde, I perceiue by letters directed from you and other of the kinges maiesties Counsaile, to my Controller, my Chaplaine, and master Englefelde my seruauant, that ye will them vppon their allegeaunce, to repaire immediately to you, wherein you geue me euident cause to chaunge mine accustomed opinion of you all, that is to say, to thinke you careful of my quietnesse and wel doings, considering how earnestly I wryte to you for the stay of two of them, and that not without very iust cause. And as for maister Englefeld, assoone as he could haue prepared himselfe, hauing his horsses so farre off, although yee hadde not sent at this present, would haue perfourmed your request. But in deede I am much deceiued. For I supposed ye would haue waied and takē my letters in better part, if yee haue receiued them: if not, to haue taried mine answere, and I not to haue found so litle frendship, not to haue bene vned so vnghently at your hands in sending for him, vpon whose trauail doth rest the only charge of my whole house, as I wryt to you lately, whose absence therefore shall be to me & my sayde house no little displeasure, especially being so farre off. And besides all this, I doe greatly maruaile to see your wrytinge for him, and the other two with suche extreeme wordes of pearill to ensue towardes them, in case they did not come, and specially for my Controller, whose charge is so great, that he canne not sodainly be meete to take a iourney: which woordes in mine opinion needed not (vnlesse it were in some verye iust and necessarye cause) to any of mine, who taketh my selfe subiect to none of you all: not doubting but if the kinges maiestie my brother were of sufficient yeares to perceiue this matter, and knewe what lacke and in commoditie the absence of my said officer should be to my house, his grace woulde haue beene so good Lorde to mee, as to haue suffered him to remaine, where his charge is. Notwithstanding, I haue willed him at this time to repaire to you, commaunding him to returne forthwith for my very necessities sake, and I haue geuen the like leaue to my poore sicke prieste also, whose life I thinke vndoubtedly shall be putte in hasard by the wet and colde painefull trauaile of this iourney. But for my parte I assure you all, that since the king my father, your late maister and verye good Lorde died, I neuer tooke you for other then my frendes: but in this it appeareth cōtrary. And sauing I thought verily that my former letters shoulde haue discharged this matter, I woulde not haue troubled my selfe with wryting the same, not doubting but you doe consider, that none of you all would haue bene contented to haue bene thus vsed at your inferiours handes, I meane to haue hadde your officer, or any of your seruants sent for by a force (as yee make it) knowing no iust cause why. Wherefore I doe not a little maruaile, that yee had not this remembraunce towards mee, who alwayes hath willed and wished you as well to doe as my selfe, and both haue and will praye for you all as heartily, as for mine owne soule to almighty God, whome I humblye beseeche to illumine you all with his holy spirite, to whose mercy also I am at a full poynt to commit my selfe, what soeuer shall become of my body. And thus with my commendations I bid you all fare well.

Youre frende to my power, though you geue mee con|trary cause. Mary.

A copie of the kinges Maiesties letter to the Ladie Marie. 24. Ian. 1550.

Riight deare. &c. We haue seene by letters of our Counsaile, sent to you of late, and by your aunswere thereunto, touching the cause of certaine your Chaplaines, hauing offended our lawes in saying of Masse, their good and conuenient aduises, and your frutelesse and indirect mistaking of the same, which thing mooueth vs to wryte at this time, that where good counsell from oure Counsaile hathe not preuailed, yet the like from our selfe maye haue due regarde. The whole matter we perceiue resteth in thys, that you being oure next sister, in whome aboue all other oure subiectes, nature shoulde place the moste estimation of vs, would wittingly and purposely, not onely breake our lawes your selfe, but also haue others maintained to doe the same. Truely howe soeuer the matter may haue other termes, other sense it hath not: and although by your letter it seemeth you challenge a promise made, that so you myghte do: yet surely we know the promise had no such meaning, neither to maintaine, ne to continue your fault. You muste knowe this sister, you were at the first time when the law was made, borne with all, not because you shoulde disobey the lawe, but y^t by our lenitie and loue shewed you might learne to obey it. Wee made a difference of you from our other subiectes, not for that all other should folow our lawes, & you only against and them, but that you might be Page 1334 brought as far forward by loue, as others were by duety. The error wherein you would rest is double, & euery part so great, that neither for the loue of God, we can wel suffer it vnredressed. neither for the loue of you we can but wish it amēded. First you retaine a fashion in honoring of God, who in dede therby is dishonored, & therein erre you in zeal for lacke of science, & hauing science offered you, you refuse it, not because it is science (we trust, for then should we dispaire of you) but because you

In this poynt you see I pretermit my estate, and talke with you as your brother, rather then your supreme Lord and king. Thus should you, being as wel content to heare of your opinions, as you are content to holde them, in the end thanke vs as much for bringing you to light, as nowe before you learne, you are loth to see it. And it thus muche reason with our natural loue shal not mooue you, whereof we would be sorie, then must we consider the other part of your fault, which is the offence of our lawes. For though hitherto it hath bene suffered in hope of amendement, yet now, if hope be none, how shall there be sufferance? Our charge is to haue the same care ouer euery mannes estate, that euery man ought to haue ouer his owne. And in your owne house, as you would be lothe openly to suffer one of your seruantes being next you, most manifestly to breake your orders, so must you thinke in our state it shal miscontent vs to permit you so great a subiecte, not to keepe oure lawes. Your nearnes to vs in bloud, your greatnesse in estate, the condition of this time maketh your fault y^e greater. The example is vnnatural, that our sister shuld do lesse for vs, then our other subiects. The case is sclanderous for so great a personage to forsake our maiestie.

Finally, it is too dangerous in a troublesome common wealth, to make y^e people to mistrust a faction. We be yōg, you thinke in yeeres to consider this. Truely sister, it troubleth vs somewhat the more, for it may be, this euil suffered in you, is greater then we can discerne, & so we be as much troubled, because we doubt whether we see the whole pearil, as we be, for that we see. In deede we will presume no further then our yeres geueth vs, yⁱ is, in doubtfull things not to trust our own wits, but in euidēt things we thinke there is no differēce. If you shuld not do as other subiects do, were it not euidēt, that therin you shuld not be a good subiect? Were it not plaine in that case, that you should vse vs not as your soueraigne Lord? Again, if you shoulde be suffred to breake our lawes manifestly, were it not a comfort for others so to do? and if our lawes be broken, & contemned, where is our estate? These things be so plaine, as we could almost haue iudged them sixe yeares past. And in deede it greeueth vs not a little, that you whych shoulde be our most comfort in our yong yeres, should alone geue vs occasion of discomfort. Thinke you not but it must needes trouble vs, and if you can so thinke, you oughte sister to amend it. Our natural loue towards you without doubt is great, & therefore diminish it not your self. If you wil be loued by vs, shewe some token of loue towards vs, that we say not with the Psalme. Mala pro bonis mihi reddiderunt. If you will be beleueed, when by wryting you confesse vs to be your soueraigne Lord, heare that which in other things is often alleaged: Ostende mihi fidem tuam ex factis tuis. In the answeere of your letter to our counsaile, we remember you sticke only vpon one reason deuided into two partes. The first is, that in matters of religion, your faith is none other, but as all Christendome doth confesse. The next is, you wil assent to no alteration, but wish things to stād as they did at our fathers death. If you meane in the firste to rule your faith, by that you call Christendome, and not by this Church of England, wherein you are a member, you shal err in many poynts, such as our fathers & yours wold not haue suffered, whatsoever you saye of the standing still of thinges, as they were leaft by him. The matter is too plaine to write, what may be gathered, and too perillous to be concluded against you. For the other part, if you like no alteration by our authoritie, of things not altered by oure father, you should doe vs too great an iniurie. We take our self for the administration of this our common wealthe, to haue the same authoritye which our father had diminished in no part, neither by example of scripture, nor by vniuersal lawes. The stories of Scripture be so plenteous, as almost y^e best ordered church of the Israelites was by kings, yonger then we be. Well sister, we will not in these things interprete your wrytings to the worste: loue and charitie shall expound them. But yet you must not therby be bolde to offend in that, whereunto you see your wrytings might be wrested. To conclude, we exhort you to do your duetie, and if any impediment be thereof, not of purpose, you shall finde a brotherly affection in vs to remedy the same. To teache you and instruct you, we wil geue order, and so procure you to doe your duetie wil•ingly, that you shall perceiue you are not vsed meerely as a subiect, and onely commaunded, but as a daughter, a scholler, and a sister, taught, instructed, and perswaded. For the which cause, when you haue considered this our letter, we pray you that wee may shortly heare from you.

To the kings most excellent Maiestie.

MY duetie moste humbly remembred to your maiestie, please it the same to vnderstande that I haue receiued your letters by maister Throgmorton this bearer. The contents wherof doeth more trouble me, then any bodily sicknesse, though it were euen to the death, and the rather for that your highnesse doeth charge me to be both as a breaker of your lawes, and also an encourager of others to do the like. I most humbly beseeche your Maiestie, to thinke that I neuer entended towards you otherwise then my duty compelleth me vnto, that is, to wish your highnesse all honour and prosperitie, for the which I do and daily shal pray▪ And where it pleaseth your maiestie to wryte, that I make a chalēge of a promise made otherwise then it was meant: the trothe is, the promise coulde not be denied before your maiesties presence at my laste waiting vpon the same. And although, I confesse, the grounde of faith (wherunto I take reason to be but an handmaid) & my conscience also hath and doth agree with the same: yet touching that promise, for so much as it hath pleased your maiestie (God knoweth by whose perswasion) to wryte, it was not so meanr: I shal most humbly desire your highnes to examine the truth therof indifferently, and either will your maiesties ambassadour, nowe being with the Emperour, to enquire of the same, if it be your pleasure to haue him moue it, or els to cause it to be demanded of the Emperours ambassador here, although he were not within this realme at that time. And thereby it shall appeare that in this poynt, I haue not offended your maiestie, if it may please you so to accepte it. And albeit your maiestie (GOD be praised) hath at these yeres as much vnderstanding and more, then is commonly seene in that age yet considering you do hear but one part (your highnes not offended) I would be a suter to the same, that till ye were grōwen to more perfect yeres, it might stand with your pleasure to stay in matters touching the soule. So vndoubtedly shuld your Maiestie knowe more, and heare others, and neuerthesse be at your liberty and do your wil and pleasure. And whatsoever your maiestie hath conceiued of me, either by letters to your cōsaile, or by their report, I trust in the ende to proue my selfe as true to you, as any subiect within your realm, & wil by no meanes stand in argument with your maiestie, but in most humble wise beseeche you, euen for Gods sake to suffer me, as your highnesse hath done hitherto. It is for no worldly respecte I desire it, God is my iudge, but rather then to offend my conscience, I woulde desire of God, to lose all that I haue, and also my life: and neuerthesse liue and die your humble sister and true subiect. Thus after pardon craued of your maiestie for my rude and bold writing, I beseche almighty God to preserue the same in honor, with as long continuance of health and life, as euer had noble king.

From Beauliene, the 3. of Februarie,

Your Maiesties most humble and vnworthy sister, Marie.

The Ladie Marie to the Lordes of the Counsaile 4. December. 1550.

MY Lords, your letters dated the second of this present, were deliuered vnto mee the thirde of the same. And where you wryte, that two of my Chaplaines, Doctor Mallet and Barkley be indicted for certaine things committed by them contrary to the kings Maiesties lawes, and processe for them also awarded forth, and deliuered to the Sheriffe of Essex: I can not bur maruell they should be so vsed, cōsidering it is done, as I take it, for saying masse wythin my house: and although I haue bene of my selfe mineded alwayes, and yet am, to haue Masse within my house: yet I haue bene aduertised, that the Emperours Maiestie hath bene promimised that I shoulde neuer be vnquieted nor troubled for my so doing, as some of you, my Lordes, can witnesse. Furthermore, besides the declaration of the saide promise made to me by the Emperors ambassador that dead is, from his Maiesty, to put my chaplaines more out of feare, when I was the last yeare with the kings maiestie my brother, that question was then mooued, and could not bee denied, but affirmed by some of you before his Maiestie to bee true, beinge not so muche vnquieted for the trouble Page 1335 of my sayde Chaplaines, as I am to thinke how this matter may be taken, the promise to such a person being no better regarded. And for mine owne part, thought full little to haue receiued suche vngentlenes at your hāds hauing alwaies (God is my iudge) wished vnto the whole nūber of you, as to my self, & haue refused to troble you, or to craue any thing at your hāds, but your good wil & frēdship, which very slenderly appeareth in this matter. Notwithstāding to be plain with you, how soeuer you shal vse me or mine (with Gods helpe) I will neuer varie from mine opinion touching my faith. And if yee or any of you beare me the lesse good wil for that matter, or faint in your frendship towards me, onely for the same I must and will be contented, trusting that God will in the ende shew his mercy vpon me, assuring you, I would rather refuse the frendship of all the world (whereunto I trust I shall neuer be driuen) then forsake any poynte of my faith. I am not without some hope that yee will stay this matter, not enforcing the rigor of the law against my chaplaines. The one of them was not in my house these 4. moneths, & D. Mallet hauing my licence, is eyther at Windsor, or at his benefice, who, as I haue hearde, was indicted for saying of Masse out of my house, whiche was not true▪ But in deede, the day before my remoouing from Woodham water, my whole housholde in effecte was gone to Newhall, he sayde Masse there by mine appoyntment. I see and heare of diuers that doe not obey your statutes and proclamations, and neuerthelesse escape without punishmēt. Be ye Iudges, if I be well vsed to haue mine punished by rigour of a lawe, besides all the false bruits that ye haue suffered to be spoken of me. Moreouer my Chaplaine D. Mallet, besides mine owne commandement was not ignorant of the promise made to the Emperour, which did putte him oute of feare. I doubt not therfore but ye wil consider it, as by that occasion no peace of friendship be taken away, nor I to haue cause but to beare you my good will, as I haue done heeretofore, for albeit I could do you little pleasure, yet of my friendship ye were sure, as if it had lien in my power yee shoulde haue well knowen. Thus with my hearty commendations to you all, I pray almighty God to send you as much of his grace, as I would wish to mine owne soule.

From Beulien, the 4. of Decemb.

Your assured frend to my power, Mary.

The Counsaile to the Ladie Marie, the 25. of December.

After our due commendations to your grace. By your letters to vs, as an answeare to ours, touching certain processe against two of your Chaplaines, for saying Masse against the law and statute of the realme, we perceiue both the offence of your chaplains is otherwise excused then the matter may beare, and also our good willes otherwise misconstrued then we looked for. And for the first parte, where your greatest reason for to excuse the offence of a lawe, is a promise made to the Emperours Maiestie, whereof you wryte, that first some of vs be witnesses, next that the Ambassadors for the Emperour declared the same vnto you, and lastly, that the same promise was affirmed to you before y^e kings maiestie at your last being with him: We haue thought conuenient to repeate the matter from the beginning, as it hath hitherto proceeded, whereupon it shal appeare howe euidently your Chaplaines hath offended the lawe, and you also mistaken the promise. The promise is but one in it selfe, but by times thrise as you say repealed. Of whiche times, the firste is chiefly to be considered, for vpon that doe the other two depende. It is very true the Emperour made request to the kings Maiestie, that you might haue libertie to vse the Masse in your house, and to be as it were exempted from the daunger of the statute. To which request diuers good reasons were made, containing the discommodities that shoulde follow the graunt therof, and meanes deuised rather to perswade you, to obey & receiue the generall and godly reformation of the whole realme, then by a priuate fansie to preiudice a common order. But yet vpon earnest desire and entreatie made in y^e Emperours name, thus much was graunted, that for his sake and your owne also, it should be suffered and winked at, if you had the priuate masse vsed in your own closet for a season, vntil you might be better enformed, wherof was some hope, hauing only with you a few of your owne chamber, so that for all the rest of your housholde, the seruice of the realme shoulde be vsed, and none other: further, then thys the promise exceeded not. And truely suche a matter it then seemed to some of vs, as in dede it was, that wel might the Emperour haue required of the kings Maiestie a matter of more profit: but of more weight or difficulty to be granted, his maiestie coulde not. After this graunt in woordes, there was by the ambassage now dead, oftentimes desired some wryting, as a testimonye of the same. But y^t was euer denyed: not because we meant to breake the promise, as it was made, but because ther was a daily hope of your reformation.

Nowe to the second time, you say the Emperours Ambassadors declaration made mention of a promise to you, it might well so be. But we thinke no otherwise then as it appeareth before wrytten. If it were, hys fault it was to declare more then he heard: ours it may not be, that denye not that we haue sayd. As for the last time when you were with the kings maiestie, the same some of vs (whome by these words your letter noteth) doe wel remember, that no other thing was grauted to you in this matter, but as the first promise was made to the Emperour, at whiche time you had too many arguments made to approoue the proceedings of the kings Maiestie, and to condemne the abuse of the masse, to thinke that where the priuate masse was iudged vngodly, there you should haue authority and ground to vse it. About the same time, the Ambassadoure made meanes to haue some testimonie of the promise vnder the great seale, and that not hard to haue it, but by a letter, and that also was not onely denied, but diuers good reasons, y^t he should think it denied with reason, & so to be contented with an aunswer. It was told him in reducing that which was commonly called the Masse, to the order of the primatiue church, and the institution of Christe, the kings maiesty & his whole realme had their consciences well quieted, against y^t which, if any thing should be willingly committed, the same should be taken as an offence to God, & a very sinne against truth vnknowne. Wherefore to licence by open acte such a dede in the conscience of the kings maiesty & his realme, were euē a sinne against God. The most that might herein be borne, was that the kings maiestie myght vpon hope of your gracious reconciliation, suspende the execution of his law, so that you would vse the licence as it was first graunted. What soeuer the Ambassador hath sayd to others, he had no other maner graunt from vs, nor hauing it thus graunted, could alledge any reason against it. And where in your letter your grace noteth vs as breakers of the promise made to the Emperour, it shal appeare who hath broken the promise: whether we that haue suffered more then we licenced, or you y^t haue transgressed that was graunted. Nowe therefore we pray your grace confer the doing of your chaplaines with euery poynte of the premisses, and if the same cannot be excused, then thinke also howe long the lawe hath bene spared. If it pricke our consciences somewhat, that so muche shoulde be vsed as by the promise you may claime, how much more should it greeue vs to licence more then you can claime? And yet coulde we be content to beare great burden to satisfy your grace, if the burthen pressed not our consciences, whereof we must say as the Apostle sayd: Gloriatio nostra est haec, testimonium conscientiae nostrae. For the other parte of your graces letter, by the which we see you misconstrue our good willes in wryting to you, how soeuer the law had proceded against your Chaplaines, our order in sending to you was to be liked, and therein truely had we speciall regarde of your graces degree and estate. And because the lawe of it selfe respecteth not persons, we thought to geue respect to you, first signifying to you what the law required, before it should be executed, that being warned, your grace might either thincke no strangenes in the execution, or for an example of obedience cause it to be executed your selfe. Others we see perplexed wth sodainnes of matters, your grace we woulde not haue vnwarned to thinke any thing done sodaine. Truely we thought it more commendable for your grace, to helpe the execution of a law, then to helpe the offence of one condemned by lawe. And in geuing you knowledge what the kings lawes required, we looked for helpe in the execution by you the kings maiesties sister. The greater personnage your grace is, the nigher to the king, so muche more ought your exāple to further lawes. For which cause it hath bene called a good common wealth, where the people obeyed the higher estates, and they obeied the lawes. As nature hath ioyned your grace to the kings maiestie to loue him moste entirely, so hath reason and lawe subdued you to obey him willingly. The one and the other we doubt not, but your grace remembreth, and as they both be ioyned together in you, his maiesties sister, so we trust you wil not seuerē thē, for in deede your grace cannot loue him as your brother, but you must obey his maiestie as his subiect.

Example of your obedience and reuerence of his maiesties lawes is in stead of a good preacher, to a great number of his maiesties subiects, who if they may see in you negligēce of his maiesty or his lawes, wil not faile but folow on hardly, and then their fault is not their own but yours, by exāple. And so may the kings maiesty whē he shal come to further iudgmēt, impute y^t falt of diuers euil people (which thing God forbid) to the sufferance of your graces doings. And therefore we most earnestly frō the depth of our hearts desire it, y^t as nature hath set your grace nigh his Maiestie by bloud, so your loue and zeale to his maiesty, wil further Page 1336 his estate by obedience. In the end of your letter ij. thyngs be touched, which we cā not premit: the one is, you seme to charge vs with permission of mē to breake lawes & statutes. We thinke in deede it is too true, that laws and proclamations be broken daily, the more pity it is: but that we permit them, we would be so sory to haue it proued. The other is, that we haue suffred brutes to be spoken of you, & that also must be aunswered as the other. It is pity to see men so euill, as whome they may touch with tales & infamies they care not, so they misse not the best. Suche is the boldnes of people, that neither we can fully bridle them, to raise tales of you, nor of oure selues. And yet whēsoeuer any certaine person may be gottē, to be charged w^t any such, we neuer leaue thē vnpunished. In deede, the best way is, both for your grace, & also vs, y^t when we can not find and punish the offender, let vs say as he said that was euil spoken of: yet will I so liue, as no credite shal be geuen to my backbiters. Certainly, if we had credited any euill tale of your grace, we would frendly haue admonished you therof, & so also proceded, as either the taletellers should haue ben punished, or else haue proued their tales. And therefore we pray your grace to thinke no vnkindnes in vs, y^t anye euil brutes haue bene spred by euill men, but thinke rather wel of vs, y^t howsoeuer they were spred, we beleueed them not. Hitherto your grace seeth we haue writtē somewhat at length, of y^e promise made to you and our meanings, in our former writings. And now for the latter part of our letter, we will as briefly as we can remember to you two speciall matters, wherof the one might suffice to reforme your proceedings, & both together well considered, we trust shall do your grace much good. The one is, the truth of that you be desired to follow: the other is, y^e commodity y^t thereby shall ensue. They both make a iust cōmandement, and because of the first the latter followeth, that first shal be intreated. We heere say your grace refuseth to heare any thing reasoned, cōtrary to your old determinatiō, wherein you make your opinion suspitious, as that you are afeard to be dissuaded. If your faith in things be of God, it may abide any storme or water: if it be but of sand, you do best to eschew the weather. That which we professe, hath y^e foundation in Scriptures vpon plaine textes and no gloses, the confirmation therof by the vse in the primatiue Church, not in this later corrupted: and in deede our greatest chaunge is not in the substāce of our faith, no not in any one article of our crede. Only the difference is, that we vse the ceremonies, obseruations, and Sacraments of our religion as the Apostles, and first fathers in the primatiue Church did. You vse the same that corruption of time brought in, and very barbarie and ignorance nourished, and seeme to be bold for custome against truth, & we for truth against custome. Your grace in one or two places of your letter, seemeth to speake earnestly in y^e maintenance of your faith, & therin (so that your faith be according to the Scriptures) we must haue the like opinion. The saying is very good if the faith be sound. But if euery opinion your grace hath (we cannot tell how conceiued) shall be your faith, you may be much better instructed. S. Paule teacheth you, that faith is by the worde of God. And it was a true saying of him that saide: Non qui cuius credit, fidelis est, sed qui Deo. For where hathe youre grace ground for such a faith, to thinke cōmon praier in the English Church should not be in english? that Images of God shuld be set vp in y^e church? or y^t the sacramēt of Christes body & blood shuld be offred by the priests for the dead? yea, or y^t it should be otherwise vsed, then by y^e scripture it was instituted? Though you haue no scripture to mayneteine thē, we haue euident scriptures to forbid thē. And although fault might be found, that of late baptisme hath bin vsed in your graces house, cōtrary to law, & vtterly w^tout licence, yet is it y^e worse, y^t contrary to y^e primatiue Church it hath bin in a tong vnknown, by y^t which the best part of y^e Sacrament is vnused, & as it were a blind bargain made by the Godfathers in a matter of illuminatiō, and thus in the rest of the things in which your grace differeth frō the common order of the realme, where haue you groundes or reason but some custome, which oftentimes is mother of many errors? And although in ciuill things she may bee followed where she causeth quiet, yet not in religions, where she excuseth no error, as in Leuiticus it is sayd: Ye shall not do after the custome of Egypt, wherein ye dwelled, nor after the custome of Chanaan: no, you shall not walke in theyr lawes, for I am your Lord God, keepe you my lawes and cōmandements. The points wherein your grace differeth in your faith as you call it, may be shewed where, when, how, & by whom they begā, since the Gospell was preached, y^e church was planted, & the Apostles martired. At which time your faith depended vpon the Scripture, & otherwise there was no necessitie to beleue. For as Hierome sayth: Quod de scripturis non habet auctoritatem, eadem facilitate contemnitur qua probatur. And because your grace as we heare say, readeth sometime the Doctors, we may alledge vnto you the 2. or 3. places of other principall Doctors. August. sayth: Cum dominus tacuerit, quis nostrū dicat, illa vel illa sunt: aut si dicere audeat, vnde probat? And Chrisostomes saying is not vnlike. Multi, inquit, iactant spiritum sanctum, sed qui propria loquuntur, falso illum praetendunt. And if you wi^l haue their meaning plaine, read the 5. Chapter of the first booke of Ecclesiastica historia, and where Constantine had these wordes in the Councell. In disputationibus, inquit, rerum diuinarum, habetur praescripta spiritus sancti doctrina, Euang[•]lici & Apostolici libri cum prophetarum oraculis plene nobis ostendunt sensum numinis, proinde discordia posita, sumamus ex verbis spiritus questionum explicationes. What playner sayings may be then these to answeere your fault? Agayne, to infinite it were to remember your grace the great number of particular errores (crept into the church whereupon you make your foundation. The fables of false miracles and lewde pilgrimages may somewhat teach you. Onely this we pray your grace to remember w^t your selfe: the two wordes that the father said of his sonne Iesus Christ. Ipsum audite. To the second point of the cōmoditie that may follow your obedience, we hauing by the kinges authoritie in this behalfe the gouernaunce of thys realme must herein be playne with your grace. And if our speache offende the same, then must your grace thinke it is our charge and office to finde fault where it is, and our dutie to amend it as we may. Most sory truely we be, y^t your grace, whom we should otherwise honour, for the kinges maiesties sake, by your owne deedes shoulde prouoke vs to offend you, we do perceauē great discommoditie to the realm by your graces singularitie, (if it may be so named) in opinion, & in one respect, as you are sister to our soueraigne Lord & maister, we most hūbly beseeche your grace to shew your affection cōtinually towardes him, as becōmeth a sister. And as your grace is a subiect, and we counsellors to his Maiesties estate, we let you know, the exāple of your graces opinion hindreth the good weale of thys realm, which thing we think is not vnknowne vnto you: & if it be, we let your grace knowe, it is to true. For Gods sake we beseech your grace, let nature set before your eyes the yong age of the king your brother. Let reason tell you y^e losenes of the people, how then can you without a wayling hart▪ thinke that ye should be y^e cause of disturbance? if your grace see the king, being y^e ordinary ruler vnder God not onely of all others in the realme, but of you also▪ call his people by ordinary lawes one way, with what hart can your grace stay your selfe without following: muche worse to stay other y^t would follow their soueraigne Lord? Can it be a loue in you to forsake him, his rule and lawe, & take a priuate way by your selfe? If it be not loue, it is much lesse obedience. If your grace thinke the kings maiestie to be ouer his people as the head in a mans bodye is ouer the rest not onely in place but in dignitie and science▪ how can you being a principall mēber in y^e same body keep y^e nourishment from y^e head, we pray your grace most earnestly think this thing so much greueth vs, as for our priuate affectiō & good willes vnto you (though we shuld dissemble) yet for our publicke office, we cannot but plainely enforme your grace, not doubting but that your wisdomē can iudge what your office is, & if it were not your owne cause, we know your grace by wisdomed could charge vs, if we suffered y^e like in any other. Truely euery one of vs a part honoreth your grace for our maisters sake, but when we ioyn together in publick seruice, as in this writing we do. We iudge it not tollerable, to know disorder, to see the cause, & leaue it vnamēded. For though we would be negligēt, y^e world would iudge vs. And therefore we do altogether eftsoones require your grace, in the kinges maiesties name, y^t if any of your 2. chaplains, Mallet, or Barcklet, be returned, or as soone as any of them shall returne to your graces house y^e same may be by your graces commaundement or order, sent or deliuered to the sheriff of Essex, who hath commandement from the kings maiestie, by order of the law & of his crowne to attache them, or if that conditiō shall not like your grace, yet y^t then he may be warned frō your graces house, & yet not kept there, to be as it were de|fended frō the power of the law. Which thing we think surely neither your grace will meane, nor any of your counsell assent thereto. And so to make an end of our letter, being long for the matter, and hitherto differred for our great busines, we trust your grace first seeth how y^e vsage of your Chaplaines differeth from the maner of our licence, and what good entent moued vs to write vnto you in former letters: lastly that the thinges whereunto the king and the whole realme hath consented, be not onely lawful and iust by the pollicie of the Realme, but also iust and godly by the lawes of God. So that if we, which haue charge vnder the Page 1337 King should willingly consent to the open breach of them, we could neyther discharge our selues to the king for our dueties, neyther to God for our conscience. The consideration of which things we pray almighty God, by his holye spirit, to lay in the bottome of your hart, and thereupon to build such a profession in you, as both God may haue his true honor: the king his dewe obedience, the Realme concord, and we most comfort. For all the which we do hartely pray, & therewith, for the cōtinuance of your graces helth to your harts desire. Frō Westminster y^e xxv. of December.

The Lady Mary to the Lordes of the Counsell xx. May. 1551.

MY Lordes, after my harty commendations to you, although both I haue bene and also am loth to trouble you with my letters, yet neuerthelesse the newes which I haue lately hard, touching my Chaplayne Doctor Mallet forceth me thereunto, at this present, for I heare by credible report, that you haue committed him to the tower, which newes seeme to me very strange: notwithstanding I thought it good, by these to desire you to aduertise me what is the cause of his imprisonment, assuring you I would be sory that any of mine should deserue the like punishment, and there is no creature within the Kings maiesties Realme would more lament, that any belonging to them should giue iust cause so to be vsed: then I would do: who would haue thought much frendship in you if you had geuen me knowledge, wherein my sayd Chaplein had offended, before you had ministred suche punishment vnto him, eftsoones requiring you to let me knowe by this bearer, the truth of the matter. And thus thanking you for the short dispatch of the poore Marchaunt of Portingall, I wish to you all no worse then to my selfe, and so bid you farewell.

From Beaulien the 2. of May.

Your frend to my power, Mary.

The Counsell to the Lady Mary, 6. of Maye. 1551.

After our humble cōmendatiōs to your grace, we haue receiued your letters of the second of this moneth, by the which your grace seemeth to take it straungely that Doctor Mallet is committed to prison, whereof we haue the more maruell, seeing it hath bene heeretofore signified vnto you that he hath offended the kings maiesties lawes, and thereof condemned, your grace hath bene by our letters earnestly desired, that he might be deliuered to the Sheriffe of Essex, according to the iust processe of the lawe, to the which all maner persons of this Realme be subiect, whereof howsoeuer it seemeth straunge at this tyme to your grace that he is imprisoned, it may seme more strange to other that he hath escaped it thus long: and if the place being the Tower, moue your grace not to impute his imprisonment to his former offense, then we pray your grace to vnderstand that in deede it is for the very same, and the place of the imprisonment to be at the Kings Maiesties pleasure, from whome, besides the charge of his lawes, we haue expresse commaundement to doe that we doe. And so we beseech your grace to thinke of vs, that neither in thys case, nor in any other we meane to do any other then minister and see, as much as in our power lieth, ministred iustice indifferently, to all persons, whiche doing then wee thinke your grace should not thinke it any lacke of frendship that wee did not certifie you of the offense of youre Chaplayne, although in deede the cause hath already bene certified. And we trust your grace both of youre naturall nearenes to the Kings Maiestie and your owne good wisdome will not mislike our Ministerie in the execution of the lawes of the Realme, and the pleasure of the Kyngs Maiestie. So we wish to your grace from the bottome of our hart, the grace of almighty God, with the riches of his holy giftes.

The Lady Mary to the Counsell, the 11. of May.

MY Lordes, it appeareth by your letters of the vj. of this presēt which I haue receaued, that the imprisonmēt of my Chaplaine Doctour Mallet is, for saying of Masse, and that he was condemned for the same. In deede I haue heard that he was endited, but neuer condēned. Neuerthelesse, I must needes confesse and say, that he did it but by my commaundement, and I sayde vnto him that none of my Chaplaynes shoulde be in daunger of the lawe for saying Masse in my house. And thereof to put hym out of doubt, the Emperours Embassadour that dead is, declared vnto him before that time, how after what sorte the & promise was made to his Maiesty, wherby it appeareth, that the mā hath not in that willingly offēded. Wherefore I pray you to discharge him of emprisonment, and set him at liberty: if not, ye minister cause no• only to him, but to others to thinke that I haue declared more then was true, whiche I woulde not wittingly doo, to gaine the whole world. And heerein as I haue often sayde, the Emperours Maiestie can be best iudge. And to be playne with you according to mine old custome, there is not one amongst the whole number of you all, that woulde be more loth to be founde vntrue of their word then I. And well I am assured, that none of you haue found it in me. My Lordes, I pray you seeke not so much my dishonour, as to disprooue my word, whereby it should appeare too plaine that you handle me not well. And if you haue cause to charge my Chaplaine for this matter, lay that to mee, and I wyll discharge it againe, by your promise made to the Emperours Maiestie, which you can not rightfully denie, wishing rather that you had refused it in the beginning then after such promise made, and to such a person, to seeme to go from it which my Lordes, as your very friend I hartely desire you to consider, and to geue me no cause to thinke you otherwise then my friends, considering I haue alwayes, and yet do (God is my iudge) wishe to you all no worse neither in soules nor bodies, then to my selfe, and so wyth my hartye commendations, I commit you all to God.

Your assured friend to my power, Mary.

¶The Counsaile to the Lady Mary, the 27. of May. 1551.

After our due commendations to your grace, although the same receiue not aunswere so soone, as perchance was looked for vpon the returne of your graces seruaunt: Yet we doubt not, but youre grace vnderstanding that where we haue matters of estate pertaining to the Kings Maiestie in hand, as in deede we haue had of late, the differring of the answere in a matter being no greater, requireth to be borne withal. And touching the answere of your graces letter for D. Mallet, we pray your grace to vnderstande, that although you write he was indited, but not condemned, and so seeme to take exception at the maner of his imprisonment, yet if they which enformed your grace of that maner of reason in the law, were as well disposed to please your grace with truth, as the reason in deede is not true, then should they haue told your grace that by the Acte of Parliament, if either Mallet haue bene conuicted by the othes of twelue men, or that the fact hath bene notorious, then the punishment doth follow iustly. The trueth of the one and the other way of conuiction in this case is notorious enough, besides his flying from the processe of the lawe. And where your grace, to releue him, woulde take the fault vpon your selfe, we are sory to perceiue your grace so ready to be a defence to one that the Kings lawe doth condemne. Neuerthelesse, he is not punished because your grace bad him, and willed him to do that which was an offence: but he is punished for doing it, and if we should not so see the Kings lawes executed without respecte, it might appeare that we too much neglected our duty, and for that your grace taketh it as a discredite to your selfe, that he should be punished for that you bad him do, alledging to him that you had authoritie so to do, and so promise made to the Emperour, it hath bene both written, and sayde to your grace, what is the truth in that behalfe: and howsoever that your grace pretendeth your licence to haue Masse said before your selfe, for a time of your reconciliation, it had bene so far out of reason for to haue desired that whosoever was your Chapleine might say Masse in any house that was yours, when your graces selfe was not there. For so is D. Mallets offence, for saying Masse at one of your houses, where your grace was not, whych thing as it was neuer graunted, so do we not remember that euer it was demaunded. The sute that hath bene at anye tyme made, either by the Emperours Embassadour that dead is, or by him that now is, was neuer but in respect of your grace, and not to be taken that the Emperour or his Embassadour meant to priuiledge mayster D. Mallet or any other to say Masse out of your presence. Wherefore as we do plainely write to your grace, so do we pray you to take it in good part, and thinke we be as ready to do our due reuerence towards your grace in any thyng wee may doe with our dutie to our maister as any youre grace may commaund: and of suche wisdom we knowe your grace to be, that ye should iudge the better of vs, for that we be diligent to see the lawes of the Realme executed, wherein resteth the strength and safegard of the kings Maiestie our soueraigne Lord and Maister.

The Lady Mary to the Lordes of the Counsaile, 21. Iune. 1551.

MY Lords, although I receiued by my seruant this bearer (who lately deliuered vnto you my letters, wherein I desired to Page 1338 haue my Chaplayne D. Mallet discharged of his imprisonment) your gentle message in generall wordes, for the whyche I geue you my hartye thanks: yet haue I no knowledge whether you will set him at liberty or no: But I thinke that your waighty affayres at that time, was the let and cause ye did not write. For else I doubt not you would haue aunswered me. Wherefore not being satisfied, and vnderstandyng yee would gladly pleasure mee, I thought good eftsoones to desire you, that my sayde Chaplayne may haue his libertye, wherein I assure you, yee shall much gratifie me, beeing not a little troubled, that he is so long in prison, without iust cause, seeyng the matter of hys imprisonment is discharged by the promise made to the Emperours Maiestie, as in my late letter I declared vnto you. Wherefore my Lordes, I pray you let me haue knowledge by this bearer how ye will vse me in this matter, wherein if ye do pleasure me accordingly, then shall it well appeare that ye regard the foresayd promise, and I wil not forget your gentlenes therein (God willing) but requite it to my power. And thus with my harty commendations to you all, I bid you farewell.

From Beaulien the 21. of Iune.

Your assured friend to my power Mary.

¶The Counsaile to the Lady Mary, the 24. of Iune. 1551.

AFTER our humble cōmendatiōs to your grace, we haue receiued your graces letter of the 21. heereof, wherin is receaued the same request that in your former letters hath bene made for the release of Doctor Mallet, and therein also your grace seemeth to haue looked for the same answer of your former letter, y^t which indeed partly was omitted (as your grace cōiectureth) by the reason of y^e Kings Maiesties affaires: wherwith we •e thoroughly occupied, partly for that we had no other thing to answeere, then you had heeretofore heard in the same matter. And therefore where your grace desireth a resolute answeere, we assure the same we be right sory for y^r matter, & that it should be your graces chaunce to moue it, as we cannot, with our duties to y^e Kings Maiestie, accomlishe your desire. So necessary a thing it is to see the lawes of the Realme executed indifferently in all manner of persons, and in these cases of contempt of the Ecclesiasticall orders of this Church of England, the same may not without y^e great displeasure of God the slaunder of y^e state be neglected, and therfore your grace may please to vnderstand we haue not only punished your Chaplein, but all such others whom we find in like case to haue disobeyed the lawes of the Kings maiestie. And touching the excuse your grace oftentimes vseth, of a promise made, we assure your grace, none of vs al, nor any other of the Counsell as your grace hath bene certified, hath euer bene priuie to any such promise, otherwise then hath bene written. And in that matter your grace had plaine answer both by vs of the kings maiesties Counsell, at your being last in his Maiesties presence, and therein also your grace might perceiue his Maiesties determination, whereunto we beseech your grace not only to incline your selfe, but also to iudge well of vs that do addict our selues to doe our dueties. And so also shall we be ready to do with all oure harts, our due reuerence towarde your grace, whose preseruatiō we commend to almighty God with our praier.

The Copie of the Lady Maryes letter to the Kings Maiestie.

MY duetie most humbly remembred vnto your Maiesty, it may please the same to be aduertised, that I haue receyued by my seruantes, your most honourable letters, the conte••es whereof do not a little trouble me, and so muche the more, for that any of my sayd seruants should moue or attempt me in matters touching my soule, which I thinke the meanest subiect within your highnes Realme, could euill 〈◇〉 at their seruantes handes, hauing for my part vtterly refused heeretofore to talke with them in such matters, and of all other persons 〈...〉 them therein, to whome I haue declared what I thinke• 〈◇〉 •hee which trusted that your Maiestie woulde haue suffered 〈◇〉 your poore sister and beadewomā to haue vsed the accustomed masse, which the King your father & mine with all his predec•ssours did euermore vse, wherein also I haue ben brought vp frō my 〈◇〉 . And therevnto my conscience doth not only bind me; which by no meanes will suffer me to thinke one thing and do another• 〈◇〉 also the promise made to the Emperour by your Maiesties counsaile was an assurance to me, that in so doing I should not off•nd the •wes, although they seeme nowe to qualifie and 〈...〉 thing. And at my last wayting vpon your Maiesty, I was 〈◇〉 to declare my mind and conscience to the same, and desired your highnes, rather then you should constraîne me to leaue 〈...〉 my life• wherunto your maiesty made me a very gētle answer. And now I most humbly beseech your highnes to geuē me leaue to write what I thinke touching your Maiesties letters. In deede• they be signed with your owne hand, and neuertheles in mine opiniō not your maiesties in effect, because it is wel knowē (as heretofore I haue declared in the presēce of your highnesse) that although, our Lorde be praysed, your Maiestie hath farre more knowledge, and greater giftes then others of your yeres, yet it is not possible that your highnes can at these yeares be a iudge in matters of religion: and therefore I take it that the matter in your letters proceedeth from such as doe wish those thinges to take place, which be most agreeable to themselues by whose doinges your maiesty not offended, I entend not to rule my conscience. And thus without molesting your Highnes any further, I humbly beseech the same, euē for Gods sake to beare with me, as you haue done, and not to thinke that by my doinges or example anye inconuenience might growe to your maiestie or your Realme, for I vse it not after such sorte putting no doubt but in time to come, whether I liue or dye, your maiestie shall perceauē that mine intent is grounded vpon a true loue towards you, whose royall estate I beseeche almighty God long to continue, which is and shall be my dayly praier according to my duty. And after pardon craued of your maiesty for these rude and bold letters, if neyther at my humble suite, nor for the regard of the promise made to the Emperour, your Highnesse will suffer and beare with mee, as you haue done till your Maiesty may be a iudge herein your selfe, and rightly vnderstand theyr proceedinges, (of whiche your goodnesse yet I despayre not) otherwise, rather then to offend God and my conscience, I offer my body at your wil, and death shall be more welcome then life with a troubled conscience, most humbly beseeching your Maiesty to pardon my slownes in aunswering your letters. For mine olde disease woulde not suffer me to write any sooner. And thus I praye almighty God to keep your Maiesty in all vertue and honor with good health and long life to his pleasure.

From my poore house at Copped hall. the xix. of Aug.

Your Maiesties most humble sister, Mary.

Right deare and right intirely beloued sister, we greeete you well, and let you knowe that it greeueth vs muche to perceiue no amendment in you, of that which we for Gods cause, your soules health, our conscience, and the common tranquillity of our Realme, haue so long desired, assuring you that our sufferance hath muche more demonstration of naturall loue, then contentation of our conscience and foresight of our safety. Wherefore although you geue vs occasion as much almost as in you is to diminish our naturall loue: yet be we loth to feele it decay, and meane not to be so carelesse of you as we be prouoked.

And therefore meaning your weale, and therwith ioyning a care not to be found gilty in our conscience to God, hauyng cause to require forgeuenes that we haue so long for respect of loue towards you omitted our bounden duety, we send at this present our right trusty and right welbeloued counsaylor the Lord R. or Chauncelour of England, and our trustye and right welbeloued Counsaylers, Sir A. W. Knight, Comptroler of our housholde and Sir W.P. Knight, one of our principall Secretaries in message to you, touching the order of your house, wylling you to geue them firme credite in those thinges they shall say to you from vs, and doe there in our name. Yeauen vnder our signet at our Castle of Winsor, the 24. of August, in the first yeare of our Raigne.

A copy of the kinges Maiesties instructions, geuen to the said L. C. sir A. W. and sir W.P. Knightes, &c. 24. August. 1551.

First, you the sayd Lorde Chauncellor and your Colleagues shall make your immediate repayre to the sayd Lady Mary geuing to her his maiesties hartye commendations, and shewe the cause of your comming to be as followeth

Although his maiesty hath long time, as well by his maiestyes owne mouth and writing, as by his counsayle trauayled that the sayd Lady being his sister, and a principall subiect and member of his Realme, should both be in deede and also shew her selfe conformable to the lawes and ordinaunces of the realme, in the profession and rites of Religion, vsing all the gētle meanes of exhortation and aduise that could be deuised, to the intent the reformation of the faulte might willingly come of her selfe, as the expectation and desire of his maiesty, and all good wise men was: yet notwithstanding his maiestie seeth that hetherto no maner of amendment hath followed, but by the continuance of the errour and manifest breach of his lawes, no small perill consequently may happe to the state of hys Realme, especially the sufferaunce of such a fault being directly to the dishonor of God and the great offence of his Maiesties conscience, and all other good men: and therefore of late, Page 1339 euen with the consent and aduise of the whole state of his priuy Counsayle, and diuers others of the nobility of his Realme, whose names ye may repeate, if you thinke conuenient, his Maiestie did resolutely determine it iust, necessary, and expedient, that her grace should not in any wise vse or maintaine the priuate Masse, or any other manner of seruice, then suche as by the lawe of the Realme is authorised and allowed: and to participate this his maiesties determination to her grace, it was thought in respect of a fauorable proceeding with her selfe, to haue the same, not only to be manifested by her owne officers and seruants, being most esteemed with her, but also to be executed by them in her house, as well for the more quiet proceeding in the very matter, as for the lesse molesting of her grace with any message by straungers, in that time of her solitarines, wherein her grace then was by the reason of the late sicknesse. For which purpose her three seruants, Rochester, Egglefield, and Walgraue were sent in message in thys mannaer. First, to deliuer his Maiesties letter to her, next to discharge the complaintes of saying Masse, and prohibiting all the houshold from hearing any. Wherein the Kings Maiestie perceiueth vpon their owne report, being returned to the Court, how negligently, and in deede how falsly they haue execu•ed theyr commaundement and charge contrary to the duety of good subiectes, and to the manifest contempt of his maiesty. Insomuch as manifestly they haue before his Maiesties Counsayle refused to do that which pertayneth to euery true faithfull subiecte, to the offence so farre of his maiesty, and derogation of his authority, that in no wise the punishment of them could be forborne, and yet in the maner of the punishment of them, his Maiestie and his Counsayle hath such consideration, and respect of her person being his sister, that without doubt his Maiestie could not with honour haue had the like consideration or fauour in the punishmente of the dearest Counsailour he hath, if any of them had so offended, and therefore his Maiesty hath sent you three not only to declare to her grace the causes of their sending thither of late his officers in message, but also the causes of their absence now presentlye. And further, in the default of the sayde officers to take order, as well with hir Chaplaynes, as with the whole housholde, that hys Maiesties lawes may be there obserued. And in the communication with her, you shall take occasion to answeare in his Maiesties name certayne pointes of her letter, sent now lately to his Maiestie. The copy of which letter is now also sent to you to peruse, for your better instruction how to proceede in. First, her allegation of the promise made to the Emperour, must be so aunswered, as the trueth of the matter serueth, whereof euery of you haue heard sufficient testimony diuers times in the counsaile for her offering of her body at the Kings will, rather then to chaunge her conscience. It greeueth his Maiestie much, that her conscience is so settled in error, and yet no such thing is ment of his Maiestie, nor of any one of his counsayle once to hurt, or will euill to her body, but euen from the bottome of their hart wisheth to her mentem sanam in corpore sano. And therefore yee shall do very well to perswade her grace that this proceeding commeth onely of the conscience the King hath to auoyde the offence of God• and of necessary counsaile and wisdom to see his lawes in so weighty causes executed. Item, because it is thought that Rochester had the care and consideration of her graces prouision of houshold, and by his absence the same might be either disordered or disfurnished: his Maiestie hath sent a trusty skilfull man of hys owne houshold, to serue her grace for the time. Who also is sufficiently instructed of Rochester, of the state of her things of houshold. And if there shall be any thing lacking in the same, his Maiesties pleasure is, that his seruant shall aduertise his owne chiefe officers of houshold, to the intent if the same may be supplied of any store heere, or elsewhere helped conueniently, her grace shall not lacke.

Item, hauing thus proceeded with her grace, as for the declarations of the causes of your commoning, ye shal thē cause to be called afore you the Chaplaynes, and all the rest of the housholde there presente, and in the Kings Maiesties name most straightly forbid the Chaplaynes eyther to say or vse any Masse or kinde of seruice, other then by the lawe is authorised: and likewise yee shall forbid all the rest of the company to be present at any suche prohibited seruice, vpon paine to be most straightly punished, as worthely falling into the daunger of the Kings indignation, and a like charge to them all, that if any such offence shall be openly or secretly committed• they shall aduertise some of his Maiesties Counsayle. In the which clause ye shall vse the reasons of theyr naturall duty and allegiance that they owe as subiectes to theyr soueraigne Lord, which derogateth all other earthly dueties.

Item, if you shall finde eyther any of the priestes, or any other person disobedient to this order, ye shall commit them forthwith to prison as ye shall thinke conuenient.

Item, for as much as yee were priuy to the determination at Richmond, and there vnderstoode how necessary it was to haue reformation heerein: his Maiesty, vpon the great confidence he hath in your wisdom and vprightnes, remitteth to your discretions the manner of the proceeding heerein, if any thing shall chaunce to arise there that in your opinions might otherwise then according to these instructions conduce you to the execution of your charge, which in one summe is to auoyde the vse of the priuate Masse, and other vnlawfull seruice, in the house of the sayd Lady Mary.

Item, ye shall deuise by some meanes as you may, to haue vnderstanding after your departure how the order you geue is obserued, and as you shall iudge fit, to certifie hither.

The story of Steuen Gardiner Bish. of Winchester, briefly collected, the residue whereof concerning hys actes and doings, may further appeare in the booke of Actes and Monuments in the first edition. page. 728.

ALthough the first imprisonment of Steuen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester,* in order of time was before the deprivation of Byshop Boner: yet for so much as hee was not deposed from his Bishopricke till the nexte or seconde yeare after, which was 1551. I haue therefore driuen off the history of the sayde Byshop of Winchester to this present place: intending neuertheles heere not to extende and prosecute the explication of that busie matter with all circumstances and particularities thereof, so amply at full as I might, partly for that being done in my first volume of Actes and Monuments, may heere suffice and content the reader being disposed there to search and further to reade touching the same, partly also considering how this present volume is growne already very large and great, I thought not to pster the same with any more superfluitie, then eedes must, and therefore leauing out his idle letters, his long processe of Articles and examinations, hys tedious talke with the multitude of depositions brought in against him, and other his actes and interlocutories superfluous,* I minde heere (the Lord willing) briefly and summarily to excerpe only the principall effectes, as to the story may seeme most appertinent, referring the residue to be searched (if any reader o list to do) to the booke of Monuments aforesayd, beginning in the page 728.

Briefly therefore, as touching the actes, dooings, deservings and misdemeanours of this stoute Prelate, and Bishop of Winchester: first we will set before the reader the copy of a certayne writte or evidence against the sayd Byshop, wherein as in a briefe summe generally is described the whole order and maner of his misordred demeanour, copied out of the publike records in maner as followeth.

¶The copy of a writte or evidence touching the order and maner of the misdemeanour of Winchester▪ with declaration of the faultes where, with he was iustly charged.

WHere as the Kings Maiestie by the aduise of the Lord Protector,* and the rest of his highnes priuie Counsell, thinking requisite for sundry vrgent considerations to haue a generall visitation throughout the whole Realme, did about tenne monethes past addresse fourth Commissions, and by the aduise of sondry Byshopps and other the best learned men of the Realme, appointed certayne orders or Iniunctions to be generally obserued, which being such as in some part touched the reformation of many abuses, and in other parts concerned the good gouernaunce & quiet of the Realme, were (as reason would) of all men of all sorts obediently receiued, and reuerently obserued and executed, sauing only of the Bishop of Winchester, who as well by conference with other, as by open protestation and letters also, shewed such a wilfull disobedience therein, as if it had not bene quickly espied, myght haue bred much vnquietnes and trouble, vpon the knowledge whereof he being sent for, and his lewd proceedings layd to his charge, he in the presence of the whole Councell so vsed himselfe (as well in denying to receiue the sayd orders and Iniunctions as otherwise) as he was thought worthy most sharpe punishmente,* and yet considering the place he had bene in, he was only sequestred to the Fleete, where, after he had remained a certaine time, as muche a• his ease as if he had bene at his owne house, vpon hys promise of conformitie he was both set at libertie againe, and also licenced to repaire and remaine in his dioces at hys pleasure▪ where when he was, forgetting his duety, and what promise he had made, he began forthwith to set forth such matters as 〈◇〉 againe more strife, variance, and contention in that one small Citie and Shire, then was almost in the whole Realme after: besides that, the Lorde Protectors grace and the Counsaile were enformed, that to withstande such as he thought to haue bene sen•e from their grace and Lordships into those parties, he had caused Page 1340 all his seruaunts to be secretly armed and harnessed: and moreouer when such preachers as being men of godly life and learning were sent into that Dioces by his grace and Lordship to preache the worde of God, had appoynted to preach, the Bishop to disapoint and disgrace them, and to hinder his Maiesties proceedings, did occupie the Pulpit himselfe, not fearing in his Sermon to warne the people to beware of such new Preachers, and to embrace none other doctrine then that which he had taught them (then the which words none could haue bene spoken more perilous and seditions:*) whereupon, being eftsoones sente for, and their grace and Lordships obiecing to him many particular matters wherewith they had iust cause to charge him, they did in the end vpon his second promise leaue him at libertie, onely willing him to remaine at his house at London, because they thought it most meete to sequester him from his Dioces for a time, and beeing come to hys house, he began afreshe to ruffle and meddle in matters wherein he had neither Commission nor authority, parte whereof touched the Kings Maiestie: whereof being yet once againe admonished by his grace and their Lordships, he did not only promise to conforme himselfe in all things like a good subiect, but also because he vnderstoode that he was diuersly reported of, & many were also offended with him, he offered to declare to the world his conformitie, and promised in an open

Sermon so to open his minde in sondry articles agreed vpon,* y^t such as had ben offended, shuld haue no more cause to be offended, but well satisfied in all things: declaring further that as his own conscience was well satisfied, and liked well the Kings proceedings within this Realme, so would he vtter his cōscience abroad, to the satisfaction & good quiet of others, and yet all this notwithstanding, at the daye appoynted he did not only most arrogantly and disobediētly, and that in the presence of his Maiestie, their grace and Lordships, and of such an audience, as the like wherof hath not lightly ben sene, speake of certaine matters contrary to an expresse commandement geuen to him on his Maiesties behalfe both by mouth and by letters,* but also in the rest of the articles, whereunto hee had agreed before, vsed such a maner of vtterance as was very like euen there presently to haue sturred a greate tumult, and in certaine great matters touching the policie of the Realme, handled himselfe so colourably as therein hee shewed himselfe an open great offender & a very sedicious mā: for as much as these his proceedings were of such sort, as being suffred to escape vnpunished, might breede innumerable incōueniences, & that the clemency shewed to him afore by their grace & Lordships, did worke in him no good effect, but rather a pride and boldnes to demeane himselfe more and more disobediently against his Maiestie and his graces proceedings: it was determined by their grace and Lordships that he should be committed to the Tower and be conueyed thether by Sir Anthony Wingfield,* and that at the time of his Commission Sir Rafe Sadler and William Hunnings Clerke of the Counsaile, should seale vp the dores of such places in his house as they should thinke mee•e: all which was done accordingly.

By this euidence aboue mentioned, first heere is of the reader to be noted, how •ewdly and disobediently the sayd Sir▪ Gardiner misused himselfe in the Kings generall visitation, in denying to receiue such orders and iniunctiōs, as for the which he iustly deserued much more seueare punishment. Albeit the King with his Uncle the Lord Protectour, more gently proceeding with him, were contented only to make him taste the Fleete. In the which house, as his durance was not long, so his entreating and ordering was very easie. Out of the whiche Fleete diuers and sondry letters he wrote to the Lord Protectour and other of the Counsaile, certayne also to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and some to M. Ridley Bishop of London: the particulars were too lōg here to rehearse, cōsidering how this booke is so ouercharged as ye see already:* and especially seeing the same be notified in our first edition sufficiently, as is aforesayd. Wherefore omitting the rehearsall of the said letters, and referring the reader to the booke aforesayde, I will onely repeate one letter of the said Byshop, with the aunsweres of the Lord Protectour vnto the same: the contents whereof be these as followeth.

¶A Letter of Winchester to Mayster Vaughan.

MAister Vaughan, after my right hartye commendations: In my last letters to my Lord Protectour,* signifying according to the generall commaundemet by letters geuen to all Iustices of peace the state of this Shire, I declared (as I supposed true) the Shire to be in good order, quiet, & conformity, for I had not then herd of any alteratiō in this Shire which the said letters of cōmādement did forbid. Now of late within these two dayes I haue heard of a great and detestable (if it be true that is tolde me) innouation in the towne of Portesmouth,* where the Images of Christ and his sayntes haue bene most contemptuously pulled downe, and spitefully handled. Herein I thought good both to write to you and the Mayor, the kinges maiesties chiefe ministers, as well to know the trueth, as to consult with you for the reformation of it, to the intent

I may be seene to discharge my duety, and discharging it in deede both to God and the kinges maiesty, vnder whome I am here appoynted to haue cure, and care to relieue suche as be by any wayes fallen, and preserue the rest that stand, from like daunger.

Ye are a Gentleman with whom I haue had acquayntance and whom I know to be wise, & esteeme to haue more knowledge wisdom, and discretion, then to allow any such enormities, and therefore do the more willingly consult with you herein, with request frēdly to know of you the very truth in the matter, who be the doers, and the circumstances of it, & whether ye thinke the matter so farre gone with the multitude & whether the reproofe and disprouing of the deed, might without a further daunger be enterprised in the Pulpit or not, minding if it may so be, to send one thether for that purpose vpon Sondag next comming, I would vse preaching as it shoulde not be occasion of anye further folly, where a folly is begun, and to a multitude perswaded in that opinion of destruction of Images, I would neuer preach.* For (as scripture willeth vs) we should cast no precious stones before Hogs. Such as be infected with that opinion, they be Hogs and worse then Hogs, if there be any grosser beastes then hogs be, and haue bene euer so taken, and in England they are called Lollards, who denying images, thought therewithall the craftes of paynting & grauing to be generally superfluous and nought, and agaynst Gods lawes.

In Germany suche as maintained that opinion of destroying of Images, were accompted the dregges cast out by Luther after he had tunned all his brewinges in Christes religion, and so taken as Hogges meate. For the reproofe of whom, Luther wrote a booke specially: and I haue with myne eyes seene the Images standing in all Churches where Luther was had in estimation. For the destruction of Images contayneth an enterprise to subuert religion and the state of the worlde with it, and especially the nobilitie, who by images set forth & spread abroad to be read of al people, their linage, parentage, with remembraunce of their state and actes: and the Pursiuaunt carieth not on his brest the kinges names written in such letters as a few can spell, but such as all can read, be they neuer so rude being great knowne letters in Images of three Lyons, and three floures deluce, and other beastes holding those armes. And he that cānot read the Scripture written about the kings great Seale,* yet he can read S. George on horsebacke on the one side, and the king sitting in his maiestie on the other side, and readeth so much written in those images as if he be an honest man, he will put of his cap, and although if the Seale were broken by chaunce, he woulde and might make a candell of it, yet he woulde not be noted to haue broken the seale for that purpose, or to call it a piece of waxe onely, whilst it continueth whole And if by reuiling of stockes and stones, in whiche matter Images be grauen, the setting of the trueth to be read in them of all men, shall be contemned: how shall suche wryting continue in honour, as is comprised in cloutes, and pitch, whereof and whereupon our bookes be made,* such as few can skill of, and not the hundreth parte of the realme? And if we a few that can read, because we read in one sort of letters, so priuiledged as they haue many reliefes, shal pull away the books of the rest, and would haue our letters onely in estimation, and blinde all thē, shall not they haue iust cause to mistrust what is ment? And if the crosse be a trueth, and if it be true that Christ suffered, why may we not haue a writing thereof, suche as all can read, that is to say an Image? If this opinion shoulde proceede, when the kings maiestie hereafter should shew his person, his liuely image, the honour due by Gods law among such might continue, but as for the kinges Standardes, his banners, his armes, shoulde hardly continue in their due reuerence for feare of Lollardes Idolatry, whiche they gather vpon scripture beastly, not onely vntruely. The scripture reprooueth false Images made of stockes and stones, and so it doth false men made of flesh and bones.

When the Emperours mony was shewed to Christ, wherein was the image of the Emperour, Christ contemned not that Image calling it an Idoll, nor noted not that mony to be against gods law, because it had an image in it, as thogh it were against the precept of God: Thou shalt haue no grauen image, but taught thē good ciuilitie, in calling it the Emperors image, & bad thē vse the mony as it was ordered to be vsed in his right vse.

There is no scripture that reprooueth trueth, and all Scripture reprooueth falshood. False writings, false bookes, false Images and false men, all be nought, to be contemned and despised, as for paper, inke, parchment, stones, wood, bones, A.B. Page 1341 of the Chauncery hand, and a. b. of the Secretary hand, a letter of Germany fashion, or of any other forme, be all of one estimation, and may be of man enclining to the Deuill, vsed for falsehoode, or applying to Gods gracious calling, vsed to set foorth truth. It is a terrible matter to thinke,* that this false opinion co•ceaued against Images should trouble any mans head: and suche as I haue knowne vexed with that deuill (as I haue knowne some) be neuerthesse wondrously obstinate in it: and if they can finde one that can spell Latin to helpe foorth their madnes, they be more obdurate then euer were the Iewes, and slaunder whatsoeuer is sayd to them for their reliefe. Of this sort I know them to be, and therefore if I wist there were many of that sort with you, I would not irritate them by preaching without fruite, but labour for reformation to my Lorde Protectour. But if you thought there might be other wayes vsed first to a good effect, I would followe your aduise and proceeding with you and the Mayor, wyth both your helpes to do that may lye in me, to the redresse of the matter: which I take to be such an enterprise against Christes Religion, as there can not be a greater by man excogitate wyth the deuils instigation, and at this time much hurtfull to the common estate, as ye can of your wisdom consider. Whome I hartily desire and pray, to send me aunswere by thys bearer to these my letters, to the intent I may vse my selfe in sending of a preacher thither, or writing to my Lorde Protectour as the case shall require accordingly. And thus fare you hartely well.

From my house at Woluesay, the third of May. 1547.

Steph. Wint.

¶A Letter of the Lord Protector aunswering to the letter aboue.

AFter harty commendations, receauing of late two letters from your Lordship, the one inclosed in a letter of Maister Uaughans to vs, and directed to him, the other directed straight vnto vs, very wittely & learnedly writtē, whereby we do perceiue how earnest you are that no innouations should be had. The whiche minde of yours, as we do highly esteeme and allow, proceeding from one that would quietnes, so we woulde likewise wishe, that you should take good heede, that too much feare of innouation or disturbance, do not cause both to be. Many times in an hoste, he that crieth enemies enemies when there be none, causeth not only disturbance, but sometimes a mutinie or rebellion to be made, and hee that for feare of sickenes to come, taketh vnaduisedly a purgation, sometime maketh himselfe sicke in deede. We perceau by the sayde your letters, that haynouser factes and words haue bene brought to your eares, then there was cause why: and those •actes which were punishable, be already by him redrest.

For the matter of Images, an order was taken in y^e late king of famous memory our soueraigne lords daies. Whē the abused Images (yet lurking in some places by negligence of them who should ere this time haue looked vnto y^e same) be now abolished,* let not that be a matter of y^e abolishing of all Images. Though felons & adulterers be punished, all men be not slayne. Though the Images which did adulterate gods glory be takē away,* we may not think by & by all maner of Images to be destroyed. Yet after our aduise, better it were for a time to abolish them all, then for the dead Images, the Kings louing subiects being faythfull and true to the kings maiestie, should be put to variāce and disturbance. With quietnes the Magistrates and Rulers shall keepe thē well in order, whom cōtentious preachers might iritate and prouoke to disorder & strife. So it must be prouided that the kings Maiest. Images, Armes, and Ensignes, should be honoured and worshipped after y^e decent order and inuention of humane lawes and ceremonies, and neuertheles that other Images cōtrary to Gods ordinance and lawes, shuld not be made partakers of that reuerence, adoration and inuocation: which (forbidden by God) should derogate his honor, & be occasion to accumulate Gods wrath vpon vs. Where they be takē for a remēbrance, it maketh no great matter though they stand still in the Church or Marketstead, and folowing the late king of famous memory his counsell & order,* yet more gentlenesse was shewed to those bookes of Images, then to the true and vnfained bookes of Gods word, both being abused, the one with Idolatry, the other with cōtentiō. The scripture was remoued for a time from certaine persons, and almost from all: the Images were left still to them, who most dyd abuse them, y^e thing yet being closed frō them which should teach y^e vse. Wherefore it may appeare vnto vs meete, more diligenter heede to be takē that the abused before, be not abused againe, the aduantage of some Priests, simplicitie of lay men, and great inclination of mans nature to Idolatry geuing cause thereunto.

They that contemne Images, because the matter they are made of is but vile, as stockes and stones, may likewise despise printing in paper, because the meke hath pitch in • & the paper is made of old ragges. And if they be both like, it might be reasoned why a man should be more agreeued, that an Image of wood, though it were of S. Anne, or S. Margaret should be burned,* then hee will that the Byble wherein the vndoubted word of God is comprised, should be torne in peces, burned, or made paste of. Nor we do not now speake of false Bibles nor false gospels, but of y^e very true Gospell, either in Latin, Greeke or english, which we see euery day done, & sometime commaunded, because the Translator displeaseth vs: & yet herein no man exclaimeth as of a terrible and detestable fact done. But let one image either for age, & because it is wormeaten, or because it hath ben foolishly abused, be burnt or abolished, by and by some men are in exceeding rage, as though not a stocke or stone, but a true saint of flesh and bone should be cast in the fire, which were a detestable and a terrible sight. We cannot see but that Images may be counted marueylous bookes, to whom we haue kneeled, whom we haue kissed, vpō whom we haue rubbed our beades and handkerchers, to whome we haue lighted candel,* of whome we haue asked pardon and helpe: which thing hath seldome bene sene done to the Gospell of God, or to the very true Bible. For who kisseth y^t but the priest at y^e Masse, at a painted picture or in such a ceremony? Or who kneeleth vnto it, or setteth a candle before it? And yet it seeth or heareth as well as the Images or pictures eyther of S. Iohn, our Lady, or Christ.

In deede Images be great letters, yet as big as they be we haue seene many which haue read them amisse. And belike they are so likely to be read amisse, that God himselfe fearing y^e Iewes to become euill readers of thē, generally did forbid them. Nor it is no great maruell though in reading of them the lay people are many times deceaued,* whē your Lordship (as appeareth) hath not truly read a most true and a most commō Image. Your Lordship hath foūd out in the Kings highnes great seale, S. George on horseback, which the grauer neuer made in it, nor y^e sealer neuer sealed with it, and in this the inscription is not very little, and if it were, it could not escape your Lordships eyes. As the inscription testifieth, the Kings Image is on both the sides: on the one side as in war the chiefe Captaine, on the other side as in peace the liege soueraigne: in harnes with his sword drawne to defend his subiects: in his robes in the seate of Iustice with his Scepter rightfully to rule and gouerne them, as he whome both in peace and war we acknowledge our most natural and chieftest head, ruler & gouernour. If it were S. George (my Lord) where is hys speare and dragon? And why should the inscription round about tell an vntruth, and not agree to the Image? Yet it is called sometime so of the rude and ignorant people: but not by and by, that that is commonly called so, is alwayes truest. And some haue thought that by like deceauing, as your Lordship herein appeareth to haue ben deceaued, the image of Bellerephon or Perseus was turned first & appointed to be S. George, & of Poliphemus, of Hercules, or of other some Colossus to be S. Christopher, bicause autenticall histories haue not fully proued their two lyues. But those be indifferent to be true or not true, either thus inuented vpō some deuise, or rising of a true fact or history, & whether it were true or not, it maketh no great matter.*

It were hardly done in deede my Lord, if that you and a few which can reade, should take away from the vnlearned multitude, their bookes of their Images: but it were more hardly done, if that you or a few which can reade in one or two languages (as Greeke and Latin) the word of God, and haue had thereby many relieues and priuiledges should pull away the english bookes from the rest whych only vnderstandeth english: and would haue only youre letters of Greeke and Latin in estimation, and blinde all them which vnderstandeth not these languages, from the knowledge of Gods word. And indeede my Lord, by your saying they haue iust occasion to suspect what is meant?

What meane you by true Images and false Images, it is not so easie to perceauē. If they be onely false Images, which haue nothing that they represent,* as s. Paul writeth An idol is nothing (bicause ther is no such God) & therfore the Crosse can be no false image, because it is true y^t Christ suffered vpon it: then the Image of y^e Sun and the Moone were no Idoles, for suche thinges there be as the Sunne and the Moone, and they were in the Image then so represented, as painting & caruing doth represent them. And the Image of Ninus and Cesar,* and (as some writeth) the Images of al the 12. chosen Gods (as they called thē) were the Images of once liuing men. And it might be sayde that the Image of God the father hath no such eies, nose lippes and a long gray beard, with a furred robe, nor neuer had▪ as they kerue & paint him to haue. But if that be a false Image and an Idoll which is otherwise worshipped & accepted Page 1342 then it ought to be, as the brasen Serpent being a true Image and representation of Christ by abuse was made an Idoll: it may be thought in times past, and peraduenture howe at this time, in some places the Images not onely of S. Iohn or S. Anne, but of our Lady & Christ be false Images and Idols, representing to foolish blind & ignorant mens harts and thoughtes, that which was not in them, and they ought not to be made for• The whiche were by you (my Lord) to haue bene remoued sooner and before that y^e captayn there should haue need to haue done <◇> . But if your Lordship be slacke in such matters, he that remoueth false images and Idols abused, doth not a thing worthy blame.

Christ called not the mony hauing Cesars Image in it, an Idoll when it was vsed to lawfull vses, and to pay the due t•ibute with all. But when a man doth not vse those Images grauen in mony, to do his neighbor• good and the common wealth seruice, S. Paule Christes disciple called that couetousnes, and the seruing and bondage to Idols: So that euē in mony may be idolatry, if we make to much of those Images whiche Christ here doth not reprehend. There be some so ticklish and so feareful one wayes and so tender stomacked, that they can abide no old abuses to be reformed, but thinke euery reformatiō to be a capitall enterprise agaynst al Religion and good order, as there be on the contrary side some to rash, who hauing no consideration what is to be done, headlong wil set vpō euery thing. The Magistrates duety is betwixte these, so in a meane to sit, and prouide that olde doting should not take further or deeper ru•t in the common wealth, neyther auncient error ouercome the seene and tryed trueth, nor long abuse for the age and space of time onely, still be suffered: and yet all these with quietnesse and gentlenesse, and without all contention, if it were possible, to be reformed. To the whyche your Lordship as a man to whom God hath geuen greate qualities of witte, learning and persuasion: coulde bring great helpe and furtherance, if it were your pleasure, with great thanks of men, & reward of God. The which thing is our full desire and purpose, and our harty & dayly prayer to God, that in the kinges Maiesties time, whose Maiesties reigne God preserue, al abuses with wisdom reformed. Christes Religion with good and polliticke order of the commom wealth, without any contention and strife among the kinges Subiectes, might florish and daylye encrease. And thys to youre Lordships letter sent to maister Uaughan of Portesmouth.

Winchester to the Lord Protector.

MAY it please your Grace to vnderstande, that I haue noted some poyntes in my Lord of S. Dauids Sermon, which I sende vnto you here with, whereby to declare vnto you some part what I thinke, for the whole I cannot expresse, somewhat I shall encomber you with my •abling, but he hath encombred some frēdes more with his ta•ling. And alas my Lord, this is a piteous case, that hauing so muche businesse as ye haue, these inward disorders should be added vnto thē to the courage of such as would this Realme any wayes euill. For this is the thinge they would desire, with hope therby to disorder this realme, bejng now a time rather to repayre that needeth reparation, thē to make any new buildings which they pretēd. Quiet, tranquility, vnity & cōcord, shall mainteine estimatiō. The cōntrary may animate the enemy, to attēpt that was neuer thought on, which God forbid. There was neuer attemptate or alteration made in England, but vpon cōfort of discorde at home, and woe be to them that mindeth it. If my Lord of S. Dauides, or such others haue theyr head cōbred with any new platforme, I would wish they were cōmaūded betwene this and the kings maiesties full age to draw the plat diligently, to hewe the stones, dig the sand, & chop the chalke in the vnseasonable time of building, and when the kings maiesty commeth to full age, to present theyr labors to him, and in the meane time not to disturbe the state of the realme, whereof your Grace is Protector, but that you may in euery part of religion, lawes, landes, and decrees (which foure containe the state) deliuer the same to our soueraygn Lord, according to the trust you be put in, whiche shall be much to your honor, & as all honest men wish and desire. To which desired effect there can be nothyng so noysome & cōtrarious, as trouble & disquiet. Wherin your Grace shalbe specially troubled as on whose shoulders al the weight lieth, and what so euer shall happen amisse by the faultes of other, shalbe imputed to your Grace, as doer therof, or wanting foresight in time to withstand the same. And albeit that you minde not to be faulty in either, yet if the effecte be not to the Realme as were to be wished, the prince, and though he were of age should be excused, and y^e gouernors here the blame. And this is y^e infelicity of preheminance and authority, and specially in this Realme, as storyes make mention, which should not discourage you, for you neede feare nothing without if quiet be reserued at home: and at home if the beginning be resisted, the intēded folly may easily bee interrupted. But if my brother of S. Dauids, may like a champion with his sword in his hand make enter for the rest, the doore of licence opened, there shal mo• by folly thrust in with him thē your grace would wish. Thus as I thinke, I write homely to your grace,* be'cause you were content I should write, wherin I consider onely to haue all thinges well. And because your grace is the Protector and the chiefe dir•etor of the realme to presēt vnto your wisdom what my folly is. I haue bene oftentimes blamed for fearing ouermuch, and yet I haue had an incling that they that so blamed me feared euē as much as I. Being in the state that you be i•, it shalbe euer cōmēdable to foresee the worst. In quiet ye be strong, in trouble ye be greatly weake, & bring your selfe in daūger of one part, when parties be, therwith one to scourge the other. Wheras in cōcord they •e both yours in an honest, reuerēt, louely feare to do theyr duty, which I doubt not your wisdom can consider. And cōsider also how noisome any other outward encōber might be in the time of y^e minority of our soueraign Lord. I told y^e Emperors cōsell that our late souereign Lord did much for the Emperor to enter war with him & put his realme in his old dayes in y^e aduētūre of fortune, whether he should enioy it or no, for y^t is the nature of war. And sometime the cōtēned & abiect haue had y^e vpper hand. And whē ye administer y^e realme for another, it were a maruelous question of him y^t shall enioy y^e realme, to say, what ment you in the time of administratiō to aduētūre my realme? why tooke ye not rather for the time of my minority any peace, whatsoeuer it were, which is better thē y^e best wa•? as some mē haue writtē. I know you haue authority sufficient & wisdom plēty, & yet being entred to write I forget for y^e time what ye be, & cōmen 〈◇〉 you as I were talking at Brusels with you,* deuising of the worlde at large. And if I were sworne to say what I thinke in the state of the world, I would for a time let scots be scots with dispayre to haue thē, vnlesse it were by cōquest, which shall be a godly enterprise for our yong maister whē he cōmeth to age. And in y^e meane time prepare him mony for it, & see y^e realme in an order which hath need of it. And for a stay, if the Emperor would offer the king of Romains daughter as he did: do w^t him in our maisters minority,* as he dyd w^t vs in his. Wherby all this hath chaūced vnto him. And by this allians your estimation shal encrease, & our souereign Lordes surety not a little increase & be augmented. For of Fraunce it must be takē for a rule. They be so wantō they cannot do well lēger thē they see, how they may be scourged if they do not. Here is all the wit that I haue, which I offer vnto you, vpon this occasion of writing, & shall pray God to put in your mind y^t shalbe for the best: as I trust he will, & in y^e meane time, to extinct this barbarous cōtētion at home, which can serue onely to do hurt & no good. I had fashioned a letter to master Ridley which I sēd vnto your grace, and encomber you with these malencoly writings, engendred of this fondnes which be not worth y^e reading. And so it may like you to vse thē, for hauing heard that ye haue sayd vnto me, and otherwise heard and seene what you do, I shall go occupy my wit in other matters, & now such as haue fonde enterprises, shall see that I letted not theyr follyes, which they called Gods worde.* But for hys time, the king our souereigne Lord that dead is, and after his time you, much to your honor and reputation * howsoeuer any shalbe here not contented, which miscontentation hath bene so fond in some, as they haue burst out and wished that they might without breach of his lawes kill me, which is to me a tokē of a maruelous fury, which hath bene cause why I am glad, both to depart hence, and to depart the sooner, & pray to God to order all thinges for the best. With preseruatiō of our soueraigne L. and encrease of your graces honor.

At my house in Sothworke the last of February.

Your Graces humble beadman S. W.

An other letter of S.W.

AFter my humble commēdations to your grace, it may like the same to vnderstand. I haue sene of late 2. books set forth in english by Bale very pernicious, seditious and slaunderous. And albeit that your grace needeth not mine aduertisement in y^e matter, yet I am so bolde to trouble your Grace with my letters for mine owne commodity, wherwith to satisfy mine own conscience to write & say as becommeth me in such matters, which I desire your grace to take in good part. For it greueth me not a little, to see so Page 1343 soone after my late soueraigne Lord and maisters death, a booke spread abroad more to his dishonor (if a princes honor may be by vile inferior subiectes impeached) then professed enemies haue imagined to note a womā to haue suffered vnder him as a martyr, & the woman therewith to be by Bales owne elucidation (as he calleth it) so set foorth & painted as she appeareth to be, & is boasted to be a sacramē^ttary, & by the lawes worthy (as she suffered) the paynes of death, such like things haue by stealth in our late soueraign Lords dayes gone abroad as they do now▪ And as I am wōt in such cases to speak, I keep my wōt to write to your grace now, in whose hands I know the estate of y^e realme to be foretime in gouernment & to whō for respectes of old acquayntaunce I wish al felicity. In these matters of religion I haue bene long exercised and haue (thankes be to God) liued so long as I haue sene them thoroughly tryed and besides that I haue learned in written bookes of Authority, I haue perceiued by bookes written without authority as by M. Bale, Ioye, and other, and specially as Bale vseth now, that Scripture doth by abuse, seruice to the right hand and the left at once in so much as at one time Bale prayseth Luther,* and setteth his death forth in English, with commendation as of a Saynt, whych Luther (whatsoever he was otherwise) stoutly affirmed the presence really of Christes naturall body in the Sacrament of the aultar. And yet Bale the noble clerk, would haue Anne Askew blasphemously denying the presence of Christes naturall bodye to be taken for a Saynte also. So as Bales Saynctes may vary in heauen, if they chaunce not by the way, which might suffice to disproue the mans creditte, if thwarting talke were not more desired of many, then the trueth in deede, which trueth was supposed to haue bene both in writing and exercise, well established, long before our late Lordes death. And Bale & his adherentes in their madnes playnely reprobued & condemned. I can not forget your grace tolde me you woulde suffer no innouation and indeed if you deliuer this realme to the king at 8. yeares of age, as the king his father, whose soule God assoyle, left it, as I trust you shall, the acte is so honourable and good, as it were pity to trouble it with any innouation, whyche were a charge to your grace more then needed, beyng already burthened heauely. And albeit in the commō wealth euery man hath his part, yet as God hath placed you, the matter is, vnder the kinges Maiestye, chiefly yours and as it were yours alone.* Euery man hath his eye directed vnto you both here & abroad, you shall shadow mens doinges if they be done, which is one in commodity of high rule. And for my part besides my duty to the kinges maiesty and the realme, I would that your grace in whom since your gouernement, I haue found much gentlenes and humanity, had much honor w^t good successe as euer any had and pray to God that men would let your grace alone, and suffer the realme in the time of your gouernement in quyet among our selues, whereby to be the more able to resist forreigne trouble, which your grace doth prudētly forsee. Cer̄tayne printers,* players, & preachers, make a wondermēt, as though, we knew not yet how to be iustified, nor what sacramentes we should haue. And if the agreement in religion made in the time of our late soueraigne Lord be of no force in theyr iudgement, what establishment coulde anye new agrement haue. And euery incertenty is noysome to any realme. And where euery man will be mayster there must nedes be vncertaynty. And one thing is maruelous, that at the same time is taught that all men be lyers, at the selfe same time almost euery man woulde be beleued. And amongst thē, Bale when his vntruth appeareth euidently in setting forth the examination of Anne Askew whiche is vtterly misreported. I beseeche your Grace to pardon my babling with you. But I see my late soueraigne Lord and maister slaundred by such simple persons,* religiō assaulted, the realme troubled and peaceable men disquieted, with occasion geuen to enemies to poynt and say, that after Wickliefes straunge teaching in the sacramēts of Christes churche hath vexed other, it is finally turned vnto vs to molest & scourge vs, for other fruite cannot Bales teaching haue, ne the teaching of such other as goe about to trouble the agrement established here. In which matter I dare not desire your grace specially to looke earnestlye vnto it, leaste I should seme to note in you that becommeth me not. And I know that your grace being otherwise occupied, these thin'ges may creepe in as it hath bene heretofore, sometime it may be heard for your grace to finde out or pull out y^e root of this naughtines: but yet I am so bolde to write of these of mine owne stomacke, who haue euer vsed for discharge of my selfe to say and write in time and place as I thought might do good, for reliefe of the matter, remitting the rest to the disposition of GOD, who hath wrought wonders in these matters, since they were first moued: and geuen me such knowledge and experiēce in them,* as I ought to take them (as they be) for corruption and vntrueth: I meane knowledge and experience of them that be chiefe styrrers, so infect with vntruth, as they cannot speak or report truly in common matters. The pretence is of the spirit, and al is for the flesh, Women, and meat with liberty of hand and tongue, a dissolution and dissipation of all estates, cleane contrarious to the place GOD hath called your Grace thereunto.* For it tendeth all to confusion & disorder, which is the effect of vntrueth. Bale hath set forth a prayer for the Duke I. of Saxe wherein the Duke remitteth to Gods iudgement to be shewed here in this world the iustnesse of his cause concerning religion, and desireth GOD if hys cause be not good, to order him to be taken and to be spoiled of his honor and possessions, with many such gay wordes whereby to tempt God, since which prayer the Duke is in'deed taken as all the world sayth, at the time of his taking, as the account is made, such straungenesse in the sonne as we saw it here, as hath not bene sene. They happened both together, this we know, and be both maruelous, but whether the one were a token ordered to concurre with other, God knoweth and manne cannot define. Many common wealthes haue continued without the B. of Romes iurisdiction, but without true religion, and with such opinions as Germany maynteyned no estate hath co••••ned in the circuit of the world to vs knowne since Christ c•me. For the Turkes and Tartarres gouernement is, as it were a continuall warre and they vphold theyr rule with subduing of nobility by fyre and sworde,* Germanye with theyr new religion could neuer haue stand, & though the Empe'ror had let them alone, for if it be perswaded the vnderstanding of Gods lawe to be at large in women and children, whereby they may haue the rule of that, and thē Gods law must be the rule of all, is not hereby the rule of all brought into theyr handes? These of some will be called witty reasons, but they be in deede truthes children, and so is all the eloquence, which some (to dispraise me) say I haue, whatsoever they say of me. For truth is of it selfe, in a right meaning mans mouth, more eloquent, then forged matters can with studye bring forth. What rymes be sette forth to depraue the Lent, and how fond (sauing your Graces honour) and foolish, and yet the people pay money for them, and they can serue for nothing, but to learne the people to rayle, & to cause such as vsed to make prouision for fishe agaynst Lent, fearing now Lent to be so sicke as the ryme purporteth and like to dye in deede, to forbeare to make theyr accustomed prouision for the next yeare. And thereto shall it come if the common dyet be not certayne. For the Fishmonger will neuer hope to haue good sale, when the the butcher may with flesh out face him. And fishe is that great treasure of this realme & foode inestimable. And these good wordes I geue, although I loue it not my selfe, for such as loue not fish, should neuertheles commend it to other, to the intent the fleshe by them forborne might be to such as loue it onely the more plenty. The publicke defamation & trifling with Lent is a maruellous matter to thē that woulde say euill of this Realme, for there is nothyng more commended vnto vs christen men in both the Churches of the Greekes and Latins then lent is, if all men be not liers. In the king our late soueraigne Lordes dayes this matter was not thus spoken of. And I thinke our enemies would wish we had no lēt. Euery coutry hath his peculier inclination to naughtines, England and Germany to the belly, the one in licor, the other in meat, Fraunce a litle beneath the belly, Italy to vanity and pleasures deuised, & let an English belly haue a further aduancement, and nothing can stay it, whē I was purueior for the seas, what an exclamatiō was there (as your grace shewed me) of the Bishops fasting day, as they called wednesday, and Winchester, Winchester grand mercy for your wine, I beshrow your hart for your water? Was not that song, although it was in sport a signification how loth men be to haue theyr licence restrained? or theyr accustomed fare abated? vnles it were in extreme necessity. I heare say that lēt is thus spok of, by Ioseph and Tongue, with other new (whome I knowe not) as be one of Christes Myracles, which God ordeyned not man to immitate and follow, at whiche teaching all the world will laugh. For Christian men haue Christ for an example in all thinges both to vse the world as he did, onely for necessity, and contemne the world as he did, and in case to refuse it, and choose the vyle death, as he did the death of the Crosse, which thinges he did like a Mayster most perfect, for he was very god, and we must endeuour our selfe in the vse of his gyftes, to follow that he did, not to fast fortye dayes without meate as Christ did, for we be but Prentises, and cary about a ruinous Carcas that muste haue some daylye reparation, with foode, but yet was there neuer none that sayde, how Page 1343 <1 page duplicate> Page 1344 therefore we should do nothing, because we can not do al, and take Christes fast for a myracle onely. And yet all that folow Christ truely, they worke dayly myracles in subduing and cōforming by Gods grace there sensuall appittes and humble obeying to the wil of God, which no man can of himselfe do, and Christ promised that his true seruants should worke the workes that he did, and greater works also. Wherefore it is a slender matter to say. Lent was one of Christes myracles, for so was it to loue his enemyes, & specially those that scourged and bobbed him, which may not bee (if that allegation hath place) taught Christen men to folow,* because it was a myracle, as they might say it were more tollerable to forgette Lent (as Pogge telleth) of a Priest in the moūtaynes, that knew not how the yeare went about, and when the weather opened and hee went abroad and perceiued his neighbours were towards Palme Sonday, he deuised an excuse to his Paryshe and bad them prepare therefore, for in deede the yeare had somewhat slipped him, but he would fashion the matter so, as they shoulde be as soone at Easter as the rest, and thus did he passe ouer lent with much lesse slaunder then to teach it for a doctrine, y^t lēt was one of Christs miracles, & therefore not to be imitated for vs, for although it was in deede a greate myracle (as all Christes doynges were) yet was it there not a greate myracle, ne more agaynst mans nature, then to loue them y^t laboured & were busye to take away the naturall lyfe of his manhoode.* For as the nature of man desireth reliefe, so doth it abhorre distruction or hurt. In will and desire menne followe Christ in al thinges: in execution they cannot. For we haue brickle vessels, and God geueth his giftes to men as he seeth expedient for his Church. So as men cannot heale the lame when they will, as Christ did when hee woulde, but as God shall thinke profitable for the edification of the flocke assembled. Gregory Nazianzene speaketh of some that enterprised to imitate christes fast aboute theyr power, whose immoderate zeale he doth not disallowe not requiring of all men so to doe, for that is an extremity, ne yet assoyling the matter as our new schole men doe, that Christen men shoulde let Christes fast alone as a myracle, which maner of solution I heard a good felow make, when it was told him he might not reuenge himselfe. And when he were stroken on the one eare, put forth the other, I am (quoth he) a man, I am not God, if Christ being God did so, he might (quod he) if it had pleased him haue done otherwise. And so when it hath bene alleadged that Christ fasted forty dayes, he might (quoth he) haue eaten if he had list, these triflinges in sporte mighte bee drawne to graue speach, if Christen men shall refuse to folow Christ in myracles. For all his life was myracles and his loue that is our Badge most miraculous of all to dye for his enemies. I beseeche your Grace to pardon me for I am like one of the commō house, that when I am in my tale, thinke I should haue liberty to make an end and specially writing to your grace with whome I accompt I may bee bolde assuring you it proceedeth of a zeale towardes you, vnto whom I wysh well, whose intent although it be suche as it ought to bee, and as it pleased you to shew me it was, yet such thinges spread abroad whereof the euill willers of the Realme will take courage and make accompte, (although it bee wrong) that all goeth on wheelles, if any man had either fondly or vndiscreetelye spoken of lent to engreue it to bee an importable burthen I would wish his reformation, for I haue not learned that all menne are bound to keepe the lent in the forme receiued, but this I reckon, that no christen man may contemne the forme receiued, being suche a deuoute and profitable imitation of Christe to celebrate his faste, and in that time suche as haue bene in the rest of the yeare worldye to prepare themselves to come as they should come, to the feast of Easter, wherof S. Chrisostome speaketh expressely. And for auoyding contempt, a licence truly obteyned of the superiour serueth. And so I hearde the kinges Maiesty our Soueraigne Lord declare when your grace was present. And therfore he himselfe was very scrupulous in graunting of licences, and to declare that himselfe contemned not the fast, he was at charge to haue (as your Grace knoweth) the lent diet dayly prepared, as it had bene for himselfe and the like hereof I heare say your Grace hath ordered for the kinges Maiestye that now is, which agreeth not with certaine preaching in this matter, ne the rimes set abroad. Lent is among Christen men a godly feast to exercise men to forbear and in England both godly and polliticke, such as without confusion we can not forbear,* as the experience shall shew, if it be euer attempted, which God forbid. And yet lent is buried in rime, and Steuen Stockefishe bequeathed, not to me, though my name be noted, wherwith for mine owne part I cannot be angry, for that is mitigated by theyr fondnes. But I woulde desire of God to haue the strength of thys realme encreased with report of concord,* which doth quēch many vayne deuices and imaginations. And if all men be lyers as it is now to my vnderstanding straungely published, me thinke Bale and such new men as be new liers should be most abhorred and detested, & so much the more daungerous as they be newe. That whiche in Italye and Fraunce is a matter of combate, is now found to be appropiate to all men. God graunt the trueth to be desired of all menne truly. But as one asked when he sawe an olde Philosopher dispute with an other, what they talked on. And it was aunswered how the olde man was discussing what was vertue, it was replied if the old man yet dispute of vertue when will he vse it? So it may be sayd in our religion.

If we be yet searching for it, when shal we begin to put it in executiō? I would make an end of my letters and cannot, wherein I account my selfe faulty. And though I may erre as euery man may, yet I lye not, for I say as I think, for as much as I haue sayd, and further think your grace hath no trouble troublesome, but this matter of religion vnseasonably brought into the defamation of our late soueraigne Lordes actes, doinges & lawes. I beseech your grace take my meaning and wordes in good part, & pardon my boldnes which groweth of the familiaritie I haue heretofore had with your grace, which I cannot forget. And thus enforcing my selfe to an end, shall pray to almighty God to preserue your grace in much felicity wyth encrease of honor and the atchieuing of your hartes desire.

At Winchester the 21. of May.

Your Graces humble beadman. S.W.

¶The Letter of the L. Protector answering to Winchester.

YOur letters dated the 21. day of May as concerning 2. bookes new set forth by one Bale, and certayne sermōs preached here, were with conuenient speede deliuered vnto vs. And like as in your letters to Edw. Uaughan of Portesmouth, so in those to vs we perceiue that you haue a vigilant and diligēt eye, and very fearefull of innouatiō, which as it cannot be blamed, proceeding of one which is desirous of quiet, good order, and continuance of the godly state of this realme: So we do maruell that so soone, so far of, and so playnely, you canne heare tell and say of so many thinges done here, which in deed we being here and attendant vpō the same cannot yet be aduertised of. The world neuer was so quiet or so vnite, but that priuily or openlye those iij. which you write of, Printers, players, and Preachers, woulde sette forth somewhat of theyr owne heades which the Maiestrates were vnwares of. And the whiche already be banished and hath forsaken the realme, as suffering the last punishmēt, be boldest to set forth theyr mind. And dare vse their extreme licēce or liberty of speaking as out of the handes or rule of correction, either because they be gone, or because they be hidde. There hath foolishe and naughty rimes and bookes bene made and set forth, of the which as it appeareth you haue sene more then we, and yet to our knowledge to many be brought, but yet after our minde it is to sore and to cruelly done to lay al those to our charge, and to aske as it were account of vs of them all. In the most exact cruelty and tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, yet Pasquill (as we here say) writeth his mind and many times agaynst the Bishops tyranny, and some time toucheth other great princes, which thing for the most part he doth safely, not that the Bishop alloweth Pasquills rimes and verses specially agaynst himselfe, but because he cannot punish the authour, whom either he knoweth not, or hath not. In the late kings daies of famous memory, who was both a learned, wise, and polliticke Prince, & a diligēt executor of his lawes. And when your Lordshippe was most diligent in the same, yet as your Lordship it selfe writeth, and it is to manifest to be vnknowne, there were that wrote such leud rimes, and plaies as you speake of, & some agaynst the kinges proceedinges, who were yet vnpunished, because they were vnknowne or vngotten. And whē we do wey the matter we do very much maruel why that, about iack of lentes leud balad, and certayne as it was reported vnto vs, Godly sermons (whiche be euill in your letters ioyned together) you be so earnest. When agaynst D. Smithes booke being a man learned in the doctors & scripture which made so playne agaynst the kinges highnesse authority. And for the furtherance of the Bishops of Romes vsurped power, your Lorship neither wrote nor sayd nothing. And as it appeared you be so angry with his retractation (which frankly w^tout feare, dread cōpulsion, or imprisonmēt onely with learning & truth ouercommed, he came vnto) that you cannot abide his beginning, although hauing the very woordes of scripture. Except peradventure Page 1345 you thinke that the saying of Dauid, omnis homo mendax, cannot be enterpreted, euery man is a lier, which how soeuer your Lordship taketh it at pleasure, it appeared vn^to vs then of him taken but godly to declare the infirmitye of man, and the trueth of God and his word. And we are not able to reason so clerkly with you, & yet we haue heard of the subtle difference of lying and telling of a lye, or as it is in latin called mentiri and mendacium discere, but if your Lordship be loth to be counted mēdax, which belike he hath interpreted a lyer, or a lying man, and thinke it a matter of combate, he was deceiued in the interpretation, and it is a matter for clerkes to dispute of, we woulde haue wished your Lordshipp to haue written agaynst his booke before, or now with it, if you thinke that to be defended which the author himselfe refuseth to auerre: your Lordship writeth earnestly for lent which we go not about to put away, no more then whē D. Smith wrote so earnestly y^t euery man should be obedient to the Byshops. The Maiestates by and by went not about to bring Kinges and Princes and other vnder theyr subiection. Writers write theyr fantasy, my Lord, and Preachers preach what eyther liketh them, or what God putteth in theyr heades. It is not by and by done what is spoken. The people buyeth those foolish ballads of Iacke a lent. So bought they in times past, pardons, and carroles and Robbin hoodes tales. All be not wise mē, and the foolisher a thing is to some (although not to the more party) it is the more pleasaunt and meete, and peradventure of the sermons there is, and in deed there is (if it be true that we haue heard) otherwise spoken and reported to you, then it was of the preachers there and then spoken or ment. Lent remayneth still my Lord, & shall god willing till the kings highnes with our aduise and the residew of his Graces counsel take an other order, although some light and leud mē do bury him in writing, euē as the kinges Maiesty remayneth head of the Church, although by subtle meanes some traytors haue gone about and dayly do, to abuse the kinges Maiesties supremacy, and bring in the Bishop of Romes tyranny, with other superstition and Idolatry. On both sides great heed is to be taken, and as your Lordship writeth, we are set in a paynfull rome, to reforme all lightnes and leudnes, to the which we do en^deuour our selfe to the best of our power, although not so cruelly and fiercely as some peradventure would wish, yet not so loosely that there needeth such exclamation or great feare to be. We doe study to doe all things attemperately, and with quiet and good order. And we woulde wish nothing more then your Lordship to be as ready to the reformation of the one, as of the other, that neither superstition, Idolatry, or papacy, should be brought in, nor lightnesse, nor contempt of good order to be mainteined. They both take beginning at small things, and encreaseth by litle and litle at vnwares. And quiet may be as wel broken with ielosy, as negligence, with to much feare or to much paciēce. No wayes worse then when one is ouer light eared, the one way, and deafe on the other side. Rumors by space and times encrease naturally and by that time they come at you as it appeareth, they be doubled & trebled. We do perceiue your diligent eye towards vs,* & we will wish (& trust you haue) your faythful hart to vs, our most hartly desire & continuall prayer to God is to leaue this realme to the kings highnes at his graces age by you written, rather more flourishing in men, possessions, wealth, learning, wisdom, & Gods religion and doctrine if it were possible and Gods will, then we found it. And that is our whole intent, & esporaunce to the which we refuse no mans helpe, as knoweth God in whom we bid you hartily fare well.

An other letter of W. to the L. Protector.

AFter my moste humble commendations to your good Grace vpon the returne of my seuant Massy with your Graces letters aunswering to such my letters wherein I signified the robbing of my secretary, I read the same gladly, as by the contentes of the matter I had cause so to doe, which was such a comfortatiue as I digested easily the rest of the great packet, hauing bene accustomed thereunto in the kinges my late soueraygne Lordes dayes, which fashion of writing his highnesse (God pardon his soule) called whetting, which was not all the most pleasaunt vnto me at all times, yet when I saw in my doinges was no hurt, and sometime by occasion thereof the matter amended I was not so coy as alwayes to reuers my argument, nor so that his affayres went well, I neuer troubled my selfe, whether he made me a wanton or not. And when suche as were priuy to his letters directed vnto me were affrayd I had bene in high displeasure (for the termes of the letters sounded so) yet I myself feared it nothing at al, I esteemed him (as he was) a wise prince, and whatsoeuer he wrote or sayd for the present, he would after consider the matter as wisely as any man, and neither hurt or inwardly disfauor him that had bene bolde with him. Whereof I serue for a prooffe, for no man could do me hurt during his life. And when he gaue me the Bishopricke of Winchester, he said he had often squared with me, but he loued me neuer y^e worse. And for a token therof gaue me the Byshopricke. And once when he had bene vehement with me,* in the presence of the Earle of Wilteshyre, and saw me dismayd with it, he tooke me a part into his bed chamber, and comforted me and said that his displeasure was not so much to me, as I did take it, but he misliked the matter and he durste more boldly direct his speache to me then to the Earle of Wilteshyre, and from that day forward he could not put me out of courage, but if any displeasaunt wordes passed from him, as they did sometime, I folded them vp in the matter, which hindered me a litle, for I was reported vnto him that I stouped not and was stubborne, and he had commended, vnto me certayne mens gentle nature (as he called it) that wept at euery of his wordes, & me thought that my nature was as gētle as theirs, for I was sory that he was moued, but els I know when the displeasure was not iustly grounded in me, I had no cause to take thought, nor was not at any time in al my life discontent or grudging at any thing done by him I thanke God of it. And therefore being thus brought vpp, and hauing first read your graces most gentle letters, signifying the deuise of a proclamation to stay these rumours, and reading the same proclamation which my seruant brought with him, I read the more quiet your Graces great letters, and would haue layd them vp with out further aunswere were it not that percase my so doing might be mistaken. For glum silence may haue another construction then franke speach where a man may speake, as I reckon I may with your grace, vppon confidence whereof I am so bolde to write thus much for my declaration touching your graces letters of the xxvij. of may, that how earnest so euer my letters be taken in fearing any innouation, I neyther inwardly feare it, neither shewe anye demonstration in mine outward deedes to the world here, or in communication, that I do feare it to be done by authority, but in my selfe resist the rumors and vayne enterprises, with confidence in the truth and your Graces wisdom, for if I feared it in deede, which persuasion it should come to passe, I should haue small lust to write in it, but I feare more in deede the trouble that might arise by light boldenesse of other, and then comber of such matter whiles other outward affayres occupy your Graces minde, then the effecte by your direction that hath bene talked on abroad, and yet in the writing I doe speake as the matter leadeth, continuing mine olde maner to be earnest, whiche as some men haue dispraysed, so some haue commended it, and therefore in a good honest matter I folow rather mine own inclinatio, thē to take y^t paynes to speake as Butter would not melte in my mou•h, wherewith I perceyue your Grace is not miscontent, for the which, I most humbly thanke you. And first as concerning Portestmouth I wrote to the Captaine and Maior in the thing as I had information, and by men of Credence. And yet I suspended my creditte till I had heard from thence, as by my Letters appeare, and as I was lothe to haue it so, so was I lothe to beleue it. And to shewe that I feared no innouation by authority, ne regarded not any such daunger, went thyther my selfe, and in conclusion was in such familiarity with the Captayne, that after he had shewed me all the gentle entertaynement he coulede, he desired me to make an exhortation to his men as they stode handsomely with theyr weapons, wherewith they had shewed warlike feates, which I did, and departed in amitye with the Captayne and souldiors and all the towne. The captayne telling me playnelye he was nothinge offended with any thing I had sayd in my sermon, ne there was cause why he should. But the very act in deede in defacing the Images had no such ground as mayster Captayne pretended, for I asked specialllye for suche as had abused those Images, and no such could be shewed, for y^t I enqyred for openly. And the Image of S. Iohn the Euangelist standing in the chancell by the high aultar was pulled downe, & a table of alablaster broken. And in it an Image of Christ crucified, so contemptuously handled, as was in my hart terrible, to haue the one eye bored out & the side perced, wherewith mē were wondrously offended, for it is a very persecution beyonde the sea, vsed in that forme where the parson cannot be apprehēded. And I take such an act to be very slaūdrous & esteeming the opinion of breaking Images, as vnlawefull to be had very daungerous, voyd of all learning and truth wrote after my fashion to the captayn, which letters I perceiue to come by your graces hands I was not very curious in the writing of them, for w^t me trueth goeth out Page 1346 playnely and roundly, and speaking of the kinges Seale, vttered the common language, I was brought vp in, after the olde sorte, when as I coniect of a good will the people taking Saynt George for a patron of the Realme vnder God,* and hauing some confidence of succour by Gods strength deriued by him, to encrease the estimation of their Prince and Soueraygne Lord, called theyr king on horsebacke in the feate of Armes, Sayncte George on Horsebacke, my knowledge was not corrupt, I know it representeth the king, and yet my speach came forth after the cōmon language, wherin I trust is none offēce. For besides learning I by experience haue knowne the preheminence of a king both in warre and peace. And yet if I hadde wist my letter should haue comen to your Graces handes to be aunswered, then I would haue bene more precise in my speach then to geue occasion of so long an argument therein. As for S. George himselfe, I haue such opinion of him as becommeth me and haue read also of Belerephon in Homer as they call him the Father of tales, I will leaue that matter. And as for bookes let Latine and Greeke continue as long as it shall please God, I am almost past the vse of them, what seruice those letters haue done, experience hath shewed, and religion hath continued in them 1500. yeres: but as for the english tongue it selfe hath not continued in one forme of vnderstanding 200. yeres and without Gods worke and speciall miracle it shall hardly conteyne religion long, when it can not last it self, and whatsoeuer your Graces mind is now in the matter, I know well that hauing the gouernement of the Realme your Grace will vse the gift of pollicy, which is a gift of God.

And euen as now at this time Bishops be restrayned by a speciall pollicye to preache onely in theyr Cathedrall Churches (the like whereof hath not bene knowne in my time) so vpon an other occasion your Grace may percase thinke expedient to restrayne (further then the parliament hath already done) the common reading of the Scripture, as is now restrained the Bishops liberty of preaching. As for the brasen Serpēt did not in all mens language represent Christ, and if I had written to an other then your Grace, I might haue had the like matter of argument that was taken agaynst me of S. George on horsebacke. For Gregory Nazianzene chiefe diuine in the Greeke Church calleth the Serpents death, the figure of the death of christ, but not the serpent to be the figure of Christ, and yet when I had done all mine argument, I would resolue as is resolved with me in the speach of S. George on horsebacke, that the common speach is otherwise, and so it is in saying the serpent to be a true figure of Christ, and yet Gregorye Nazianzen called the serpent it selfe 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 of Christ in these wordes 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 &c? in his sermon de pascate and yet in Almechorus Domini we read Aries, Leo, Uermis, spoken of Christ, and some expound the scripture, sicut Moyses. &c. After that sort. And as your Grace sayd when I was last at your house with the french Ambassador, ye wished him & me together disputing, to see whē we would make an end, euen so it is in these matters, when they come in argumēt, for a bye thing (as Saynt George on Horsebacke) when it escapeth me, or speaking of the brasen serpent, folowing a speach not throughly discussed, shalbe occasion of a digression all out of purpose. And therefore was it a great gift of God, that our late Soueraigne Lord (God rest his soule) set these matters in quiet: Who had heard all these reasōs touching Images which be now rehearsed in your graces leters, and hauing once my Lord of Cāterbury & me present with him alone in his Pallace that they call otherwise newe Hall, handled that matter at length and discussed with my Lord of Caunterbury the vnderstanding of gods commaundement to the Iewes,* so as all the Clearkes in Christedome could not amend it. And where as one had denyed the Image of the Trinitye to be had, by reasons as be touched in your Graces letters, I heard his highnesse aunswere to them at another time. And when hee had himselfe specially commaunded diuers Images to be abolished yet (as your Grace knoweth) he both ordered and himselfe putte in execution the kneeling and creeping before the Image of the Crosse, and established agreement in that truth through all this Realme, whereby all argumentes to the contrary be assoyled at once. I would wysch Images vsed as the booke by his highnesse sette forth doth prescribe and no otherwise. I know your Grace only tēpteth me with such reasons as other make vnto you, and I am not fully at liberty although I am bolde enough (and some will thinke to bolde) to aunswere some thinges as I woulde to an other man mine equall, being so much inferiour to your Grace as I am, but me thinketh Saynte Paules solucion during the kinges Maiesties minoritye should serue all. Nos talem consuetudinem non habemus. We haue no such custome in the Church. When our soueraign Lord commeth to his perfect age (which God graunt) I doubt not but God wil reueale that shalbe necessary for the gouerning of his people in religion.* And if any thing shal be done in the meane time (as I thinke there shall not) by your Graces direction, he may when he commeth to age say in the rest, as I heare say, he sayd nowe of late concerning procession, that in his fathers time men were wont to folow procession, vpon which the kinges maiestyes saying the procession (as I heard) was well furnished afterwarde by your Graces Commaundement, which speach hath put me in remembraunce, that if the Bishops and other of the Clergy, should agree to any alteration in religion to the condemnation of any thing set forth by his Father, whereby his father might be noted to haue wanted knowledge or fauor to the truth, what he would say, I can not tell, but he might vse a maruellous speach, and for the excellency of his spirite, it were like he would, and hauing so iust a cause against Bishops as he might haue it were to be feared he would. And when he had spoken, thē he might by his lawes do more then any would gladly suffer of our sort at these dayes, for as the allegatiō of his authority represented by your grace, shalbe then aunswere (as youre Grace now writeth vnto me) that y^t your Grace onely desired truth according to Gods scripture, and it may be •hē sayd: we Bishops when we haue our soueraigne Lord & head in minority we fashion the matter as we lust, & then some young man that would haue a piece of the Bishops landes shall say: the beastly Bishops haue alwayes done so, and when they can no longer mayntayne one of theyr pleasures of rule and superioritye, then they take another way and let that go, and for the time they be here, spend vp that they haue, which eat you and drinke you, what ye list & we together, with Edamus & bibamus cras moriemur. And if we shall alleadge for our defence the strength of Goddes trueth and the playnesse of scripture, with the word of the Lord, and many gay termes, and say we were conuincd by scriptures, such an excellent iudgement, as the kinges maiesty is like to haue, will neuer credite vs in it, ne be abused by such a vayne answer. And this is a worldly polliticke consideration, and at home, for the noyse abroade in the world will be more slaunderous then this is daungerous. And touching the bishop of Rome, the doing in this realme hitherto hath neuer done him so much displeasure as an alteration in religion during the kinges Maiestyes minority, should serue for his purpose, for he wanteth not wits to beate into other princes eares, that where his authority is abolished, there at euery chaunge of gouernors, shalbe change in Religion and y^t hath bene amongst vs by a whole consent established, shall by pretence of an other vnderstanding in scripture streight be brought in questiō,* for they will geue it no other name but a pretence, howe stiffely so euer we will affirme otherwise and call it Gods worde and here it should much be noted that my Lorde of Caunterbury, being the high Bishop of the Realme, highly in fauour with his late Soueraigne Lord, and my Lord of Duresme a manne of renowned fame in learning and grauity, both put by him in trust for theyr counsell in the order of the Realme, shoulde so soone forgette theyr olde knowledge in Scripture sette forth by the Kynges Maiesties booke, and aduise to enuey such matter of alteration. All which thinges be (I knowe well) by your Grace and them considered. And therefore it is to me incredible that euer any such thing should be in deede with effect whatsoeuer the lyghtnesse of talke shall spread abroade, whyche your Grace hath by Proclamation well stayed. But and ye had not, and the world talked so fast as euer they did, I assure your Grace I woulde neuer feare it, as men feare thinges they like not, vnlesse I saw it in execution, for of this sort I am that in all thinges I thinke shoulde not be done in reason, I feare them not, wherewith to trouble mee otherwise then to take heede if I canne, and to the head Gouernours (as now to your Grace) shewe my minde, and such experience hath euery manne of me that hath commoned with me in any such matters. And therfore albeit your Grace writeth wisely that ouermuch feare doth hurt, and accelerateth sometime, that was not intended, yet it needes not to me, for I haue learned that lesson already, and would a great many moe had, which in deede should be a great stay. And thus I talke with your Grace homely, with multiplication of speache not necessary, as though I meant to sende you as great a packet, as I receyued from you. One thing necessary to aunswere your Grace in touching your maruell: howe I know sooner thinges from thence, then your Grace doth there, whiche ariseth not vppon any desire of knowledge on my behalfe, for euill thinges be ouersoone knowne, not vpō any slacknes of your graces behalf there, who is & is noted very vigilāt, as your graces charge requireth. But Page 1347 thus it is euen as it was when I was in some little authoritye, they that were the euill doers in such matters would hide them from me. So now they haue handled it otherwise, for as for lacke of lentes Testament was openly sold in Winchester market, before I wrot vnto your Grace of it. And as for Bales booke called the Elucidation of Anne Askewes Martyredome, they were in these partes common some with leaues vnglewed, where maister Paget was spoken of and some with leaues glued. And I call them common because I saw at the least foure of them. As for Bales booke touching the death of Luther wherein was the Duke Saxons prayer (whereof I wrote) was brought downe into this countrey by an honest Gentleman to whome it was (as I remember hee tolde me) geuen at London for newes, and had it a good while ere I wrote to your Grace. I had not then receiued the inhibition for preaching whereof men spake otherwise then they knewe.* And in the meane time Doctour Smith recanted with a Priestee of this Towne (who to mine owne mouth boasted himselfe to be your Graces Chaplayne, but I beleueed it not) brought downe with speed, & made by meanes to haue it brought to my knowledge, which I knew besides, for they had by and by filled all the Countrey here aboutes of tales of me. And when I saw Doctour Smithes recantation beginne with Omnis homo mendax so englished and suche a new humility as he would make all the Doctors of the Church Lyers with himselfe, knowing what opinions were abroad, it enforced me to write vnto your Grace for the ease of my conscience: geuing this Iudgement of Smith that I neither liked his tractation of vnwritten verities, ner yet hys retractation, and was gladd of my former Iudgement, that I neuer had familiaritye with him, I saw him not (that I wotte these three yeares ne talked with him these seuen yeares, as curious as I am noted in the common wealth.) And where as in his vnwritten verities he was so mad to say, Bishops in this Realme may make lawes, I haue witnesse that I sayd at that worde, we should bee then dawes, and was by and by sory that euer he had writted of the Sacrament of the aultar, which was not as it was noysed, vntouched, with that word, all men be Liers which is a maruellous word, as it soundeth in our tounge when we say a man were better haue a thiefe in his house then a lyer. And the deprauing of mans nature in that sort is not the setting out of the authority of the Scripture. For albeit the authority of the Scripture dependeth not vpon man, yet the ministration of y^e letter which is writing and speaking, is exercised, and hath bene from the beginnunge deliuered through mans hand and taught by mā's mouth: which men in the Scripture calleth holy men, and that is contrary to lyers. And therefore S, Augustine in his book De mendacio, sayth omnis homo mendax, signifieth omnis homo peccans. If Smyth had onely written of Bishops lawes, and then sayd he had (sauing your honor) lyed loudly or to mitigate the matter, sayd he had erred by ignorāce that had bene done truely and humbly, for he that seeketh for much company in lying as he did, hath small humility, for he woulde hide himselfe by the nūber, & this muche as touching Smith of whō nor his booke till he was in trouble I neuer heard talking. But to the matter I wrote of, I haue told your Grace how I came to knowledge of thē very scarcely in time, but in the thing ouer quickly & neuer had any suche thought in my life, as I denyed to your Grace to be worthely charged with thē, by them I meane that may hereafter charge, for I know no such yet in thys world, and I neuer was in mine opinion so madde, as to write to your Grace in that sort when all thinges be well, I haue many causes to reioyce but where things were otherwise (as I trust they shall not) I haue nothing to doe to aske any accompt, I trust I shall neuer forget my selfe so much, I thanke God I am euen aswell learned to lyue in the place of obedience, as I was in the place of directiō in our late soueraigne Lordes life. And for my quietnes in this estate accompt my self to haue a great treasure of your Graces rule and authority, and therefore will worship and and honor it otherwise then to vse such maner of presumption to aske any accompt. And I know your Grace cannot stay these matters so sodenly, and I esteeme it a great matter that thinges be stauld hitherto thus, but if thinges had encreased as the rumours purported, your Grace might haue bene encombred more in the execution of your good determination.* Now thanks be to GOD your Grace goeth well about to stay it. As for my selfe I know mine inward determination to doe, as I may, my duty to God and the world, and haue no cause to complayne of the vniuersall Disposition of them in my Dioces. I know but one way of quiet to keep and follow such lawes and orders in Religion as our late soueraigne Lorde left with vs: which by his life, as the Byshops and Clergye sayd was the very trueth, and I neuer read yet or heard any thing why to swarue from it, ne thinke it expedient to call any one thing in doubte during the Kinges Maiestyes minority whereby to empayre the strength of the accorde established, whiche I write not mistrusting your Grace in the contrary, but declaring my selfe and wishing the same minde to other about you, as I trust they haue, for which I shal• pray to GOD, who prospered out late Soueraigne Lord in that rebellion as we haue seene experience, and by your Graces foresight and polliticke Gouvernement shall send the like prosperity to our Soueraygne Lord that now is, wherein I shall doe my parte as a Subiect most bounden many wayes thereunto. I send vnto your Grace herewith my discussion of my Lord of S. Dauies Purgation, wherein I walke somewhat more at libertye, then writing to your Grace, and yet I take my selfe liberty enough with a reuerent mind, neuerthelesse to keepe me within my bondes whiche if I at any time exceede, I trust your Grace will beare with me after your accustomed goodnesse, for whose prosperitie I shall continually pray with encrease of honor. At Winchester the 6. of Iune.

¶Certayne additions after these Leters aboue specified, with notes and solutions aunswering to the same.

THus haue we set out to thee (gentle and studious reader) an extract of certayn letters af Byshop Gardiner: not of all that he wrote, but of suche as coulde come to our handes: Neither of these also that we haue for any good stuffe, or any great profit in thē contained, or that they dyd cleare him, or his cause any thing, for y^e which he was most worthely condemned. For if there did or might appeare any such thing in all his writinges, that might cleare the ill fauored doinges of that man, be thou sure such as was thē secret about him, and yet his well willers (theyr names I leaue vntouched) hauing his writinges, or beyng able to shew them, as I am priuy they are, would not so conceale them in couert as they doe, being thereto both prouoked and occasioned by vs, if they had seene any thing in them meete to relieue the person, or to remedy his matter. Wherfore thinke not for any such effect these his vayne glorious Letters to be brought in here of vs. But onelye that thou might hereby collect and vnderstand by those his foresayd epistles, and articles folowing, not only the whole course and story almost of all his procedinges from time to time, but also might see the nature and inward condition of the man, how vayneglorious, full stufte and puffed vp with arrogancy, and drowned in his owne conceite he was, much like to the parson, or rather he himselfe, described in the latine Comedy, Miles Thraso Gloriosus, haue nothing in his mouth, but Emperors, Kinges, counsellors, protectors, aduisementes, direction: as though all directiō of realmes and princes did flowe out of his brayne, like as it is in the Poets fables, that Minerua did spring out of the head of Iupiter. And yet if this vaynglorious conceit had bene alone in him, lesse matter had bene agaynst him. Now hys subtle practises, and pretended purposes and dissimulynge conueyance did not onely augment, but also exceeded al his other euils. As in the letters aboue specified is notorious and euident to see, wherein though he durst not apertly gainsay that, which he inwardly misliked: yet how couertly doth he insinuate himselfe to the Lord Protector, vnder pretēce of geuing cōsell, to bring that to passe, which was for his purpose, that is, no innouation or alteration to bee made of religion, during all the kinges minority, but to let all thinges stand as king Henry left them. And that is the chieffest. But in all his letters, wherto he driueth: vsing commonly this argument: which as it is easy to recite, so neither is it hard to answere to. Although in the notes before we haue answered already sufficiently.

¶The Summe and Conclusion of all Winchesters drift, in his Epistles before.

THat is chiefly to bee feared and auoyded of the Lorde Protector, and now specially in the Kinges minority, that may bring both daunger to hym,* and trouble to the Realme.

Innouation of religion from that state, which K. Henry left it, may be and is like to be daungerous to himselfe, and cause trouble to the Realme.

Ergo innouation of Religion, from the state that the king left it is in no wise to be attempted.

*TO aunswer first to the vocable innouation, which he stumbleth so greatly vpon, this I say: that innouation is properly vsed, * where a thing is brought in a new, which was not before. Forasmuch therefore, as in this alteration there is no new religion brought in, but only the old religion of the primitiue church reuiued, therfore here is to be thought not so much an innouation, as a renouation or reformation rather of religion, which reformation is oft tymes so necessary in common weales, that without the same all runneth to confusion.

Secondly, I aunswer to the argument, which I doe deny as a fallax, for there is fallacia accidentis. Where it is sayd, that reformation of religion gendreth daunger to the Protector, and trouble to the realme: first what wil come, that is vncertaine: And God be hallowed, yet no danger hath come to England for the reformation of religiō. And though there did, yet the cause thereof is not to be imputed to religion reformed. For sincere and true doctrine of hys owne nature worketh quiet, peace and tranquillitie, with all good order. And if the contrary happen, that is incident by other causes, as by the malice of Sathan, and wycked aduersaries, not by reason of the doctrine and true religion. So after the preaching of Christ and his Apostles, dissention followed in common weales betwixt father and sonne, brother and brother, &c. but that is not to be ascribed to them, but to other.

As concerning the faults found in the Paraphrase of Erasmus, * this I aunswer and say, that this bishop belike had ouerwatched himselfe in this matter. For if it be true which he himselfe affirmeth, fol. 744. that he neuer read that booke before, and now he neuer slept till he himselfe red it. It happened peradventure, that in the ouermuch watching of himselfe, and swift readyng of the booke, hys iudgement was a sleepe, whiles his eyes were open in readyng the same.

Likewyse touching the booke of Homelies, especially the Homilie of saluation, * wherewith he findeth hymselfe so much grieued with the Archbishop, seeyng he bringeth foorth no prooues, I haue nothing to answer. In y^e meane season this I haue to thinke, that if he had bene so cunning in the knowledge of his owne saluation, as he was in the destruction and vexation of Christes members, he would neuer so rage agaynst that Homily.

Touching the examination of Anne Askew, if it bee misreported by M. Bale, * why doth not he note the places which they be, and wherein? And if he had, or were able so to do: yet seeyng the examination was of her own penning, which M. Bale did follow, let euery Christian Reader iudge, whether is more to be credited of these two, she that was persecuted, or he that was the persecuter.

And where he speaketh so much of quiet and tranquillitie. This I aunswere,* that quiet and tranquillitie in weales publike, so long as they are ioined with right reformed religion, be much to be embraced. But when it is otherwise, that is, where true religion lacketh his right, there let the second table geue place to the first.

He thwarteth also, and wrangleth much against plaiers,* Printers, Preachers. And no maruell why. For he seeth these three things to be set vp of God, as a triple bulwarke against the triple crowne of the Pope, to bring him down, as God be prayesd they haue done meetely well alreadie.

As touching the Article of Free iustification by fayth, which he cannot abide,* forasmuch as we haue sufficiently declared in the notes before, we shalt referre the Reader now also vnto the same.

*And moreouer, because in one of his letters, mention is made of a certaine letter sent vnto M. Ridley, because we will defraud thee (gentle reader) of nothing that commeth to our handes, here hast thou the copy thereof, in effect as followeth.

Here followeth the copy of the letter of St•. Gardiner sent to M. Ridley, in the letters aboue mentioned, conteining matter and obiections against a certaine Sermon, of the sayd Maister Ridley, made at the Courte.

MAister Ridley, after right hearty commendations, it chaunced me vpon Wednesday last past, to be present at your sermon in the courte, wherein I hard you confirme the doctrine in religion, set foorth by our late Soueraigne Lorde and mayster, whose soule God pardon, admonishing your audience that ye would specially trauell in the confutation of the bishop of Romes pretended authoritie, in gouernement and vsurped power, in pardons whereby hee hath abused himselfe, in Heauen and earthe. Which two matters I note to be playne,* and here wythout controuersie. In the other two ye spake of, touchyng images and ceremonies, and as ye touched it, specially for holy water, to driue away deuils, for that ye declared your selfe alwayes desirous, to set forth the mere trueth, with great desire of vnitie as ye professed, not extending anye your asseueration beyond your knowledge, but alwayes adding such like words (as farre as ye had read) and if any man could shew you further, ye would heare him (wherein ye were much to be commended) Upon these considerations, and for the desire I haue to vnitie, I haue thought my selfe bound to communicate to you, that I haue read in the matter of Images, and holy water to the intent ye may by your selfe consider it, and so wey, before that ye wil speake in those two pointes, as ye may (reteining youre owne principles) affirme still that ye woulde affirme, and may in deede be affirmed and mayntayned, wherein I haue seene other forget themselves. First I send vnto you herewith (which I am sure ye haue red that \(a\) Eusebius writeth of Images, whereby appeareth that Images haue beene of \(b\) great antiquitie, in Christes Church, and to say, we may not haue Images, or to call them when they represent Christ or his Saintes, be ouer grosse opinions, to enter into your learned head, what so euer the vnlearned woulde tattle. For you know the text of the old law. \(c\)Nō facies tibi sculptile, forbiddeth no more Images now, then another text forbiddeth to vs puddings. And if omnia be munda mundis, to the bellye, there can be no cause why they should bee of themselves impura to the eye, wherein ye can say much more. And then when we haue Images, to call them Idols, is a like fault in fond folly. As if a mā would call (Regem) a Tyrant, and then bring in old writers to prooue that Tyrannus signified once a kyng, like as (Idolum) signified once an Image: but like as (Tyrannus) was by consent of men, appropriate, to signifie an vsurper of that dignitie and an vntrue king: So hath (Idolum) bene appropriate to signifie a false representation, and a false Image. In so much, as there was a solemne anathemization of all those that would call an Image and Idoll, as he were worthy to be hanged, that would call the king our maister (God saue him, our true iust king) a tyrant, and yet in talke he might shew that a tyrant signified sometime a king, but speech is regarded in his present signification, which I doubt not ye can consider right well.

I verily thinke, that as for the hauing of Images, ye will say inough, and that also when we haue them, we should not despise them in speach, to call them (d) idols, ne despise them with deedes, to mangle them or cut them, but at the least suffer them to stand vntorne, wherein Luther that pulled away all other regarde to them, straue stoutly, and obteyned (as I haue seene in diuers of the churches in Germany of his reformation) that they shoulde (as they do) stand still.

All the matter to be feared is exces in worshipping, wherein the church of Rome, hath bene very precise. And specially Gregory, writing Episcopo Mastilien. which is cōteined, De consecratio. Distinctione. 3. as followeth.*

Perlatum ad nos fuerat, quod inconsiderato zelo succensus, fanctorum imagines, sub hac quasi excusatione, ne adorari debuissent, confregeris, & quidem eas adorari vetuisse, omnino laudamus, fregisse verò reprehēdimus. Dic frater, a quo factum esse sacerdote aliquādo auditum est, quod fecisti? Aliud est enim picturam adorare, aliud per picturam historiam, quid sit adorandum addiscere. Nam quod legentibus scriptura, hoc & idiotis praestat pictura cernentibus, quia in ipsa ignorantes vident quid sequi debeant, in ipsa legunt qui literas nesciunt, vnde & praecipue gentibus, pro lectione pictura est.

Herein is forbidden adoration,* and then in Sexta Sinodo, was declared what maner of adoration is forbidden, that is to say,* godly adoration to it being a creature, as is conteined in the chapter, Venerabiles imagines,* in the same distinction, in this wise.

By which doctrine, all idolatry is plainly excluded, in euident wordes. So as we cannot say, that the worshipping of Images had his beginnyng by popery, for Gregory forbad it, vnlesse we shall call that Synode, Popery, because there were so many bishops. And yet there is forbidden, cultus Diuinus, and agreeth with our beforesaid doctrine, by which we may creepe before the crosse on good Friday, wherein we haue the Image of the crucifixe in honour, & vse it in a worshipfull place, and so earnestly looke on it, and conceyue that it signifieth, as we kneele a) and creepe before it, whiles it lyeth there, and whiles that remembrance is in exercise, with which crosse neuertheles, the Sexten when he goeth for a corse, will not be afrayd, to be homely, and holde it vnder hys gowne whiles he drinketh a pottle of ale, a point of homeliness that myght bee left, but yet it declareth, that he esteemed no Diuinitie in the Image. But euer since I was borne a poore parishioner, a lay man, durst be so bold at a shift (if he weee also churchwarden) to sell to the vse of the Church at length, and his own, in the meane tyme, the siluer crosse on Easter Monday, that was creeped vnto on good Friday. In specialties, there haue bene speciall abuses, but generally Images haue bene taken for Images, with an (b) office to signifie an holy remembraunce of Christ and his saints. And as the sounde of speache vttered by a liuely Image, and representing to the vnderstanding, by the sense of hearing godly matter, doth stirre vp the mynde, and therewith the body, to consent in outward gesture of worshipfull regard, to that sound: (c) So doth the object of the Image, by the sight, worke like effect in mā, within and without, wherin is verily worshipped, that we vnderstand, and yet reuerence and worship also shewed to that, wherby we attaine that vnderstanding, and is to vs in the place of an instrument. So as it hath no worship of it selfe, but remayneth in his nature of stone or tymber, siluer, copper or gold. But when it is in office, and worketh a godly remembraunce in vs, by representation of the thyng signified vnto vs, then we vse it worshipfully and honourably, as many do the (d) priest at Masse, whome they little regard all the day after. And me thinketh euer, that like as it is an ouer grosse error, to take an image for God, or to worship it with godly (e) honour. So to graunt that we may not haue Images of Christ, and that we may do no worship before them, or not vse them worshipfully, it is inexplicable. For it is one kynde of worship to place them worshipfully. So as if a man place an Image in the church, or hang it about his necke, as (f) all vse to do the Image of the crosse, and the knight of the order (g) Saint George, this is some piece of worship. And if we may not contemne the images of Christ and his saintes, when we haue them (for that were villanie) not neglect them (for that were to haue them without vse▪) which were inconuenient, (quia nec natura nec arte quicquam fit frustra) wee must haue them in estimation and reputation, whiche is not without some honour and worship, and at the least in the place, where we conueniently vse them, as in the church, as where they serue vs rather then we them, and because their (h) seruice is worshipfull, they be so regarded accordingly, for that time of seruice, and therefore they be called Venerabiles Images, and be worshipfully ordered, before whom we kneele, and bowe, and cense, not at that the Images be, but at that the Images signifie, which in our kneeling, bowyng, and censing, we knowledge to vnderstand and read in that fashion of contract writing,* wherein is wrapped vp, a great many of sentences, sodenly opened with one sodaine sight, to hym that hath bene exercised in readyng of them. And me seemeth, after the faith of Christ receiued & known, and thoroughly purged from heresies, if by case, there were offered a choise, either to retein painting and grauing, and forbear writing, or chosing writing, to forbear both the other gifts: it would be a probleme, seeing if grauing were taken away, we could haue no printing. And therefore they that presse so much the wordes, of Non facies tibi sculptile, euer me thincketh they condemne printed bookes, the originall wherof is of grauing to make matrices literarum. Sed hoc est furiosum, & sunt tamen qui putāt palmarium. And therfore now it is englished. Thou shalt make no grauen Images, least thou worship them, which (I here) is newly written in the new church, I know not the name, but not farre frō the old Iury. But to y^e matter of Images, wherin I haue discoursed at large I thinke, and ye consider (as I doubt not, but ye will) the doctrine set foorth by our late Soueraigne Lord? Ye shall in y^e matter see y^e truth set forth by such as had that committed vnto them, vnder his highnes, amongst whome I was not, nor was not priuie vnto it, till it was done. And yet the clause in the booke, for discussion of (the Lord) and (our Lorde) hath made manye thinke otherwise, but I take our Lorde to witnes, I was not: & that declaratiō of (our Lord) was his highnes own deuise, ex se. For he saw the fond Englishing of (the Lord) disseuered in speach whom our Lord had congregated. And this I adde lest geuing authoritie to the booke, I should seeme to aduaunt my selfe.

Now will I speake somewhat of holy water, wherein I sēd vnto you, the xxxiiij. chapter in the ix. book of this story Tripartite, where Marcellus the bishop, bad Equitius his Deacon, to cast abroad water by him first hallowed wherewith to driue away the deuill. And it is noted, howe the deuill could not abide the vertue of the water, but vanished away. And for my part, it seemeth the history may be true. (:) for we be assured by scripture that in the name of God, the church is able and strong to cast out Deuils according to the Gospel, In nomine meo daemones eijcient &c. So as if the water were away, by only calling of the name of God, that maystry may be wrought. And being the vertrue of the effect onely attributed to the name of God: the question shuld be onely, whether y^e creature of water, may haue the office to conuey the effect of the holines, of thinnuocation of Gods name. And first in Christ, the skirt of hys garment had such an office, to minister health to the womā and spe•cle and cley to the blinde, and S. Peters shadow, & S. Pauls handkerchers. And leauing old stories here at home, the special gift of curation, ministred by the kings of this realme, not of their owne strength but by inuocation of the name of God, hath bene vsed to be distributed in rings of gold and siluer. And I thinke effectually wherin the mettall hath only an office, and the strength is in the name of God, wherein all is wrought. And Elizeus put his staffe in like office. And why the whole church myght not put water in like office, to conuey abroad the inuocation of gods name: there is no scripture to the contrary, but there is scripture how other inferiour creatures haue bene promoted to like dignitie, and much scripture, how water hath bene vsed in like and greater seruice. And the story I send vnto you, sheweth how water hath bene vsed in the same seruice, to driue away deuils. In which matter if any shall say, he beleueeth not the story, and he is not bound to beleue it, being no scripture: that man is not to be reasoned with, for the effect of the kings crampe rings. And yet for such effect as they haue wrought, when I was in Frāce,* I haue bene my selfe much honoured, and of all sortes entreated, to haue them, with offer of as much for them, as they were double worth. Some will say, what is rings to holy water? Marrie thus I say, if the mettall of gold and siluer, may doe seruice to cary abroad, the inuocatiō of the name of God effectually for one purpose, water may also serue to cary abroad the inuocation of the name of God, wherewith to driue away deuils. Hereto will be sayde. Non valet argumentum a posse ad esse. But the story saith, the water did that seruice, and other straungers say and affirme by experience, the kings Maiesties rings haue done the seruice. And our late maister continued all his life, the exercise of that gift of God, and vsed siluer and gold to doe that seruice, to cary abroad the strength of the inuocation of the name of God by him, and he vsed it among vs that serued him in it, when hee had throughly heard and seene what might be sayd in the matter, and yet he had no scripture, especially for it that spake of rings of siluer or gold, no more then is for the ashes ministred a little before ye last preached. And as our young soueraigne Lord hath receiued them reuerently: so I trust he shall be aduertised, ne negligat gratiam Dei in dono curationum, but follow his father therein: also not doubting but God will heare him as he hath heard his father, and others his progenitors, kyngs of this realme, to whose dignitie God addeth this prerogatiue, as he doth also to inferior ministers of his church, in the effect of their prayer, when it pleaseth hym. A man might finde some yonglings percase y^t would say, how worldly, wily, wittie bishops, haue enueigled Page 1350 simple kings heretofore, and to confirme their blessings, haue also deuised,* how kings should blesse also, and so authoritie to maintayne, where truth fayled, and I haue had it objected to me, that I vsed to prooue one piece of myne argument euer by a king, as when I reasoned thus. If ye allow nothing but scripture, what say you to the Kinges rings? but they be allowed, Ergo, somewhat is to be allowed besides scripture. And another, if Images be forbidden * why doth the king weare S. George on his brest. But he weareth S. George on his brest: Ergo, Images be not forbidden. If saints be not to be worshipped, why kep• we S. * Georges feast? But we keepe S. Georges feast, Ergo, &c. And in this matter of holy water, if the strength of the inuocation of the name of God to driue away deuils, cannot be distribute by water: why can it be destribute in siluer, to driue away diseases, and the daungerous disease of the falling euill? But the rings hallowed by the holy church, may do so. Ergo, the water hallowed by the Churche may do lyke seruice. These were sore argumēts in his tyme, and I trust be also yet and may bee conueniētly vsed, to such as would neuer make an end of talke, but rake vp euery thyng y^t theyr dull sight cannot penetrate, wherein me thought ye spake effectually, when ye sayd, men must receyue the determination of the particular church and obey, where Gods lawe repugneth not expresly. And in this effect to driue away deuils, that prayer and inuocation of the church may do it, scripture maintaineth evidently, and the same scripture doth autorise vs so to pray, and encourageth vs to it. So as if in discussiō of holy water, we attribute all the effect to y^e holines which procedeth from God by inuocation of y^e church, and take water for an onely seruaunt to cary abroad holynesse: there can be no superstition, where men regard only prayer, which scripture authoriseth. And if we shall say that the water cannot do such seruice: we shall be conuincd, in that it doth a greater seruice in our baptisme by gods speciall ordinance. So as wee cannot saye, that water cannot, or is not apt to doe this seruice, onely the staye is, to haue a precise place, in the newe Testament, to say, vse water thus in this seruice, as we do in holy water, which me thinketh needeth not where all is ordered, to be well vsed by vs: and whē the whole church agreed vpon such an vse: or any particular church, or the common minister of it: and by the exorcisme ordered for it, the thyng to be vsed, purged, there can be but slender matter to improoue that custome, wherein God is only honoured, & the power of his name set forth, whereunto all thing boweth and geueth place, all naturall operation set apart and secluded. And when any man hath denyed, that water may do seruice, because scripture appoynteth it not, that (because) driueth away much of the rest, the church vseth, and specially our crampe rings. For if water may not serue to cary * abroad, the effect of Gods grace obtained by inuocation frō God, by y^e common prayer of y^e church. How can the mettall of siluer or gold cary abroad, the effect of the kings inuocation in the crampe rings? which manner of reasonyng (ad hominem) Christ vsed with the Iewes, whē he sayd, Si ego in Belzebub, eijcio daemonia, filij vestri, in quo eijciunt? And if by our owne principles, we should be enforced to say that our * crampe rings be superstitiō (where truth enforceth vs not so to do) it were a maruelous punishment. Si caeci essemus (as Christ saith) peccatum non haberemus, sed videmus, and this realme hath learnyng in it, and you a good portion thereof, accordyng whereunto I doubt not, but ye will waigh this matter non ad popularem trutinam, sed artificis stateram. I meane that artificer y^t teacheth the church our mother (as ye full well declared it) & ordered our mother to geue nourishment vnto vs. In which poynt speaking of the church, although ye touched an vnknown church to vs, and known to God only, yet declared the vnion of that Church in the permixt Church, which God ordereth men to complaine vnto, & to heare agayne, wherein the absurditie is taken away of them that would haue no church knowen, but euery man beleue, as he were inwardly taught himselfe, whereupon followeth the olde Prouerbe. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Which is far frō y^e vnitie, ye so earnestly wished for, wherof (as me thought) ye said pride is the let, as it is vndoubtedly, which fault God amend, and geue you grace, so to facion your words, as ye may agree with them in speeche, with whom ye be enclined to agree in opinion. For that is the way to relieue the world. And albeit there hath bene betwene you and me, no familiaritie, but contrarywise, a little disagreement (which I did not hide frō you,) yet consideryng the feruent zeale ye professed, to teach * Peters true doctrine, that is to say, Christes true doctrine, whereunto ye thought the doctrine of Images and holy water, to put away deuils agreed not: I haue willingly spent this tyme, to communicate vnto you my folly (if it be folly) * plainly as it is, whereupon ye may haue occasion, the more substantially, fully and plainly to open these matters for the reliefe of such as be fallen from the truth and confirmation of those that receyue and follow it, wherein it hath bene euer much commended, to haue such regard to histories of credite, and the continuall vse of the church * rather to shew how a thyng continued from the beginnyng, as holy water and Images haue done, may be well vsed: thē to follow the light rash eloquence, which is euer ad manū, to mocke and improoue that is established. And yet agayne I come to Marcellus that made a crosse in the water, and bade his deacon cast it abroad, *cum fide & zelo, after which sort, if our holy water were vsed, I doubt not but there be many Marcellus, and many Elizeus, and many at whose prayer God forgeueth sinne, if such as will enioy y^e prayer haue faith and zeale, as Equitius, and were as desirous to driue the deuil out of the temple of their body and soule, as Equitius out of the temple of Iupiter. So as if holy vse were coupled with holy water, there should be more plentie of holynesse then there is, but as men be prophane in their liuyng, so they cannot bide to haue any thing effectually holy, not so much as bread and water, fearing lest they should take away sinne from vs, which we loue so well. Solus Christus peccata diluit, who sprinckleth hys bloud, by hys ministers, as he hath taught hys spouse, the Church in which those ministers be ordered, wherein many wayes, maketh not many sauours, as ignorants do iest, whereof I neede not speake further vnto you, no more I neded not in the rest in respect of you, but me thought, ye coniured all men in your sermon, to say what they thought to you, id quod hanc mihi expressit Epistolam, quam boni consules, Et Vale.

Your louyng friend. Ste. Winchester.

AS I haue set foorth here (gentle Reader) the cauillyng letter of Winchester, agaynst M. Ridleys Sermon: so am I right sory, that I haue not likewyse the aunswer of the sayd Ridley agayne, to ioyne withall. For so I vnderstand, that not onely M. Ridley, but also M. Barlow B. of S. Dauids (for Winchester wrote agaynst them both) had written and sent immediately their aunsweres to the same, refutyng the friuolous and vnsauory reasons of this popish prelate, as may well appeare by a parcell additionall of a letter sent by the L. Protector to the sayd Byshop in these wordes.

And because we haue begun to write to you, we are put in remembraunce of a certayne letter or booke which you wrote vnto vs agaynst the bishop of S. Dauids sermon, and D. Ridleys, to the whiche, aunswer beyng immediately made, was by negligence of vs forgottē to be sent. Now we both send you that, and also the aunswer which the B. of s. Dauids wrote to the same booke of yours.

Winchester.

This article toucheth other mens actes, who or how they are complayned or enformed, I cannot throughly tel. For at the tyme of the kings Maiesties visitation, I was in the Fleete, and the morrow after twelfe day I was deliuered at Hampton court, my L. of Somerset, and my L. of Caunterbury then being in counsaile with many other counsailors, & was deliuered by these words: The kings maiesty hath granted a generall pardon, and by the benefit thereof, I was discharged. Wherunto I answered, that I was learned neuer to refuse the kings maiesties pardon,* and in strength as that was: and I would & did humbly thanke his maiesty therfore, and then they began with me in an article of learnyng touching iustification, whereunto they willed me to say my mynd, adding therwith, that because other learned men had agreed to a forme deliuered vnto me, that I should not thinke I could alter it: which I receiued of them, and promised the Thursday after to repayre to my L. of Somersets house at Sheene, with my mynd written: which I did, and that day seuennight followyng, appearing before hym and other of the counsaile, was committed to my house for prisoner, because I refused to subscribe to the forme of words & sentēces that other had agreed vnto (as they said.) In which tyme of imprisonment in my house, the Bish. of Rochester then being as sent to me, and after M. Smith, & then M. Cecil, to which M. Cecil, when I had by learnyng resoluēd my mynde in the matter, I deliuered it, and he deliuering it to my lords Grace, wrote me in hys name, thanks for it: and then it was within the tyme of Lent, ere I was discharged of y^e trouble, and so went to Winchester as a man clearely out of all trauell of busines.

And within 14. daies after that, or there abouts, began other trauell with me, vpon a request made by my Lord of Somerset to surrender a colledge in Cambridge, & diuers letters were written betwene his grace & me in it. Wherin I might perceiue the Secretary in his pen tooke occasiō to pricke me more, then I trusted my Lords grace himself would haue done. And by this trouble was I deduced to an end. Then shortly after I receiued letters to come to y^e counsaile,* & by reason I alledged my disease, I was respited by other letters, & three days before whitsontide, receiued yet other letters to come, by which it myght seeme vnto me, that it was not of all beleued that I was diseased, & therfore with all expeditiō when I could not ride, I came in an horselitter, and according to my duetie presented my selfe to my Lordes of the counsaile, who all then entertained me secretly among them before the matters were obiected vnto me, as I had bene in the same place with them that I was in our late soueraigne lords days. Afterwards my L. of Somersets Grace charged me with these matters followyng, & in this forme, hauing the articles written in a paper. First, with disobedience that I came not at hys sending for. Wherunto I answered, that I had his letters of licence,* to stay til I might come conueniently. And vpō the last letters I came incontinently in a horselitter.

Then it was objected y^t I bare Palmes, & crept to the crosse. Whereunto I answered, that they were misinformed and I trusted they would not thinke I durst deny it, if I had done it, because ceremonies had such circumstaunces, as I might easily be reproued, if it were otherwise.

Then it was objected, that at Easter I had a solemne sepulchre in the church, and such other ceremonies. I aunswered, that I had euen as many as the kings Maiesties proclamations commanded me, declaring plainly, that I thought it not expedient to make any alteration, wherein to offend the kings maiesties proclamation, adding how he that followeth as he is commanded, is very obedient.

It was then objected vnto me, y^t I went about to deface two of the kings maiesties chaplens, sent down to be Canons of the church of Winchester. Whereunto I answered, declaring the fact truly as it was,* which I am yet able to iustify. After this matter thus oft objected & aunswered, I was commanded to go apart, and beyng called in againe, my L. of Somersets grace looking vpon a bill of Articles, sayd I had preached how the Apostles went from the presence of the counsaile, of the counsaile, of the counsaile, which matter I denied▪ addyng that it was not my fashion of preaching so to play in i•eration of words.

After that, it was objected vnto me for preaching of the Sacrament, to say: the bodye of Christ was really present being a faulte to vse the worde really, not comprised in the Scripture. Whereunto I aunswered that I did not vse the word really, whiche needeth not.* For as I once heard my Lord of Caunterbury reason agaynst one Lambert in the presence of the kinges Maiestie that dead is: the words of scripture, This is my body that shalbe betrayed for you, do playnely and liuely expresse the very presence: and so did I set it forth to the people in my dioces. And this is the effect of all that was sayd agaynst me at my being at the Counsaile, as I can remember. To whome I declared howe much I esteemed obedience, and tolde them I had taught in my dioces, how the whole life of a Christian man consisteth in suffring properly. And therefore we may not do our own wil, but y^e will of God. And among men we must eyther suffer the rulers will, or their power, their will to order vs, & their power to punish vs. After declaratiō wherof my Lorde of Somerset sayde, ye must tary in the towne. Whereunto I aunswered,* I woulde be contented at theyr commaundement or pleasure to tary: but seeing I was no offender, I desired them I might not tary as an offender: and for declaration thereof, that I might haue some house in the country about London, to remoue vnto for a shifte. In deuising whereof I stack much to borrow Asshar. My Lorde of Somerset saide, if he had any in fayth he woulde lend me one.* And in the end my Lord of Somerset desired me to write what my minde was in ceremonies and to send it vnto him, and with that departed.

Thus I haue truely opened after what sorte I haue bene complayned on, y^t hath certaynly come to my knowledge. Truth it is that one Philpot in Winchester,* whome I accompted altered in his wittes (as I heard) deuised tales of me, the specialties whereof I neuer was called to aunswere vnto. Players and minstrels also rayled on me, & other made ballades and rimes of me, but neuer mā had iust cause to cōplaine of any my sayings, doinges, or preachings, or to my knowledge did otherwise, then afore. And if any man shall put me in remembraunce of any other cōplaynt that might in my absence be made of me: If I haue heard it. I wil graūt so. But well assured I am▪ I was neuer complayned on, & called to make answer to y^e cōplaint, but this one time in all my whole lyfe by no man of anye degree. Once y^e Lord Cromwell,* God pardon his soule & forgeue him, caused one day & a half to be spent in a matter betwene sir Frances Brian & me, which was ended, & I declared an honest man which the kings maiesty that dead is, God pardon hys soule, set forth with his familiaritie to me incontinently. And this is all the trouble y^t I haue had in my life, sauing y^e sending to the Fleete, beyng occasioned by my owne letter to the counsaile vpon a zeale that I had, which they allowed not, and finally, this sending of me, to y^e Tower, which was without calling me before the counsaile, to heare what I could say. I am loth to be forsworn: and therefore accompt all the complaints in my whole lyfe made against me, wherunto I haue bene made priuy.

The 7. Article.

Item, that after and vpon occasion of those and many other complaints and informations,* you haue bene sundry tymes admonished, commanded, and enioyned to conforme your selfe, as to your duetie appertained.

Winchester.

To this seuenth Article I answer: I was neuer afore the counsaile called by way of outward complaint and information, but onely once in all my whole life, which was at my last comming to London. Wherunto I aunswered (as afore) & haue told the forme & processe of speech to serue for furniture of aunswer, to this and that Article: for other then I haue before written, I remember not to haue done or suffred by the higher powers in all my whole life, til my comming into the tower, without that I haue had any by admonitions, as a mā faulty or negligent at any time that I remember, for the obseruatiō of any thyng alredy made or set forth by y^e kings maiesty that now is, but haue kept, & caused to be kept in my power the kings maiesties arts, statutes, iniunctions, and proclamations inuiolably, hauing Page 1352 for that purpose such a Chancellor, as in orders & ordinances hath bene alwayes himselfe diligent and precise for that tyme I might haue knowledge of his doings.

The 8. Article.

Item, that after the premisses, & for that those former admonitiōs & comandements, notwithstanding you did yet stil she• your selfe not conformable, & for that also others by your exam'ple were much animated,* & thereby occasion of much vnquietnesse ministred amongst the people, you were called before the kings maiesties counsaile in the month of Iune, in the 2. yeare of his maiesties raigne, and by them on his maiesties behalfe, commanded to preach a Sermon before his maiestie, and therein to declare the •ustnesse and godlynesse of his maiesties father in his proceedings vpon certayne matters partly mentioned in certain articles to you deliuered in writyng, and partly otherwise declared vnto you.

The effect wherof was touchyng the vsurped power and authoritie of the B. of Rome, that the same was iustly and godly taken away in this realme, and other the kings maiesties dominions: touchyng the iust suppressing and taking away of monasteries and religious houses, of Pilgrimages, Reliques, Shrines, Images.

The superstitious goyng about of S. Nicholas bishop, S. Edmund, S. Katherine,* S. Clement, and such lyke: and iust takyng away of Chaunteries, Abbies and Colledges, hallowyng of cādels, water, ashes, Palme, holy bread, beades, creeping to the crosse & such lyke.

Also, touching the setting forth of the kinges maiesties authoritie in his yong yeares to be as great as if his highnesse were of many more yeares.

That auricular confession is indifferent, and of no necessitie by the law of God: and touching the procession and Common prayer in English.

This Article beeyng of so many partes as it is, some true, some otherwise, must be answered by deuision of it in to diuers members, to deuide the one from the other, grāting that is true, denieng that is otherwise, & opening that is ambiguous, auoyding y^t is captious, so as according to my oth, I may open directly & plainly the truth, with sinceritie of conscience. The motion of preaching was made vnto me in mine owne house by M. Cecill, vpon the duke of Somersets behalfe, after I had bene before y^e counsaile, as I haue before sayd:* from which Counsaile I departed (as before is rehersed) as no offender, & therfore when M. Cicil spake to me of preaching before the kings Maiestie, with request to write my sermon before, I denied that maner of preaching, because I said it was to preach like an offender, and I was none, but departed from the Counsaile otherwise as I haue before shewed. And the sayde M. Cicil did not say to me that I was mooued to preach, because I was not conformable: for I had at that tyme no maner of variance with the Counsaile, but was in all conformity with them for any thyng that I know, as I will aunswer afore God.

As for euil example to any man, I could none geue, for I neuer offēded law, statute, or proclamatiō in this realm, •e did euer any act to the empairing of due obedience to y^e kings maiestie in all my whole lyfe, but by obseruation of them, and letting innouations, done as much as in me lay to maintaine obedience.

After M. Cecill had spoken to me of preaching, & deliuered two papers conteining the matters whereupon I should entreat,* because I refused to geue my sermō in writing (which was to me like an offēder, or to read those papers of another mā's deuise, as the conception and sincere maner of vttering of mine own cōsciēce) which me thought then and since, yet a meruailous vnreasonable mater touching both my conscience and honesty) I was then fer to the duke of Somersets graces chamber, and came in at a backe dore to himself alone, sauing he tooke to him as witnes he said, the L. now of Wiltshire, then great maister, & after many words, shewed me certaine articles subscribed by Lawyers, what a B. might command, & what the king might command, and what payne to the disobeyer.

To whom I said plainly & truly, how those Lawyers subscription could not serue in this case to commaund one to vtter to the people for myne own deuise in words,* that is not in deed so: and if I might speake with these lawyers (I sayd) his grace should soone perceiue them to agree with me. My L. sayd, I should speake with no man, and I should do as I was hidden, or do worse, and bade mee aduise me till dinner was done. And then was I conueyed by the L. great Maister to hys chamber, and there left alone to dyne, as was in deede honourably prepared. But I tooke my selfe to be in the nature of a prisoner, and a restrayned man.

And about two of the clocke at after noone, came vnto me M. Thomas Smith then Secretary,* vnto whome I complained of the vnreasonablenes of the matter, & shewed him certaine particularities, who sayd it was not ment so precisely, but to speake of the matters. To whō I sayd, I was content to speake of the matters, and thē if I speak not accordyng to the truth of them, there should be enough to beare witnesse to my condemnation, and if I spake the truth, then they had their desire. And I sayde further, I thought I might with my conscience say so as men ought and should be content & satisfied. And further if I thought that in my maner of the vtterynge of those matters, I shold offend the Counsaile, I had rather deny to speake of the thing, and begin the contention secretly with them, then to begin with pulpit, and so bring my selfe in further trouble then needed, and therfore if they would haue me preach, I would preach as of my selfe, and of these matters, so as I thought they should be content.

Wherupon I was brought vp to my L. of Somersets chamber, and there the matter ended thus, that my L. of Somerset sayde he would require no writyng of me, but remit it to me, so I spake of y^e matters in the papers deliuered me by M. Cicill. I told hym I would speake of thē, sauynge for childrens toyes of goyng about of S. Nicholas and S. Clement.* If that be now gone (quoth I) and forgotten, if I be to busy in rehersall of them, they will say I comber their heads with ceremonies, and thus they wyll defame me: When ceremonies were plenty, they will say, I did nothyng but preach on them, and now they be gone, I babble of thē still. I sayd I would teach y^e chiefe points, addyng that I would speake of other matters also, & with that, beyng put to my liberty to choose the day, departed: and otherwyse I was not spoken with concernyng preachyng, sauynge after M. Cicill came vnto me, whereof I shall speake anone.

As concernyng the matters to bee spoken of, all such things as be here rehersed, be named in the papers, deliuered vnto me, although not altogether after this sort: sauynge the setting forth of the kings maiesties authority in his minoritie, whereof there is no worde in those papers, nor there was neuer any promise made of me to speake of it. Truth it is, y^t after I had signified the day whē I wold preach. M. Cicil came vnto me making the chiefe message to know the day when I would preach:* to whome I had sent word before that it should be s. Peters day, because me thought the gospell serued well for that purpose, & in processe of communication he told me that he lyked gaily well a word that I had sayd in another communication. How a king was as much a kyng at one yere of age, as at one hundred yeres of age, and if I touched it, he thought it would be well taken. I told him agayne, euery mā knew that, and then opened of my selfe the matter further.

And at his next repayre vnto me, which was the mōday before I preached, the sayd M. Cicil brought me papers of the kings maiesties hand,* shewing me how his hyghnesse vsed to note euery notable sentence, and specially if it touched a kyng, and therfore (quoth he) if ye speake of a kyng, ye must ioyn Counsaile withall. Whereunto I made no answer, but shifted to other matter, without making hym any promise or deniall, because I would neyther bind my selfe, nor trouble my selfe to discusse that matter.* For albeit it is godly and wisely done of euery Prince to vse Counsaile, yet speaking of a kings power by scripture, I cannot by expresse scripture limite the kings power by counsaile. And hearyng blyndly by report some secret matter, that I will not speake of here, I thought not to meddle with it in the pulpet: and yet to the effect to haue our soueraigne L. now obeyed, of which mind I was euer, I pointed to our soueraigne L. there in presence, & sayd he was onely to be obeyed, and I would haue but one kyng, and other words to that purpose. But for any promise to be made by me, I vtterly deny it, and tell plainly the cause why I spake not otherwyse of it. There was also in the papers deliuered vnto me, occasion geuen me to speake of the Masse, because of Masses satisfactory, as some vnderstand them. And also there was occasion to speake of the sacrament of the aulter, because of the proclamation passed of the same, which to be true, I shall iustifie by the sayd papers.

The 9. Article.

Item, that you receiuyng the same,* and promising to declare the same in a Sermon by you made before hys maiestie for that purpose on the feast of S. Peter, in the sayd 2. yeare of hys raygne, did then and there contemptuously and disobediently omitte to declare and set forth many of the sayd matters, and of dyuers others of the sayd Articles, you spake and vttered your mynde in such doubtfull sort, as the iustnesse and godlynesse of his Maiesties fathers and hys proceedings, was not set foorth accordyng to the commaundement geuen vnto you, and your own promise, to the great offence of the hearers, and manifest contempt of hys Page 1353 maiestie, and dangerous example of others.

Winchester.

Touching y^e promise I answer as afore, & as touchyng omission of y^t I shoulde haue spoken of,* by contēpt or disobediēce, I answer by mine oth: I did not omit any thing (if I did omit it) by contēpt or disobediēce: for I euer minded to satisfy y^e promise,* to speak of all matters in those papers, according to my former declaratiō. And if I did percase omit any thing (wherof I cā make now no assurance being ij. yeres & a half past since I preached) but if I did omit any thing, who knew my trauel in y^t matter, wold not maruel, being troubled w^t a letter sent from y^e duke of Somerset, wherof I shal speake after. So as frō 4. of y^e clock, on thursday, till I had done my sermon on y^e friday, I did neither drinke, eat, ne sleepe, so careful was I to passe ouer y^e trauel of preching, without all slander of the truth, w^t satisfaction of my promise, & discharge of my duety to God & y^e kings most excellēt maiesty. Wherin, whether any thyng were omitted or not, I could haue answered more precisely thē I can now, if according to my most instāt sute, & the sute of my seruants, y^e matter had bene heard while it was in fresh memory. But because omissiō may be by infirmity of nature, in which obliuiō is a payn of our original sinne, in which case it is no mortal offence,* if a man beyng put in remēbrance will purge it, I therefore according to the true testimony of mine own consciēce, dare y^e more boldly deny all contempt & disobedience, hauing for my declaratiō a general sentence spoken in my sermon, y^t I agreed with the vpper part in their lawes, orders & commaundements, or such like words,* & found only fault in the lower part. By which sentence appeared, how I allowed in y^e whole, that was past thetherto, & only dissented frō the doings of thē y^t attempt innouations of their own presumption. And furthermore I say, y^t that saieng [omission] here objected vnto me, if it were true as I know it not to be, may happen two wais: one way by infirmity of nature, another way of purpose. charity of a christē mā permitteth not to determine y^e worst of that is doubtful & ambiguous to both parties: as touching doutfulness objected. I take god to record I min'ded to speake simply,* & to be on y^e kings maiesties side only, & not to go inuisible in the world, w^t ambiguities esteeming him, &c. The worst mā of all is, y^t wil make himself a lock of words & speech, which is known not to be my factiō, nor I think this life worth y^e dissimulation, & how can y^t be a doubtful speech in him, y^t professteth to agree with the kings lawes, iniunctions & statutes, which I did expresly. There be y^t cal a doubt whatsoever serueth not theyr appetite. It is not in y^e speaker to satisfy the hearer y^t will doubt where dout is not. The sūme of my teaching was, y^t all visible things be ordred to serue vs, which we may in conueniēt seruice vse. And whē we serue them, y^t is an abuse, and may thē at y^e rulers pleasure, vnles scripture appointeth a special vse of thē, be corrected in y^t vse, or takē away for reformatiō. And this is a plain teaching y^t hath no dout in it, but a yea & a nay on ij. sides, w^tout a mean to make a dout, And if any y^t douteth cōmeth vnto me,* I will resolute him y^t doubt as I can. And if I promised to speake plainly or am cōmanded to speake plainly & cānot, thē is my fault to promise only in the nature of folly & ignorance, whereunto I resort, not for a shift, wherof in deed I professe y^e knowlege but to shew how sometime to my hinderaunce, I am noted learned that can speake plainly, and yet speake doubtfully, other whiles am reiected as one y^t vnderstandeth not the matter at all. As touching contēpt, there can be none▪ manifest y^t proceedeth of a priuy promise if I had broken it, I intended not, but intēded to take it, as appereth by my general sentence, to agre w^t the superiors, & only find fault in y^e inferior subiects, who daily transgresseth the kings maiesties proclamations and other, wherof I spake then.

*The 10. Article.

Item, that you beyng also commaunded on his Maiesties behalfe, for the auoyding of tumult, and for other great considerations inhibited to treat of any matter in controuersie concernyng the masse of the cōmunion, then cōmonly called the sacrament of the aulter, did contrary to the said commandement and inhibition, declare diuers your iudgements and opinions in the same, in the manifest contempt of hys highnes sayd inhibition, to the great offence of the hearers and disturbance of common quiet and vnitie of the realme.

Winchester.

To the x. article the said B. answered, y^t the Wednesday at after noone,* next before y^e friday whē I preached, M. Cicil came to me, & hauing in all his other accesses spoken no word therof, did thē vtter & aduise me frō y^e D. of Somerset, y^t I should not speake of the sacrament, or of the Masse, wherby he said I should auoid trouble. And when he saw me not take it wel, I meane (quoth he) doubtfull matters. I asked him what? He said transubstantiation. I told hym he wist not what transubstantiation ment. I wyll preach (quoth I) the very presence of Christs most precious body & bloud in the sacrament, which is the catholike faith, & no doubtful matter, ne yet in controuersie, sauing that certain vnlearned speake of it, they wot not what. And among the matters quoth I, whereof I haue promised to speake▪* I must by special words speake of the sacrament & the masse also. And when I shal so speake of thē. I will not forbear to vtter my faith & true beliefe therin, which I think necessary for the kings maiesty to know: & therefore if I wist to be hāged when I came downe, I would speake it. Which plaine zeale of my conscience, groūded vpō gods cōmandement to do his message truly, I would not hide,* but vtter so, as my L. should, if he would not haue it spoken of, nor let me to come there as he might haue done, where as els, if I had had a deceitful purpose, I might haue accepted the aduise, & w^tout any color of trouble, haue refused to follow it as a thing groūded vpon welth only, as it was thē vttered. With this my answer M. Cicil departed, & vpon y^e thursday which was the next day folowing, & the euening before I preached, betwene 3. & 4. at after noone, I receiued a letter signed with the hand of the D. of Somerset (the copy wherof I am redy to exhibite) & took it them, & esteemed it so now to continue no effectuall inhibition wherunto I might by gods law, or the kings maiesties laws with discharge of my conscience & duety obey, although the said letters had bene (as they were not) in such termes framed, as had precisely forbidden me (as they did not) but onely to speake of matters in controuersy of the sacrament, which in deed I did not, but only vttered a truth to my consciēce, most certainly perswaded of the most holy sacrament, necessary to be known to the kings maiesty, & to be vttered by me admitted to that place of preaching, from whence God commandeth his truth to be vttered, which in this nature of truth (the vndue estimation and vse whereof, S. Paule threatneth with temporall death) may in no wise be omitted.* So as I was and am perswaded the right estimation of the sacrament, to be to acknowledge the very presence of the same most precious body and bloud present in the Sacrament to feed vs, that was geuen to redeeme vs. If I shewed not my soueraigne Lord the truth therof, I for my part suffer hym wittingly to fall into that extreme danger of body, which S Paule threateneth, whose person I am bound by nature, by speciall othes, by Gods lawes to preserue to my power as I will do, and must do, by all ways and meanes. And if the Kings Maiestie doth vouchsafe to teache hys people not to obey hys commaundement, where God commaundeth the contrary, I might not take my Lord of Somersets letter for an inhibition to hold my peace,* when God biddeth me to speake as he doth whē the Wolfe commeth, and not to hide my selfe in silence, which is the most shamefull runnyng away of all. I haue muche matter to alledge against the letter why I should not credite it, written in his name alone, against a common letter (as I tooke it) written by hym and the counsaile, and published in print the first day of the said month, which maintaineth my preachyng of the sacrament & masse, accordyng to the proclamations and iniunctions: the violation of which publike letters, had bene a disorder and contempt, where as I neither offended in the one, nor the other.

And as for tumult, none could reasonably be feared of any thing spoken agreeable to the kings maiesties lawes, as there did folow none, nor the people, or any man did offer my person any wrong, or make tumult against me, notwithstanding players, iesters, rimers, ballademakers, did signify me to be of the true catholike faith,* which I according to my dutie declared to the kings maiesty, from whō I may hide no truth that I thinke expedient for hym to know. And as the name of God cannot be vsed of any creture agaynst God, no more can the kings name, beyng vsed of any subiect against his highnes. Wherefore seyng the abuse of this holy sacrament hath in it a danger assured by scripture of body & soule, whosoeuer is perswaded in y^e catholike faith (as I am) findeth himself so burdened to vtter that vnto his maiesty, as no worldly losse cā let him to do his duty in that behalfe, and much lesse my Lordes priuate letters written without other of the counsailes hands.

The 11. Article.

Item, that after the premisses, viz. in the month of May or Iune or one of them, in the 3. yeare of his hyghnes raigne,* his maiestye sent eftsoones vnto you to know your conformitie towards hys sayd reformatiōs, and specially touchyng the booke of common prayer then lately set foorth by hys maiestie, whereunto you at the same tyme refused to shew your selfe conformable.

Winchester.

To the xi. article for answer and declaration thereof, he sayd: The next day at after noone after he had preached,* when he looked for no such matter, came to his house the right worshipfull Sir

Anthony Wingfield, and Sir Rafe Page 1354 Sadler knights, accompanied wyth a great number of the gard, and vsed themselues for their part according to theyr worships, and (I doubt not) as they were appoynted, Sir Rafe Sadler begā thus w^t me: My L. (said he) ye preached yesterday obedience,* but ye did not obey your selfe, & went forth w^t his message very soberly as he can, and discretely. I asked him wherein I obeied not. He sayde, touching my L. of Somersets letter. Maister Sadler, quoth I, I pray you say to my Lords grace, I would he neuer made mention of that letter, for the loue I beare him. And yet quoth I, I haue not broken that letter, & I was mineded, quoth I, to haue wrytten to my L. vpon the receipt of it, and loe, quoth I, ye may see how I begā, and shewed him (because we were then in my study) the beginning of my letter, and reasoned with him for declaration of my selfe, and told him therwith, I wil not spend, quoth I, many wordes w^t you, for I cā not alter this determination. And yet in good faith quoth I, my maner to you, and this declaration may haue this effecte, that I be gently handled in the prisone, and for that purpose I pray you, make sute on my behalfe.

*Maister Wingfield laide his hand on my shoulder, and arested me in y^e kings name for disobedience. I asked them whether I shoulde. They sayde to the Tower. Finally I desired them that I might be spoken wyth shortly, & heard what I could say for my selfe, and praied them to be suters in it, and so they saide they would.

After y^t I was once in the tower, vntill it was within 6. dayes of one whole yere, I could heare no maner word, message, comfort, or relief, sauing once when I was sicke, and me thought some extremity towardes me, my Chaplaine had licence to come to me for one time, & then denied againe, being aunswered that my feuer was but a tertian, which my said Chaplaine tolde me when he came to me at the Easter followinge, and there beinge wyth me from the morning till night on Easter day departed, and for no su^e could neuer haue him since. To M. Lieftenant I made diuers sutes to prouoke the duke of Somersets grace to hear me. And if I might haue the liberty of an English man, I would plainly declare I had neither offended law, statute, acte, proclamation nor his own letter neither, but al wold not help, & I shal report me to M. Liefenant whether in al this time I maligned, grudged or vsed any vnsemely wordes, euer demanding iustice, & to be heard according to iustice. When I had bene thus in the tower one whole yeare within 6. daies or 7. as I remember,* came to the Tower the Lord Chancellor of England, now being the L. Treasurer, and master Secretarye Peter, who calling me vnto them, as I remember, entred this: They sayde they hadde brought with them a booke passed by the parlament, which they would I should looke on and say my minde to it, and vpon my conformitie in it, my Lord of Somerset would be suter to the kings maiestie for mercy to be ministred to me. Wherunto I answered that I trusted if I might be heard, the kings Maiesties iustice would releue me, which I had longsued for, and could not be heard. And to sue for mercy, quoth I, when I haue not in my conscience offended, and also to sue out of thys place,* wher asking of mercy, emploieith a further suspition then I woulde be for all the worlde touched in it, were not expedient. And therefore, quoth I, not guiltie is and hath bene allowed a good plee for a prisoner. Then my Lord sayd, why quoth he, were ye not commaunded to preache of the kings authoritie in his younge age, & yet did not? I told him I was not commaunded. Is not (quoth he) that Article in the papers yee had deliuered you? I assured him no.

And after communication of the kings Maiesties authority wherein was no disagreement,* then my lord Chancellor said I had disobeied my Lordes graces letter. I told him I thought not, and if the matter came to iudgement, it should appeare. And then I sayd to him, my Lord howe many open iniunctions vnder Seale and in open Courte haue bene broken in this Realme? the punishment wherof hath not ben handled after this sort, & yet I would stande in defence y^t I had not broken his letter, waying the words of the letter, wherein I reasoned with M. Peter Secretarie what a controuersie was, and some part what I could say further. But what so euer I canne saye (quoth I) you must iudge it, and for the passion of God do it, and then let me sue for mercy, when the nature of the offence is known if I will haue it.* But when I am (quoth I) declared an offender, I will with humilitie of suffering make amendes to the kings Maiestie, so farre as I am able: for I shoulde neuer offend him, and much lesse in his yong age.

My L. Chancelor then shewed me the beginning of the acte for common prayer, how dangerous it was to breake the order of it, I told him that it was true, & therefore if I came abroad, I would be wel ware of it. But it is (quoth I) after in the act how no man should be troubled for this act, vnles he were first indited, and therefore (quoth I,) I may not be kept in prisone for this acte. Ah (quoth he) I perceiue ye knowe the lawe well enough, I tolde hym my Chaplaine had brought it vnto mee the after noone before. Then they required me to looke on the boke, and to say my minde in it. I answered that I thought not mete to yelde my selfe a scholler to go to schoole in prison, & then slaunder my selfe as though I redemed my faults with my conscience. As touching the law which I know not,* I will honor it like a subiect, and if I keepe it not, I wil willingly suffer the paine of it. And what more conformitie I should shew, I cannot tell, for mine offences be past if there be any. If I haue not suffred enough I will suffer more, if vpon examination I be found faulty, & as for this new law, if I keepe it not, punish me likewise.

Then my Lorde Chaunceloure asked mee whether I would not desire the kings Maiestie to be my good Lorde. At which worde I sayde: alas my Lorde (quoth I) doe yee thinke that I haue so forgotten my selfe? My duety (quoth I) requireth so, and I will on my knees desire hym to be my good Lord and my Lord Protectour also quoth I, that is wel sayd quoth my Lord Chaunceler. And what will ye say further, quoth my L. Chanceler, In good faith quoth I thys, that I thought when I had preached, that I had not offended at all, and thinke so still, and had it not ben for the article of the supremacie, I woulde haue rather fayned my selfe sicke, then be occasion of this that hath followed: but going to the Pulpit, I must needes say as I sayde. Well quoth my lord Chanceler, let vs go to our purpose again. Ye will quoth he, desire the kings maiestie to be your good Lord, and my Lord Protectour also, and ye say ye thought not to haue offended. All this I will say quoth I.* And yee wil (quoth my Lord Chanceler) submit your selfe to be ordered by my Lorde Protector. Nay (quoth I) by the lawe for my Lord Protectour quoth I hath scourged mee ouersore this yere, to put my matter in his hands now. And in the latter poynte I varied with my Lorde Chauncellour, when I could not refer my order to my Lord Protectour, but to the law, and staying at this poynt they were cōtent to graunt me of their gentlenes to make their sute to procure me to be heard, and to obtaine me libertie to goe in the galery, and that I should heare of one of them within two daies following. I desired them to remember that I refused not the boke by way of contempt, nor in no euil maner, but y^t I was loth to yelde my selfe a scholer in the Tower, and to be seene to redeme my faults if I had any, with my conscience. My body I sayde, shoulde serue my conscience, but not contrariwise. And this is the truth vpon my conscience and othe that was done and said at their comming. There was more sayde to the purposes aforesayde. And I binde not my selfe to the precise forme of wordes, but to the substaunce of the matter and fashion of the intreating. So neare as I can remember, I haue truely discharged mine oth: But I heard no more of my matter in one whole yere after almost wythin 14. dayes notwithstanding two letters wrytten by me to the Counsaile, of most humble request to be heard according to iustice. And then at y^e ende of 2. yeres almost, came vnto me the Duke of Somerset with other of the counsel, which matter because it is left out here, I shall not touch but prepare it in a matter aparte, for declaration of my behaiour at all times.

The 12. Article.

Item, that after that. &c. the 9. day of Iuly, in the 4. yeare of his Maiesties raign, his highnes sent vnto you his graces letters, with a certaine submission and Articles, whereunto his grace willed and commaunded you to subscribe, to whiche submission, you contemptuously refused to subscribe.

Winchester.

To the 12. article for answer therunto, he graunted that about the time mentioned in this Article, the Lorde Treasurer, the Erle of Warwike lord great maister,* sir William Harbert, and M. Secretary Peter, came to the tower: and called me before them, and deliuered vnto me the Kynges maiesties letters which I haue to shew, and receiued them at the handes of the lord Treasurer vpon my knees, kissed them as my duety was, and still vpon my knees red them, where as they right gently required me to take more ease, & to go apart with them, & consider them, which after that I had throughly read, I much lamented that I should be commaunded to say of my selfe as was there wrytten, and to say otherwise of my selfe then my conscience will suffer me, & where I trust my dedes wil not condemne me, therto condemne my selfe w^t my tongue, I should sooner (quoth I to them) by commaundement: thinke if ye would bid me to tumble my selfe desperately into the Thames.

My lord of Warwicke seeing me in that agonye, sayde: What say ye my Lorde, quoth he, to the other Articles? I aunswered that I was loth to disobey, where I might obey Page 1355 and not wrast my conscience, destroying the comfort of it, as to say vntruely of my selfe. Well, quoth my Lorde of Warwicke,* will ye subscribe to the other Articles? I tolde him I would. But then, quoth I, the Article that toucheth me, must be put out. I was answered that needeth not, for I might wryte on the one side what I woulde say vnto it: and then my Lorde of Warwicke entertained mee verye gently,* and would needes whiles I should write, haue me sit downe by him, and when hee sawe me make somewhat straunge so to do, he pulled me nearer him, and said we had ere this sit together, & trusted we should do so againe. And then hauing pen & inke geuen me, I wrote as I remember, on the Article that touched me, these words: I can not with my conscience say this of my selfe, or such like words. And there folowed an Article of the kings Maiesties primacie, and I began to write on the side o^r that, & had made an I, onward as may appere by the articles, & they would not haue me do so, but write onely my name after theyr articles: which I did. Whereat because they shewed themselues pleased and content:* I was bold to tel them merely that by this meane, I hadde placed my subscription aboue them all, & therupon it pleased them to entertein me much to my comfort.

And I was bold to accōpt vnto them mery tales of my miserie in pryson, which they seemed content to heare: and then I tolde them also (desiring them not to be discontent with that I should say:) when I remember eache of them alone, I could not thinke otherwise of them but they were my good Lords: and yet when they meete together, I feele no remedy at their hands. I looked quoth I, when my L. of Somerset was heere to goe out wythin two dayes, and made my fare well feast in the Tower and all, since whych time there is a moneth past or thereabout: and I agree w^t them,* and now agree with you, and I may fortune be forgotten. My Lorde Treasurer sayde nay, I shoulde heare from them the next day, and so by their special commandement came out of the chamber after them, that they myght be seene depart as my good Lordes: and so was done. By which processe doth appeare how there was in me no contempt, as is sayd in this article, but such a subscriptiō made as they were content to suffer me to make, whiche I tooke in my cōscience for a whole satisfaction of the kings maiesties letters, whiche I desire may be deemed accordinglye. And one thing was said vnto me further that other would haue put in many moe Articles, but they woulde haue no more but those.

The 13. Article.

Item, that you hauing eftsones certaine of the kings Maiesties honorable Counsaile sent vnto you the 12. of Iuly in the sayde 4. yere with the said submission, and being on his Maiesties behalfe required and commaunded to consider again and better the sayd submission, and to subscribe the same, stooode in iustification of your self, & would in no wise subscribe thereunto.

Winchester.

To the 13. article he sayde: The next day after the being in the Tower of the saide L. Treasurer, the Earle of Warwike & other: came vnto me Syr W. Harbert & M. Secretary Peter,* to devise with me how to make some acknowledging of my fault (as they saide) because the other forme liked me not. Wherunto I said I knew my selfe innocent, and to enter with you to entreat of a devise to empaire my innocency in any poynt by my wordes or wrytings, it can haue no pollicie in it. For although I did more esteeme liberty of body, then the defamation of my self: yet (quoth I) whē I had so done with you, I were not so assured by you to come out. For when I were by my owne * penne once made an naughtye man, then were I not the more sure to come out, but had locked my selfe the more surely in, and a small pleasure were it to me to haue my body at libertie by your procurement, and to haue my conscience in perpetual prison by mine owne act. Many more wordes there were, and perswasions on their parties▪ which caused me to require of them, for the passion of God, that my matter might take an end by iustice, and so departed, theyr being no contempt or faction of disobedience shewed on my behalfe, but onely allegation for my defence of mine innocency in y^e best maner I could devise, as I trust they will testifie.

The 14. Article.

Item, that after all this, videlicet the 14. day of Iuly in the said 4. yeare, the kings maiestie sent yet again vnto you certain of hys maiesties honorable Counsaile with an other submission, and diuers other articles, willinge and commaunding you to subscribe your name thereunto: which to do you vtterly refused.

Winchester.

To the 14. Article he sayde, that on the Monday in the morning following came the bishop of London, Syr William Harbert, maister Secretarie Peter, & an other whom I knowe not, who brought with them a paper, wyth certaine articles wrytten in it,* which they required me to subscribe. Whereupon I most instantly required that my matter might be tried by iustice, whych although it were more greeuous, yet it hathe a commoditie wyth it, that it endeth certainly the matter? And I coulde neuer yet come to my assured stay, and therfore refused to meddle wyth any more Articles, or to trouble my selfe with the readinge of them, & yet they desired me so instantly to read them, that I was content, and did reade, and to shewe my perfecte obediente minde, offered incontinently vpon my deliuerie out of prison, to make aunswere vnto them, all such as I woulde abide by and suffer paine for, If I haue deserued it. I would in deede gladly haue bene in hand with my Lorde of London, but he saide hee came not to dispute,* and sayde it was the hand of God that I was thus in prison, because I had so troubled other mē in my time. Finally my request was, that they should in this forme make my aunswere to my Lordes of the Counsell as foloweth: That I most humbly thanke them of theyr good will to deliuer me by the way of mercy, but because in respecte of mine owne innocent conscience I had rather haue iustice, I desired them,* seing both was in the kinges Maiesties hands, that I might haue it, whych if it happen to me more greeuous, I will impute it to my selfe, and euermore thanke them for their good will, and so departed I with them, as I trust they will testifie, and no misbehauour or demeanour to haue bene vsed on my behalfe.

The 15. Article.

Item, that after all this, viz. the 19. day of Iulye, in the sayde 4. yeare, you being personally called before the kings maiesties priue counsaile, and hauing the sayd submission and articles openly and distinctly read vnto you, & required to subscribe the same refused for vniuste considerations by you alledged to subscribe the same.

Winchester.

To the 15. article. I graunte, that vpon a Saterdaye at after noone, euen at suche time of the daye as they were at Euensong in the Chappell at the Courte, I was brought thether, and at my comming the Lordes of the Counsaile sayde they were all my Iudges by special commission, and entended to proceede thus wyth me: That I shoulde subscribe certaine articles which were then read, and I muste directly make aunswere, whether I would subscribe them or no. I answered on my knees in this wise: For the passion of God my Lordes be my good Lordes, and let me be tried by iustice whether I be faultye or no:,* and as for these articles assoone as yee deliuer me to my libertie, I woulde make aunswere to them whether I would subscribe them or no. Then they hauing further to say, I answered, these Articles were of diuers sortes: some be lawes whyche I may not qualifie: some be no lawes but learning and facte, which maye haue diuers vnderstandings, & a subscription to them without telling what I meane, were ouer dangerous:,* and therfore I offered for y^e more declaration of raine obedience to all their requestes, that if they woulde deliuer me the articles into the prison with mee, I woulde shortly make them particulare aunswere, and suffer the paynes of the lawe, that by my aunswere I mighte incurre vnto: Wherupon I was commanded to go a part, and they sent vnto me the Lorde Treasurer and maister Secretarie Peter, who communed with me of a meane way, and that liked not the Lordes. And then was I called foorth agayne, and my absolute subscription required againe, & I againe made offer to aunswer particularly, for I coulde not wyth my conscience subscribe them as they were absolutely. And these my considerations, I trust to be iust, seing no man for any commaundements ought to offende his conscience, as I must haue done in that case.

The 16. Article.

Item, that for your sondry and manifold contempts and disobediences in this behalfe vsed, the fruites of your Bishoppricke were then by speciall commission of his Maiestie iustly and lawfully sequestred.

Winchester.

To the 16. article, I deny contempes, and disobedience of partes, and say that my doings cannot so be termed, because it is taught in thys realme for a doctrine of obediēce, that if a king commaunde that is contrary to the cōmaundement of God,* the subiect may not doe as he is commanded, but humbly stande to my conscience, which is my case, who could not with my conscience do as I was required. And as touching the fact of decree, there was in deede a decree read, hauing wordes so placed and framed, as though I were such an offender, which mater I deny. And in that decree was mention made of sequestration of fruites: but whether the forme of woordes were of the present tense, or els to be sequestred, I cannot precisely tell, but doe referre that to the tenor of the decree.

The 17. Article.

Item, that after this, you had intimation and peremptorie monition, with communication that you should within 3. monethes next following the saide intimation, reconcile and submit youre selfe vnder paine of depriuation.

Winchester.

To the 17. article I aunswer, that in the same decree of sequestration at the same time read, I kneling from the beginning of the decree, to the latter ende, I remember there was an intimation and three monthes spoken of, & expressed also how at euery monthes end I should haue pen and inke offred to wryte, if I would yet subscribe, and as I vnderstand it was vpon the paine of proceeding further. And I do not remember that I herd the word depriuation, but therein I referre me to the acts of the sentence, which whē it was red, I desired it might be testified what mine offer was, to answer all those articles particularly, euen remaining in prison. And this done, I made suite for some of my seruants abroad to resort to me to the tower, partly for my comfort, partly for my necessary businesse, which could not be obtained. And yet to prouoke it, I sayde to my Lorde of Warwike, howe for agreeing w^t my L. of Somerset, I had some commoditie, and for agreeing with him had nothing, and therefore would needes by intercession presse him, that I might by his meanes haue some of my seruāts resorting vnto me. He answered very gently. And then one sayde I shoulde win 2. or 3. daies haue some body come to me. And then I was dismissed with commaundement to the lieutenant to let me haue the same liberty I had, but no more.

The 18. Article.

Item, that the sayd three moneths are naw throughly expired and runne.

Winchester.

To the 18. Article he sayd, there is almost 6. months passed in time and number of daies, but not one month past to the effecte of the lawe, nor 10. daies neither, because I haue bene so kept in prison y^t I could not see for remedy in forme abouesaide, nor there was not at euery moneth, after the forme of the sentence offred me, pen and inke & libertie geuen me to consult and deliberate w^t other learned men and friends what were best to doe, or to send vnto them. And furthermore, the very 8. day after the decree geuen, I protested before my seruants whom I had only commodity to vse as witnes of the nullitie of the decree for the euident and apparant matter in it,* but if it were any in lawe, I appealed to the kings Maiestie, because my request was not admitted to haue the copie of the articles to answere them particularly, and because it is excessiue correction to sequester my frutes and keepe me in prisone, with other cases to be deduced where I might haue oportunity. Which appellation I protested to intimate as soone as I coulde come to any presence mete therfore, as I did in this assemble at my last repaire, desiring therewith the benefite restitutionis in integrum, because of mine imprisonment, and therefore doe answere this matter with protestation of that appeale, and vtterly deny all manner of contempt.

The 19. Article.

Item, that yon hitherto according to the sayd intimation and monition, submitted, reconciled, nor reformed your selfe, but cōtemptuously yet still remaine in your first disobedience.

Winchester.

To the 19. Article, I say that I haue bene all this while in prison so kept, as no man could haue accesse to counsaile with me, nor any meanes to wryte or send to any man, hauing made continuall suite to Maister Lieutenante and master Marshal, vnder whose custody I am here, to make suite in my name to the Lordes of the Counsaile, that I might come to hearing, or els be bailed vpon surety: which I coulde not obtaine, and so haue remained vnder the benefite of my said appeale to the kings Maiestie, made as I might for y^e time, which I eftsoones desire may haue libertie to prosecute.

And where as aunswering to these Articles, for declaration of the integritie of my conscience, I vse in the same places generall woordes: I protest I meane not by those words to setforth my selfe otherwise more arrogantly then as my direct entent (which excludeth malice) and purpose mooueth mee to say,* and as my conscience beareth witnesse vnto me at this time, and therefore will say therein wyth S. Paule: Nihil mihi conscius sum, sed non in hoc iustificatus sum. Wherefore if any specially be objected vnto me, wherein by ignorance or ouersight & negligence, any mine offence may appeare against the kings Maiesties lawes, Statutes and Iniunctions, I shal desire and protest that it be not preiudiciall to mine aunswere (for thys present, credo, as lawyers in ciuill matters vse that terme) to be true,* y^t is to say suche as w^tout any alteration in my conscience, presently I may of my selfe say in affirmation or denial, as afore is answered. And whereas I speake of commaundement to be made to me against Gods lawe, I protest not to touch my soueraigne Lordes honor therin, which my duetie is by al meanes to preserue, but that the commādement geuen, resolueth to be against Gods law on my part, in the obediēce to be geuē, because I may not answer or say otherwise, but Est, est, non, non. So as my wordes and heart may agree together, or els I should offend Gods lawe, which my soueraigne if he knew my conscience, would not command me.

After these things thus passed, certaine of the Counsaile by the kings appoyntment had sondry daies and times accesse to him in the Tower to perswade with hym: whiche were these, the Duke of Somerset, the lord Treasurer, the Lord priuie Seale, the Lord great Chamberlaine, and M. Secretary Peter.* Who repairing to him the x. day of Iune an. 1550. he desired of them to see the kings booke of proceedings: vpon the sight wherof he would make a ful answer, seeming to be willinge in all thinges to conforme himselfe therunto: and promising that in case any thing offēded his conscience, he would open it to none but to the Counsaile. Whereupon it was agreed the booke should be sent him to see his answer, that his case might be resolued vpon, & that for the meane time he should haue the libertie of the galery and gardine in the Tower, when the Duke of Northfolke were absent.

The king then was lying at Grenewich, at which time the Liefteenant of the tower was appoynted to deliuer the kings booke to the bishop of Winchester.* Who within thre dayes after (which was the 13. of Iune) made declaration againe vnto the counsaile, that the Bishop hauing perused it, said vnto him he could make no direct answer vnlesse he were at libertie, and so being he would say hys conscience. Whereupon the Lordes and other that had bene with him the other day, were apointed to go to him againe to receiue a direct aunswer that the Counsaile therupon might determine further order for him.

The aunswer of the bishop being receiued, through the report of the Lordes which had ben with him,* declaration was made againe, the 8. day of Iuly 1550. that his answers were euer doubtful, refusing while he were in prisō to make any direct aunswer. Wherefore it was determined that he shoulde be directly examined whether he would sincerely conforme himself vnto the kings maiesties proceedings or not. For which purpose it was agreed y^t particulare articles should be drawne,* to see whether he would subscribe them or not, and a letter also directed vnto hym from the kinges highnesse, with the which the L. Treasurer, the L. great maister, the maister of the horse, and master Secretarie Peter shoulde repaire vnto hym: the tenour of whyche letter heereafter ensueth.

IT is not (we thinke) vnknownen vnto you, with what clemency and fauour,* we by the aduise of our Counsaile caused you to be heard and vsed vpon these sundry complaintes and informations that were made to vs & our said Counsaile of your disordered doinges and wordes, both at the tyme of our late visitation, and otherwise. Which notwithstanding, considering that the fauour both then and many other tymes ministred vnto you, wrought rather an insolent wilfulnes in your selfe, thē any obediente conformitie, such as would haue beseemed a man of your vocation, we could not but use some demonstration of iustice towards you,* as well for such notorious and apparaunt contemptes and other inobediences, as after and contrary to our commaundement were openly knowen in you, as also for some example and terroure of such others as by your example seemed to take courage to mutter and grudge agaynst our most godly proceedings: whereof great discord & inconuenience at that tyme might haue ensued. For the auoyding whereof, & for your iust deseruinges, you were by our sayde Counsaile committed to warde. Where albeit we haue suffred you to remaine a long space, sending vnto you in the meane tyme at sundry tymes diuers of the Noble men and others of our priuy Counsaile, and trauayling by them with clemencye and fauour to haue reduced you to the knowledge of your duety: yet in al this time haue you neyther knowledged your faultes, nor made any such submission as might haue beseeemed you, nor yet shewed any apparāce either of repētāce, or of any good conformitye to our godly proceedinges. Wherewith albeit we both haue good cause to be offēded, & might also iustly by the order of our lawes, cause your former doinges to be reformed and punished to the exāple of others, yet for that we would both the world & your self also shuld know that we delite more in clemency, then in the straight administratiō of iustice, we haue vouchsafed not only to a dresse vnto you these our letters, but also to sēd eftsones vnto you 4. of our priuy coūsel with certain articles: which being by vs with Page 1357 the aduise of our sayde Counsaile considered,* we thinke requisite for sondry considerations to be subscribed by you, and therefore woulde and commaunde you to subscribe the saide Articles vpon paine of incurring such punishment and penalties, as by our lawes may be put vppon you for not doing the same. Geuen at our palace of Westminster the 8. day of Iulye, the 4. yeare of oure raigne.

With this letter addressed from the king and his Counsaile, these Articles also were deliuered to the B. of Winchester here following.

The copie of the Articles.

*Whereas I Steuen bishop of Winchester haue ben suspected as one too much fauouring the bishop of Romes authoritie, decrees and ordinaunces, and as one that did not approoue or allow the kings maiesties proceedinges in alteration of certayne rites in religion, was conuented before the kings highnes counsaile and admonished therof: and hauing certayne things appoynted for me to doe and preache for my declaration, haue not done that as I ought to do, although I promised to do the same wherby I haue not onely incurred the kings maiesties indignation, but also diuers of his highnes subiectes haue by mine example taken incouragement (as his graces counsaile is certainly enformed) to repine at his maiesties moste godly proceedings: I am right sorie therefore, and acknowledge my selfe condingly to haue ben punished, and do most heartily thanke his maiestie, that of his great clemencie it hath pleased his highnesse to deale with me, not according to rigour, but mercye. And to the entent it may appeare to the world how little I do repine at his highnes doings, whych be in religion moste godly, and to the common wealth most profitable, I doe affirm and say freely of mine owne will without any compulsion as ensueth.

2 Item, that the apoynting of holy daies or fasting daies, as Lent, imber daies, or any suche like, or to dispence therewith, is in the kings maiesties authoritie and power and his highnes as supreme head of the sayde Churches of Englande and Irelande,* and gouernour thereof, may appoynt the maner and time of the holy dayes and fasting dayes, or dispence therewith, as to his wisdom shall seeme most conuenient for the honour of God and the wealth of thys realme.

3 Item, that the kings maiestie hath moste Christianly and godly set forth, by, and with the consent of the whole parliament, a deuout and christian booke of seruice of the church to be frequented by the church,* which booke is to be accepted and allowed of all bishops, pastours, curates, and all ministers Ecclesiastical of the realme of England, and so of him to be declared and commended in all places where he shal fortune to preach or speake to the people of it, that it is a godly and christian booke and order, and to be allowed, accepted, and obserued of all the kings maiesties true subiectes.

4 I do acknowledge the kings maiestie that nowe is (whose life God long preserue) to be my soueraigne Lord and supreme head vnder Christ to me as a Bishop of this realme,* and naturall subiect to his maiestie: and nowe in this his yonge and tender age to be my full and entire kinge, and that I and all other his highnesse subiectes are bounde to obey all his maiesties proclamations, statutes, lawes, and commaundements, made, promulgate and sette forth in this his highnesse yong age as well as though he were at this present 30 or 40. ye•es olde.

*5 Item, I confesse and acknowledge that the statute commonlye called the statute of sixe articles, for iust causes and grounds, is by authoritie of parliament repealed and disanulled.

6 Item, that his maiestie and his successours haue authoritie in the said churches of England and also of Ireland to alter,* reforme, correct, and amend al errors & abuses, and all rites and ceremonies ecclesiastical, as shall seeme frō time to time to his highnesse and his successors most conuenient for the edification of his people, so that the same alteration be not contrary or repugnant to the scripture and lawe of God.

*Subscribed by Steuen Winchester, with the testimoniall handes of the counsaile to the same.

To these articles afore specified, although Winchester with his owne hand did subscribe, graunting and consenting to the supremacie of the King, as well then beyng as of hys successours to come:* yet because hee sticke so muche in the first poynt touching his submission, and would in no case subscribe to the same, but onely made hys aunswere in the margent (as is aboue noted) it was therefore thoughte good to the king, that the Maister of the horse, and maister Secretarie Peter should repaire vnto him again with the same request of submission, exhortinge hym to looke better vpon it: and in case the woords seemed too sore, then to referre it vnto him selfe in what sort and with what wordes he should deuise to submit hym, that vpon y^e acknowledge of his fault, the kings highnes might extēd his mercy and liberality towards him as it was determined. Which was the 11. day of Iune, the yeare abouesaid.

When the maister of the horse and secretarie Peter had bene with him in the tower according to their Commission, returning from him again they declared vnto the king and his Counsaile how precisely the sayd Bishop stode in iustification of him selfe, that hee hadde neuer offended the kings Maiestie: wherefore he vtterly refused to make any submission at all. For the more suretie of which deniall, it was agreed that a newe booke of Articles should be deuised, wherwith the said maister of the horse and master Secretarie Peter should repaire vnto him againe, and for the more autentike proceeding w^t him, they to haue wyth thē a Diuine and a temporall Lawyer, whiche were the Bishop of London, and maister Goodricke.

The copie of the last Articles sent to the Bishop of Winchester.

WHere as I Steuen Bishop of Winchester haue bene suspected as one that did not approue or allowe the kings Maiesties proceedings in alteration of certaine rites in Religion,* and was conuented before the kings highnes Counsaile, and admonished thereof, and hauing certayne things appoynted for me to doe and preach for my declaration, haue not done therein as I ought to doe, whereby I haue deserued hys maiesties displeasure: I am righte so•e therfore. And to the intent it may appear to the world how litle I doe repine at his highnes doings, which be in religion most godly, and to the common wealth most profitable, I doe affirme as followeth.

1 First, that the late king of moste famous memorie kyng Henrie the eight, our late soueraigne Lorde, iustly, and of good reason and ground hath taken away and caused to be suppressed and defaced,* all monasteries and religious houses, and all conuenticles and conuents of Monks, Friers, Nonnes, Chanons, Bonhoms, & other persons called religious, and that the same being so dissolued, the persones therein bound and professed to obedience to a person, place, habit, and other superstitious rites and ceremonies, vpon that dissolution and order appoynted by y^e kings maiesties authority as supreme head of the church, are clearely released and acquitted of those vowes and professions, & at their full libertye as though those vnwittye and superstitious vowes had neuer bene made.*

2 Item, that any person may lawfully marrie without any dispensation from the B. of Rome or any other manne, with any persone whome it is not prohibited to contracte matrimonie by the lawe Leuiticall.

3 Item, that the vowing and going of pilgrimage to Images, or to the bones and reliques of any Saintes hath ben superstitiously vsed and cause of much wickednes and idolatrie, and therfore iustly abolished by the said late king of famous memorie, and the Images and reliques so abused, haue ben of great and godly consideratiōs defaced and destroyed.

4 Item, that the counterfaiting of S. Nicholas, S. Clement, S. Katherine,* and S. Edmond by children heeretofore brought into the church, was a meere mockerye & foolishnesse, and therefore iustly abolished and taken away.

5 Item, it is conuenient and godly, that y^e scripture of the olde Testament and new, that is, the whole Bible, be had in English and published to be read of euery man, & that who soeuer doth repel & dehorte me from the reading therof, doth euell and damnably.

6 Item, that the sayd late king of iust ground and reason did receiue into hys handes the authoritie and disposition of chauntries and such liuings as were geuē for the maintenaunce of priuate masses, and did well change diuers of them to other vses.

7 Also the kings maiestie that now is by the aduise & consent of the Parliament, did vpon iuste ground and reason,* suppress, abolish, and take away the sayd chauntries and suche other liuings as were vsed and occupied for maintenaunce of priuate Masses, and Masses satisfactorye for the soules of thē which are dead, or finding of obites, lights, or other like things: * the Masse that was wonte to be sayde of priestes, was full of abuses, and had very fewe thinges of Christes institution besides the Epistle, Gospell, Lordes prayer, and the wordes of the Lords supper: the rest for the more part were inuēted and deuised by bishops of Rome, and by other men of the same sort, and therfore iustly taken away by the statutes and lawes of this realme: and the cōmunion which is placed in the stead thereof, is very godly and agreeable to the Scriptures.

Page 1358*8 Item, that it is most conuenient and fit, and according to the first institution, that all Christen men should receiue the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ in both the kindes, * that is, in bread and wine.

9 And the masse wherein the Priest doth onely receiue and the other doe but looke on, * is but the inuention of man, and the ordinance of the bishop of Romes church, nor agreeable to Scripture.

10 Item, that vpon good and godly cōsiderations, it is ordred in the said boke and order, * that the Sacrament should not be lifted vp and shewed to the people to be adored, but to be w^t godly deuotion receiued as it was first instituted.

*11 Item, that it is well, politikely and godly done, that the kings maiestie by Act of Parliament, hath commanded all images which haue stande in Churches or Chappels, to be clerely abolished & d•faced, least hereafter at any time they should geue occasion of Idolatrie or be abused, as many of them heretofore haue bene with pilgrimages and such Idolatrous worshipping.

*12 And also that for like godly and good considerations, by the same authoritie of Parliament, all Masse bokes, Cowchers, Grailes, and other bokes of the seruice in latin heretofore vsed, should be abolished and defaced, as wel for certaine superstitions in them contained, as also to auoid dissention: and y^t the saide seruice in the church should be thorow the whole realme in one vniform conformitie, and no occasion through those olde bookes to the contrary.

13 That bishops, priests, and deacons haue no commaundement of the law of God, either to vow chastitie, or to abstaine continually from mariage. *

14 Item, that al canons, cōstitutions, lawes positieue, and ordinances of man, which doe prohibite or forbid mariage to any bishoppe, priest, or deacon, be iustly and vpon godly grounds and cōsiderations, taken away and abolished by authority of Parliament.

15 The Homilies lately commanded and set foorth by the kings maiestye to be red in the congregation of England, are godly and wholesome, * and doe teache such doctrine as ought to be embraced of all men.

16 The boke set forth by the kings maiesty by authority of Parliament, containing the forme & maner of making and consecrating of archbishops, * bishops, priests and deacons, is godly & in no poynt contrary to the wholesom doctrine of the gospel, & therfore ought to be receiued and approued of all the faithfull members of the church of England, and namely the ministers of Gods worde, & by them commended to the people.

17 That the orders of Subdeacon, Benet and Colet, and suche others as were commonly called Minores ordines,* be not necessarye by the woorde of God to be reckened in the church, and be iustly left out in the sayd booke of orders.

18 That the holy Scriptures containe sufficiently all doctrine required of necessity for eternal saluatiō through faith in Iesus Christ, and that nothing is to be taught as required of necessity to eternal saluation, but that which may be concluded and prooued by the holy Scriptures.

19 That vpon good and godly considerations, it was and is commaunded by the kings maiesties Iniunctions, that the Paraphrases of Erasmus in English shoulde be set vp in some conuenient place in euery parish Church of thys realme, where as the parishioners may most commodiously resort to read the same.

20 And because these Articles aforesaid, do containe onely such matters as be already published and openly set forthe by the kings maiesties authority, by the aduise of his highnesse Counsaile, for many great and godly considerations, and amongst others for the common tranquillity and vnity of the realme:* his maiesties pleasure by the aduise aforesayd, is, that you the B. of Winchester shall not only affirm these Articles wyth subscription of your hande: but also declare and professe your selfe well contented, willing, and ready to publish and preach the same at such times and places, and before suche audience as to his Maiestie from time to time shal seeme conuenient and requisite, vpon the pain of incurring suche penalties and punishmentes, as for not doing the same, maye by his Maiesties lawes be inflicted vpon you.

These Articles were sent the 15. of Iuly.

The bishop of Winchester receiuing and perusing these Articles, made this aunswer againe: That first touching the Article of submission, he woulde in no wise consent, affirming as hee had done before, that he had neuer offended the kings Maiestye in any such sorte as shoulde geue hym cause thus to submit himselfe: praying earnestly to be brought vnto his trial: wherein he refused the kings mercy, and desired nothing * but iustice. And for the rest of the articles he aunswered that after he were past his triall in this firste poynt, and were at libertie, then it should appeare what he would do in them: not being (as he said) reasonable that he should subscribe them in prisone.

Of this answer when the king and hys counsel had intelligence by the foresayde Maister of the horse, Secretarie Peter, the bishop of London, and M. Goodricke who had bene wyth him, it was agreed that he should be sent for before the whole counsel, and peremptorily examined once againe, whether he would stand at this poynt or no: which if he did, then to denoūce vnto him the sequestration of his benefice, and consequently the intimation, in case hee were not reformed within 3. monethes, as in the daye of his appearance shall appeare. The tenor and words of which sequestration, with the Intimation followeth.

The wordes of the Sequestration with the Intimation to the Bishop of Winchester.

FOr asmuch as the kings maiestie our most gracious soueraigne Lord vnderstandeth,* and it is also manifestly knowne and notorious vnto vs, that the clemency & long sufferance of his maiestie woorketh not in you y^e good effect and humblenes and conformitie, that is requisite in a good subiect: and for that your first disobediences, cōtēpts, and other misbehauours, for the which you were by hys Maiesties authoritie iustly cōmitted to warde, haue •ithes your said committing, dayly more & more increased in you in such sort as a great slaunder and offence is therof risen, in many parts of the realme, whereby also much slander, dissention trouble, & vnquietnes is very like more to ensue if your foresaid offences being as they be openly knowne, should passe vnpunished: * we let you wit that hauing speciall and expresse Commission and commaundement from his Maiesty, aswell for your contumacies and contempts so long cōtinued and yet daily more increasing, as also for the exchange of the slaunder & offence of the people, which by your sayd ill demeanours is risen, and for that also the Church of Winchester may be in the meane time prouided of a good minister that may and will see all things done & quietly executed according to lawes and common orders of this Realme, * & for sondry other great and vrgent causes we do by these presentes sequester all the frutes, reuenues landes and possessions of your Bishopricke of Winchester & discern, deeme & iudge the same to be committed to the seuerall receite collection and custody of such person or persons as his Maiesty shall appoynt for that purpose. And because your former disobediences and contempts so lōg cōtinued, so many times doubled, renued and aggrauated, do manifestly declare you to be a person without all hope of recouery & plainly incorrigible: we eftsoones admonish and require you to obay his maiesties said cōmaundement and that you do declare your selfe by subscription of youre hand, both willing & well contēted to accept, allow preach and teache to others the sayde articles, and all suche other matters as be or shalbe set forth by his maiesties authority of supreme head of this church of England, on this side, & within the terme of 3. monthes, whereof we appoynt one month for the first monition, one month for the second monition and warning, and one moneth for the third and peremptorie monition.

Within which time as you may yet declare your cōformitie, and shal haue paper, * pen and inke when you wil cal for them for that purpose, so if you wilfully forbear and refuse to declare your self obedient and conformable as is aforesayd, we intimate vnto you that his maiestie, who like a good gouernor desireth to keepe both his cōmon wealth quiet, and to purge the same of euill men (especially ministers) entendeth to proceede against you as an incorrigible person and vnmeet minister of this church, to deprivation of your sayd bishoppricke.

Neuertheles, vpon diuers good considerations, and specially in hope he might within his time be yet reconciled, it was agreed that the sayd bishops house & seruants should be maintained in their present estate, vntill y^e time that this Iniunction should expire, & the matter for the meane time to be kept secrete.

After this sequestration, the sayde B. was commensed vnto Lambeth before the Archbishop of Cant. & other the kings commissioners by vertue of the kings speciall letter sent vnto the sayde Commissioners, to witte, to the Archbyshop of Caunterburie, Nicholas bishoppe of London, * Thomas bishop of Ely, Henry bishop of Lincoln, Secretarie Peter, Syr Iames Hales knight, Doctour Leyson, Doctor Olyuer lawyers, and Iohn Gosnold Esquire. &c. before them, and by them to be examined, by whome were objected against him 19. speciall articles in order and forme heere following.

Articles and positions ministred ioyntly and seuerally objected to the B. of Winchester.

IN primis, that the kings Maiestie iustly and rightfully is, and by the lawes of God ought to be the supreme head in earth of the Church of England and Ireland,* and so is by the Clergie of this realme in their conuocation, and by the Act of Parliament iustly and according to y^e lawes of God recognised.

2 Item, that his maiestie as supreme head of y^e saide churches, hath full power and authoritie to make and set suche Lawes, Iniunctions, and ordinances, for and concerning Religion an• orders in the said churches for the increase of vertue and repressing of all errours, heresies, and other enormities and abuses.

3 Item, that all and euery his graces subiectes are bound by the lawes of God to obey all his highnesse saide lawes, Iniunctions, and proceedings concerning religion & orders in the sayd Churches.

*4 Item, that you Steuen B. of Winchester haue sworne obedience to his Maiestie, as supreme head of this Church of England and also of Ireland.

5 Item, that all and euery his graces subiects that disobey any of his sayde Maiesties lawes, Iniunctions, ordinances and proceedings already set forth & published, or hereafter to be set forth & published, ought worthely to be punished according to his graces Ecclesiasticall lawes, vsed within thys his realme.

*6 Item, that you y^e sayd Byshop, as wel in the kings maiesties late visitation w^tin your Diocesse, as at sondry other times, haue ben complained vpon, & sundry informations made against you for your doings, sayings & preachings against sundry Iniunctions, orders and other procedings of his maiestie set forth for reformation of errors, superstitions and other abuses in religion.

7 Item, that after and vppon the occasion of those & other many complaints and informations, you haue ben sundry times admonished, commanded and enioyned to conforme your selfe, as to your duetie appertaineth.

8 Item, that after the premisses, and for that those former admonitions & commaundements notwithstanding, you did yet still shewe your selfe not conformable,* & for that also by your example the people were much animated, & therby occasion of much vnquietnesse ministred, you were called before the kings maiesties counsell in the moneth of Iune, the 2. yeare of his maiesties raigne, & by them on his highnes behalfe commaunded to preache a Sermon before hys maiestie, and therin to declare the iustnes and godlines of his Maiesties father and his proceedings vppon certaine matters partly mentioned in certaine articles to you deliuered in wryting, and partly otherwise declared vnto you. The effecte whereof, was touching the vsurped authoritye of the B. of Rome, and that his pretensed authoritie was iustly & godly taken away in this realm, & other the kings maiesties dominions: Touching the first suppression and taking away of Monasteries, Religious houses, Pilgrimages, Reliques, Shrines and Images, the superstitious going about of S. Nicholas bishop, S. Edmund, S. Katherin, S. Clement and such like, for taking away of Châtreis, Obites and Colleges, touching hallowing of Candels, water, ashes, palme, holy breade, beades, creeping to the crosse and suche like: touching the setting forth of the kings maiesties authoritie in his yōg yeres to be as great, as if his highnesse were of many more yeres, touching auricular confession, touching the procession & common praier in Englishe, and that things done in generall Councils against the woorde of God, may be iustly reuoked in particular Councils.

*9 Item, that you receiuing the same, and promising to declare them in a sermone by you made before his Maiestie for that purpose, on the feast of S. Peter in the sayd second yere of his highnesse raigne, did then and there contemptuously and disobediently omit to declare and set forth many of the sayd matters to the great contempt of his Maiestie, and daungerous example of others.

10 Item, that you being also commanded, and on his maiesties behalf, for the auoyding of tumult, & for other great considerations inhibited to treat of any matter in controuersie concerning the Masse or the communion (then commonly called the Sacrament of the aultar) did contrary to the sayd commandement & inhibition, declare diuers your iudgements & opinions in the same, in manifest contempt of hys Maiesties sayd inhibition,* to the great offence of the hearers, and disturbaunce of the common quiet, and vnity of the realme.

11 Item, that after the premisses, videlicet, in the moneths of May or Iune, or one of them, in the thirde yeare of hys highnesse raigne, his Maiestye sent eftsoones vnto you, to know your conformity towards his said reformation, and specially touching the booke of Common praier then lately set forth by hys maiestie, whereunto you at the same time refused to shewe your selfe conformable.

12 Item, that after that, videlicet the 9. day of Iuly, in the fourth yeare of his Maiesties raigne, his highnes sent vnto you hys graces letters, wyth a certaine submission and articles, wherunto hys grace willed and commanded you to subscribe, to the whyche submission you contemptuously refused to subscribe.

13 Item, that you hauing eftsoones certaine of the kyngs most honorable Councell sent vnto you the 12. of Iulye,* in the sayd fourth yeare, with the same submission, and beyng in his maiestyes behalfe required and commanded to consider agayne better the sayd submission and to subscribe the same, stooode in iustification of your selfe, and woulde in no wise subscribe thereunto.

14 Item, that after all thys, the 14. daye of Iulye, in the sayde fourth yeare, the sayd kings Maiestie sent yet agayne vnto you certaine of his maiesties most honorable council with an other submissiō and diuers other articles, willing and commaunding you to subscribe your name thereunto, whych to do you vtterly refused.

15 Item, that after all thys, videlicet the 19. of Iulye in the sayde fourth yeare, you being personally called before the whole counsaile,* and hauing the sayde submission and articles openly and distinctly read vnto you, and required to subscribe the same, refused for vniust and fantasticall considerations by you alledged, to subscribe the same.

16 Item, that for your sundry and manifold contemptes and disobediences in this behalfe vsed, the fruites of your benefice were then by speciall commission of hys Maiestie iustly and lawfully sequestred.

17 Item, that after this, you had intimation and peremptorie monition, with communication that you shuld within 3. monethes next following the sayde intimation, reconcile and submit your selfe vpon paine of depriuation.

18 Item, that the saide 3. moneths are nowe fully expired and runne.

19 Item that you haue not hetherto,* according to the sayd intimation and monition submitted: reconciled, nor reformed your self, but contemptuously yet still remaine in your disobedience. Whereupon they required the B. of Winchester, then and there personally present to be sworne faithfully and truely to make answer.

After these articles were exhibited vnto him, and he hauing leaue to say for himself, wherein he vsed al the cautels, shiftes and remedies of the law to his most aduantage, by way of protesting, recusing and excepting against the commission, and requiring also the copies as well of the Articles, as of his protestation of the Actuaries (which wer W. Say and Tho. Argall) time and respite was assigned vnto hym to aunswer to the sayd Articles in wryting. But he so cauilled and dalied from day to day, to answer directly,* although he was sufficiently laboured and perswaded to the same by sondry callinges and Actes, and also abundantly conuicted by depositions and witnesses, especially by matter induced by the L. Paget, and Andrewe Beynton, & M. Chalenor, pag. 816. (all which I referre to my first booke) that at the last he appealed from them, reputed them not to be competent and indifferent iudges to heare and determine his cause, vnto the kings royal person: notwithstanding by protestation alwaies reseruing to himselfe the benefite of his appellation: And so proceded he to the answering of the foresaid articles, but in such crafty and obstinate maner, as before he had ben accustomed, and as at large to them that be desirous to vnderstand the processe thereof, in the first booke of the Actes and monuments of the Church aforesayd may appeare.

But briefly to conclude, such exceptions he vsed against the witnesses produced against him, and he himself produced such a number of witnesses in hys defence, and vsed so many delaies and cauillations, that in the end the commissioners seeing his stubbernesse, proceeded to the sentence definitiue against him, as heere vnder followeth.

¶Sentence definitiue agaynst Stephen Gardiner B. of Winchester.

IN the name of God, Amen. By authority of a commission by the high and mighty prince our moste gracious soueraigne Lord Edward the 6. by the grace of God king of England, France, and Ireland, defendour of the faith,* and of the Church of England and also of Ireland in earth the supreme head, the tenour whereof hereafter ensueth: Edward the sixt. &c. Wee Thomas by the sufferaunce of God Archbishop of Canterbury, primate of all Englande, and Metropolitane, wyth the right reuerende fathers in God, Page 1360 Nicholas Bishop of London, Thomas Byshop of Ely, and Henry Byshop of Lincolne, Syr William Peter Knight, one of our said soueraigne Lordes two principall secretaries, Sir Iames Hales knight, one of our sayd soueraigne

Lordes Iustices of his common plees, Griffith Leison and Iohn Oliuer, Doctors of the Ciuill lawe, Richard Goodrike & Iohn Gosnold Esquiers, delegates, and Iudges assigned & appointed, rightfully & lawfully proceeding according to the forme & tenor of y^e said commission, for the hearing, examinatioⁿ, debating, & finall determination of y^e causes and matters in the said commisson mentioned and conteined, and vpon the contentes of the same, and certeine articles obiected of office against you Steeuen Bishop of Winchester, as more plainely and fully is mencioned and declared in the said commission and articles, all which we repute & take here for to be expressed: & after sondry iudiciall assemblies, examinations, & debatinges of the said cause & matters, with all incidents, emergents, & circumstances to the same or any of them belonging, and the same also beeing by vs ofte heard, seene, and well vnderstanded, and with good and mature examination and deliberation debated, cōsidered and fully wayed and pondred, obseruing all such order and other things as by the lawes, equitie, and the said commission ought or needed heerein to be obserued, in the presence of you Steeuen Bishop of Winchester, do proceede to the geuing of our finall iudgement and sentence diffinitive in this maner following:

For asmuch as by the actes inacted, exhibites, and allegations purposed, deduced, & alleaged, & by sufficient proofes with your owne confession in the causes aforesaid had and made, we do euidently finde and perceiue that you Steuen Bishop of Winchester haue not only transgressed the commaundements mencioned in the same,* but also haue of lōg time, notwithstanding many admonitions and commandements geuen vnto you to the contrary, remained, a person much grudging, speaking, and repugning against the godly reformatiōs of abuses in religion set foorth by the kings highnes authoritie within this his realme: and forasmuch as we do also finde you a notable, open, and contemptuous disobeyer, of sondry godly and iust commandements geuen vnto you by our sayd soueraigne Lorde and by his authoritie, in diuers great and weighty causes, touching and cōcerning his princely office, the state and common quietnes of this his Realme: and for asmuch as you haue and yet do contemptuously refuse to recognise your notorious negligences, & misbehauours, contempts, and disobediēces, remaining still after a great number of seuerall admonitions alwaies more and more indurate, incorrigible, and without all hope of amendement, cōtrary both to your oth sworne, obedience, promise, and also your boūden duety of allegiance: and for the great sclaunder and offence of the people, arise in many partes of the Realme, through your wilfull doings, sayings, and preachings, contrary to the common order of the Realme, and for sondry other great causes by the actes, exhibites, your owne confession, and proofes of this processe more fully appearing, considering withall that nothing effectually hath ben on your behalfe alleaged, purposed, and proued, ne by any other meanes appeareth, whiche doth or may empayre or take away the proofes made against you, vpon the sayde matters and other the premisses:

Therefore we Thomas Archbyshop of Caunterbury, Primate of all England and Metropolitane, Iudge delegate aforesayd, calling God before our eyes, with expresse consent and assent of Nicholas B. of London, Tho. bishop of Ely, Henry B. of Lincolne, sir Wil. Peter Knight, Sir Iames Hales Knight, Griffith Leison, and Ioh. Oliuer, doctors of the ciuill law, Rich. Goodricke, and Iohn Gosnold, Esquires, Iudges, and Colleagues with vs in the matters aforesaid, and with the counsaile of diuers learned men in the lawes, with whome we haue conferred in and vpon the premisses,* do iudge and determine you Steeuen Bishop of Winchester, to be depriued and remooued from the Bishopricke of Winchester, and from all the rightes, authoritie, emoluments, commodities, and other apurtenaunces to the sayde Byshoprike in any wise belonging, whatsoever they be, and by these presentes we doe depriue and remoue you from your sayd Bishopricke, and all rites & other commodities aforesaide: and further pronounce & declare the sayd Byshopricke of Winchester to all effectes and purposes, to be voyde by this our sentence definitiue, which we geue, pronounce, and declare in these writings.

This sentence diffinitive being geuen, the sayd Byshop of Winchester vnder his former protestatiōs, dissented frō the geuing and reading thereof, and frō the same as vniust of no efficacy or effect in law: and in that that the same containeth excessiue punishmēt, and for other causes expressed in his appellation aforesayd, did then and there apud Acta, immediately after the pronouncing of the sētnce, by word of mouth, appeale to the kinges Royall maiestie, first, secondly and thirdly, instantly, more instantly,* most instantly, & asked apostles, or letters dimissorials to be geuen and granted vnto him: And also vnder protestation not to recede from the sayd appellation, asked a copy of the sayd sētnce, the Iudges declaring that they would first knowe the kinges pleasure and his counsell therin: vpon the reading and geuing of which sentence, the promoters willed Will. Say and Thomas A•gall to make a publicke Instrument and the witnesses then and there present to beare testimony thereunto. &c.

And thus haue ye the whole discourse and processe of Steuen Gardiner late bishop of Winchester, vnto whome the Papisticall cleargy doth so much leane, as to a mighty Atlas: an vpholder of their ruinous Religion.* And though I haue not here withal so fully expressed all his letters, answeres, preachinges, examinations, defensions, exhibites & attestations, with the depositions of all suche witnesses as he could and did produce for the most aduantage of hys owne cause, with such notes also and collections gathered vpon the same, as here I might, and as before I haue don I must intreate y^e reader to cōsider first y^e greatnes of this volume which would not well beare the tedious tractatiō thereof: and secondly to content himself in resorting to our first history,* where not onely he may peruse the whole discourse of this bishops doinges set foorth at large: but also may briefly read in a few summarye notes collected, the whole course of his doctrine and Iudgement, touchyng what poyntes of religion he did consent and agree, or not agree vnto. pag. 862.

And thus an end of Winchester for a while, til we come to talke of his death hereafter. Whome as wee number amongst good Lawyers, so is he to be reckoned amongst ignoraunt and grosse Diuines,* proud Prelates and bloudy persecuters: as both by his cruell life and Pharisaicall doctrine may appeare, especially in the article of the Sacrament, and of our iustification and Images, and also in crying out of the Paraphrase, not considering in whose person the things be spoken, but what the Paraphrast vttereth in the person of Christ, or of the Euangelist, and not in his own, that he wrasteth vnto the author, and maketh thereof heresie, and abomination.

The like impudency and quarrelling also hee vsed agaynst Bucer, Luther, Peter Martyr, Cranmer, & almost agaynst all other true Interpreters of the Gospell. So blinde was his iudgement, or els so wilfull was his mind in the truth of Christs doctrine, that it is hard to say whether in him vnskilfulnes or wilfulnes had greater predomination. But agaynst this doct. Gardiner we will now set and match on the cōtrary side, D. Redman,* for so much as he departing this transitory life the same present yeare 1551. commeth now by course of history here to be mentioned. Who for his singular life and profounde knowledge, being inferiour in no respect to the sayde Gardiner,* shall stand as great a frend in promoting the gospels cause, as the other seemeth an enemy by all maner of wayes to empayre and deface the same. For the more assured declaratiō whereof, we will hereto adioyne (the Lorde willing) the learned communication betweene the said Doct. Redman lying in his deathbed, and M. Wilkes, mayster Alexander Nowell, Doct. Yong, and other witnesses moe. Whereof the sayd M. Wilkes thus recordeth, speaking in his owne person and his owne wordes as followeth.

A note of the communication that I Richard Wilkes had with maister Doctor Redman being sicke at Westminster, but of good memory 2. Nouemb. 1551. in the presence of M. Yong & another, whō I did not know, and 2. of M. Doct. Redmans seruants, the one called Elias, and the other vnknowne.

I The foresayd Richard Wilkes comming to Doct. Redman lying sicke at Westminster, and first saluting him after my ordinary duetye, wished him health both in soule & body, not doubting moreouer,* but he did practise the godly counsaile in himselfe, which he was wont to geue to other being in his case: and thanks be to God (said I) who had geuen him stuffe of knowledge to comfort himself w^tall. To whom he answering again, said in this wise: God of all comfort geue me grace to haue comfort in hym, and to haue my mind wholly fixed in him. M. Yong & I sayd, Amen. Thē I cōmoned w^t him of his sickenes, & the weakⁿes of his body, and said y^t though he were brought neuer so low, yet he, if it were his pleasure that raised vp Lazarus, could restore him to health agayne. No, no saith he, Page 1361 that is past, and I desire it not but the will of God be fulfilled.

After this or a little other like communication, I asked if I mighte be so bolde not troubling him, to knowe hys mynde for my learning in some matters and poyntes of religion. He sayd, yea, and that he was as glad to common wyth me, in such matters, as with any man. And then I sayde to hys seruantes: I trust I shall not trouble hym. No said Ellis his seruaunt, my L. of London, M. Nowel and other haue communed with him, and he was glad of it. Then sayd M. Redman, no you shall not trouble me. I pray God euer geue me grace to speake the truth, and hys truth, and that which shall redound to his glory, and send vs vnitie in his Church, and we sayd, Amen.

I sayde he shoulde do much good in declaring his faith, and I would be glad to knowe his minde as touching the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ.*

He sayd, as man is made of two partes, of the body and the soule, so Christ would feede the whole man: but what (sayth he) be the wordes of the text? Let vs take the words of the Scripture: and he rehearsed the text himselfe thus: Accipit Iesus panem: Christ tooke bread. Wherein hys wyll was to institute a Sacrament, Accipite, commedite: Take, eate. Here he told the vse of it. What did he geue them? Hoc est corpus meum,* he calleth it his body.

Then I asked him of the presence of Christ.

He said, Christ was present with his sacrament, and in those that receaued it as they ought. And there was Mira vnio, a wonderfull vnion (for that word was named betwixt Christ and vs) as S. Paul saith: Vos estis os ex ossibus eius, & caro ex carne eius. Ye be bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh.* The which vnion was ineffable.

Then I asked him what he thought of the opinion, that Christ was there corporally, naturally, and really.

He answered: if you meane by corporally, naturally, and really, that he is there present Verè, I graunt.

Then I asked how he thought of that which was wont commonly to be spoken, that Christ was there flesh, bloud & bone, as I haue heard the Stewards in their Leets giue charge when the 6. articles stooode in effect, and charge the Inquest to enquire, that if there were any that would denie that Christ was present in the Sacrament of the aultar in flesh, bloud, and bone, they should apprehend them.

He said, that was too grosse, and could not well be excused from the opinion of the Capernaïtes.

*Thē I asked him: in as much as Christ was there Verè, howe do we receaue him? in our myndes and spirituall partes, or with our mouthes and into our bodies, or both?

He said, we receaue him in our minds & soules by fayth.

Then in asmuch as he was much in this point, y^t there was Mira vnio, a marueylous vnion betwixt vs & Christ, in that we were Caro ex carne eius, & os ex ossibus eius: Bone of his bone,*and flesh of his flesh: I desired to knowe his opinion whether we receiued the very body of Christ wyth our mouthes, and into our bodies or no.

Here he paused & held his peace a litle space, and shortly after he spake, saying: I will not say so: I can not tell: it is a hard question, but surely saith he, we receiue Christ in our soule by faith. When you speake of it other wayes, it soundeth grosly and sauoureth of the Capernaïtes.

*Then I asked him what he thought of y^t which y^e Priest was wont to lift vp & shew the people betwixt his hāds?

He saide it is the Sacramente. Then sayd I, they were wont to worship that which was lifted vp. Yea saith he, but we must worship Christ in heauen: Christ is neither lifted vp nor downe. I am glad, sayd I, M. Doctour, to heare you say so much. I would not speake of the holy Sacrament otherwise then reuerently, but I feare least that Sacrament, and the little white peece of bread so lifted vp, hath robbed Christ of a great part of his honour.

*Then said he, looking, vp and praying, God graunt vs grace that we may haue y^e true vnderstanding of his word, whereby we may come to the true vse of his Sacraments, and sayd he woulde neuer allow the carying about of the Sacrament, and other fond abuses about the same.

Then after a little while pausing, said I: Maister Doctor,* if I shuld not trouble you, I would pray you to know your mind in transubstantiation. Iesu M. Wilkes (quoth he) wyll you aske me that? Syr sayde I, not if I shoulde trouble you. No, no, I will tell you saith he: Because I founde the opinion of Transubstantiation receiued in the Church, when I heard it spoken against, I searched the auncient Doctors diligently,* & went about to stablishe it by them, because it was receiued.

And whē I had read many of them, I found little for it, & could not be satisfied. Thē I went to the Schoole Doctors, and namely to Gabriell, and wayed his reasons. The which when I had done, and perceiued they were no pithier, Languescebat opinio mea de transubstantiatione, my opinion of Transubstantiation waxed feeble, and then (sayth he) I returned agayne to Tertullian and Irenaeus, and when I had obserued their sayings, mine opinion that there should be transubstantiation, prorsus erat abolita: was quite dashed.

Then sayd I,* you know that the Schoole Doctors dyd hold that panis non remanebat post consecrationem, that bread remained not after consecration as they called it.

The schoole Doctors (sayth he) did not know what consecratio doth meane: and here he paused a while. I pray you sayd I, what say you that consecratio doth meane? Sayth he, it is Tota actio, in ministring the Sacramente,* as Christ did institute it. All the whole thing done in the ministry, as Christ ordeyned it, that is, consecratio, and what (saith he) neede we to doubt that bread remayneth? Scripture calleth it bread, and certaine good authors that be of the latter time, be of that opinion.

After that I had communed with M. Redman,* and taken my leaue of him, M. Yong came foorth into the nexte chamber with me, to whome I said that I was glad to see M. Doct. Redman so well minded. Then said M. Yong to me, I am sure he will not deny it. I ensure you saith he, M. Doct. hath so moued me, that where as I was of that opinion before in certaine things,* that I would haue burned and lost my life for them, now saith M. Yong, I doubt of them. But I see (saith he) a man shall knowe more & more by processe of time, and reading and hearing of other, and M. Doct Redmans saying shall cause me to looke more diligently for them.

Also Ellis M. Doctour Redmans seruauant shewed me that he did knowe that his maister had declared to Kyng Henry 8. his Maiesty, that faith only iustifieth:,* but that doctrine as he thought, was not to be taught the people, least they should be negligent to do good workes.

The sayd maister Yong hath reported (the which also I heard) that M. Doctor Redman should say, that consensus Ecclesiae, the consent of the Church was but a weake staffe to leane to, but did exhort him to reade the Scriptures, for there was that which should comfort him when he should be in such case as he was then.

Another communication betweene Doctor Redman lying in his death bead, and Mayster Nowell then Schoolemaister in Westminster, and certaine other, with notes of his censure & iudgement touching certayne poyntes of Christes Religion.

1 IN primis, the sayd D. Redman sent for M. Nowell of his own mind,* and said he was willing to commune with him of such matters as he had moued y^e said D. Redman of a day or two before: and he being desired of the said M. Nowell to declare his mind cōcerning certain points of our Religion, first said: aske me what ye will, and I wil answere you (before God) truly as I thinke, without any affection to the world, or any worldly person.

Witnesses Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas, Iohn Wright.

2 Item, the said D. Redman said, that the sea of Rome in these latter daies is Sentina malorū, that is, a sinke of al euil.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Iohn Wright, Edw. Cratford, Rich. Elithorne, Ellis Lomas.

3 Item, that Purgatory, as the schoolemen taught it and vsed it, was vngodly, and that there was no such kynde of Purgatory as they fantasied.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas, Edw. Cratford, Rich. Elithorne, Iohn Wright.

4 Item,* that the offring vp of the Sacrament in Masses and Trentals for the sinnes of the dead, is vngodly.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Edward Cratford, Ellis Lomas.

5 Item, that the wicked are not pertakers of the body of Christ, but receiue the outward Sacrament only.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas, Edw. Cratford, Rich. Elithorne, Iohn Wright.

6 Item, that the Sacrament ought not to be caried about in procession:* for it is taught what is the vse of it in these wordes: Accipite, manducate, & bibite, & hoc facite in mei memoriam: Take, eate, and drinke, and do this in remembrance of me.

Witnesses Ioh. Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Iohn Wright, Edward Cratford, Ellis Lomas.

7 Item, that nothing which is seene in the Sacramente,* or perceiued with any outward sence, is to be worshipped.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Ellis Lomas, Richard Burton.

8 Item, that we receiue not Christes body Corporaliter, id est, crassè: corporally, that is to saye, grosly,* like other Page 1362 meates, and like as Capernaïtes did vnderstand it.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Edw. Cratford, Ellis Lomas, Iohn Wright.

9 Item, that we receiue Christes body sic spiritualiter vt tamen verè:* so spiritually, that neuerthelesse truly.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Edward Cratford,* Ellis Lomas, Iohn Wright.

10 Item, as touching transubstantiation, that there is not in any of the old doctours any good ground or sure prooffe thereof, or any mention of it, as farre as euer he could perceiue, neither that he seeth what can be aunswered to the obiections made against it.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas.

11 Item, being asked of Maister Wilkes what that was which was lifted vp betwene the priestes handes, he aunswered: he thought that Christ could neyther be lifted vp nor downe.

Witnesses Iohn Yong, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas.

12 Item, that Priestes may by the lawe of God marry wiues.

Witnesses Alexander Nowell, Ellis Lomas.

13 That this proposition: Sola fides iustificat, so that fides signifie Veram, viuam, & acquiescentem in Christo fidem, id est am•lexum Christi: that is to say, that only faith doth iustifie, so that faith do signifie a true, a liuely▪ and a faith resting in Christ and embracing Christ: is a true, godly, sweete, and comfortable doctrine, so that it be so taught that the people take none occasion of carnall libertie thereof.*

Witnesses Ioh. Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Ioh. Wright, Edwarde Cratford, Richard Elithorne, Ellis Lomas.

14 Item, that our workes cannot deserue the kingdome of God,* and life euerlasting.

Witnesses Ioh. Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas, Edwarde Cratford, Richard Elithorne, Iohn Wright.

15 Item, that the sayde D. Redman, at such times as wee the foresayd persons, which haue subsc•ibed, heard his cōmunication concerning the for•said pointes of Religion, was of quiet mind and of perfite remembraunce, as farre as we were able to iudge.

Witnesses Ioh. Yong, Alexander Nowell, Rich. Burton, Ellis Lomas, Edward Cratford▪ Richard Elithorne, Iohn Wright.

¶Also M. Yong of himselfe doth declare further touching the former Articles in this wise.

IN primis, that D. Redman sayd more, where as S. Augustine sayde:*Quòd Iudas idem accepit quod Petrus, that Iudas receiued the same that Peter did, he said that he vnderstoode that of the Sacramente, and that after the same phrase a man might say: Quòd Simon Magus idem Baptisma recepit quod Apostoli, that Simon Magus receiued the same Baptisme that the Apostles did, when he did receiue only the outwarde Sacramente to his condemnation: for he sayd that he thought Christ would not vouchsafe to giue his holy flesh to an vngodly man. And this he saide was alwayes his mind, though he knew that other men did otherwise thinke.

Item, he sayde, he neuer liked the cariage aboute of the Sacrament,* and preached against it about 16. yeares since in Cambridge.

Item, when he was demaunded of transubstantiation, he sayde,* that he had trauayled about it, and thinking that the doubtes which he perceyued dyd rise thereon shoulde be made playne by the Schoolemen, did reade their bookes, and after that he had read them, the opinion of Transubstantiation was euery day Magis & magis languida, that is, weaker and weaker, and that there was no suche Transubstantiation as they made, adding therto, that the whole Schoole did not knowe what was meant by consecration, which he sayd was the whole action of the holy Communion.

Item, that workes had their crowne and rewarde, but that they did not deserue eternall life,* and the kyngdome of God, no not the workes of grace: Nam donum dei vita aeterna. For euerlasting life is the gift of God.

Although the•e testimonies aboue alledged may suffice for a declaration touching the honest life, sounde doctrine, and sincere iudgement of Doctour Redman: yet (velut ex abundanti) I thought not to cut off in this place, the testimoniall letter or Epistle of D. Yong writtē to M. Cheke, specially concerning the premisses. Which Epistle of Doct. Yong, as I receiued it written by his owne hand in the latine tongue, the copy whiche he himselfe hath not, nor can deny to be his owne, & is extant to be read in the former booke of Actes and Monumentes, so I haue here exhibited the same faythfully translated into the English tongue the tenour whereof here followeth.

The letter of M. Yong written to M. Cheke concerning Doct. Redman, translated out of Latine into English.

ALthough right worshipfull,* I am stricken into no little dampe and dolour of minde for the vnripe (but that it otherwise pleased almighty God) & lamentable death of that most blessed & learned man doct. Redman, in so much that all astonied with weeping and lamenting, I can not tell what to doe or thinke (yet neuerthelesse: (perceiuing it to be your worships will and pleasure, that so I shoulde do) I gladly cal my wittes together, and purpose by gods grace, here in these my letters, sincerely and truly to open and declare what I heard that worthy learned man speak and confesse at the houre of his death as touching the controuersies of religion, wherwith the spouse of Christ is in these our dayes most miserably troubled and tormented.

This Doct. Redman, being continually by the space of xx. yeares or somewhat more exercised in the reading of the holy scripture, with such industry, labor, modesty, magnanimity, and prayers to almighty God tryed and wayed y^e controuersies of religiō, that in al his doings as he would not seeme to approue that was either false or superstitious so he would neuer improue that he thought to stand wyth the true worship of God.* And albeit in certayne poyntes and articles of his fayth, he seemed to diuers whiche were altogether ignoraunt of that his singular grauitie, eyther for softnes, care, or lacke of stomacke to chaunge his mind and beliefe, yet they, to whom his former life and conuersation by familiar acquayntaunce with him was throughlye knowne, with them also which were present at his departure, may easely perceauē and vnderstand, how in graue & weighty matters, not rashly and vnadvisedly, but wyth constant iudgement and vnfayned conscience he descended into that maner of beliefe which at that time of his goyng out of this world, he openly professed.

I geue your wisdomē to vnderstand, that when death drew neare, he casting away all hope of recouery, minded & talked of no other thing (as we which were presēt heard) but of heauē and heauenly matters, of the latter day of our Sauour Iesus Christ, with whom most feruently he desired to be: whose incredible loue towardes vs miserable sinners,* most worthely and not without teares hee often times vsed to extol and speake of: and vs which wer there present, he earnestly moued and exhorted to prepare oure selues to Christ, to loue one an other, and to beware of this most wretched & corrupt world. And besides that he promised (calling God to witnes thereunto, to whom he trusted shortly to come) if any woulde demaund any question that he would answer him what he thought in his iudgement to be the truth.* At what time there were present M. Alexander Nowell, a man earnestly bent to the true worshipping of God, and one that had alway singularly well loued y^e said M. Redman: to whome he spake on this wise:

Your excellent learning and purity of life I haue euer both highly fauoured, and had in admiration: and for no other cause (God be my iudge) I do aske these things of you which I shall propound, but that I might learne & knowe of you what is your opinion and beliefe touchynge those troblous controuersies which are in these our dayes: and I shall receaue and approue your wordes as oracles sent from heauen.

To whom when doct. Redman had geuen leaue to demaund what he would, and had promised that he woulde faythfully and sincerely aunswere (all affection set aside) what he thought to be the truth, M. Nowel said: I would (quoth he) right gladly, but that I feare by my talke and communication I shalbe vnto you, so feeble and nowe almost spent, a trouble and grieve. Then sayd Doct. Redmā replying: what shall I spare my carcas (quoth he) whiche hath so short a time here to remaine? Go to, go to (sayd he) propound what you will. Thē M. Nowell put forth certayne questions in order, which I will here declare: wherunto the sayd doct. Redman seuerally answered, as hereafter followeth.

The first question that he asked of him was, what hee thought of the bishop of Rome. Unto whō Doct. Redmā answered that the Sea of Rome in these our latter dayes had much swarued from the true religiō and worshipping of God & is with horrible vices stayned & polluted;* which I therfore (quoth he) pronounce to be the sincke of all euill and shortly wil come to vtter ruine by scourge of God, except Page 1363 it do fall the sooner to repentance: wherewith he briefly complayned of the filthy abuse of our Englishe Church.

Beeing then asked what his opinion was concerning purgatory,* and what the Scholemen iudged therof, he answered, that the subtill reasons of the Scholemen concerning purgatory, seemed to him to be no lesse vayne, and friuolous, then disagreeing from the truth: adding thereunto: that when we be rapt vp to the cloudes to meete Christ comming to iudgemēt with a great number of Angels in all glory and maiesty then euery one shall be purged with fire as it is written: The fire shall go before hym, and shall flame round about his enemies, and the fire shall burne in his sight,*and round about him shall be a great tempest: saying that diuers of the old writers approued this his sentence concerning purgatory.

When he was asked whether wicked and vngodly people in the holy communion did eate the body of Christ, and drinke his bloud: he aunswered that such kind of men dyd not eate Christes most blessed flesh, but only tooke the Sacramēt to their own damnation:* saying that Christ would not gyue his most pure and holy flesh to be eaten of suche naughty and impure persons, but would withdraw hymselfe from them. And that (quoth hee) that is objected by S. Augustine, that Iudas receiued the selfesame thing whych Peter receiued: that I thinke to be vnderstanded of the externall Sacrament. And the like kynde of phrase of speaking (sayde hee) we may vse concerning the baptisme of Magus: that Simon Magus receaued that which the Apostles did receaue. In deede as concerning the Sacrament of the externall baptisme, Simon Magus receaued that whiche the Apostles did, but that internall grace, wherewith the Apostles were endued, and that holy spirit wherewith by baptisme they were enspired, he lacked. And so (quoth he) the wicked and forsaken people, which rashly presume to come to the holy table of the Lorde, do receiue the Sacrament and the selfesame which good and godly men receiue: but the body of Christ, they do not receiue, for Christ doth not vouchsafe to deliuer it them. And thus he sayd was his opinion and beliefe, although he knewe others to be of a contrary iudgement.

Being then after this demaunded whether he thought Christes presence to be in the Sacrament or no, he answered that Christ dyd geue & offer to faythfull and Christian men,* his very reall body and bloud verely & really vnder sacramēts of bread & wine, in somuch that they which deuoutly come to bee partakers of that holy foode, are by the benefite thereof vnited and made one with Christe in hys fleshe and body. And therefore he sayde that Christ dyd distribute his body spiritually that he gaue it truly,* not so yet neuerthelesse that by these and the like wordes we should conceiue any grosse or carnall intelligence, such as the Capernaïtes once dreamed of, but that (quoth he) we myghte labour & endeouour to expresse by some kinde of wordes the ineffable maiestie of this misterie. For the maner whereby Christ is there present, and ministreth to the faythfull hys flesh, is altogether inexplicable: but we must beleue (quoth he) and thinke, that by Gods mighty power & the holy operation of his spirit, this so notable a mistery was made: & that heauen & earth was ioined together in that momēt, as the blessed man s. Gregory saith: y^e lowest parts are ioined w^t the highest: By which is vnderstand that holy food, whereby they whiche be regenerate by the holy Ghost in baptisme, are nourished to immortalitie. And further hee sayd that Christes body was receiued in the sayde Sacrament by faith: which being receiued both body and soule, were quickned to euerlasting life.

Being then required to say his minde about transubstantiation, he gaue answere that he had much trauelled in that point,* and that he first much fauoured and enclined to that part which maintained transubstantiation: in searching the veritie whereof most studiously, he had bene no little while occupied, and founde to arise thereabout infinite, and almost inexplicable absurdities. In confutyng whereof, when he had but smally contented himselfe, he said he tooke in hand the Scholemens works, and perused Gabriell and other writers of that sorte, for that by theyr helpe and aide he hoped that all inconueniences which did spring and arise by maintenance of Transubstantiation, might be cleane conuincd and wiped away. Of which his hope he was vtterly frustrate (sayd he) for that he did finde in those works many fond and fantastick things, which were both too foolish to be recorded in writing, and also to be alledged about such a mystery: and truly (saide he) euer after the reading of them, my former zeale and opinion, touching the maintenance of transubstantiation, did euery day more and more decrease, and therefore in conclusion perswaded himselfe to thinke that there was no such transubstantiation as the Schoolemen imagined and fained to be, saying that in deede the auncient writers were plain•ly against the maintenance thereof: amongst whome, he recited by name Iustine, Irene, and Tertullian, notorious aduersaries to the same. Furthermore, he added heereunto,* that the whole Schoole vnderstoode not what this word Consecratio was: which he defined to be the full and entire action of the whole Communion.

Being demaunded also whether we ought to worship Christ present in his holy Supper, he told vs that we are bound so to do: and that it was most agreeing to piety and godly Religion. Likewise being asked whether he would haue the visible Sacrament to be worshipped, which we see with our eyes, and is lifted vp betweene the Priestes hands: he answered, that nothing which was visible, and to be seene with the eye, is to be adored or worshipped, nor that Christ woulde be eleuated into any higher, or pulled downe into any lower place,* and that he can neither bee lifted vp higher, nor pulled downe lower.

Againe, being asked what his iudgement was about the custome and maner in carying about the Sacrament in solemne pompes, processions and otherwise: he said, that he alwaies misliked and reprobud that order: in so much that about xvj. yeares agon openly in the pulpit at Cambridge he spake against that abuse and disallowed that ceremony, shewing that Christ had expressed by playne and euident wordes a very fruitfull and right vse of this Sacrament, when he sayde Take ye: (by which phrase quoth hee, he doth expresse that he will giue a gift:) Eate yee: (by whyche words he doth declare the proper vse and order of that hys precious gift:) This is my body: (whereby he doth euidently and plainely shewe what by that gift they should receaue, and how royall and precious a gift he woulde giue them: and therefore he iudged such pompous and superstitious ostentations vtterly to be condemned and taken as plaine mockeries and Counterfaite visars.

His iudgement also being asked about the Commemoration of the dead, and the remembrance of them in orisons whether he thought it profitable or no: he aunswered, that it seemed to him to be no lesse profitable then religious and godly: and that might be well proued out of the bookes of Machabees. The which bokes although Saint Hierome adiudging as not authentike,* thought good to bee read in the Temples onely for the edifying of the Church, and not for the assertion of opinions: yet with me the opinions of the other writers, to whome those bookes are allowed as Canons, preuaileth: which he in that point thinketh good to be read.

Being furthermore required to shew hys mynde about trentall Masses, and Masses of Scala coeli,* he shewed them that they were altogether vnprofitable, superstitious, and irreligious, flowing out of the filthy and impure fountaine of superstition, not yelding the fruite which they promised to bring forth. The Sacrifice of the Supper of the Lorde, (the Eucharist I meane) that sacrifice he sayd could not be offered for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead.*

Finally, of his owne voluntary will, and no man (as farre as I can call to remembrance) demanding of him, he shewed his opinion concerning Iustification by Christ, I lament (said he) and repent, beseeching God forgiuenes for the same, that to seriously and earnestly I haue wythstand this proposition: that onely fayth doth iustifye, but I alwayes feared that it should be taken to the libertie of the fleshe,* and so should defile the innocencie of life which is in Christ. But that proposition: that onely faith doth iustifye, is true (quoth he) sweete and full of spirituall comfort, if it be truely taken, and rightly vnderstanded. And when hee was demaunded what he thought to be the true and very sense thereof: I vnderstand (quoth he) that to be the liuely faith, which resteth in our only Sauour Iesus Christ and imbraceth him: so that in our only Sauour Iesus Christ, all the hope and trust of our saluation be surely fixed. And as cōcerning good works (said he) they haue their crowne and merite: and are not destitute of their rewards. Yet neuerthesse they do not merite the kingdome of heauen. For no workes (said he) coulde not purchase and obteyne that blessed, happy and euerlasting immortalitie:* no nor yet those things whiche we do vnder grace by the motion of the holy Ghost. For that blessed and immortall glory is giuen and bestowed vpon vs mortall men, of the heauenly father for his Sonne our Sauour Christes sake, as S. Paule testifieth, The gift of God is eternall life.*

And these be the resolutions which I heard him geue to the questions by M. Nowell proposed.* From which hys sentence and iudgement so heard by me and of him vttered (as I remember) I neuer declined or varied. I beseeche our Lorde Iesus Christ to cease these troublous stormes wherewith the Church is tossed, and vouchsafe for his holy names sake tenderly to beholde & looke vpon his poore Page 1364 wretched flocke so miserably scattered and dispersed,* beseeching him also of his goodnes to preserue your worship. At London the third of Nouember.

Heere followeth the history no lesse lamentable then notable of William Gardiner an Englishman, suffering most constantly in Portyngale for the testimony of Gods truth.

*COMming now to the yeare next following 1552. wee will some what step aside, and borow a little leaue, coasting the Seas into Portyngale amongst the Popish marchauntes there, whither a certaine countrymā of ours doth call me, named William Gardiner, a man verely in my iudgement, not only to be compared with the most principall & chiefe Martirs of these our daies, but also such one, as the auncient Churches in the time of the first persecutions, can not shew a more famous: whether we do behold the force of his faith, his firme and stedfast constantnes, the inuincible strength of his spirit, or the cruell and horrible tormentes: the report only and hearing whereof, were enough to put any man in horror or feare. Yet notwithstanding so farre it was of that the same did discourage him, that it may be doubted whether the payne of his body, or the courage of his mind were the greater: when as in deede both appeared to be very great.

Wherefore, if any prayse or dignity amongst men, (as reason is) be due vnto the Martirs of Christ for their valiant actes,* this one man amongst many, seemeth worthy to bee numbred and also to be celebrate in the Church with Ignatius, Laurentius, Ciriatus, Grescentius, and Gordianus. And if the Church of Christ do receiue so great and manifolde benifits by these martirs, with whose bloud it is watred, by whose ashes it is enlarged, by whose constancie it is confirmed, by whose testimonie it is witnessed, and finally through whose agonies and victories the truth of the Gospell doth gloriously triumph: let not vs then thinke it any great matter, to requite them with our duety againe, by committing them vnto memory, as a perpetuall token of our good will towards them. Albeit, they themselues receiue no glory at our hands, and much lesse challenge the same: but referre it wholly vnto the Lord Christ, frō whom it came whatsoever great or notable thing there was in them. Notwithstanding, for so much as Christ himselfe is glorified in his Saints, we cā not shew our selues thankfull vnto him, except we also shew our selues dutifull vnto those, by whome his glory doth increase.

Heereupon I thinke it came to passe, that the aunciente Christians in the time of the first persecutiōs,* thought good to celebrate yearely commemorations of the Martirdome of those holy men, not so much to honour thē, as to glorifie God in his souldiours, vnto whom all glory & praise doth worthely belong: and moreouer, that we being instructed by their example, might bee the more prompt and ready in the policies of those warres, to stand more stoutly in batta•le against our aduersaries, and learne the more easily to contemne and despise thys worlde. For in considering the ende and death of these men, who will greatly long or luste after this life, which is so many wayes miserable, through so many afflictions dolorous, through so many casualties rumous, wherein consisteth so litte constancie & lesse safety, being neuer free from some hard calamitie one or other? What good mā would haue this world in reputatiō, wherein he seeth so many good men so cruelly oppressed, & wherein no man can liue in quietnes, except he be wicked? Wherefore I do not a little merueile,* that in this great slaughter of good mē with so many spectacles and examples of cruell tormēt, Christians do yet liue as it were drowned in y^e foolish desires of this world, seeing daily before their eyes so many holy and innocent men yeeld vp their spirits vnder the handes of such tormentors, to lye in filthy prisons, in bondes, darkenes, and teares, & in the end to be consumed with fire. We see so many Prophets of God, euen Christ himself the sonne of God,* to be so cruelly and many waies afflicted in this world, tormoiled, scourged and crucified: & yet we laugh, drinke, and giue our selues vnto all losenes of life, and all lasciuiousnes. For honour & great possessions we contend: we build: we study & labour by al meanes to make our selues rich. Unto whome it doth not suffice y^t we with safety and freedome from their afflictions, racks, wheeles, scourges, yrons read hote, gredirōs, fleshhookes, mallets, and other kyndes of tormentes, may serue our Christ in peace and quiet: but being herewith not content, will giue ouer our selues to all kinde of wickednes, to be led away at the will and pleasure of Sathan?

*But what do we thinke in so doing? Eyther we must reckon those mē to be most miserable in this life, or els our selues to be most vnhappy. But if their blessednes be most certaine and sure, then let vs direct the course of our life to the same felicitie. These men haue forsaken this life, which they might haue enioyed. But if w• cannot willingly put of this life, yet let vs not be slow to amend and correct the same: and though wee cannot dye with them in like martyrdome, yet let vs mortifie the worldly and prophane affections of y^e flesh, which striue agaynst y^e spirite & at the least let vs not runne thus headlong into the licētious desires of the world, as we do. As the lyfe of Christen men is now, I praye thee, what doe these bondes, prisons, these woundes and scarres, these great fires, and other horrible tormentes of martirs, then vpbrayd vnto vs our slouthful sluggishnes, & worthely make vs ashamed therof? Which Martirs if in their liues they liued so innocently, & in their death continued so constant, what then is to be deemed of vs which suffer nothing for Christ, and will not take vpon vs the small conflict agaynst vices & our owne affections? How would we suffer the cruell looks of tirannes? * y^e fearfull kindes of torments, or the violent assaultes of the tormenters in any quarrell of godlines, if in peace and quietnes we are & y^t with euery small breath or winde of temptation we are blown away frō God, so faynt harted w^tout any resistaunce are caryed headlong into all kinde of wickednes & mischief? One singeth songes of loue, an other watcheth all the night at dice, some spend their life & tyme day by day in hawking & hūting, some tipples so at tauerns that they come home reeling. Others what soeuer desire of reuenge doth put into their heads, that by and by they seek to put in practise. Some gape after riches: some swell with ambition: some thinke they are borne for no other purpose but for pleasure and pastime. All the world is full of iniury and periury, nay rather it is so rare a thinge paciently to suffer iniuries done vnto •s, that except we haue y^e sleight to doe iniury to other, wee thinke our selues scarce men. There is no loue almost nor Charitie among men: neither is there any man that regardeth the good name or fame of his neighbour.

But amongst al the rest, vnsatiable couetousnes and auarice so raigneth that no man almost is contented w^t any tollerable estate of life, either that wil prescribe himself any measure in hauing y^t he possesseth: or in proling for y^e which he lacketh: neuer quiet, but alwayes toiling, neuer satisfied but alwaies vnsatiable. Whereby it so commeth, that the mindes of Christen men, being occupied in suche worldly carks & cares, can scarcely find any vacant leisure to think vpon heauenly things: and yet notwithstanding w^t these mindes, we will needes seeme Christians. But nowe setting apart these complayntes spent in vayne, we will prosecute our purposed story touching good W. Gardiner.

And first as cōcerning his kinred, he was of an honest stocke, borne at Bristow, * a towne of Marchandise on the seacost of England, honestly brought vp and by nature geuen vnto grauitie, of a meane stature of body, of a comelye & pleasant countenance, but in no part so excellent as in y^e inward quallities of the mind, which he alwayes from his childhood preserued without spot of reprehension. Also his handsome and indifferent learning did not a litle commēd & beautifie his other ornamēts. When he grew vnto those yeares at which young men are accustomed to settle theyr minds to some kinde of life, it happened y^t he gaue himselfe to the trade of Marchandise, vnder y^t conduct & guidyng of a certaine marchant of Bristow, called M. Paget, * by whō he was at the last (being of the age of xxvi. yeares, or therabout,) sent into Spayne, and by chaunce the ship ariuing at Lishborne (which is the chiefe Citie of Portugale) he taryed there about his Marchandise, where at the last he hauing gotten vnderstanding of the language and being accustomed to their maners, became a profitable seruāt both vnto his maister & others, in such things as pertayned vn^to the trade of that vocation. Whereunto he did so applye himselfe that neuerthelesse he in that popish country reseruing still the religion of his owne country of England, euer kept himself sound and vndefiled from the Portugals superstition. There were also besides him diuers other good men in y^e same Cittie. * Neither did he lacke good books or the conference of good and honest men, vnto whome he would oftentimes bewaile his imbecilitie and weakenes that he was neither sufficiently touched w^t the hatred of his sinnes, neither yet inflamed with the loue of godlines.

Whilest hee was there abiding, it happened that there should be a solemne maryage,* celebrate y^e first day of September in the yeare abouesayd, betweene two Princes: to say, the sonne of the king of Portugale, & the Spanishe K. his daughter. The mariage daye being come, there was great resort of the Nobility and Estates. There lacked no Bishops with Miters, nor Cardinals with their hats, to set out this royall wedding. To be short they wēt forward to the wedding with great Pompe, where a great concourse Page 1365 of people resorted, some of good will, some for seruice sake, and some (as the maner is) to gaze and looke. Great preparation of all parties was there throughout the whole Citie, as in such cases is accustomed, and all places were filled with mirth and gladnes. In this great assembly of the whole kingdome, William Gardiner, who, albeit he did not greatly esteeme such kind of spectacles, yet being allured through the fame and report thereof, was there also, comming thether early in the morning, to the intent he might haue the more oportunitie and better place to behold and see.

The houre being come, they flocked into the church with great solemnitie and pompe: the King first, and then euery estate in order.* The greater persons, the more ceremonies were about them. After all things were set in order, they went forward to the celebrating of their Masse: for that alone serueth for all purposes. The Cardinall did execute, with much singing and orgaine playing. The people stood with great deuotion and silence, praying, looking, kneeling, and knocking, their mindes being fully bent and set, as it is the maner, vppon the externall sacramente. How greuously these things did pricke and mooue this yong mans minde, it can not be expressed, partly to beholde the miserable absurditie of those things, and partly to see the folly of the common people: and not only of the common people,* but specially to see the King himself and his Councell, with so many sage and wise men (as they seemed) to be seduced with like Idolatry as the common people were: In so much that it lacked very little, but that he would euen that present day haue done some notable thing in the Kings sight and presence, but that the great prease and throng that was about him, letted that he could not come vnto the altar. What neede many words? when the ceremonies were ended, he commeth home very sad and heauy in his minde: in so much that all his fellowes marueiled greatly at him: Who albeit vpon diuers coniectures they conceiued the cause of his sadnes, notwithstanding they did not fully vnderstand that those matters so much troubled his godly mind: neither yet did he declare it vnto any man, but seeking solitarines & secret places falling downe prostrate before God, with manifold teares bewayled the neglecting of his dutie, deliberating with himselfe how he might reuoke that people from their impietie and superstition.

In this deliberation and aduise his mind being fully settled, and thinking that the matter ought not to be any longer differred, he renounced the world, making vp all his accompts so exactly (as well of that whiche was due vnto him,* as that whiche he ought vnto others) that no man coule iustly aske so muche as one farthing. Which thyng done, he continued night and day in prayer calling vppon God, and continuall meditation of the Scriptures, that scarcely he would take any meate by day,* or slepe by night, or that most, aboue an houre or two of rest in the night, as Pendigrace his fellow companion both at bed and boord, being yet aliue, can testifie.

The Sondag came againe to be celebrate either wyth like pompe & solemnitie,* or not much lesse, wheras the sayd William was present earely in the morning, very cleanly appparelled euen of purpose, that he might stand neare the altar without repulse. Within a while after commeth the King with all his Nobles. Then Gardiner setteth hymselfe as neare the alter as he might, hauing a Testament in his hand, the which he diligently read vpon, and prayed, vntill the time was come that he had appointed to worke his feate.* The Masse began, which was then solemnised by a Cardinall. Yet he sate still. He which said Masse, proceeded, he consecrated, sacrificed, lifted vp on high, shewed his God vnto the people, all the people gaue great reuerence, and as yet he stirred nothing. At the last they came vnto that place of the Masse, whereas they vse to take the ceremoniall Hoste, and tosse it too and fro round about the Chalice, making certaine circles and semicircles. Then the sayd William Gardiner not being able to suffer any longer, ranne speedily vnto the Cardinall: and (which is vncredible to be spoken) euen in the presence of the King and all his Nobles and Citizens,* with the one hande he snatched away the cake from the Priest, and trode it vnder hys feete, and with the other hand ouerthrew the chalice. Thys matter at the first made them all abashed, but by and by there rose a great tumult, and the people began to cry out. The Nobles and the common people ranne together, amongst whome, one drawing out his dagger, gaue him a great wounde in the shoulder, and as he was aboute to strike him againe to haue slaine him, the King twise commaunded to haue him saued. So by that meanes they abstained from murther.*

After the tumult was ceased, he was brought vnto the King: by whome he was demaunded what countreyman he was,* and how he durst be so bold to worke such a contumely against his Maiestie, and the Sacramentes of the Church? He answered: Most noble King, I am not ashamed of my Countrey, which am an Englishman both by birth and religion, and am come hether only for traffike of Marchaundise. And when I saw in this famous assembly so great Idolatry committed, my conscience neither ought neither could any longer suffer, but that I must needes do that which you haue scene me presently do. Whiche thyng (most noble Prince) was not done nor thought of me for any contumely or reproche of your presence, but onely for this purpose (as before God I do clearely confesse) to seeke the only saluation of this people.

When they heard that he was an Englishman,* and called to remembraunce how the Religion was restored by K. Edward, they were by and by brought in suspition, that he had bene suborned by Englishmen thus to do, to mocke and deride their religion. Wherefore they were the more earnest vpon him to knowe who was the author and procurer that he should commit that act. Unto whome he answered, desiring them that they would conceiue no suche suspition of him, for so much as he was not moued thereunto by any man, but only by his owne conscience.* For otherwise there was no man vnder the heauen, for whose sake he would haue put himselfe into so manifest daunger: but that he ought this seruice first vnto God, and secondarily vnto their saluation: wherefore if he had done anye thing which were displeasaunt vnto them, they ought to impute it vnto no man, but vnto themselues, which so vnreuerētly vsed the holy Supper of the Lord vnto so great Idolatry, not without great ignominie vnto the Church, violation of the Sacraments, and the perill of their owne soules, without they repented.

Whilest that he spake these with many other thynges more vnto this effect very grauely and stoutly, the bloud ran abundantly out of the wounde, so that he was ready to faint. Whereupon Surgeons were sent for, whereby he might be cured if it were possible, and be reserued for further examination, and more greeuous torment. For they were fully perswaded that this deede had diuers abbettors and setters on: which was the cause that all the other englishmen also in the same citie came into suspition, and were commaunded to safe custody. Amongst whome,* Pendigrace, because he was his bedfellow, was greeuously tormented and examined more then the residue, and scarcely was deliuered after two yeares imprisonment. The other were much sooner set at libertie at the intercession of a certaine Duke. Notwithstanding their suspition coulde not yet be satisfied, but they came vnto his chamber to seeke if there were any letters,* to vnderstand and find out the author of this enterprise. And when as they coulde finde nothing there, they came againe vnto him being greuously wounded, with tormentes to extort of him the author of this fact, and to accuse him as guilty of most greuous heresie. Of both whiche pointes, with suche dexteritie as hee could, he cleered himselfe. Wherein, albeit he spake in the Spanish tong well, yet he vsed the Latin tong much more exactly.

But they not being therewith satisfied, added another straunge kynde of torment, which (as I suppose) passeth the Bull of Phalaris. Because there shoulde no kynde of extreme crueltie be left vnassayed,* they caused a linnen cloth to be sowed round like a ball, the which they wyth violence put downe his throate vnto the bottome of hys stomacke, tied with a small string which they held in their hands, and when it was downe, they pulled it vp agayne with violence, so plucking it too and fro through the meate pipe, in suche sorte, as with muche lesse grieve they might haue ridde him out of his life at once.

Thus at the last, when all tormentes and tormenters were weered, and that it did nothing at all preuaile to go this way to worke, they asked him whether he did not repent his wicked and seditious deede. As touching the deede, aunswered, that it was so farre off that he did repent, that if it were to do againe, he thought he should do the same. But as touching the maner of the deede, he was not a little sory that it was done in the Kings presence to the disquietnes of his minde. Howbeit, that was not to be imputed vnto him, which neither enterprised or thought vpon any such matter,* but rather to be ascribed vnto the King, in that he hauing power, woulde not prohibite so great Idolatry vsed among his people. This he spake with great feruencie.

After they had vsed all kynde of torments, and saw th^t there could nothing more be gathered of him, and also that through his woundes and paynes he could not long liue▪ they brought him three dayes after to execution. And first Page 1366 of all,* bringing him into the Uestry, cut off his right hand, which he taking vp with his left hād, kissed. Then he was brought into the market place, wheras his other hand also was cut off: which he kneeling downe vpon the ground, also kissed. These things thus done after the manner and fashion of Spaine, his armes being bound behinde him, & his feete vnder the horse bellye, hee was caried to the place of execution.

☛ The order and manner of the cruell handlinge of William Gardiner, an English Merchaunt, tormented and burned in Portugall, in the cause of God and of his truthe.

There was in that place a certaine engine, frō the which a great rope comming downe by a pulley,* was fastened about the middle of this Christian Martyr, which first pulled him vp. Then was there a great pile of woode sette on fire vnderneath him, into the which he was by little & little let downe, not with the whole body, but so, that his fete only felt the fire. Then he was hoised vp, and so let downe againe into the fire, and thus oftentimes pulled vppe and downe. In which great torment for al that, he continued w^t a constant spirite: and the more terribly he burned, y^e more vehemently he prayed.

At the last, when his feete were consumed, the tormentors asked him whether hee did not yet repent hym of his deede,* and exhorted him to call vpon oure Ladie and the Saintes. Wherunto he answered, that as he had done nothing whereof hee did repent him, so hee had the lesse neede of the helpe of our Lady or any other Sainte: and what externall torments so euer they vsed, the truthe (he sayde) remaineth alwaies one and like vnto it selfe: the which as he had before confessed in his life, so would he not nowe denie it in his death▪ desiring them to leaue of such vanities and follie. For when as Christ did cease any more to be our aduocate, then he would pray to our lady to be his aduocate,* and sayd: O eternall God, father of all mercies, I beseeche thee looke downe vpon thy seruant. &c. And when as they sought by all meanes possible to stoppe his praying, and praising God in this sorte, he cried out with a loude voyce, rehearsing the 43. Psalme: Iudica me Deus, & discerne causam meam, de gente non sancta. Iudge me O God, and defende my cause against the vnmercifull people.

He was not come vnto the latter ending of the Psalme, when as they pulling him vp and downe in the fire for the more torment, the rope being burnt a sonder, he fel downe in the midst therof: wheras geuing his body for a sacrifice, hee chaunged his temporall paines for perpetuall rest and quietnesse.

Thus it seemed good in the sighte of God by this Messenger to prouoke the Portugales to y^e sincere knowledge of him: and therefore they ought the more to haue acknowledged the great loue & kindnesse of God offred vnto them, and also the more to be mindefull of their owne duetie and thankfulnessse towards him. And if it be so great an offence Page 1367 to violate the ordinaunces of mans lawe, and to contemne the Ambassadors of Kyngs and Princes, lette the Portugalles and all other looke well vnto it,* what it is so cruelly to handle the heauenly messenger of the high God. Neither was this their cruelty altogether vnreuenged by the mighty hand of God,* when as not onely the very same night, amongst diuers of the kings ships which were in y^e next hauen ready to saile, one was burned, being set on fire by a sparcke of Gardiners fire driuen thether w^t the winde, but also y^e kings sonne which then was married, died within halfe a yere,* and the next yere after the King himselfe also died, and so both within one yere after the tormenting of this blessed Martyr.

Thus the body of the sayd Gardiner being consumed, yet the rage & fury of the common people so ceased not, but they were as cruell against him being deade, as they were when he was aliue, and with their tongues tormēted this Martyr, when they could doe no more with their handes: yea for very madnes they would scarce tarry vntil he were burned, but euery man as they could catch any pece of him halfe burned, threwe it into the sea.

Thys Sacrifice thus ended, the Cleargie, to pacifie Gods wrath which they feared,* for the violating of theyr aultar, appoynted a solemne fast of certaine dayes, for penaunce to purge that facte, which facte rather shoulde haue taught them to purge them selues, and to put away theyr filthy Idolatrie, and much rather they shoulde haue fasted & repented for that their extreeme cruelty they had shewed vnto the liuely member of Christ.

Albeit this death of William Gardiner seemeth to haue profited very many of them litle or nothing: yet for all that there are some (as I haue hearde diuers reporte) oute of whose mindes the remembraunce of this constant Martir can neuer be pulled, and is so freshe yet amongst them, as if it were nowe lately done: and finally, albeit it be a good while since hee was put to death, yet the memorie of hys death, as frutefull seede, hath taken such roote in some, that euen vnto this present day, he is a liuely and diligent preaching vnto them, against superstition and Idolatry vsed in their Churches. Ex testimonio N. Fildi, Pendigrace, & aliorum, qui rei gestae interfuerunt.

The tragicall hystorie of the worthy L. Edward Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, with the whole cause of his troubles and handling.

AFTER so many troublous matters in this historie aforepassed, comming nowe to the lamentable and tragicall narration of the L. Edward duke of Somerset, ^{}the kings vncle, and Protector of his person & of his realme, I could not wel enter into the story of him, without some premonition first to all noble personages, ^{}of what honor or calling soeuer within this realme, by way of history briefly to admonish them, no man to plant any trust or assurance vpon the brickle pillars of worldly prosperity, howe high soeuer it seemeth, consideringe that there is no state so high, but it hath his ruine, wisdomes so circumspecte, but it maye bee circumvented, no vertue so perfecte, but it may be enuyed, neither any mans trade so simple, but it maye be beguiled. And therefore seeing the condition of mortall things is so, ^{*}that no man can alwaies stand in this so ruinous a world: y^e surest way is euery man to chuse his standing so, that his fall may be y^e easier. But because my purpose is (as I haue said in the stories before) to abridge and make short, I will here stay, referring to the secrete cōsideration of that which remaineth further by me in this matter to be vttered: and so falling into the storie of the Lorde Protectoure Duke of Somerset, we will (the Lorde willing) declare in order the original and whole occasion of his trouble and decay, euen from the beginning.

King Edward, after that both his father and mother were dead, had three vncles least him by his mothers side, Edward, Thomas, and Henry Semer, of the which two first, one was made Protectour of the Realme, and the other high admirall of the same. These two brethren, so long as they were knit & ioyned together in amitie and cōcorde, ^{*}preserued both themselues, the king their nephew, and the whole common wealth from the violence and feare of all danger. But the subtil old serpent alwaies enuying mans felicitie, through slanderous tongues sought to sowe matter, first of discord betwene them, then of suspition, and last of all extreme hatred: in so much that the Protectour suffered his brother being accused (whether truely or falsely the Lorde knoweth) to be condemned, and to loose hys heade. Wherby it came to passe (whether by y^e correction of Gods iudgement vpon him, or whether that he after the death of his brother, and the king being yet but yong and tender of age, was the lesse able to shift for himselfe) that not long after he was ouermatched and ouerthrowen of his enemies, and so cast into the Tower, and at last lost hys head also, to the great lamentation of many good men, as in the sequele of this hystorie foloweth to be declared.

For the better introduction of which hystorie, firste to begin with the foresaide brother of the Lorde Protectoure, ^{}namely Sir Thomas Semer high Admirall of England, and the kings Uncle, here is to vnderstande that he hadde married Queene Katherine late wife to kinge Henrye the eight, of whome ye heard before, pag. 1342. ^{}Now it happened (vppon what occasion I knowe not) that there fell a displeasure betwixt the sayde Queene and the Duchesse of Somerset, and therupon also in the behalfe of their wiues, displeasure and grudge began betwene the brethrē.

Which albeit through perswasion of frendes it was for a time appeased betweene them: * yet in shorte space after (perchaunce not without y^e priuie setting forward o^r some whych were backefrendes to the Gospell) it brake out againe, both to the trouble of the Realme, and especially to the cōfusion of them both, as after it is prooued. First to the Lorde Admiralles charge it was laide, that hee purposed to destroy the young king, and translate the Crowne vnto hymselfe, and for the same being attainted and condemned, did suffer at Tower hill the 20. of Marche. An. 1549. As manye there were which reported that the Dutches of Somersette had wrought his death: so manye moe there were, * who misdoubting the long standing of the Lord Protectour in hys state and dignity, thought and affirmed no les, but that the fall of the one brother, would be the ruine of the other: the experiment whereof as it hath often ben proued, so in these also eftsoones it ensued.

It was not long after the beheading of the Lorde Admirall, but insurrections began to kindle the same yeare in diuers quarters of the realme, as is aboue storied. * By the occasion wherof the lord Russel, lord priuy Seale was sent to the West parts, and the lord Dudley Earle of Warwike was sent wth an armie into Norfolke: where bothe he hymselfe & a great number of Gentlemen that were with hym, meeting with the rebels were in great daunger: notwithstanding in the ende the ouerthrowe was geuen to the rebels, which was aboute the beginning of Septemb. 1549. After this victorie atchieued, in the next moneth folowing, whiche was October, * howe the matter fell oute betweene the Lorde Protectour and certaine other Lordes, I knowe not, but at the retourne of the Earle of Warwike aforesaid, greate workinge and consultation there was amonge the Lordes, assembling them selues in the house of M. Yorke, and at Bainardes Castle, and in the Lorde Maiors house at London, against the Lorde Protectoure remaining the• with the King at Hampton Court. Of the which businesse and trouble, thus the Lorde Protectoure wryteth in hys letters to the Lorde Russell in the West countrey, as followeth.

A letter of the L. Protectour, to the L. Russel, Lord priuie Seale, concerning troubles working against him.

AFTER our right hartly commendations to your good Lordship, heere hath of late risen such a conspiracie against the kinges Maiestie and vs, as neuer hath bene seene, * the which they can not maintaine, but with such vaine letters and false tales surmised, as was neuer meant nor entended on vs. They pretend and say, that we haue solde Bulloigne to the French, and that we do withhold wages from the souldiours, and other such tales and letters they doe spreade abroad (of the which, if any one thing were true, we would not wish to liue) the matter now being brought to a marueilous extremitie, such as we wold neuer haue thought it could haue come vnto, especially of those men towardes the kings maiestie and vs, of whom we haue deserued no such thing, but r^{ather} much fauour and loue. But the case being as it is, this to require and pray you to hastē you hither, to the defence of the kings maiestie, in such force and power as you may, to shew the parte of a true Gentleman, and of a very frende: the which thing we truste God shall rewarde and the kinges Maiestie in time to come, and we shall neuer be vnmindefull of it too. We are sure you shal haue other letters from them, but as ye tender your duety to the kings Maiestie, we require you to make no stay, but immediately repair with such force as yee haue, to his highnesse Castle of Windsore, and cause the rest of such force as yee may make to followe you. And so we bid you right heartily farewell.

From Hampton Court, the sixt of October.

Your Lordships assured louing frend, Edward Somerset.

An answer to the L. Protector's letter.

TO this letter of the Lorde Protectoure sent the sixte of Octob. the L. Russel returning answere againe vppon Page 1368 the eight of the sayde moneth, first lamenteth the heauie dissention fallen betwene the Nobilitye and him, which he taketh for suche a plague, as a greater could not be sent of almighty God vpon this Realme, being the next way (saith he) to make of vs conquerors, slaues, & like to induce vpon the whole realme an vniuersal calamitye & thraldome, vnlesse the mercifull goodnes of the Lorde do helpe,* & some wise order be taken in staying these great extremities. And as touching the Dukes request in his letters, for as much as he heard before of this broile of the Lords, & feared least soe conspiracie had ben meant against the kings person, he hasted forward with such company as he coulde make, for the surety of y^e king, as to him appertained. Now perceiuing by the Lordes letters sent vnto him the same sixte day of Oct^r. these tumults to rise vpon priuate causes betwene him and them, he therfore thought it expedient that a conuenient power should be leuied, to be in a readines to withstand the worste (what perils soeuer might ensue) for the preservation both of the king, & state of the realm from the 〈◇〉 of forraine enemies, and also for the staying of bloudshed, if any such thing should be intended betwixt the partes in the heate of thys faction. And this hee thinking beste for discharge of his allegiance, humbly beseecheth his grace to haue y^e same also in speciall regard and consideration, first that the kings Maiestie be put in no feare, & that if there be any such thing wherein he hath geuen iust cause to them thus to proceede, hee will so conforme him selfe, as no such priuate quarels do redound to the publike disturbance of the Realme: certifying moreouer the Duke, that if it were true whyche he vnderstandeth by the letters of the Lordes, y^t he should send about proclamations and letters for raising vp of the commons, he liked not the same. Notwithstanding hee trusted well, that his wisdom would take such a way, as no effusion of bloud should follow.

And thus muche being contained in his former letters of the eight of October, in his next letters againe, wrytten the 11. day of Octob. the said Lord Russel reioysing to heare of the most reasonable offers of the Lord Protectour made to the Lordes,* wryteth vnto him, & promiseth to doe what in the vttermost power of him (and likewise of sir W. Harbert ioyned together with him) doe 〈◇〉, to worke some honorable reconciliation betwene him & them: so as his sayd offers being accepted & satisfied, some good cōclusion might ensue, according to their good hope & expectation: Signifying moreouer, that as touching the leuying of men, they had resolved to haue the same in readinesse for the benefite of the realme,* to occurre all incōueniences whatsoeuer, either by forraine inuasion or otherwise might happen, & so hauing their power at hand, to drawe neare, wherby they might haue the better oportunitie to be solicitours, and a meanes for this reformation on both parties. &c. And thus much for answer of the Lord Russel to the Lorde Protectours letters.

But nowe to the matter againe of the Lordes, who together with the Earle of Warwike (vppon what occasion God knoweth) being assembled at London,* as ye heard, against the Lorde Protector: when the king with his counsaile at Hampton court heard therof, first Secretarye P^rter with the kings message was sent vnto them, whome the Lords notw^tstanding detained still with them, making as yet no answer to the message. Whe[•]upon the L. Protectour wryteth to them in this maner as followeth.

A letter of the Lorde Protectour, to the Counsaile at London.

MY Lordes, we commend vs most hartily vnto you, & wheras the kings Maiestie was infourmed that you were assembled in such sorte as you doe and nowe remaine, and was aduised by vs and such other of his Counsaile as were then heere aboute his persone, to send M. Secretarie Peter vnto you, with such message as whereby mighte haue ensued the suretie of hys Maiesties persone, with preservation of his realme and subiects, & the quiet both of vs and your selues, as maister Secretarye can well declare to you: his maiestie and we of his Counsaile heere doe not a litle maruel that you stay still with you the sayd M. Secretarie, & haue not as it were vouchsafed to send aunswer to his Maiestie, neyther by him nor yet any other. And for our selues we doe much more maruell and are right sory, as both wee and you haue good cause to be, to see the manner of your doinges bent[•] with violence, to bring the kings Maiesty and vs to these extremities. Which as we doe intende, if you wil take no other way but violence, to defend (as nature and our allegeaunce doeth binde vs) to extremitie of death, and to put all to Gods hand, who geueth victory as it pleaseth him: so that if any reasonable conditions and offers woulde take place (as hetherto none hath bene signified vnto vs frō you, nor we do not vnderstand what you do require or seeke, or what you do meane) & that you do seek no hurt to the kings Maiesties person: as touching all other priuate matters, to auoid the effusion of Christian bloud, and to preserue the kings Maiesties person, his realme and subiectes, you shall finde vs agreeable to any reasonable conditions that you will require. For we doe esteeme the kings wealth and tranquillitie of the realme, more then all other worldly things, yea more then our owne life. Thus praying you to send vs your determinate answer heerein by M. Secretarie Peter, or if you will not let him go, by this bearer: we beseeche God to geue both you and vs grace to determine this matter, as maye be to Gods honour, the preservation of the king, and the quiet of vs all, which may be, if the fault be not in you. And so we bid you most heartily fare well. From the kings maiesties

Castle of Windsore, the 7. of Octob. 1549.

Your Lordships louing frend, E. Somerset.

After these letters receiued, and the reasonable condition of the Lorde Protectour, and yet not much regarded of the Lordes, they persisting still in their pretended purpose, tooke this aduise: first to keepe themselves in the Citie of London, as strong as they might: and therfore calling vpon the Maior and the Aldermen, they willed them in any case to prouide a good and substantiall watch by nyght,* and a good warde by day, for the safegard of their Citie, and the portes and gates thereof: which was consented vnto, and the Cōpanies of London in theyr turnes warned to watch and warde accordingly.

Then the sayd Lordes and Counsaillours demaunded of the Lorde Maior and hys brethren 500. menne to ayde them to fetch the Lorde Protectour out of Windsore from the king: but therunto the Maior answered,* that he could graunt none aide without the assent of the common Counsaile of the citie: wherupon the next day a common counsell was warned. But in this meane time the said Lordes of the Counsaile assembled thēselues at the Lorde Maiors house of London, who then was Syr Henrye Amcottes Fishmonger, and W. Locke Mercer, and sir Iohn Aileph Sheriffes of the said citie, and there the said Counsaile did agree and publishe a Proclamation forthwith agaynst the Lorde Protector, the effect of which Proclamation was as followeth.

1 First,* that the Protector by his malitious and euill gouernment, was the occasion of all the sedition that of late happened within the realme.

2 The losse of the kings peeces in France.

3 That he was ambitious and sought his owne glorye, as appeared by building of most sumptuous & costly houses, in the time of the kings warres.

4 That hee esteemed nothinge the graue Counsell of the Counsaillours.

5 That he sowed diuision betwene the Nobles, the gentlemen, and the commons.

6 That the Nobles assembled themselves together at Londō for none other purpose, but to haue caused the protectour to haue liued wythin limites, and to haue put such order for the suretie of the kings maiestie as appertained: whatsoever the Protectours doinges were, whyche they sayd were vnnaturall, ingrate, and traiterous.

7 That the Protectour sclandered the Counsaile to the king, and did that in him lay, to cause variaunce betwene the king and the nobles.

8 That hee was a great traitor, and therefore the Lordes desired the citie & commons to aid them, to take hym from the king.

And in witnes and testimonie of the contents of the said Proclamation, the Lordes subscribed theyr names, whych were these.

- The Lorde Rich, Lord Chauncellour.
- The Lord S. Iohn, Lord great maister, & president of the Counsaile.
- The Lord Marques of Northampton.
- The Earl of Warwike, Lord great Chamberlaine.
- The Earle of Arundel, L. Chamberlaine.
- The Earle of Shrewsburie.
- The Earle of Southhampton, Wriothesley.

Page 1369 After the foresaide Proclamation was Proclaimed, the Lordes or the most parte of them continuuing and lying in London, came y^e next day to the Guild hal, during the time that the Lord Maior and their brethren sate in their Court or inner chamber,* and entred and communed a long while with the Maior, and at the last the Maior and his brethren came foorth vnto the common Counsaile, where was read the kings letter sent to the Maior and citizens, commaunding them to aid him with a thousand wel appoynted men out of their citie, and to send the same with all speede to his Castle at Windsore.

Thys Letter by name was directed to Syr Henrye Amcottes knighte Lorde Maior, to Syr Roulande Hyll knight, Maior electe, and to the Aldermen and common Counsaile of the Citie of London. The daye and Date of the Letter, was the sixte of October, in the thirde yeare of his raigne, being assigned with the hand of the King, and of the Lorde Protectour, the contentes of which letter, for the satisfaction of the reader, are heere to be seene in maner and forme as followeth.

EDWARD. By the King.

TRustie and welbeloued, we greete you wel. Wee charge and commaunde you most earnestly to geue order with all speede for the defence and preservation of that our citie of London for vs,* and to leuy out of hande, and to put in order as many as conueniently you maye, well weaponed and arraied, keeping good watch at the gates, and to sende vs hither for the defence of oure person, one thousand of that our Cittie, of trustie and faithfull men to attend vpon vs and our most entirely beloued vncle, Edward Duke of Somerset, Gouvernour of our person, and Protector of our Realmes, dominions, and subiects, well harnessed, and with good and conuenient weapon: so that they do make their repaire hither vnto vs this night, if it be possible, or at the least to morow before noone, and in the meane time to doe what as appertaineth vnto your duetie for ours and our sayd vncles defence against all such as attempt any conspiracie or enterprise of violence against vs our sayd Vncle, & as you knowe best for our preservation and defence at thys present. Geuen vnder our Signet at our Honor of Hampton Court, the sixte of October the thirde yeare of oure raigne.

You shall farther geue credite to our trustie and welbeloued Owen Cleydon, the bearer heereof, in all such things as hee shall further declare vnto you on the behalfe of vs and our said vncle the Lord Protectour.

Edward Somerset.

This Letter of the king and of the Lorde Protectoure was not so secretly deuised, nor so speedily sente, but the Lordes keeping at London, had knowledge immediately thereof (by the meanes, as some suppose, of the Lorde Paget, who was then with the King and the Protectour, but the truth the Lorde knoweth) being there ready furnished with their owne bandes of seruing men, and other souldiours and men of armes.

Who forthwith vpon the same addressed their letters in semblable wise to the sayd Lorde Maior and Aldermen, in the kings name, not onely for supportation of armed men to serue their purposes, and for a sufficient watche to fortifie their Citie, but also that they should not obey any suche letters, Proclamations, or Iniunctions sent to them from the Duke. Which letter of the Lordes at the same instante came likewise to the Lorde Maior and his brethren, the 6. day of the sayde moneth of Octob. The tenour and copie of which letter heere ensueth.

To our very good Lord, the Lord Maior, Aldermen, and Citizens of London.

AFTER our right hearty commendations vnto your good Lordshippe: knowing your heartie fauour and earnest zeales to the preseruacion of the person of the kings Maiestie & of this realme, and other his maiesties realmes and dominions, we haue thought good to aduertise you, that notwithstanding all the good aduice and Counsell that wee coulde geue to the Duke of Somerset, to staye him selfe wythin reasonable limites, and to vse hys gouernement nowe in the tender age of hys Maiestie, in suche sorte as myght tende to his highnesse suretie, to the conseruation of hys estate, and to his honour: the sayde Duke neuerthelesse still continuing in his pride, couetousnes, and ambition: ceaseth not daily by all the waies and meanes he can deuise, to enriche him selfe without measure, and to impouerish his Maiestie.

Hee buildeth in foure or fiue places moste sumptuously, and leaueth the poore souldiours vnpaid of their wages, vnuictualled, and in all things so vnfurnished, as the losses lately sustained, to the greatest dishonor that euer came to the king & this realme, doe declare. Hee soweth daily diuision betweene the Nobles and Gentlemen, and the Commons. Hee rewardeth and entertaineth a number of those that were Captaines of the Commons in these late insurrections: and finally in suche wise subuerteth all lawes, iustice, and good order (as it is euident) that putting hys trust in the Commons, and perceiuing that the Nobles and Gentlemen shoulde be an impediment to him in his deuilish purposes, hee laboureth first to haue them destroyed, and thinketh after easily enough to atchieue his desire, which it appeareth plainly, is to occupie the kings Maiesties place: For his doings, who soeuer list to beholde them, doe manifestly declare, that hee mindeth neuer to render account to his Maiestie of his proceedings.

These thinges, with many moe too long to recite, considered, wee pondered wyth our selues, that either wee muste trauaile for some reformation, or wee must in effecte as it were consent with him to the destruction of oure soueraigne Lorde and Countrey. Whereuppon laying apart all respectes, and resting onely vppon our dueties, wee ioyned in Counsell, and thought quietly to haue treated the matter with him. Who perceiuing that we ioyned for the king, and woulde haue suche order as might be for the suertie of his Maiesties persone, and the common wealth, strait put him selfe in force, and resteth at plaine poynt (as it appeareth) eyther to goe through with his detestable purpose, in sorte as hee hath done, or to trie it by the sworde.

Nowe, for as much as we see presently, that vnlesse there be a reformation, the persone of the kings Maiestie is in moste certaine daunger, and this Realme our naturall Countrey lyke to be destroyed wyth all our posterities, like as we haue againe fully resolved wyth Gods helpe, eyther to deliuer the kings Maiestie and the realme from this extreeme ruine and destruction, or to spend our liues for the declaration of our faithfull hearts and dueties: so knowing your heartie good willes and trouth to his Maiestie, and therefore nothing doubting of your readinesse to ioyne with vs in our godly purpose, wee thoughte good to lette you knowe the very trouth of our enterprise, and in the kings Maiesties behalfe to require you, not onely to putte good and substantiall order for watche and warde, but also to haue an earnest continuall regarde to the preseruacion within your City, of all harneis, weapons, and munitions, so as none be suffered to be conueyed to the sayde Duke, nor any others attending about him: and besides that, you from hencefoorth obey no letters, proclamations, nor other commandements to be sent from the sayd Duke. And thus we bid your Lordship most heartily fare well.

From London, the sixt of October.

After the receiuinge of these two Letters aboue mentioned, the one from the King, the other from the Lordes,* whyche came both at one instaunte, wyth contrarye commaundement to the Lorde Maior and Citizens of London, the case seemed harde to them, and very doubtfull (as it was in deede) what waye to take, and what were best for the Citizens to doe. On the one side the name and authority of the king was much, on the other side the power and garrisons of the Lordes, lyinge then in London, was not little, which seemed then to be suche, as would haue no repulse.

The case thus standing perplexedly, first by the mouth of the Recorder it was requested,* that the Citizens would graunt their aide rather vnto the Lords, for that the Protectour had abused both the kings maiestie, and the whole Realme, & that without he were taken from the king, and made to vnderstande his follie, this Realme was in great hazard, and therfore required that the citizens would willingly assent to ayd the Lordes with 500. men.

Hereunto of a great parte of the Common Counsaile, was no other answeare made but silence. But the Recorder (who at that time was M. Brooke) still cryed vppon them for aunswere.* At the last stepped vp a wise and a good Citizen named George Stadlowe, and sayde:

In thys case, it is good for vs to thinke of things past, to auoyde the daunger of thynges to come. I remember (sayeth he) in a storie wrytten in Fabians Chronicle, of the warre betweene the King and his Barons, which was in the time of king Henry the thirde, & the same time the Barons (as our Lordes do now) demaunded aide of the Maior and citie of London, and that in a rightfull cause for the common weale, which was for y^e execution of diuers good lawes against y^e king, which would not suffer those lawes Page 1370 to be put in execution: and the citie did aide them, & it came to an open battel, and the Lordes preuailed against y^e king, and tooke the king and sonne prisoners,* and vpon certaine conditions the Lordes restored the kinge and his sonne againe to their liberties, & among all other conditions thys was one, that the king should not only graunt his pardon to the lordes, but also to the citizens of London: the which was graunted, yea and the same was ratified by act of parliament. But what folowed of it? Was it forgottē? No sure^{ly}, nor forgeuen neither, during the kings life. The liberties of the citie were taken away, straungers appoynted to be our heads and gouernours, the Citizens geuen away body and goods, and from one persecution to an other wer most miserably afflicted. Such is it to enter into the wrath of a Prince, as Salomon sayeth: The wrath and indignation of a Prince is death. Wherefore, for as much as this aide is required of the kinges Maiestie,* whose voyce wee ought to hearken vnto, for he is our high Shepehearde, rather then vnto the Lordes, and yet I woulde not wishe the Lordes to be clearely shaken off: my counsell is, that they wyth vs, and we with them maye ioyne in sute, and make our moste humble petition to the kings maiestie, that it would please his highnes to heare such complaint against the gouernement of the Lorde Protectoure, as maye be iustly alleaged and prooued, and I doubte not, but thys matter will be so pacified, that neither shal the king, nor yet the Lordes haue cause to seeke for further aide, neither we to offende any of them both.

After this tale the Commons stayed, and the Lorde Maior and his brethren for that time brake vppe, till they had further communed wyth the Lordes. To make short, I lette passe what order by the Citie was taken.* But the conclusion was, that the Lordes (vppon what occasion I knowe not) sate the next daye in Counsaile in the Starre chamber, & from thence sente sir Philip Hobby wyth theyr letter of credence to the kings maiestie, beseeching his maiestie to geue credit to that which the sayd sir Philip should declare vnto his maiestye in their names: and y^e king gaue him liberty to speake, and most gently heard all that he had to say. Who so hādled the matter, declaring his message in the name of the Lords, that in the end the Lord Protector was commaunded from the kings presence,* & shortly was committed to warde in a tower within the castle of Windsore, called Bewchamp Tower, and soone after were stayed sir Tho. Smith, maister Whalley, master Fisher, & many other gentlemen that attended vpon the Lorde Protectour. The same day the Lordes of the Counsaile resorted to the Kinge, and the next day they brought from thence the Lorde Protector, and the other that were there stayed, and conueyed them through the Citie of London vnto the Tower, and there left them.

Shortlye after the Lordes resorted vnto the Tower, and there charged the Lorde Protectour with sundry articles, as follow.

Articles obiected against the Lord Protectour.

1 IN primis, you tooke vppon you the office of Protectour and Gouernour, vpon condition expressly and specially, that you woulde doe nothinge in the kinges affaires, publicly or priuately, but by the assent of the late kinges executors.

2 Also you, contrary to the sayde condition, of your owne authority, did stay and let iustice, and subuerted the lawes, as wel by your letters, as by your commaundements.

3 Also, you caused diuers persones being arested and imprisoned for treason, murder, manslaughter, and felonie, to be discharged and set at large, against the kings lawes, and statutes of this realme.

4 Also, you haue made and ordained Lieutenants for the kings armies & other weighty affaires, vnder your owne wryting and seale.

5 Also, you haue communed with the Ambassadors of other Realmes, discoursing alone with them the waighty causes of this Realme.

6 Also you haue sometime rebuked, checked, and taunted, as well priuately as openly, diuers of the kings moste honourable Counsaillours, for shewing & declaring theyr aduises and opinions against your purposes in the kings waightye affaires, sayinge sometimes to them, that you neede not to open matters vnto them, and would therefore be otherwise aduised: and that you would, if they were not agreeable to your opinyon, put them oute, and take other at your pleasure.

7 Also, you had and helde against the lawe in your owne house, a Courte of Requestes, and thereby did enforce diuers the kinges subiectes to answeare for their free holdes and goodes, and determined the same to the subuersion of the same lawes.

8 Also, you being no Officer, without the aduise of the Counsaile, or the more part of them, did dispose of the Offices of the kings gift, for money, and graunted leases and Wardes of the kings, and gaue presentations to the kings benefices & bishoprikes, hauing no authority so to do. And farther, you did meddle with the selling of y^e kings landes.

9 Also, you commaunded Multiplication and Alcumistry to be practised, to abuse the kings coyne.

10 Also, you caused a proclamation to be made concerning enclosures, wherby the common people haue made diuers insurrections, & leuied open warre, and distre•ed & spoyled diuers of the kings subiects, which proclamation went forth against the wil of the whole counsaile.

11 Also, you haue caused a commission, with certaine articles thereunto annexed, to be made our concerning enclosures of commons, high wayes, decaying of cottages, and diuers other things, geuing the Commissioners authority to heare and determine the same causes, to the subuersion of the lawes and statutes of this realme: whereby much sedition, insurrection, and rebellion, haue risen and growen among the kings subiects.

12 Also, you haue suffered the rebels and traitours to assemble and to lie in campe and armor against the king, his Nobles and gentlemen, without any speedye subduing or repressing of them.

13 Also you did comfort and encourage diuers of the sayde rebelles, by geuing of them diuers summes o• your owne mony, and by promising to diuers of them, sees▪ rewards, and seruices.

14 Also, you in fauour of the sayde rebels, did againste the lawes, cause a Proclamation to be made, y^t none of the said rebels or traitors shuld be sued or vexed by any person for any their offences in the said rebellion, to the clear subuersion of the same lawes.

15 Also, you haue sayd in the time of the rebellion, that you liked wel the doings and proceedings of the sayde rebelles and traitors, and sayde, that the couetousnes of the gentlemen gaue occasion to the common people to rise: sayinge also, that better it were for the Commons to die, then pearish for lacke of liuing.

16 Also, you saide that the Lordes of the parlamente were loth to encline themselues to reformatiō of enclosures and other things: therfore the people had good cause to reforme the things them selues.

17 Also, you after the reporte and declaration of the defaultes and lackes reported to you by suche as did suruey Bulleine and the Peeces there, woulde neuer amende the same defaultes.

18 Also, you would not suffer the kings peeces beyōd the seas, called Newhauen, & Blacknest to be furnished wyth men and vitales, although you were aduertised of the defaults therin by the captaines of the same peeces & others, & were thereto aduertised by the kings Counsaile: wherby the French king being the kings open enemy, was encouraged and comforted to inuade and win the sayd peeces, to the kings great losse, and dishonor of his realme.

19 Also, you declared and published vntruely, as well to the kings maiestie, and other the young Lordes attendant vpon his graces persone, that the Lordes of the Counsaile at London, minded to destroy the king, & you required the king neuer to forget it, but to reuenge it: and likewise you required the yong Lordes to put the king in remembrance therof, to the entent to make sedition, and discord betwene the king and his Lordes.

20 Also, where the kinges Maiesties priuie Counsaile, of their loue and zeale that they did beare vnto the king & his Realme, did consulte at London to haue communed wyth you, to the entent to mooue you charitablie to amend your doings and misgouernment, you hearing of their sayd assembly, did cause to be declared by letters in diuers places, the said Lordes to be high traitors to the king, to the great disturbance of the realme.

And thus muche hitherto concerning the first trouble of the Lorde Protectoure, Duke of Somersette,* wyth the crimes and articles obiected against him, with his prisonment also in the Tower, and the terrible proclamatiō geuen out against hym. All which purposes of man, though they seemed fully intended to no lesse, but to the spilling of his life: yet the Lorde aboue, the onely disposer of all mens purposes,* so ordered the matter by the meanes of the kinge labouring for his Uncle, that in short while after, hee was lette out of the Tower, and the Proclamation, whyche before had made hym a traitor, wythin three dayes was called in agayne, a Domino factum est istud,) wyth commaundement geuen, none of them to be solde. And so the Duke of Somerset graciously escaping thys aduersitie, was againe Page 1371 restored, though not to his former office, yet vnto libertie: wherein he continued the space of two yeares and two dayes.

After the which time of respite being expired, the sayde Duke of Somerset was apprehended & committed againe to the Tower,* and wyth him also Sir Michael Stanhop, sir Raufe Uane, sir Miles Partridge, & other. &c. At length the time being come of his arrainment, the foresayde good Duke being conueied from the Tower, was brought thorow London with the axe of the tower before him, & wyth great preparance of bils, halbardes, pikes, and polaxes, in most forcible wise: a watch also sette and appoynted before euery mans doore through the hie streat of London,* and so was he brought into Westminster hal, where the Lords of the counsaile sitting as his iudges in the middle of the hal, vpon a newe scaffold, he was there before them arrayned and charged both with treason and felonie.

In the whiche iudgement, I passe ouer the vnseemely speech, the vile taunts, and despiteful rebukes, without all modesty or honesty,* vsed by certaine of the Sergeants and Iustices, and some other sitting there. Al which notwithstanding he patiently & quietly did suffer, neither storming inwardly in stomacke, nor reuiling them with woordes againe: but like a lambe folowing the true lambe, & example of all meekenes, was contēted to take al things at their handes, and with no lesse patience to beare now theyr vngentle and cruell railings,* then hee did before their glauering wordes and flatterings in time of his high estate and prosperitie. And as the patience of this good Duke was marueilous in forbearing his ennemies, so also was his discretion and temperance no lesse seene in answearing for himself to the articles to him objected: wherunto he wisely and substantially replied,* putting himselfe in the ende to be tried by his Peeres. Who then at length after consultation had, did frame and temper their verdict thus, that as concerning y^e case of treason, wherewith he was charged, they discharged him, but they accounted him guiltie of fellonie. When the people (which were there present to a great nōber) hearde the Lordes say, Not guiltie, (meaning by the case of treason) supposing no lesse, but y^t he had bene clearly acquitted by these woordes,* and especially seeing the Axe of the Tower to be carried away, for great ioy and gladnesse made an outcrie, well declaring theyr louing affection and hearty fauour vnto the Duke, whose life they greatly desired. But thys opinion of the people was deceiued, and the innocent Duke condemned to die for felonie. Which act of felonie had bene made a litle before against the rebels, and vnlawfull assembles, suche as shoulde seeke or procure the death of any Counsaillour,* so that euery suche attempt and procurement, according to the act, should be iudged felony. By the vertue of whych Act, the Duke being accused, with certaine other hys complices, to intende and purpose the death of the Duke of Northumberlande, and of certayne beside,* was therfore caste and condemned of felonie, and so was returned toward the Tower againe.

At whose passage throughe the Citie, greate exclamations and outcries were made againe of the people,* some reioycing y^t hee was acquitted, some bewayling that hee was condemned.

Thus the good Duke passing through a great parte of the Citie, landinge at the Crane of the Uinetrie, was conueyed vnto the Tower, where hee endured till the 22. of Ianuary. Upon the which day at the comminge downe of the letter of execution from the Kinge and the Counsaile, the foresayde Duke and Uncle to the Kyng, beinge founde no traitour, onely being caste by the Acte of Fellonye, was deliuered vnto the Sheriffes, and so brought to the place of execution.

Touching which execution, a few words here woulde be bestowed in describing the wonderful order and maner thereof, according as it hath faithfully ben suggested to vs vppon the credite of a certaine noble Personage, who not onely was there present at the deede doing, but also in a maner next vnto him vpon the scaffolde, beholding the order of all things with his eies, and with his penne also reporting the same in order and maner as here foloweth.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1552. the 22. day of Ianuary, in the sixte yeare of the raigne of king Edward the sixte, he being yet vnder age and gouernaunce of Tutours: the noble Duke of Somersette, vncle to kynge Edward, was brought out of the tower of London, and accordinge to the maner, deliuered to the Sheriffes of the Citie: and compassed round about w^t a great number of armed men, both of the garde and others, he was brought vnto the scaffolde on Tower hill: where as hee nothing chaunging neyther voyce nor countenance, but in a maner with the same gesture whych he commonly vsed at home, kneeling downe vppon both his knees, and lifting vpp his handes, commended himselfe vnto God.

After that he had ended a fewe short prayers, standing vp againe, and turning him selfe towarde the East side of the Scaffold, nothing at all abashed (as it seemed vnto me standing about the middest of the Scaffold, and diligently marking all things,) neither with the sight of the axe,* neyther yet of the hangman, or of present death: but wyth the like alacritie and chearefulnesse of minde and countenance as before times he was accustomed to heare the causes and Supplication of other, and especially the poore (towardes whom, as it were with a certaine fatherly loue to his children, he alwaies shewed himselfe moste attentiu) he vttered these wordes to the people.

Dearly beloued frendes,* I am broughte hither to suffer death, albeit that I neuer offended against the king, nether by word nor dede, and haue bene alwaies as faithful & true vnto this Realme, as any man hath bene. But for somuch as I am by a lawe condemned to die, I do acknowledge my selfe as well as others to bee subiecte thereunto. Wherefore to testifie my obedience whiche I owe vnto the lawes, I am come hither to suffer death: wherunto I willingly offer my selfe, with most hearty thanks vnto God, that hath geuen me this time of repentaunce, who myght thorowe sodaine death haue taken away my life, that neyther I should haue acknowledged him nor my selfe.

Moreouer (dearly beloued frendes) there is yet somewhat that I must put you in minde of as touchinge Christian religion: which so long as I was in authoritie, I alwayes diligently sette foorth and furthered to my power. Neither I repent me of my doinges, but reioyce therein, sith that now the state of Christian religion commeth most neare vnto the forme and order of the Primitiue Church.* Which thing I esteeme as a great benefite geuen of God, both vnto you and me: most hartily exhorting you all, that this which is most purely set forth vnto you, you wil with like thankfulness accept and embrace, and set out the same in your liuing. Which thing if you do not, wythout doubt, greater mischiefe and calamitie wil folow.

When he had spoken these wordes,* sodainely there was a terrible noise heard: whereupon there came a great feare on al men. This noise was as it had bene the noise of some great storm or tempest, which vnto some semed to be heard from aboue: like as if a great deale of gunpouder being inclosed in an armorie, and hauing caught fire, had violently broken out. But vnto some againe, it seemed as though it had ben a great multitude of horsemen running together, or comming vppon them. Suche a noyse was then in the eares of all men, albeit they saw nothing. Whereby it hapned, that all the people being amased wythout any euident cause, wythout any violence or stroke stricken, or any man seene, they ran away, some into y^e ditches and puddles, and some into the houses thereabout: other some being afraide with the horroure and noyse, fell downe groueling vnto the ground w^t their polaxes and halbards, & most part of them cried oute: Iesus saue vs, Iesus saue vs. Those whyche tarried still in their places, for feare knewe not where they were. And I my selfe which was there present among the rest, being also afraid in this hurly burly, stode stil altogether amased, looking when any man woulde knocke me in the head. It hapned heere, as the Euangelists write, it dyd vnto Christ, when as the officers of the high Priestes and Phariseis comming wyth weapons to take him, being astonied, ran backwardes, and fell to the ground.

In the meane time,* whilst these things were thus in doing, the people by chance spied one sir Anthony Broune riding vnto the scaffold: which was the occasion of a new noise. For when they saw him comming, they coniectured that which was not true, but notwithstanding which they all wished for, that the king by that messenger had sent hys vncle pardone: and therfore with great reioysing & casting vp their cappes, they cried out, Pardon, pardone is come: God saue the king. Thus this good Duke, although hee was destitute of all mans helpe,* yet he sawe before hys departure, in how great loue & fauour he was with all men. And truely I doe not thinke, that in so great slaughter of Dukes as hath bene in England within these few yeares, there was so many weeping eyes at one time: and not w^tout cause. For all men did see in the decay of this Duke, the publike ruine of al england, except such as in dede did perceiue nothing. But now to returne from whence we haue strayed, the Duke in the meane time standing stil in y^e same place, modestly and with a graue coūtenance, made a signe to the people w^t his hand, that they woulde kepe themselues quiet. Which thing being done, & silence obtained, he spake vnto them in this maner.

Dearely beloued frendes,* there is no such matter heere in hande, as you vainely hope or beleue. It seemeth thus good vnto almighty God, whose ordinance it is meete and Page 1372 necessary that we all be obedient vnto. Wherefore I pray you all to be quiet, and to be contented with my death, which I am most willing to suffer: and let vs now ioyne in praier vnto the Lord, for the preseruacion of the Kings Maiestie, vnto whome hitherto I haue alwaies shewed my selfe a most faithfull and true subiecte. I haue alwayes bene most diligent about his Maiestie in his affayres both at home and abroad, and no lesse diligent in seeking the common commoditie of the whole Realme. At whyche words all the people cried out, and said, it was most true.

*Then the Duke proceeding, said: Unto whose Maiestie I wish continuall health, with all felicitie & all prosperous successe. Whereunto the people againe cryed out, Amen.

Moreouer, I do wishe vnto all his Counsaylours the grace and fauour of God, whereby they may rule in all things vprightly with iustice. Unto whome I exhort you all in the Lord, to shew your selues obedient, as it is your bounden duety, vnder the payne of condemnation, and also most profitable for the preseruacion and safegarde of the Kings Maiestie.

Moreouer, for so much as heeretofore I haue had oftentimes affaires with diuers men,* & hard it is to please euery man, therfore if there be any that hath ben offended & iniured by me, I most humbly require & aske him forgeuenes: but especially almighty God, whome throughout all my life I haue most greeuously offended: and all other, whatsoeuer they be that haue offended me, I do with my whole hart forgeue them. Now I once againe require you, dearly beloued in the Lord, that you wil keepe your selues quiete and still, least through your tumult you might trouble me. For albeit the spirite be willing and ready, the flesh is fraile and wauering: and through your quietnesse I shall be much more quieter.* Moreouer, I desire you all to beare me witnes, that I dye heere in the fayth of Iesus Christ: desiring you to helpe me with your prayers, that I may perseuere constant in the same vnto my liues end.

After this, hee turning himselfe agayne aboute like a meeke lambe,* kneeled down vpon his knees. Then doctor Coxe, which was there present to counsell and aduertise him, deliuered a certaine scroll into his hand, wherein was contained a briefe confession vnto God. Which being read, he stode vp againe vpon his feete, without any trouble of mind (as it appeared) and first bad the Sheriffes farewel, then the Lieutenant of the Tower and other, taking them all by the handes which were vpon the scaffold with hym. Then he gaue the Hangman certaine money. Which done, he put off his gowne, and kneeling downe againe in the straw, vntied his shyrt strings. After that, the hangman comming vnto him, turned downe his coller round about his necke, and al other things which did let or hinder him. Then lifting vp his eyes to heauen, where his only hope remained, and couering his face with his owne handkercher, he layd himselfe downe along, shewing no maner of token of trouble or feare, neyther did his countenance chaunge, but that before his eyes were couered, there began to appeare a red colour in the midst of his cheekes.

Thus this most meeke and gentle Duke lying along, and looking for the stroke, because his doublet couered his necke, he was cōmaunded to rise vp and put it off: and then laying himselfe downe againe vpon the blocke,* and calling thrise vpon the name of Iesus saying: Lord Iesu saue mee, as he was the thyrd tyme repeating the same, euen as the name of Iesu was in vttering, in a moment he was bereft both of head & life, & slept in the Lord Iesus, being taken away from all the daungers and euils of this life, and resting now in the peace of God: in the preferment of whose truth and Gospell he alwaies shewed himselfe an excellent instrument and member, and therefore hath receyued the reward of his labours. Thus gentle Reader, thou hast the true history of this worthy and noble Duke, and if any man report it otherwise, let it be counted as a lye.

As touching the maners, disposition, life, and conuersation of the said Duke and the Kings vncke, what shall we neede to speake, when as he can not be sufficiently commēded, according to the dignitie of his vertues? There was alwaies in him great humanitie, and suche meekenes and gentlenes, as is rare to be found in so high estate. He was prone and ready to geue care vnto the cōplaints and supplicatiōs of the poore,* & no lesse attentiuē vnto the affaires of the cōmon wealth. Which if he had liued together wyth king Edward, was like to do much good in reforming many misorders within this realme. He was vtterly ignorāt of al craft and deceit, and as farre void of all pride and ambition, as he was frō doing of iniury, being indeede vtterly voyd of both. He was of a gentle dispositiō, not coueting to be reuenged: more apt & ready to be deceiued, then to deceiue. His auncient loue & zeale of the Gospell & of religion he brought with him to the state of this his dignitie. The prooffe whereof sufficiently was seene in his constant standing to gods truth, and zealous defence therof,* against the Bishops of Chichester, Norwich, Lincolne, London, and others moe, in the Consultation had at Windsore, the first yeare of the kinges raigne.

Briefly, considering the nature and vertues of this Duke, I may (as seemeth) not vnaptly compare and resemble him vnto Duke Humfrey, the good Duke of Glocester. Who likewise being vncler vnto king Henry 6. and Protector of the Realme (as this was also to king Edw. the 6.) yet he wanted not his enemies and priuy enueyers especially Henry Beauford Cardinal, Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chancellour of England: * who at that time disdayning and enuying the rule and authoritie of thys Duke, procured much trouble agaynst him, and great deuision in the whole realme, in so much that all the Shops within the Cittie of London were shutte in, for feare of the fauourers of these two great personages: For ech part had assembled no small number of people.

For pacifying wherof the Archbishop of Caunterbury and the Duke of Quimber, called the Prince of Portugale, rode eight times in one day betwene the two aduersaries. Such were then the troubles of these tumultuous diuision within the realme, betweene these two: * as is before expressed, pag. 679. not much vnlike to y^e troublesome discord betwixt parties in this Protector's dayes. And as in their afflictions and troubles, these two Dukes seemed not much vnlike, so in matters of religion, and in discerning truth from falshood, their zeale seemed not much discrepant. Although the light of the Gospell did not so fully then shine out, as in the time of this latter Duke (the Lord be prayesd therfore) yet the wisdom and towardnes of y^e other Duke also touching the same, was not vtterly vnworthy of his commendation. * For the more manifest declaration whereof, amongst many other his godly doinges, we may take for example the prudent and famous acte of that noble Duke, in discerning and trying out the false lying miracle and popish hipocrisie of the blinde begger at S. Albons mentioned in his story before, pag. 679. For the whiche cause, and for his dilligent studye in reforming that and such other blinde abuses of fayned Religion, he was the more hated of the spirituality, and suche as Winchester then was.

Finally, as thys Lorde Protector Duke of Somerset the kinges vncler, by certayne of the Counsaile was then accused, arraigned & cōdemned for the trespasse (as it was geuen forth) of felonie (although I neuer heard he murdered or robbed any) so the other vncler of king Henry the 6. was made away. * Of whose decease thus writeth Mayster W. Tindall in his practise of Prelaets: At y^e last they found the meanes to contriue a drift to bring their matters to passe & made a Parliamēt far from the Citizens of Londō, where was slayne the sayd good Duke, & the onely wealth of the Realme, and y^e mighty shield which so long had kept it from sorowe, which shortly after his death fell vpon thē by heapes. But the Chronicles (sayth he) cannot tel wherfore he dyed, nor by what meanes. Neuertheles, this they testifie, that he was a vertuous man, godly and good to the common wealth.

But to leaue Duke Humfrey, and to return to the maners and vertues of the Duke of Somerset, whiche before we were about to describe: as he was a gentle and courteous Duke at home, so was he no lesse fortunate a Captain in warfare abroad. * Under whose gouernment & guidyng not onely diuers rebellious commotions were happily suppressed here at home, but also abroad in the expedition of Scotland such a victory was geuen him of God, that w^t the losse scarce of sixe hundred of his own men, there were of the enemies as good, or little lesse then x. thousand slayn and put to flight, and euen the very same day and tyme in the which all the Idolatrous Images were here burnt at London. And yet al these warres notwithstanding, wherunto he was agaynst his will compelled, he was a man of nature singularly geuen to peace, as may be seene by the sweete and peaceable exhortation by him set forth in print before, and sent to the realme of Scotland.

But as there is nothing in this worlde so perfect in all respectes, which is not blotted or darckned with some spot of vice adioyned withal: so amongst the manifold commēdations of this Duke, one thinge there was too, whiche both desteyned his honour and estimation much, and also more empayred and hindered his owne life & safety: which was, that he in condescending to the death of his brother, followed too rashly the perswasion of certayne, whosoever they were: for that matter lacked not perchaunce some singular fetche and pollicie of some, more craftely then godly disposed persons, as many good men haue supposed.

But what soever of that matter is to be deemed, credible, Page 1373 it is, that the said Duke in suffering or procuring this death of his brother, not only endamaged himselfe, & weakened his own power, but also prouoked the chastisement of Gods scourge and rod, which did so light vpon him.

Furthermore, as touching the death and decay of the Lord Henry Earle of Surrey, who suffered also at the Tower next before the Lord Admirall, the Lorde Protectours brother, because the casting of him was so neare to the death of King Henry: * as I know not vpon whome, or what cause the same did proceede, so I passe it ouer and leaue it to the Lord. Notwithstanding, as for the Duke of Somerset, whatsoever his other vices and vertues were, this is certayne, that his ende (the Lord so working wyth him) was constant in Christes truth, as his life was before a great maintenance of the same.

Moreouer, on the xxvj. day of February, in the same yeare was sir Rafe Uane, * sir Miles Partrige both hāged at the Tower hill: And sir Michaell Stanhop, & sir Thomas Arundell beheaded vpon the scaffold: all which four were condemned by the saide Acte of vnlawfull assemblie, and as accessaries vnto the Duke of Somerset.

Not long after the death of the Duke of Somerset, in the next yeare folowing deceased the King himselfe about the moneth of Iune, whereof more shall be said (the Lord graunting) in his due order and course heereafter. In the meane season, before we come to close vp the latter end and story of this good King, the place heere present seemeth not vnfitte to intermixt by the way a few other things before,  hapning within the time of his reigne, namely concerning matters incident, of the Church & of Religiō. Which state of Religion begā wel to grow, & to come happely forward during this Kings daies, had not the vnhappy troubles of the outward state amongst the Lords not agreeing within themselues, disquieted the good towardnes of things begon. But the malice of the diuell how subtilly worketh it, if men could see it? So long as the Lordes agreed in concord among themselues, Winchester and Boner, with all that faction, was cut short, and began to condescend to good cōformitie. But afterward perceauing the states and nobles of the Realme to be amōg themselues diuided, and y^e Lord Protectour the Kings vncle displaced, and his brother the Admirall before beheaded, and the yong King now left in that case, they begā vpon some hope to take more hart vnto them,  till at last it came to passe, as they themselues desired. And thus though nothing else will leade vs, yet experience may teach vs what discorde worketh in publicke weales: and contrary, what a necessary thing concord is to the aduancemēt especially of Gods matters appertaining to his Church. Examples whereof in this Kings daies be not farre to seeke. For as touching the successe of the Gospell of peace,* while publicke peace and the Gospel did ioine together, marueilous it was how errour & Popery were in themselues confounded, and ashamed almost to shewe their faces. In so much that then both Doctour Smith, Chadsey, Standishe, Yong, Oglethorpe, with many moe recanted their former ignoraunce, whose recantations I haue to shew. Boner then with his owne hand subscribed to the Kings supremacie, and promoted his Iniunctions.

The same also did Steuen Gardiner, subscribing wyth his owne hand to the first booke of the Kings proceedings,* and no doubt had done no lesse to the second booke also set foorth by the King, had not the vnfortunate discorde fallen amongst the nobles in time so vnfortunate, as then it did. Brieflye during all that time of peace and concorde, what Papist was found in all the Realme, which for the Popes deuotion would or did once put his necke in the halter to die a Martyr for his sake?

I shewed before how in these peaceable dayes of Kyng Edward, Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius,* with other learned men moe, were entertained, placed and prouided for in the two Uniuersities of this Realme, Oxford and Cambridge, who there with their diligent industrie did much good. The learned and fruitfull disputations of whome, I haue likewise present in my handes heere to insert, but that the bignes of this Uolume driueth me to make short, especially seeing their disputations be so long and prolix as they be, and also in Latin, and require of themselues a whole Uolume to comprehend thē.

First, Peter Martyr beeing called by the King to the publicke reading of the Diuinitie Lecture in Oxforde,* amōgst his other learned exercises did set vp in the publicke scholes iij. conclusions of Diuinitie to be disputed & tryed by Argument. At whiche disputations were present the Kings visitours, to witte, Henry Byshop of Lincolne, Doctour Coxe Chauncellour of that Uniuersitie, Doctour Haynes Deane of Exeter, M. Richard Morison Esquier; Christopher Neuynton Doctour of Ciuill law. The conclusions propounded were these.

1. In the Sacrament of thankes geuing there is no transubstantiation of bread and wyne into the body and bloud of Christ.
2. The body and bloud of Christ is not carnally or corporally in bread and wine, nor as other vse to say, vnder the kindes of bread and wine.
3. The body and bloud of Christ be vnited to bread and wyne Sacramentally.

They which were the chiefe disputers against hym on the contrary side, were Doct. Tresham, D. Chadsey,* and Morgan. The reasons and principall Arguments of Peter Martyr heereunder follow.

¶The Arguments of Peter Martyr vpon the first conclusion.

- The Scriptures most plainely do name and acknowledge bread and wyne.* In the Euangelistes we reade that the Lord Iesus tooke bread, blessed it, brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples. S. Paule likewise doth oftentimes make mention of bread.

- Ergo, we also with the scriptures ought not to exclude bread from the nature of the sacrament.

Cyprianus.

As in the person of Christ, his humanitie was seene outwardlye, and his Diuinitie was secret within: * so in the visible Sacrament the diuinitie inserteth it selfe in such sort as can not be vttered, that our deuotion about the Sacraments might be the more religious.

Ergo, as in the person of Christ: so in the Sacramente both the natures ought still to remaine.

Gelasius.

The Sacramentes which we receaue of the body and bloud of Christ, are a Diuine matter: by reason whereof, * we are made partakers by the same, of his Diuine nature, and yet it ceaseth not still to be the substance of bread and wine. And certes the representation and similitude of the body and bloud of Christ, be celebrated in the action of the mysteries, &c.

Augustinus.

As the person of Christ consisteth of God and man, when as he is true God, and true man. * For euery thing conteyneth in it selfe the nature and veritie of those things whereof it is made. Now the Sacrament of the Church is made of two things, that is, of the Sacrament that signifieth, and of the matter of the Sacrament that is signified, &c.

Theodoretus.

These visible mysteries which are seene, he hath honored with the name of his body and bloud, not chaunging the nature, * but adding grace vnto nature, &c. And the same Theodoretus againe sayeth:

Those mysticall sacraments after sanctification, do not passe out of theyr owne proper nature, but remayne still in their former substance, figure, and shape, &c.

Ergo, lyke as the body of Christ remained in him, and was not chaunged into his diuinitie: so in the sacrament the bread is not chaunged into the body, but both the substances remaine whole.

Origine.

If whatsoeuer entreth into the mouth, goeth downe into the belly, and so passeth through a man: * euen that meate also which is sanctified by the word of God and by prayer, as touching that part which it hath materiall within it, passeth into the belly, and so voydeth through a man. But thorough prayer, which is adioined to it, according to the measure of faith, it is profitable and effectuall, &c. And he addeth moreouer: For it is not the outward matter of the bread, but the word that is spoken vpon it, that profiteth him which eateth him worthely, &c.

Irenaeus.

Iesus taking bread of the same condition which is after vs,*(that is, taking bread of the same nature and kinde as we vse commonly to eate) did confesse it to be his body. And taking likewise the cup which is of the same creature which is after vs, (that is, which we commonly vse to drinke) confessed it to be his bloud, &c.

Item, lib. 4. Like as bread which is of the earth,* receauing the word and calling of God, is now not common bread, but the Eucharist, consisting of two things, the one earthly, the other heauenly: so our bodies receauing the sacred Eucharist, be now not corruptible, hauing hope of resurrection, &c.

¶Argument.

- Ba- The bread in the Sacrament is so chaunged into the body, as our bodies are changed when they are made vncorruptible by hope.
- ro- But our bodies are not made incorruptible by chaunging their substance.
- co. Ergo, no more is the bread changed into the substance of the body.

Gregory.

Notwithstanding, whether we take leauened or vnleauened bread, we are all one body of our Lord and Sauour, &c.

¶Argument.

- Da- Where bread leauened or vnleauened is taken, there is substance of bread, and not accidences only.
- *ri- In the Sacrament bread is receaued either leauened or vnleauened:
- j. Ergo, in the Sacrament is substaunce of bread and not accidences onely.

¶Argument.

- Ba- The body of Christ is named of that which is proportioned round, and is vnsensible in operation.
- ro- Accidences only of bread haue no figure of roundnes:
- co. Ergo, the body of Christ is not named of accidences, but of very bread substantiall.

¶Argument.

- The wordes of the Euangelist speaking of that whyche Christ tooke, blessed, brake, and gaue, do importe it to be bread, and nothing else but bread.
- Ergo, the substance of bread is not to be excluded out of the Sacrament.

Chrisostome.

Christ in bread and wyne sayde: do this in remembraunce of me.*

Cyrillus.

He gaue to them peeces or fragments of bread.

*Also the same Cyrill sayth: In bread we receaue his precious body and his bloud in wyne.

Ergo, by these Doctours it remaineth bread after consecration.

Ambrose.

Before the blessing of the heauenly words, it is called another kynde of thyng. After consecration the body of Christ is signified.

¶Arguments of Peter Martyr disputing with M. Chadsey vpon the first question.

- Da- The Analogie and resemblaunce betwene the Sacrament and the thing signified, must euer be kept in all Sacraments.
- ti- In the Sacrament of the Lordes body, this Analogie or resemblaunce can not be kept, if bread be transubstantiated:
- si. Ergo, the substance of bread must needes remayne in the Sacrament of the Lords body.

The Maior of this Argument is certaine by S. Austen, Lib. De catechisandis rudibus,* & Epist. ad Dardan. Where hee sayeth: Sacramentes must needes beare a similitude of those thyngs whereof they are Sacramentes, or else they can be no Sacramentes.

The Minor is thus proued.

¶Argument.

- Ba- The resemblaunce betweene the Sacrament and the body of Christ is this:* that as the properties of bread and wyne do nourish outwardly: so the properties of the body of Christ do nourish spiritually.
- ro- Without the substaunce of bread and wine, there is no resemblaunce of nourishing.
- co. Ergo, without the substaunce of bread and wyne, the Analogie can not hold.

¶Argument.

- Ba- Agayne, another resemblaunce and similitude or Analogie of this Sacramente is this, that as one loafe of bread, and one cuppe of wine containeth many cornes and many grapes: so the mysticall congregation cōteineth many members, and yet maketh but one bodie:
- ro- Without the substance of bread & wine, no such resemblaunce or similitude of cōiunction can be represented:
- co. Ergo, without the substaunce of bread and wyne, the Analogie of this spirituall coniunction can not holde.

¶Another Argument.

- Ba- Euery Sacrament consisteth in two thynges, that is, in the thing signifieng, and the thing signified.
- ro- Without the substance of bread and wine, there is nothing that signifieth in the Sacrament:
- co. Ergo, the substaunce of bread and wyne in the Sacramente, can in no wise be transubstantiate from theyr natures. The Minor is thus to be proued.

- Fes- There is no signification in any Sacrament without the element.
- •i- The substaunce of bread and wine is the elemente of this Sacrament:
- •o. Ergo, without the substaunce of bread and wine, there is no similitude nor signification in this Sacrament.

And for somuch as the aduersaries ground their transubstantiation so much vpon these wordes of Christ: This is my body: which they expound onely after y^e litteral sense,* without troupe or figure: now that this their exposition is false, and that the sayde woordes are to be taken figuratiuely and spiritually, by three causes it is to be proued. 1. First by the wordes of the Scripture. 2. By the nature of a Sacrament. 3. By the testimonies of the fathers.

1. First by these wordes of the scripture, where he sayth: Doe this in remembraunce of mee, for so muche as remembraunce properly serueth not for thinges corporally presēt, but for thinges rather being absent.

2. Secondly, where he saith: Vntill I come.* Which words were vayne, if he were already come by consecration.

3. Thirdly, where S. Paule sayth: The breaking of bread, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? Which words of breaking in no case can be verified vppon the body of Christ, which for the glory thereof is vnpossible.

4. Furthermore where as the Lord biddeth thē to take and eate, it is euident, that the same cannot be vnderstand simply of the body of Christ without a trope, forsomuch as he cannot be eaten and chawed with teeth, as we vse properly in eating other meates to doe.

5. The wordes moreouer of Luke and Paule spoken of the cuppe, doe argue likewise that the other words spoken of the bread must needes be taken mystically. As where it is sayd: This cup is the new testament: which woordes must needes be expounded thus: thys cup doth signifie the new Testament.

6. Item, these wordes of S. Iohn. chap. 6. My wordes be spirite and life. The flesh profiteth nothing &c.

7. Itē, where in the same place of S. Iohn, Christ to refell the carnal vnderstanding of the Capernaïtes of eating his body, maketh mention of his Ascension. &c.

The second cause why the wordes of Christ: *This is my body, cannot be litterally expounded without trope, is y^e nature of a sacrament: whose nature and propertie is to beare a signe or signification of a thinge to be remembred, which thing after the substantiall and reall presence, is absent. As touching which nature of a sacrament sufficiently hath bene sayd before. *

The third cause, why the woordes of consecration are figuratiuely to be taken, is the testimonie of the auncient Doctours.

Tertullianus. This is my body: that is to say, this is a figure of my body. *

August. Psal. 3. Christ gaue a figure of his body.

August. Contra Adamantum Manichaeum. He did not doubt to say: This is my body when he gaue a signe of his body.

Hieronimus. Christ represented vnto vs his body.

August. August. in his booke De Doctrina Christiana declareth expressely that this speache of eating the body of Christ, * is a figuratiue speach.

Ambrosius. As thou hast receaued the similitude of his death: so thou drinkest the similitude of his precious blood.

¶Argument.

- Fe- The death of Christ is not present really in the sacrament but by similitude.
- ri- The precious blood of Christ is present in the Sacrament as his death is present: *
- o. Ergo, the precious blood of Christ is not present really in the Sacrament.

The Minor of this argument is proued before by the wordes of Ambrose.

The second question. Whether the body and blood of Christ be in the bread and wine, * or vnder the formes of bread and wine carnally and corporally.

¶Argument.

- Di- The true natural body of Christ is placed in heauen.
- sa- The true naturall body of man can be but in one place at once, where he is:
- mis. Ergo, the true naturall body of Christ can be in no place at once, but in heauen where he is.

The Maior is playne by the Scriptures: Iesus was taken vp to heauen, and sitteth at the right hand of God. *Math. 26 The poore ye haue alwayes with you, but me you shall not alwayes haue Iohn. 12. I leaue the world and go to my Father. Ioh. 16. Many shal say in that day: Loe here is Christ, *and there is Christ, beleue thē not, Mat. 24. Whō the heauē must receiue Page 1375 for a time, vntill the restitution of all. Actes. 3. Seeke those things that are aboue, where Christ is, sitting at the right hand of God, &c. Col. 3.

The Minor likewise is evident by S. Austen, who speaking of the glorified body of Christ,^{*} affirmeth the same to be in one certayne place, Propter veri corporis modum, that is, for the maner of a true body.

¶Argument.

- Da- Euery true naturall body requireth one certaine place. August.
- ri- Christes body is a true naturall body:
- j. Ergo, Christes body requireth one certayne place.

¶Argument.

- ^{*}Austen giueth not to the soule of Christ to be in mo places at once, but one. August ad Dardanum.
- Ergo, much lesse is it to be giuen to the body of Christ to be in mo places at once, but in one.

¶Argument.

- The nature of the Aungels is not to be in diuers places,^{*} but they are limited to occupy one certaine place at once. Basilius de spirit. sanct. cap. 22.
- Ergo, the body of Christ, being the true naturall body of a man, can not fill diuers places at one time.

¶Argument.

- Ba- Whatsoever is in many & diuers places at once is God▪
- ro- The body of Christ is not God but a creature:
- co. Ergo, the body of Christ can not be in moe places together.

¶Argument.

- Fes- We must not so defende the Diuinitie of Christ, that we destroy his humanitie. August.
- ti- If we assigne to the body of Christ pluralitie of places, we destroy his humanitie:
- no. Ergo, we must not assigne to the body of Christ pluralitie of places.

¶Argument.

- Fes- Whatsoever thing is circumscribed, that is to say, contained in the limits of any peculiar place, can not be dispersed in mo places at once.
- ti- The body of Christ is a thing circumscribed:
- no. Ergo, the body of Christ is not dispersed in mo places at one time.

¶Argument.

- Da- Euery quantitie, that is, euery body hauing magnitude, length, and other dimensions, is circumscribed in one peculiar place:

- ri- The bodye of Christe hathe his dimensions, and is a quantitie:
- j. Ergo, the body of Christ is circumscribed.

Cyrrillus. The Maior is proued by Cyrrillus. Whatsoever is vnderstanded to be a body,*the same is verely in a place, and in magnitude, and in quantitie. And if it be in quantitie, it can not auoyd circumscription, that is, to haue his place.

¶Argument.

- Ba- If Christ had giuen his body substantially and carnally in the Supper, then was that body either passible, or impassible.
- ro- But neither can you say that body to be passible or impassible, which he gaue at Supper:
- co. Ergo, he did not giue his body substancially and carnally at Supper.

August. The Minor is proued thus. For if ye say it was passible,* Austen is against it, which sayth: Ye shall not eate thys body which you see, nor drinke the same bloud which they shall shed, that shall crucifie me, &c. And if ye say, it was impassible, that may not be admitted by the words of the Euangelist, which sayth: Eate, this is my body which shall be geuen for you: So that that body was passible and not impassible, wherein Christ was geuen.

Vigilius. One creature can not receaue in it selfe two contrary or diuers thynges together.*But these two thyngs be diuers and farre vnlike, that is to say, to be conteyned in a place, and to be euery where. For the word is euery where, but the fleshe is not euery where.

¶Argument.

- Fe- Bodyes organically without quantitie be no bodies.
- ri- The Popes doctrine maketh the body of Christ in the Sacrament to be without quantitie:
- o. Ergo, the Popes doctrine maketh the body of Christ in the Sacrament to be no body.

¶Argument.

- Da- All things which may be deuided, haue quantitie.
- ri- The body in the Popes Sacrament is deuided in iij. partes:
- j. Ergo, the body in the Popes Sacrament hath quantitie, which is against their owne doctrine.

¶Argument.

- Fe- No naturall body can receaue in it selfe, and at one time, contrary or diuers qualities. Vigilius.
- ri- To be in one place locall, and in another place not locall, in one place with quantitie, in another place without quantitie, in one place circumscribed, in another place incircumscribed, is for a naturall body to receyue contrary qualities:
- o. Ergo, the body of Christ can not be in one place locall, and in another not locall, in one place with quantitie, and in another without quantitie, as our aduersaries do affirme.

¶Argument.

- Fe- The wicked receaue not the body of Christ.
- ri- The wicked do receaue the body of Christ, if transubstantiation be graunted:
- son. Ergo▪ transubstantiation is not to be graunted in the Sacrament.

¶Argument for probation of the Maior.

- Ca- To eate Christ, is for a man to haue Christ dwellyng and abiding in him. Augustine.
- mes- The wicked haue not Christ dwelling in them:
- tres. Ergo, the wicked eate not the body of the Lord.

Cyprian. Cyprianus de Coena Domini. The eating of Christ, is our abyding in hym.*

¶Argument.

- Bo- The holy Ghost could not come if the body of Christ were really present.
- car- That the holy Ghost is come, it is most certayne:
- do. Ergo, it can not be that Christ himselfe should be heere really present.

For prooffe of the Maior. Iohn 16. Vnlesse I go from you, the holy Ghost shall not come: It is expedient for you that I go hence.*

¶Argument of Peter Martyr.

- Ba- If the wicked and infidels doe receaue the bodye of Christ, they receaue him either with sense or reason, or with fayth.
- ro- But they receaue him neither with sense, reason, nor with faith:
- co▪ Ergo, wicked men and infidels receaue in no wise the body of Christ.

For declaration of the Maior: if yee say, they receaue him with sense, that is against their owne lore,* for the body of Christ in the blessed Sacrament (say they) is not sensible, nor to be perceaued by any sense, neither with reason can they receaue him, by their owne learning, for so much as this Sacramente exceedeth all reason: Nec fides habet meritum, vbi ratio praebet experimentum. And if ye say, that they receaue him with faith, how can that be, seeing infidels haue no faith?

What is to eate the body of Christ, the teachyng of the Papistes heerein is straunge, and differeth from the olde Doctours. For where the Papistes do teache,* that wicked persons and infidels, albeit they receaue not the effect of the Sacrament, yet the matter of the Sacrament, which is the very body of Christ, they receiue with their mouth, and with their sense the accidences of bread, and thus imagine a certaine body of Christ, suche as euill men and infidels may eate, and yet being eaten, it geueth them no nourishment nor life, nor maketh them no partakers of his spirite and grace: both Scripture and the auncient expositours of the Scripture do teach much otherwise. For the Scripture knoweth no such kinde of eating Christes body, but onely that which is fruitefull, wholesome, and effectuall.*He that eateth my fleshe and drinketh my bloud, abideth in mee and I in him, &c. Iohn. 6. And therefore it may appeare, that the Scripture meaneth by eating Christes flesh, to beleue in Christes Passion, which none can doe but onely the faithfull. And to the same sense sound all the old Doctours.

Cyprianus. That we should knowe, that eatyng is our dwellyng in hym, and our drinkyng is, as it were,*a certayne incorporation in hym.

Item, the same Cyprian: The eatyng therefore of hys fleshe is a certayne desire to abyde in hym: and sayeth moreouer, that none eateth of thys Lambe, but suche as be true Israelites, that is, true Christen men, without colour or dissimulation.

And agayne hee sayeth: That as meate is to the fleshe, the same is fayth to the soule, the same is the woorde to the spirite, &c.

Page 1376Moreouer: And therefore (sayth hee) doing this we whet not our teeth to bite, but with pure faith we breake the holy bread, and distribute it, &c.

Augustinus. It may not be sayde, that any suche doe eate the body of Christ, because they are accompted amongst the members of Christ. Neither can they be both members of Christ,*and members of an harlot, &c. Furthermore, when Christ sayeth: He that eateth my fleshe, and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me, and I in him: hee sheweth what it is, not Sacramentally, but in deede to eate hys body and drinke his bloud, which is, when a man so dwelleth in Christ, that Christ dwelleth in him. For so Christ spake those wordes, as if hee shoulde saye: he that dwelleth not in me, and in whome I dwell not, let him not say nor thinke, that he eateth my body, or drinketh my bloud.

Also in other places the sayde Austen affirmeth, that, to drinke is to liue: And sayeth moreouer: Why prearest thou thy belly and thy teeth? beleue and thou hast eaten, &c.

All which kindes of eating can not be sayd of the wicked and infidels, but only of the godly and faithfull.

And thus briefly we haue runne ouer all the arguments and authorities of Peter Martyr in that disputation at Oxford, with Doctour Tresham, Chadsey, and Morgan, before the Kings visitours aboue named. an. 1549.

Furthermore, who so listeth more fully to be satisfied and resolued in all the occurrents touching the matter of thys Sacrament, let him reade the bookes first of the Archbishop Cranmer against Winchester: Secondly, the tractation of Peter Martyr made in Oxford, translated and extant in English: and thirdly the booke of Bishop Ridley made in prison, called A briefe declaration of the Lordes Supper.

The lyke disputation also about the same time was appointed and commensed at Cambridge, cōcerning the same matter of the Sacrament, the Kings visitours being directed downe for the same purpose by the King. The names of which visitours were these, Nicholas Ridley Byshop of Rochester, Thomas Bishop of Ely, M. Iohn Cheeke the Kings Scholemaister, Doctour May Ciuilian, and Thomas Wendy the Kings Phisician. The conclusions in that disputation propounded were these.

The first disputation holden at Cambridge the 20. day of Iune. ann. 1549. before the Kings Maiesties Commissioners by Doctor Madew respondent, whose first conclusion was this.

Transubstantiation can not be prooued by the playne and manifest wordes of Scripture, nor can thereof be necessarily collected, nor yet confirmed by the consents of the auncient Fathers, for these thousande yeares past. Doctour Glin, M. Langedale, M. Segewike, M. Yonge opponents.

Doctour Madew.

First of all (quoth he) I am very sorry, and do not a little lament the shortnes of time, to declare and discusse such waighty matters of Religion in, as these be. But that notwithstanding, if I had had more plenty of time indeede: yet you shall vnderstande, how that I haue euer both in hart and mind (if otherwise I could haue auoided it) abhorred all scholasticall disputations, and subtile sophistications. In consideration whereof, I beseech those that are to dispute, not to alledge or bring foorth any dismembred, or curteled sentences, or wrested as hapneth many times, but the whole and full sentences eyther of the Scriptures, or of the auncient Doctors: yea, and to auouch suche Authors sayings, as are not suspected, or fayned, but suche as be theyr owne very sayings indeede, which if they do, there is no doubt, but the cleare light of this our disputation, shall the sooner appeare, and be manifest to this auditorie. And for a further declaration of my part, you shall vnderstande that this my preface in my said former most catholique & godly conclusion shall consist in three principall points. 1. First, what thing it was that Christ gaue to his disciples. 2. Secondly, what season or time this transubstantiation did begin. 3. Thirdly, how many diuelish abhominatiōs haue ensued vpon that horrible and pestilēt inuention. As concerning the first, that is, what thing Christ gaue to his disciples, that may very well appeare euen by our owne naturall sences, as namely, by the sight, by the touching, by the tasting, whiche can not be deceiued of their naturall iudgement. For the eye seeth nothing but bread and wine, the tasting sauoureth nothing else, and the handes touche nothing else. He gaue also to their vnderstanding not ••ly his holy and sacred doctrine, but also a special gi•t & pledge of his loue. He gaue the only materiall brea• & wine sanctified, as the first rude and plaine elements or principles to allure them withall, but he gaue them the gift of his grace and heauenly doctrine, as the very things signified by the sensible elementes, which thing playnly appeareth by the wordes of Christ our sauour, Non bibam. &c. I will not drinke hereafter of the fruite of this vine, vntill I drinke it new with you in the kingdome of God. Nowe this fruit or iuoise of y^e vine is nothing els but wine, as Chrisostome saith. And moreouer to proue the same true, if it be reserued after the cōsecratiō for a time, it becommeth sower, and tarte, therefore it is but wine. And as touching the bread, S. Paul sayth thus, is not the bread which we breake, the communion, or participation of Christes body? hee brake breade, therefore it was but bread, whiche he gaue them: for the body of Christ is not broken, as the scripture saythe of y^e same, os non cōminuetis ex eo, you shall not breake a bone of him. Also he saith this is my bodye, not that the bread was his body, and the wine his blood, but he spake those wordes to, and of his owne mortall bodye, there sitting amongst them at supper, or hee spake yet doubtfully as thus: this signifieth my body, it is one thing, whiche is seene, but it is an other thing which is vnderstanded: for y^t which is seen hath a bodely form, but

y^t which is vnderstood thereby hath a spirituall fruite. S. Austen sayth. Let the word haue accesse to the element, so is it made a sacrament: marke, he sayth, let the word haue accesse, and not successe. Now the thinge that hath accesse to an other thinge, doth not quench the thinge that it commeth to, no more doth i[•] here, ergo it is bread and wine still as before, how be it sacred, and holy: What saw you yesterday (sayth S. Austen) vpon the aluter? Truly bread and wine, whiche your owne eyes can wnesse said he, what playner testimonye can be had of so auncient a father as he was, and of so rare knowledge in the scriptures of God? Seeing then y^t oure eyes doe behould nothing, but bread and wine, it must needes follow that it is so in deede, or els our sences •e deceaued in their owne proper obiecte, which cannot be by any reason, or naturall philosophy. And yet notwithstanding some papistes dreame and phantesie such a corporal, reall, and grosse presence of Christs body in the sacrament as they affirme it to be there euen as verily, as it was vpon the Crosse. Indeede the bread is chaunged after a certayne maner, into Christes bodye: for Christ gaue not hys owne natural bodye to his Disciples at his last supper, but an onely signe or figure thereof. Christes body is there with the bread: our sences cannot be deceaued about the substaunce of bread, but they doe iudge there to be but one body, that is of bread, Ergo so it is. Also the very definition of a sacrament doth playnly repugne vnto transubstantiation. Bread nourisheth the substaunce of Christes body, but the accidentes doe not so, Ergo the substaunce doth remayne of the bread that nourisheth: it is also called bread in the Actes, and in diuers other places of the scriptures, wherefore it is so, but in deede after a sorte more holy then before: what gaue he in the supper? bread which is the body, that is to say, an holy signe of his body, as Austen doth wnesse saying: hee doubted not to say this is my bodye, whē it was but a signe of his body. The vnleauened bread was but a bare and naked signe of Christes bodye, and so is this bread the same body, euen as baptisme is. Now indeede there be two maner of signes, one that signifie onely, the other that doth exhibite the thing it self. The first is applyed to the old lawe chiefly, •he other to the law of grace. The old ancient & learned fathers, did neuer vse to speake of the substanciall chaunge, for because that all the mutation is but condicionall, not substanciall, nor we deeme not the bodely substaunce sacramentally, but yet we saye that this proposition (that is my bodye) is but a figuratiue speache, and no proper speache, as some doe deeme. But it is as muche to saye, as this signifieth my bodye, or els thus, this is a sacrament of my body, for the bodi•ye bread, and Christes body are not containd in place locally but mystically. This portenteouse and monstrouse transubstanciation began first to enter, when the popishe prelates, & priestes began to vnderstād this said proposition (this is my body) of the carnall and reall presence of Christes body▪ as hugo de sancto victore, Gracian, Peter, Lombard and <◇> . 3. the very pestilent poyson of al Christ•n religion, vnto whome we haue of long season, yea al•as too long geuen credite: vnder the which Innocente the said deuilish terme, or vocable of transubstantiation began anno. 1315. And Boniface after him Bishop of Rome made the sayde •ad blinde transubstantiation to be the 3. article of the fayth, full wisely no doubt, whereas an other bishop of Rome after him affirmed plainly against Nestor the hereticke that bread remayneth there still whose name was G•••sius. 3. Now as touching y^e most shamefull and detestable inconueniences which must needes follow this diuelish t•rme or vocable of transubstantiation, you shall vnderstand the first is, that then suche Papistes will haue Christes body still prostituted, and receaued euen of the Page 1377 wicked and naughty people, which is cleane contrary to that place of our sauour Christ, where he sayth: Whosoouer eateth my fleshe and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me, and I in him. Nowe it is plaine, that euill persons dwell not in Christ, nor Christ in them, wherefore they receiue not his body therin at all. For S. Austine tract. 8. super Iohannem saith, that it is but bread which is seene after the Consecration, Ergo, the substance of bread is there still. 2. The seconde inconuenience that groweth heereof, is the fonde and superstitious reseruatiō of the sacrament in pixes, boxes, and such like, with vaine tabernacles ouer the alter, where oftentimes it did putrifie for all their foolish honour, which began in Honorius daies the third Bishop of Rome of that name, which corruption declareth it to be but onely bread, say all Papists what they list. 3. The third inconuenience that must needes follow Transubstantiation, is adoration, which is too plaine Idolatry, as the Papists do know themselues if they list, but they are so stiffenecked, that they will not know it, and so both haue, and yet also will keepe the world in blindnes still if they might be suffered. But to be short with you, euen as we are chaunged into Christ by receiuing the sacrament, so is the bread chaunged into the body of Christ. But our substance is not chaunged into Christes substance, Ergo, the substance of the bread is not changed into Christes body. And to be shorte and playne with you (most honourable audience) the whole vniuersall world hath bene, and yet is sore deceaued and deluded about the estimation of this Sacrament. Therefore this is most true, when we do receaue the sayd Sacrament worthely, then are we ioyned by faith spirituallly to Christ our sauour. And thus much haue I said in this first matter.

The second matter to be disputed of is this.

That in the Lords Supper is none other oblation or sacrifice, then one onely remembrance of Christes death, and of thankesgiuing.

IN this conclusion, I will be muche shorter, and more compendious then in the first. In consideration whereof, you shall vnderstande, that the same is a very godly, and true catholique proposition. For to offer Christ, and to exhibite the same, is all one thing, for in that that he is offered, he is set foorth for to eate, there is no difference at all betweene the maker of the sacrifice, or offerer, and the thing that was offered, which both were one Christ. The Lorde did commaund saying, Do this in remembrance of me, hee made mention of the remembrance only, wherefore it can be none other sacrifice, but only that. The Apostle doth declare the maner of the thing doing, saying thus: He tooke bread in his hands, he blessed it, he brake it, and gaue it to his disciples. What gaue he to them? forsooth bread, which was the sacrament, and not his body. No earthly creature nor heauenly, did euer offer vp Christ at any time, but he himselfe once for all, vpon the crosse, Ergo, he can not, nor ought not to be offered many times, and often, though that Pighius with all the blinde rabble of Papists say the contrary. For truely in this point especially they knowe not what they say, being so led by the old pharisaicall blindnes. But to the purpose. You shall vnderstand good auditors, that the pure and cleane oblation and sacrifice spokē of by the Prophet Malachy, is nothing else, then deuoute, and faithfull prayer, and thankesgiuing, as Tertullian sayth in his third booke contra Marcionem expounding the Psalme, where it is sayd thus: The sacrifice of laude, and prayse shall honor mee. So doth S. Hierome, Irenaeus, and S. Austen say also vpon Malachy. Where also they denie that Christ is essentially in the sacrament. Yea and S. Austen Epistola 95. ad Paulinum witnesseth, that the mortifying of our earthly members is our true sacrifice that be Christians. And all the aunciente Fathers do call praier by the name of sacrifices. And for this purpose, whosoeuer list to reade that most excellent and famous Clarke Zwinglius ca. 18. de articulis, shall finde the same confirmed of him by most grounded reasons, whatsoeuer the Papists do barke against it. Thus I haue declared my mind in both matters now disputable. And if my further declaration be required through the vehemency of argumentes, I will performe the same in my aunswering thereunto.

There disputed against this defendant Doctour Glin, M. Langedale, M. Segewike, and M. Yong, Students in Diuinitie.

Glin.

Notwithstanding right worshipfull Maister Doctor, that you haue so exquisitely declared your mind and opinion in euery of these matters now in contention before this honorable and learned audience, and also though iust occasion be ministred to me to infringe your positions in both conclusions, yet I will not inuade the same as now indirectly with contrarious and vaine wordes to occupie the small time which is appointed vs for the triall of the same, but we will go forthwith to the thing it selfe, whych conteineth in it matter ynough. It is but •olly to vse many wordes where fewe will serue our purpose, as sayeth the maister of the Sentences. All words may signifie at pleasure and commonly there bee moe thinges then vocables, like as sometimes there was variance amongst learned men of the vnitie of two substances in one personage of Christ God and Man. So is there now in our dayes variance of Transubstantiation of bread and wine into the body and bloud of Christ. Wherefore I do require you first to shew me heare openly what the said Transubstantiation is, that we go not from the thing it selfe, which is our first and chiefest ground.

Madew.

As for that I neede not to shew you, for euery man knoweth it.

Glin.

Peraduenture it is not so good Maister Doctor. And I am perfectly assured that euery man doth not knowe it indeede: for it is not so light a matter as you make it to be.

Madew.

Forsooth you know it your selfe, and so do all men else.

Glin.

Well, yet I pray you shew me what thing Christ did demonstrate and shew foorth by that article of the newter gender, where he said, This is my body. What did he appoint in that article this? for if he meant by that, the bread, then Christ in the Sacrament is not onely of two natures, but of three natures, as of the nature of bread, of the nature of man, and of the diuine nature, which to say, were blasphemie. The argument is good, and doth hold by that text, He spake the word, and it was done, he commaunded, and they were created. Moreouer, if he should meane by that article of the newter gender (this) the materiall bread, then he woulde haue sayd, This bread is my body, so making the article of the newter gender: or else he would haue sayd thus, Heere with this bread is my body, to haue auoyded euer after all heresies, errors, and schismes. But he saide not so, but spake the article of the newter gender, saying, This is my body, that is to saye, the thing or substance conteyned vnder the forme and kind of bread, which you see not with your bodely eyes is my body, according to my promise made to you before, that I woulde geue you my very fleshe to eate, Iohn. 6. In like maner when he gaue the cup of his blood, he sayd not this in the newter gender, as he woulde haue done if he had meant the materiall creature of wine to haue remained, but he saide then in the masculine gender, This is my bloud: That is to say the thing contained vnder the forme of wine whiche you see not with your bodely eyes is my bloud. For truely the holy Ghost came downe to leade vs into all truth and veritie, and not to deceiue vs in so notable a point of our faith. But out of doubte he should haue deceaued in this matter, if so be he had geuen vs onely materiall bread and wine in stead of his bodye and bloud, and not haue fulfilled his promise made Iohn 6. where he promiseth thus. The bread whiche I will geue is my fleshe, which I will geue for the life of the world. Heere be two giuings spoken of, with two relaties, whereof the first with his relatue, must needes be referred to his gift in the last supper, and the second geuing of the same fleshe of his, with his relatue, must be applied of necessitie vnto his geuing of his body vpon the Crosse. Nor we do finde in the whole Scripture, where Christ did fulfill his sayde promise made in y^e 6. of Iohn, but at those said two times. Wherefore if we be deceiued in this matter of Transubstantiation, we may well say, O Lord thou hast deceaued vs. But God forbid that we should once thinke such wickednes of him. He must also be vniust of his promise if it be not performed at any season, as it is not indeede, if it were not at both the said times. Then if it were performed (as the Catholique Church of Christe dothe holde, determine, and beleue) then must it needes be graunted, that he gaue at his last Supper his owne body and flesh indeede and verely which he gaue vpon the Crosse for the life of the world, though not in so fleshly a manner and bloudie, yet the very same flesh and •loud really after an vnbloudy sort, and spiritually. He said not This bread is my body, nor yet heere with the bread is my body, but, This is my body, which shall be geuen for you. Nor he said not, this wine is my bloud, nor with this wine is my bloud, whiche circumstance of plaine speach he would haue vsed, if the pure creatures should haue remained, but he sayde, This is my bloud, which is shed for you and for many for the remission of sinnes, that is to say, the substance hidden vnder these visible formes of bread and wine, are my very proper fleshe and bloud. I pray you where do you find in the whole body of the Scripture expressed, or iustly vnderstanded, that Christ gaue but only a bare and naked signe, figure, or sacrament? Or where finde you that he gaue his body wyth Page 1378 bread,* it remayning bread still? And if you thinke to finde it, I pray you shewe me here, whether that bodye that hee gaue with materiall bread, were his true body or not? If not, then it was phantasticall, if it were his true body (as you doe graunt) then must there needes be two very true bodyes in one place together. Now that it was his verye true body and bloud, it is certayne by the playne wordes of the text saying thus. Which is betrayed or geuen, and which is shedde for you, and for many. But I will let all this passe ouer, and I do requyre of you this one question whether that the sacramentes of the old law, and of y^e new law be all one?

Madew.

*If you doe consider the thinges themselues they be all one, but if you respecte the onely signes, figures and sacramentes outwardly then they be diuers.

Glin.

I doe perceiue your aunswere very well, then further to our purpose, was Christ then after the same maner in the bread that came from heauen. In the paschall lamb, and in Isaac, as he is in this Sacrament? Which if you do graunt me then these propositions were true, for Christ to say this Manna is my body, this Lambe is my body, this Isaac is my bodye. Moreouer if the Sacramentes of the olde law, and of the law of grace be all one, in very deede, & effect (as you seeme to graūt) thē what difference is betweene the shew bread in Moyses law, and the bread, that we doe breake that Saynt Paule speaketh of? They then had that bread, which signified Christ and so doth ours (as you say) that was bread, so is ours, and so by your reason there is no difference betweene them: yea theyr Manna because it came from heauen, was better then this earthly bread, that commeth from beneath, which is contrarye to the truth: for Saynt Paule sayth, that the law was geuen by Moyses, but the verity was geuē by Iesus Christ. Wherefore that which Christ gaue, was not onely a signe but also the veritye, that is to saye, the liuing breade, that came from heauen, the true Lambe that taketh awaye the sinnes of the world, and Isaac himselfe which is Christ, or els you must graunt me that we christians doe receiue lesse then the Iewes did. For they receiued the breade called Manna from heauen, and we onely a poore morsel of bread from the earth. Theyrs was called Aungelles foode, and ours is (as you holde) little better then common breade. Me seemeth that you doe distrust the doctrine of the fayth of Christendome, for these fiue hundreth yeares, euen as though Christ had forsaken his Catholique Church after one thowsande yeares, but that is not so, for he promised his holy spirite to assist his spowse the Church, and to lead her continually into all trueth from time to time, as neede should require.* As I remember you sayd, that adoration did followe vpon transubstaunciation, but the fathers for one thowsand yeares past doe graunt adoration of the sacrament therefore transubstantiation also. The minor I proue by the most cleare testimonies of S. Austen, S. Ambrose, S. Deuise, S. Basile, and S. Chrisostome,

Madew.

I denye (mayster Doctour) that I sayde any suche thing, and therwith I say that the Fathers do vnderstand by adoration a certeine reuerent maner, that we should receiue the Lordes supper with, which may be called a certē veneration, but no adoration.

Glin.

No may? S. Austen (de ciuitate Dei) witnesseth that the Ethnikes, and Paynims doe esteme the Christians to worship and adore the gods of wheat and barley called Caeres, and the God of wyne called Bacchus. And agayne S. Austen saith thus. Lo no man eateth of that bread except he first adore and worship it.

Madew.

By your pacience S. Austen in that place speaketh of the honoring of Christes body now sitting in heauen.

Glin.

Yea mayster Doctor, thinke you so? And why not also of his blessed body in the sacrament? Seing that he saith it is there, this is my body, which is geuen for you, sayth he. More playnely he needed not to speake for the reall presēce of his blessed body, being both able & willing to verify his word. For if a cunning Lapidary should say to you or me thys is a true right diamōd, a perfecte carbuncle, saphyre, emrode or any such precious stone, we would beleue him, though we were ignorant of theyr natures. Wherefore we ought much more to beleue our Sauour Christ God, and man, in that he sayth: this is my body. And why then ought we not to honor it in the sacrament. Or how many bodies hath Christ, seeing you do graunt his body in heauen to be honored, but not his body here in the sacrament.

Madew.

Forsooth he hath but one very body, & no moe, but the same is sacramentally in the sacrament, and substancially in heauen, here by fayth, and there in deed.

Glin.

Well yet once agayne to you thus. The very true body of Christ is to be honored,* but the same very true body is in the Sacrament, ergo the body of Christ in the sacrament is to bee honored.

Rochester.

Welbeloued frendes and brethren in our sauior Christ you must vnderstand that this disputatiō,* with the other that shalbe after this are appointed for to search forth the playne trueth of the holy scriptures in these matters of religion, which of a long season haue bene hidden from vs by the false gloses of that greate Antichrist and his Ministers of Rome and now in our dayes must be reueyled to vs Englishe men, thorow the great mercy of God principally, and secondarily thorow the most gentle clemencye of our naturall soueraigne Lord the kings maiesty, whom the liuing Lord long preserue to raigne ouer vs in health wealth & godlines, to mayntenaunce of Gods holy word, and to the exterpatation of all blinde gloses of men, that goe about to subuert the truth. For because therefore that I am one that doth loue the truth, and haue professed the same amongst you: th••ore I say because of conferring my mind with yours, I will here gladly declare what I thinke in this poynt now in controuersy. Not because this worshipfull Doctor hath any need of my healpe in dissoluing of argumentes proposed agaynst him, for as me semeth he hath aunswered hitherto very well and clarkly according to the truth of Gods word. But now to the purpose. I do graūt vnto you (mayster oponent) that the old auncient fathers do record and witnesse, a certeine honour and adoration to be done vnto Christes body, but then they speake not of it in the sacrament, but of it in heauen at the right hand of the father as holy Chrisostome sayth, honor thou it,* and then eat it but that honor may not be geuē to the outward signe but to the body of Christ it self in heauen. For that body is there onely in a signe virtually, by grace, in the exhibition of it in spirite, effect, and fayth, to the worthy receiuer of it. For we receiue virtually onely Christes body in the sacrament.

Glin.

How thē (if it please your good Lordship) doth baptisme differ from this Sacrament? For in that we receiue Christ also by grace and virtually.

Rochester.

Christ is present after an other sort in baptism, then in this sacrament,* for in that he purgeth and washeth the infant from all kinde of sinne, but here he doth feed spirituallie the receiuer in fayth, with all the merites of hys blessed death and passion. And yet he is in heauen still really and substancially. As for example. The kinges Maiesty our Lord and maister is but in one place, wheresoeuer that his royall person is abiding for the time, and yet hys mighty power, and authoritie is euery where in his realmes and dominions. So Christes reall person is onely in heauen subauncially placed, but his might is in all thinges created effectually. For Christes flesh may be vnderstanded for the power, or inward might of his flesh.

Glin.

If it please your fatherhood, S. Ambrose and S. Austen do say, that before the consecratiō, it is but very bread,* and after the consecration it is called the verie bodye of Christ.

Madew.

Indeed it is the very body of Christ sacramentally after the consecration, whereas before it is nothing but common bread, and yet after that it is the Lordes bread, & thus must S. Ambrose and S. Austen be vnderstanded.

¶Here the proctours cōmanded the Opponent to diuert to the secōd conclusion, but he requested them, that they would permit hym as long in this matter, as they would in the second, and so he still prosecuted the fyrst matter as followeth

Glin.

The bread after the consecration doth feed the soule,* ergo the substaunce of common breade doth not remayne. The argument is good, for S. Ambrose de sacramentis saith thus. After the consecration there is not the thing, that nature did forme, but that which the blessing doth consecrate. And if the benediction of the Prophet Elias did turne the nature of water how much more then doth the benedictiō of Christ here both God and man.

Madew.

That book of S. Ambrose is suspected to be none of his workes.

Rochester.

So say all the fathers.

Glin.

I doe maruaile at that, for S. Austen in his book of retractions maketh playne that, that was his own very worke.

Rochester.

He speaketh indeede of such a booke so intituled to S. Ambrose, but yet we do lacke the same book indeed.

Glin.

Well, let it then passe to other mens iudgements: What then say you to holy S. Ciprian 1200. yeares past? * Who saith that the bread which our Lord gaue to his disciples, was not chaunged in forme, or qualitie: but in very nature, and by the almighty word was made fleshe.

Madew.

I do aunswere thus, that this word fleshe may be taken two wayes either for the substaunce it selfe, or els for a natural propertie of a fleshly thing. So that Ciprian Page 1379 there did meane of a naturall property, and not of fleshlye substance. And cōtrariwise in the rod of Aarō, where both the substance, and also the property was changed.

Glin.

Holy S. Ambrose sayth, the body there made by the mighty power of Gods worde, * is a bodye of the Uyrgyne Mary.

Rochest.

That is to say, that by the word of God the thing hath a being, that it had not before, and we doe consecrate the body that we may receiue the grace and power of y^e body of Christ in heauen by this sacramentall body.

Glin.

By your pacience (my Lorde) if it bee a bodye of the Uyrgyne as Saynt Ambrose sayth, which we do consecrate as ministers by Gods holy word, then must it needes be more then a sacramentall, or spirituall bodye: yea a very body of Christ in deed, yea the same that is still in heauen without all mouing from place to place, vnspeakably, and farre passing our naturall reason, which is in this mistery so captiuate, that it cannot conceiue how it is there, without a liuely fayth to Gods word. But let this passe: You do graunt that this breade doth quicken or geue lyfe, which if it doe, then it is not a naturall bread, but a supersubstanciall bread.

Rochester.

So doth the effectuall, and liuely word of god, which for that it nourisheth the soule, it doth geue life, for the diuine essence infudeth it selfe vnspeakably into y^e faithfull receiuer of the sacrament.

Glin.

How then say you to holy Damascene a Greeke authour,* who as one Trittenius sayth florished one thowsand yeares past, he sayth thus. The bodye that is of the holye Uirgine Mary is ioyned to the Diuinitye after the consecration in veritye, and in deede, not so as the body once assumed into heauen, and sitteth on the Fathers ryghte hand, doth remoue from thence, and commeth downe at the consecration time, but that the same breade and wyne are substauncially transumpted into the verye bodye and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ. If (sayth he) thou doest not know the maner how it is brought to passe, let it be enough to thee to beleue, that it is done by the operation of the holy Ghost, and we do know no more but that the lyuing word of God is working, and almighty, but the very maner how, is inscrutable to vs, and no great maruell sayth he, for we cannot well expresse howe the materiall bread, wine, or water are transumpted naturally into the same body and bloud of the receiuer, and be become an other body, then they were before. So sayth this great ancient Clarke, also this shewbread with wine and water, are chaunged by the comming of the holy Ghost into christes body and bloud, and they be not two bodies there, but very one (of Christ) and the same.

Rochester.

First I denye (Mayster Doctour) that Damascene was one thowsande yeares past,* secondarily that hee is not to be holden as an auncient father, for that he mainteyneth in his workes euill and damnable doctrine, as the worshipping of images, and such like. Thyrdly I say that in deede God by his holy spirit is the worker of that, whiche is done in the sacrament. Also I graunt that there is a mutation of the common bread and wine spiritually into the Lordes breade and wine,* by the sanctifying of them in the Lordes word. But I denye that there is any mutation of the substaunces, for there is no other chaunge there indeed, then there is in vs, which when we do receiue the sacrament worthely, then are we chaunged into Christes body, bones and bloud, not in nature, but spiritually, and by grace, much like as Isaias saw the burning cole, euen so we see not there the very simple bread, as it was be|fore the consecration, for an vnion cannot be but of two very thinges. Wherefore if we be ioyned to Christ receyuing the sacrament, then there is no adnihilation of bread, which is, whē it is reduced to nothing as it is in your fained transubstantiation.

Glin.

So I perceiue you would haue me to graunt, that the Sacrament is but a figure, which Theophilactus doeth deny.

Rochester.

You say trueth, he denyeth it deed to be a figure, but he meaneth that it is not onely a figure.

Glin.

Whereas Saynt Paule sayth that we being manye are one bread, he speaketh not, nor meaneth one materiall bread, as you do here, ergo he speaketh of a heauenly bread. And holy Chrysostome vpon Mathew sayth, that the paschall Lambe was a figure, but the mistery is the veryty: For the Disciples would not haue bene offended to haue dronken a figure of Christes bloud being well accustomed to figures. For Christ did not institute a figure for a figure but the cleare verity in stead of the figure, as Saynt Iohn sayth, grace and verity was geuen by Christ. Doest thou see bread? (sayth Chrisostome) doth it auoyd or passe as other meates do which we receiue? God forbid, ergo. &c.

Madew.

That auncient Clarke Origene vpon the 15. of S. Mathew sayth thus, as touching that which is materiall in the Sacrament, it descendeth,* and issueth out as other nutrimentes doe. But as concerning that which is celestially, it doth not so.

Glin.

Chrisostome homile. 83. vpō Mathew sayth, that we cannot be deceiued of Christes wordes, but our naturall sences may be deceiued in this poynt very soone and easely: his sayd wordes cannot be false, but our sences be many times beguiled of theyr iudgementes. Because therefore that Christ sayd this is my body, let vs not at any hand doubt (sayth he) but let vs beleue it, and well perceiue it with the eyes of our vnderstanding. And within a litle after in that place, he sayth thus. It was not enough that he was become man; and afterwarde to be scourged for vs but also he did reduce, and bring vs to be as one body with him, not thorow fayth onely, but in very deed also he maketh vs his body. And after that, he sayth that these works are not of mannes power: But the same thinges that hee wrought in his last supper, he nowe worketh also by his precept to his right minister, and we doe occupy the place of the same ministers, but hee it is that doth sanctify, and transumpt the creatures, he performeth still the same.

Rochester.

M. Doctour you must vnderstand that in that place S. Chrisostome sheweth vs that Christ deliuered to vs no sensible thing at his last supper.

Glin.

Honourable syr by your pacience, I graunt that hee gaue to his Disciples no sensible thing in substaunce, but a thing insensible, his owne precious body, and bloud vnder the onely kindes of creatures. And truly (as it seemeth) Theophilactus best knew the meaning of Chrisostome, because all authors accept him as a faythfull interpreter of him. And he hath these same playne words, transelemented, and transformed. Also Theophilactus Alexandrinus super Marcum, Cyrillus, and Saynt Augustine sayth that before the consecration it is breade, but afterwarde it is Christes very body. In like maner S. Augustine vpon 33. Psalme. sayth, that in his last supper Christ did beare himselfe in his owne handes. Now euery man may beare the figure of his body in his owne hands, but S. Austen saith it there for a miracle. Ireneus in his fift booke is of the same minde. And Saynt Augustine sayth I doe remember my wordes. &c. The law and figures were by Moises, but the verity and body came by Christ.

Rochester.

Well, say what you list, it is but a figuratiue speach, like to this if you will receiue, and vnderstand he is Elias for a property, but indeede he was not Elias, but Iohn the Baptist. And so in this place Christ called it his body, when it was very bread. But better then the cōmon breade, because it was sanctified by the woorde of Christ.

¶Here Mayster Langdale replied to Doctor Madew.

Langdale.

Right worshipfull Mayster Doctor by your pacience I haue noted two thinges that you affirmed in youre position euen now before this honourable audience,* the which as me seemeth, are not consonant to the trueth of Gods worde. The first is as touching Christes sayinge I will not from hence forth drinke any more of the fruite of the Uyne, vntill I drinke it newe with you. &c. Whyche place of the Scripture you dyd (as I thinke) vnderstand, and interprete as though nothing els remayned after the consecration, but very wyne still. Whereof I doe not a little maruell. See yng that, that most famous Clarke Erasmus whose authoritye and sentence you refuse at this present onely, yet neuerthelesse he is very worthy in thys matter of farre better estimation amongst learned men. Wherefore I trust I shall not offend to alledge him before this learned and honourable auditorye, he playnely affirmeth that for all his great laboure in searching the Scriptures,* he coulde neuer finde either in the Euangelistes or yet in the Apostolicall doctrine, that it might be, or was called wyne, after the consecration. And therefore I cannot but maruell, if the thing be so open and playne, as in your declaration you seeme to make it, that such a profoūd Clarke as he was, coulde not finde it out. For that sayde place he intreated of in his paraphrases, in his annotations, and in others of his lucubrations, and yet he playnely denyeth that same very thing to be found of him, whiche you here openly affirmed, that it is wine, or may be so called after the consecration duely performed by a right minister. I beseeche you not to be offended, though I credite not your saying in this so weightye a matter of Christian religion, as I do his.

Madew.

No forsooth, I will not be offended one iote with Page 1380 you,* but for to contēt your minde in this poynt. It is most constant and sure, that Erasmus was of that mind and opinion, that it was enough for a christian to beleue Christes body and bloud to be in the sacrament in what manner or condition soeuer it were.*

Langdale.

By your license good mayster Doctor, these be Erasmus wordes.* The Church of Christ hath determined very lately transubstanciation in the sacrament. It was of a long season enough to beleue Christes body to be eyther vnder the bread consecrated, or els to be present after anye other maner. But yet (sayth he) after that the sayd Church had pōdered and weyed the thing more pithely w^t greater iudgement, then she made a more certeyne determination of the same. In the which place 1. Cor. 7. Erasmus sayth that the proceeding of the holy Ghost equally from the Father, & the sonne, was also determined of the same Church. But let this passe. And as touching the second poynt, whiche I noted in your so eloquent declaration, which was that you did wrest,* and wring the saying of Tertullian from the verity of his minde, for you sayde that he doth interpret the Prophete Malachye speaking of our dayly sacrifice in the new law, to meane nothing els, by that sacrifice in that place, but praier and thankesgeuing. But the sayd ancient Clerke Tertullian hath not those wordes that you doe alleadge of him, that is to saye, (nothing els.) And yet though that Oecolampadius do so interprete that place, yet (as me semeth) the iudgement of the hole Christen church is to be preferred in suche a matter of religion. But I will passe ouer this poynte, and returne to the matter it selfe. And first I doe requyre of your maystershippe*, whether that this sentence (this is my body) be spoken of Christ figuratiuely or not?

Madew.

After the minde of the common glose of Cyprian & Origene it is so taken in very deed.

Langdale.

That cannot be by your pacience, for it is taken the•e substantially, ergo not figuratiuely.

Madew.

I deny your argument.

Langdale.

I proue my argument good thus. This worde substaunce doth playnely repugne, and is contrary to this word figure, ergo substancially, and figuratiuely do also repugne. Moreouer I aske of you whether that this be a true proposition or not, bread is Christes body?

Madew.

*Yea forsooth, it is a true proposition.

Langdale.

Then thus to you. Christes body was geuen for vs, but you saye that bread is Christes body ergo bread was geuen for vs.

Rochester.

Not so syr, for your former propositiō is of double vnderstanding.

Langdale.

Well, yet you M. Doctor doe graunt that Christ is substauncially in the sacrament.

Madew.

No I deny that I sayd so euer.

Langdale.

*Yea? do you so? Well I passe not thereupō greatly, for I will proue it by an other meanes. Christ did suffer his most glorious passion for vs really, and substauncially ergo he is also in the sacrament substauncially. The argument is good, for because that it is the same here, that was there crucified for vs, how be it here inuisibly, indeede spiritually and sacramentally, but there visiblye, and after a mortall, and most bloudy maner.

Rochester.

Mayster Langdale, your argument doth well conclude, in case that his body were here in the sacrament, after such a sort as it was when he was betrayed. But that is not so, for he was betrayed, and crucified in his naturall body substauncially, and really in very deede: but in the Sacrament he is not so, but spiritually, and figuratiuely onely.

Langdale.

By your good Lordships fauor that is not so, for he is there, not figuratiuely but veryly, and indeed by the power of his mighty word, yea euen his very owne natural body vnder the sacramēt, duely performed by the lawfull minister.

Madew.

Oh say not so, for you speake blasphemy.

Langdale.

No, no, M. Doctor, God forbid, that either I or any mā els should be noted of blasphemy, saying nothing, but the very playne trueth, as in my conscience, & learning I do no lesse.

Rochester.

O M. Langdale, I wis it becommeth you, not heare to haue such wordes.

Langdale

If it like your good Lordship I gaue not y^e fyrste occasion of them, but onely did refute that, whiche I was vniustly burthened withall as reason doth require, and it greeued me to heare it. He sayth (if it please your Lordshippe) that there is a mutation or chaunge of the bread after it is consecrated,* which if it be so (as I graunt no lesse) then I would inquyre of him, whether it be chaunged in the substaunce, or in the accidentes, or els in both, or in nothing. No man can iustly say that there is a chaunge into nothing. And all auncient fathers do agree, that the same accidentes are there still after, that were before, nor no doctor sayth▪ that there is any mutation of both the substance, and accidentes also, ergo the substaunce o• bread is chaunged into some other thing, that is there really present vnder the formes of bread and wine, which by Christes wordes, must needes be his owne blessed body.

Rochester.

Syr you are deceiued greatly, for there is no chaunge of the substaunces neither of the accidentes: * but in very deed there do come vnto the bread other accidents, in so much that wheras the bread and wyne were not sanctified before, and holy, yet afterwarde they be sanctified, and so do receiue then an other sort, or kind of vertue whiche they had not before.

Here is to be noted, that Peter Martyr in his aunswere at Oxford did graunt a chaunge in the substaunces of bread and wine, which in Cambridge by the Bishop Doct. Ridley was denyed.

Langdale.

By your pacience reuerend father, * by such meanes a man may easely auoyde all the misteries of our christē fayth: As where it is sayde thus of God the father, this is my beloued sonne. &c. A man may also wring that to be vnderstood thus: this is y^e image of my welbeloued sonne, or this is the vertue of my well beloued sonne: yea muche more iustly then your good Lordship doth y^e other, because S. Paule to the Hebrues doth call the sonne the Image of the father, and in an other place he calleth him the power, or vertue of God, and Gods wisdom▪ Now though he be so called in scripture, God forbid that we shoulde call hym onely Gods Image or Gods vertue, and not God himselfe.

Rochester.

Oh gentle M. Langdale, * you ought not to reason after such a sort as you do now, because that a trope or figuratiue speache is no•iue somewhere, but not euery where, nor in this matter.

Langdale.

Yet by your license (honorable father) it doth appeare to me no trope at al in these words of christ, * this is my body, which is geuen for you, and that for this reason: Chryst did exhibite or geue againe the very same things at his last supper, by the which thinges he was ioyned to vs, but he was ioyned or knit vnto vs by his owne naturall flesh, & bloud, ergo he did exhibite to vs at his last supper no lesse agayne. My former proposition I proue by the testimony of S. Chrisost. whose wordes in Christes person are these: I would be your brother, I tooke vpon me common flesh & bloud for your sakes, and euen by the same things that I am ioyned to you, the very same I haue exhibited to you agayne. &c.

¶ Here the Proctors commaunded Langdale to geue place to an other.

Rochest.

We are not ioyned by natural flesh, but do receiue his flesh spiritually from aboue. &c.

¶Here M. Segewicke replied.

Right worshipful M Doctor, I do also aske of you first of all,* whether the greeke article (this) of the neuter gēder be referred to the word (bread) or to the word (body) if it be referred to the worde (bread) then Christ woulde not haue sayd this, in the neuter gender, but rather this, in the masculine gender.

Rochester.

Forsooth that article is referred to neyther of both, but may signify vnto vs any other kinde of thing.

Segewicke.

No forsoothe, but it doth note vnto vs some excellēt great thing determinately, & not so cōfusedly as you say. For such a great heap of articles, in the greek doth notify vnto vs a great and weighty thing to be in the sacrament determinately, if wee may credite the auncient Fathers.* Moreouer this word (bread) is not alwayes in the scriptures taken after one sorte: wherefore I desire you to shew me how it is taken in this place of S. Paule: we are many, one bread. &c.

Madew.

Forsooth of the very wheaten bread.

Segewicke.

Then after your minde, we are all very wheaten bread.

Rochest.

Forsooth we are bread, not for the nature of bread, but for the felowship and vnity that is noted by the coagulation of many graynes into one bread or loafe.*

Segewicke.

Well let that passe, then thus. It is the body, ergo no figure, for because there is a perpetuall contrarietye betweene the law of Moyses & the law of grace. Therein were figures & shadowes, and herein is the verity indeed.

Rochester.

I do graunt it to be Christes true body, & flesh by a propriety of the nature assumed to the godhead,* yea and we do really eat and drinke his flesh and bloud after a certeine reall property.

Segewicke.

It is not the figurate paschall lambe, it is not the figuratiue Manna, nor yet y^e figuratiue shewbread. &c. ergo it is no figure.

Madew.

I do deny your argument.

Segewicke.

I maynteyne my argument thus, all the shadowes are wholly past, ergo also so be the figures, for euery figure is a shadow, if then it be but a figure, all y^e figures are not past as yet, but that is false, ergo so is the other.

Rochest.

It is nothing but a figure, or token of the true body of Christ as it is sayd of Iohn the baptiste, * he is Elias, not that he was so in deede or person, but in property, and vertue he represented Elias.

Segewicke.

So, but most learned father, when Christ sayde I am the way, the truth, and the life: may it be vnderstanded as you do the other place thus: I am y^e vertue of the way, verity, and the life? But now to the matter it selfe. It is verily meat, ergo it is not figuratiuely.

Madew.

This verbe or word (is) in this place is taken for that that signifieth.

Here he was commaunded to reply in the second matter.

Segewicke.

NOw as touching our second conclusion thys I say. Wheresoeuer Christ is there is a sacrifice propiciatory, but in the Lordes supper is Christ, ergo in the Lordes supper is a sacrifice propiciatory. *

Madew.

Christ is not offered in the Lordes supper, but is receiued spiritually.

Segewicke.

The priesthood and the sacrifice be corespondēt together, * but Christes priesthood after the orde of Melchizedech is perpetuall, ergo also so is his sacrifice.

Rochest.

Christ is a Priest for euer, that is to say his sacrifice, and priesthood offered once for all, is auaylable for euer so that no other shall succeed him.

Legewicke.

Where there is no oblatiō, there is no sacrifice, ergo if Christ be not perpetually offered,* there is no perpetuall sacrifice. Item the same bloudy sacrifice of Christ vpon the Crosse was the very fine and end of all the bloudye sacrifices figured in y^e law after the order of Aarons priesthoode. Wherefore you must needes graunt that he offered himselfe also at his last supper after the order of Melchizedech vnder the formes of breade and wine: or els you must shewe the scripture where he did so, which I cannot perceiue to be done, but at his last supper onely after an vnbloudy maner. Item he is offered for the remission of sins daylye, ergo he is a sacrifice propitiatorye still in the newe law, as Saynt Augustine sayth expounding these wordes of the Psalme. Thou hast not willed to haue sacrifice and oblation, but. &c.

Rochester.

S. Cyprian speaketh much like y^e sorte, where he sayth thus. It is the Lordes Passion, whiche we doe offer. &c.

Segewicke.

In the olde law there were many sacrifices propiciatory, ergo there be also in the new law, or els you must graunt that God is not so beneficiall now to vs, as then he was to them, seing that we be as frayle, and as nedy as euer were they, whiche must be especially the moste pure dayly sacrifice of Christes body and bloud, that holy Malachy speaketh of.

Madew.

*As touching the place of Malachy the Prophet, I answere that it is nothing to your purpose for the offering of Christ dayly in the Sacrament. For that sacrifice there spoken of is nothing els, but the sincere & most pure preaching of Gods holy word, prayer and of thankesgeuing to God the Father thorow Iesus Christ.

Here M. Segewicke was commaunded to cease to Mayster Yong.

Yong.

WORshipful mayster Doctor, although you haue learnedly, and Clarkely defended these your conclusiōs this day: yet seeing that I am now placed to impugne thē in place of a better: I do begin thus w^t you. It hath pleased Christ to make vs partakers of his holy spirite, and that in very deede, by receiuing of the Christen fayth, hope, and charitye, ergo muche more of his owne blessed bodye, and bloud spiritually and in very deede in the Lordes supper. Item the Aungels foode was altogether holy from aboue, and heauenly called Manna, ergo also this celestial, and heauenly foode can be iustly esteemed to be of no lesse excellency then that,* but without comparison better: and so no very wheate, after due consecration of it. Item the wordes of holy scripture are euermore effectuell, and working, ergo they must performe the thing indeede that they doe promise. For he that might create, might also chaunge at hys pleasure, the natures, and substaunces of creatures, as appeareth that Christ did by chaunging water into wyne at a Mariage in Galile. But Christ in the Scripture dyd promise Iohn. 6. that the bread that he would geue, is hys flesh in deede, whiche promise was neuer fulfilled till in his last supper, when he tooke bread, gaue thanks, blessed it, and gaue it to his disciples saying, take, eate, this is my body. Which bread then was his flesh in deede, as doth well appeare in the sayd place, and next promise depending vpon the same, thus, which flesh I will geue for the life of the world. This last promise was fulfilled by him vpon the Crosse, ergo the first was likewise at his last Supper. So that it was but one, and the same flesh, first and last promised and performed.

Rochester.

In deed the wordes of holy scripture doe worke theyr effectes potencially and thorowly by the mighty operation of the spirite of God.

Yong.

If it please your Lordship,* man is fedde and nourished with Christes bloud, ergo thē it is his bloud indeed, though it do not so appeare, to our outward senses, which be deceiued, for Christ sayth this is my bloud: And also my bloud is drinke in deede. And because that we shoulde not abhorre his blessed bloud in his naturall kinde, or his flesh if they shoulde be so ministred vnto vs: of his most excellent mercy, and goodnesse, condescending to our weake infirmities, he hath appoynted them to be geuen vs, vnder the sensible kindes of his conuenient creatures, that is to say of bread and wyne. Also our body is fedde with Christes body, which is meate in deede, but it can not be nourished with that that is not there present, ergo Christs body that feedeth vs must needes be present in very deede in the sacrament. Item the nature of bread is chaunged, but the nature of the bread, and the substaunce of it, is all one thing, ergo the substaunce also is chaunged. My first proposition is S. Cyprian de coena domini saying, that the bread in figure is not chaunged, but in nature.

Rochester.

Cyprian there doth take thys worde nature for a propertye of nature onely,* and not for the naturall substaunce.

Yong.

That is a straunge acception, that I haue not read in any author before this time, but yet by your leaue, the communion of Christes body, can not be there, where hys body is not, but the communion of Christes body is in the sacrament, ergo Christes body is there presēt in very deed.

Rochester.

Grace is there communicated to vs by the benefite of Christes body sitting in heauen.

Yong.

Not so onely, for we are members of his flesh, and bones of his bones.

Rochester.

We be not consubstantiall with Christ,* God forbid that, but we are ioyned to his mistical body thorow his holy spirite, and the communion of hys fleshe is communicated to vs spiritually thorow the benefite of his flesh in heauen.

Yong.

Well I am contented, and do most humbly beseeche your good Lordshippe to pardon me of my greate rudenesse and imbecillity, which I haue here shewed.

Doctor Glin in his first conclusion.*

¶The misteries of fayth (as August. witnesseth) may very profitably be beleued, but they cannot well be searched forth, as sayth the scripture, I beleued, therefore I spake and he that confesseth me before men, him will I cōfesse before my father which is in heauen, We beleue euery man in his arte, therefore much more Christ our sauior in his word. Maruell not most honorable Lordes and worshipfull Doctours that I speake thus now, for once you your selues spake the same. But peraduenture some wyll say beleue not euery spirite. I aunswere charity beleueueth all thinges, but not in all thinges. If those thinges whiche I shall vtter, be conuincd as false, I shall desire you to take them as not spoken at all. But these are the wordes of of trueth hoc est corpus meum, this is my body, Christ spake them, therefore I dare not say this bread is my body,* for so Christ sayd not, Christ sayd thus, this is my body, and therfore I but duste and ashes, yea a worme before him, dare not say this is a figure of his body: heauen and earth (saith he) shal passe but my word shall not passe. Whatsoever our old father Adam called euery creature, that is his name to this day, y^e new Adam (Christ Iesus) sayd this is my body, & is it not so? he neuer sayd this is a figure of my bodye, nor eat you this figure, or signe of my body. And therfore whē y^e paschall lambe was set before him, he sayd not, this is my body. Wherefore if at y^e day of iudgemēt, Christ should say vnto me, why hast y^u beleued y^t this is my body? I would Page 1382 aunswere him, because thou hast so called it▪ I beleued it not to be a figure, because thou saydst not, that it was a figure: Other reasons to auouch I know not. Of the worde it self. I contend not, but the thing it selfe I defend, for we must speake regularly. Thus Christ, thus the Apostles, thus all the ancient fathers haue spoke, our fathers hadde but onely figures and shadowes, but the Church of God hath the truth it selfe with the signes. Tertullian sayth one figure conteyneth not another, but Melthizedech was a figure, ergo this is the body. The Sacramentes of the Iewes weare signes and tokens, but ours be both the signes and the thing signed also. Luther himselfe confessed that the body was present with the bread, and could not denye it: Oecolampadius tooke it for a figure onely Chrisostome demaunding wherefore Christ gaue his body before his passion,* rather then at any other time, aunswereth; that hee might tye the trueth to the figure, saying, t•ke, eate, this is my body, not a figure of my body. And the same Chrisostome sayth agayne, if it were but bare bread, or but a figure, wherefore should his Disciples haue bene offended in eating a fygure? Agayne in his 83. Homely vpon Mathew. They are not any humayne workes, which he did worke at his last supper, he it is that worketh, he maketh perfect, we are his ministers, but it is he that sanctifieth, and chaūgeth the elementes of breade and wine into his bodye and bloud. Agayne doest thou see bread and wine? doe they passe into the priuy like other meates, God forbid. &c. Theophilus Alexandrinus vpon these wordes of Marke the Euangelist this is my body, sayth. This whiche I geue, and which you receiue, •s not onely bread, or a figure of Christ•s body, but the trueth it selfe, for if it should appeare as it is, in forme of flesh & bloud, we should loth it, and therefore the Lord condescendyng to our weakenesse, reteyneth the formes of bread and wine, and yet conuerteth the same into the trueth of his body and bloud. Theophilactus sayeth the bread and the wine is the very body & bloud of Christ, and not a figure onely. If you stand in suspēse of the author, or approue him not, yet know you that he is counted and taken amongst all the learned for a most faythfull interpreter of Chrisostome, the bread sayth he is transelementate, and transmitted into an other substaunce then it was before. Augustine sayth there was great heede taken in the primitiue Church, least any part of the Sacrament should fall downe to the grounde. &c. Cyrillus sayth, leaste wee shoulde abhorre fleshe and bloud in the Sacrament of the Aultar, God humbleth himselfe to our weakenesse pouring and infusing the force of life into it, and making it the very trueth of his owne blessed body and bloud. Damasce•e calleth it a diuine body, or a body deified. Origene, Ireneus, Eusebius Hieronimus, with al the rest of the auncient Catholicke Fathers are of the same opinion with me, all which to produce it were too long.

THE sacrifice and offering vppe of Christes body in the Sacrament of the Aultar (right honourable and worshipfull) I will defend euen to the effusion of bloud as a thing consonant to scripture, whereof Paule speaketh to y^e Hebrues. But perchaunce some will obiect, Christ offered vp himselfe,ergo you ought not to offer him. I aunswere, yea, because he offered himselfe therfore, I offer him, for except he had offered himselfe, I could not haue offered hym. But you will say, Christes death is sufficient, and therfore you ought not to offer him agayne. I aunswere. So may we say, we neede neyther to fast nor pray, for Christe hath done both sufficiently for vs. Agayne you will obiect, if you offer him vppe agayne, you crucify him anew. I answere, not so, for many haue offered him, that haue not crucified him, as Abraham, Isaac, Moyses, the Leuites, Anna, Samuel. We offer Christ, but not to the death, but incōmemoration of his death, there being not onely commemoration thereof, but also the very presence of Christes body and bloud. Ireneus sayth, Christ counselled his Disciples to offer the first fruites of all theyr goodes to God, not that he needed any of them, but for that they shoulde not shewe themselues fruitless, or vngratefull, and therefore Christ tooke the creature of bread, gaue thanks, and sayde this is my body, and likewise the creature of the cuppe, and confessed saying, this is my bloud of the new Testament. Thus Christe hath taught a newe kinde of oblation, whiche the Church receiuing from the Apostles, offereth to God thorow out all the whole world, who onely geueth vnto vs all kynd of foode, and the first fruites of his gracious giftes in the newe Testament, whereof Malachye thus sayth, I haue no pleasure in you sayth the Lorde of Hostes, I will not receiue any sacrifices at your handes, because my name is glorified amongst the Nations from the East to the West sayth the Lord, and in euery place is incense and pure sacrifice offered to my name. But here may be objected, Christe is the onely sacrifice for sinne, and wythout hym there is no moe. I aunswere, notwithstanding wee haue this commaundement, doe this in remembraunce of me, besides that I denye not that it is a commemoration, but I denye that it is an onely commemoration. I denye his absence, and I affirme his presence.

Here endeth the declaration of Doctor Glin.

Mayster Perne.

Where as you say (most reuerend mayster Doctor) in your proposition, I beleued, and therefore I spake, and we beleue, and therefore doe speake, our consciences, suggesting the same vnto vs, and agayne that misteryes are not to be searched, and the like, it semeth you go about to restrayne the searching of holye Scriptures, whereas Christe sayth scrutamini scripturas, searche the Scriptures.* Moreouer you haue cited the Fathers confusedly, & without order, you left transubstantiation and endeouour your selfe to proue the reall pr•sence in the Sacrament, wheras we denye nothing lesse then his corporall presence, or the absence of his substaunce in the bread.

Glin.

You inueigh wonderfully you knowe not agaynste what, for neyther I, nor yet August. doe denie the searching of the scriptures, but I sayd out of Augustine misteries are not to be searched: it is an other thing to search misteryes, then it is to searche the Scriptures, whereas you requyre of me a regulate order of citing the Doctours, I had not (as all men know) the liberty of tyme so to do: but if you desire me so earnestly to performe that, if time may be graū|ted me, I will easely fulfill your request.

Perne.

I pray you let me aske you, what is a sacrament?

Glin.

A sacrament is a visible signe, of an inuisible grace.

Perne.

Augustine agaynst Maximinus the Arian Bishop maketh this diffinition of a sacrament. A sacrament is a thing signifyng one thing and shewing an other thing.

Glin.

I refuse not his reason.

Perne.

What is the thing figured by the sacrament?

Glin.

The thing figured is twofolde, to witte the thyng conteyned, and the thing signified, the thing signified, and not conteyned. For there be three thynges conteyned, the true body of Christ, the mystical body and the fruit or benefite of the sacrament.

Perne.

The formes and signes of bread nourishe not, ergo somewhat els besides the bare signe of bread doth remain, which nourisheth y^t is the substaunce of bread. For in euery sacrament there is a similitude, betwixte the signe and the thing signed, but betwixt the body of Christ, and the forme or kinde of bread, there is no similitude, ergo the nature of a sacrament is taken away.

Glin.

I deny your minor mayster Doctor.

Perne.

The formes nourish not, but the bodye nourisheth ergo there is no similitude betwixt them, and so is the nature of a sacrament cleane destroyd.

Glin.

It is sufficient to similitudes that the bread whyche was doth nourishe, and yet certayne Doctors do affirme that the formes do nourish miraculously.

Rochester.

Whosoeuer taketh awaye all the similitude of substaunces, consequently he taketh away the sacrament, for a similitude is three folde, namely of nutrition, of vnity and conuersion. But by a contrary similitude, he is not charged into our substaunce, but we into his: for in nutrition this is the similitude, that our bloud nourisheth our bodyes, so the bloud of Christ doth nourish vs, but after a wonderfull maner, to wit by turning vs into himselfe.

Glin.

I haue aunswered your reason (most reuerend Father) in that I sayd that the formes do nourish miraculously, as certeine learned do affirme.

Perne.

By what authority can you say that bread doth not remayne.

Glin.

By the authority of Christ who sayth this is my body.

Perne.

By the same reason may we say that bread still remayneth, for S. Paule calleth it bread sundry times in hys epistles.

Glin.

I denye not that it is breade, but that it is materiall bread, for Paule alwayes addeth this article (which) betokening (as all men hold) some chiefe thing.

Perne.

We are chaunged into a new creature.

Glin.

Not substancially, but actually.

Rochest.

This is that bread which came downe from heauē, ergo it is not Christs body,* for his body came not from heauen.

Glin.

We may say that Christ, God & man, came down frō heauen for the vnity of his person, or els for the mutuall cōmunity of the same his 2. natures in one, for his humain Page 1383 nature I know came not from heauen.*

Rochester.

The bread is his humaine nature, but y^e humain nature of his came not from heauē, ergo neither the bread.

Glin.

It is true that the bread came not frō heauē as bread simply, but as celestiall & heauenly bread. But I will aunswere to that, wheras you hold that y^e body of Christ came not from heauen: I by the body and flesh of Christ do vnderstand whole Christ, neyther separating his soule, nor yet his Deity, although hys humanity is not turned into his diuinity by confusion of substaunce, but is one by vnity of both. Or els thus I may reason, the God of glory is crucified, and the sonne of Mary created the world. &c.

Rochester.

So it is. But he is called a rocke and a vine, and so after your iudgement he is both a materiall rocke,* & also a materiall vine.

Glin.

The circumstances there shew playnely that there is a trope or figure: for it foloweth I am the vine, you are the braunches: but here is no trope. For after these words, this is my body, he addeth, which is geuen for you.

Rochester.

*Your iudgement herein is very grosse, and farre discrepant from the truth.

Glin.

If my iudgement in this he grosse (most reuerend father) thē are all the auncient fathers as grosse in iudgemēt as I in this poynt and the catholicke church also.

Perne

Shew vs one place, or one Doctor who sayth that it remayneth not bread after the consecration.

Glin.

I wōder that you are not ashamed to aske that of me, for haue you not had almost infinite places and doctors alledged vnto you in my former declarations prouing as much as you request at my handes?

Perne.

He tooke bread, he brake bread, ergo it is bread.

Glin.

*I haue answered often hereunto, and I graunt it is bread, but not onely, or materiall.

Perne.

Ireneus affirmeth that a sacramēt consisteth of a double matter, of a earthly matter, and of a heauenly, ergo the bread remayneth.

Glin.

Ireneus in that place by the earthly matter,* meaneth the humanity of Christ, and by the heauenly matter, the deity of Christ.

Rochester.

The humanity, and the diuinity of Christ make not a sacrament, which consisteth of a visible, and an inuisible nature, & I deny that Ireneus can be so vnderstanded: Therefore we desire the learned auditory to search Ireneus at home as oportunitie will serue for this matter.

Glin.

I wish them so to do also with all my hart.

Here Maister Grindall beginneth to dispute.

Grindall.

WHeras you say (worshipful M. Doct.) that we speak not now as sometimes we thought,* and iudged in this matter, peraduenture you also iudge not so now of all thinges as you haue done tofore. But what we haue once bene, it forceth not, God respecteth no mans person. And wheras you say that you dare not contrary to Christ cal it a signe,* or a figure, August. notwithstanding dareth to call it a figure, and Tertullian likewise with many mo.

Glin.

Grindall.

If the formes do nourish (as you contend) they nourish the naturall and humayne body, for they be both as one,* and are nourished a like.

Glin.

Your reason is meere phisicall, and therefore to be reiected in matters of fayth, but I graunt they nourish, but miraculously.

Grindall.

If you graūt that the formes do nourish, thē you graunt that bread remayneth.

Glin.

I sayd euen now that that is true, but the nature of it is chaunged and that miraculously.

Grindall.

If it be the reall and substaunciall body of Christ because Christ sayde (this is my body) ergo because the Lord sayd I will not drinke of the fruit of this vine,* and Paule calleth it bread after the consecration it is therfore bread, & wine.

Glin.

Truely syr you must bring better arguments, or els you will proue nothing for your purpose. For to your reasons thus I answer: Chrisost. sayth Christ did drinke of the bloud, but whether this sentence I will not drinke of the fruit of the vine be spokē of the bloud it is not certayne. And truly Erasmus denyeth that it is not to be found in all y^e whole scripture, that it is called bread after the consecration. Or els thus I may answer you. Euē as it is called bread for the forme,* and kind, and accidentes which remayne, so for y^e forme, & similitude which it hath it may be called y^e fruit of the vine after the consecratiō. And wheras Chrisost. calleth it wine, he speaketh of the nature wherof the sacramēt necessarily is made. And I denye not but it may be called wine, but yet eucharisticall. &c.

Rochest.

The Euangelistes, Math. Marke, and Luke, call i[•] the fruit of the vine, and Chrisost. saith that the fruit of the vine is nothing els but wine, ergo Christ gaue them wine, and dranke wine himselfe also, not bloud.*

Glin.

Christ said twise I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, once at the eating of the paschall Lambe (as Luke sayth) & then was it wine indeed: And agayne after the consecration of his body and bloud he sayd the like, and then it was not wine, which me think I can proue by the plain words of S. Luke if we compare him with Math. For if it were wine as they both affirme, then the wordes of Christ cannot well stand, because first (as Luke sheweth) he sayde at his legall supper I will not drinke of the fruit of this vine. &c. And agayne in Math. after the consecration of his body & bloud he dranke: it followeth therefore that that which he dranke was not wine by nature, for then must Christ needes be a lyer, which were blasphemy to say.

Rochest.

August. doth thus reconcile those places, saying it is spoken by a figure which we call histeron proteron.

Glin

I know that August. sayth so,* but me thinke y^t which I haue sayd semeth to be the true meaning of the places.

Rochest.

August. seeketh no starting holes, nor yet any indirect shiftes to obscure the truth.

Glin.

Say your fatherhoode what you will of Aug. I thinke not so.

Grindall.

This cup is the new testament in my bloud, but here is a trope, ergo,* in these wordes of Christ (this is my body) is a trope also.

Glin.

I deny your argumēt: for wheras Luk saith this cup, Math. sayth this is my bloud, & therfore as Aug. sayth places that be darcke, are to be expounded by other that be light.

Rochest.

All of your side, deny y^e Christ euer vsed any trope in the instituting of sacramentes.

Glin.

For my part I hold no opinion but the truth, wherof you your selfe also do pretend the like.

Rochest.

What vnderstād you by this word (hoc, this) & in what words standeth the force or strength of the sacramēt? In this pronowne (hoc, this) or in this verbe (est, is) or els in this whole sentence this is my body?

Glin.

It is not made the true body, except all the words be spokē, as in baptisme, I baptise thee in the name of the father, of the sonne, and of the holy ghost. For neither doth baptisme consist in this word ego I, or in baptise, or in this word (te, thee) or in these words in nomine, in the name. &c. but in all the wordes spoken in order.

Grindall.

If to eat the body of Christ be a figuratiue speach,^{*} as August. sayth it is, ergo, then these wordes (this is my body) is a figuratiue speach also.

Glin.

It is a figuratiue speach, because we eat not the body of Christ after the same maner that we do other meates. &c.

Grind.

Ciprian vnderstandeth this of those y^t come vnworthely,^{*} & make no difference of y^e Lordes body speaking of y^e diiudicatiō of the sacramentes & not of the body of Christ.

Glin.

Truely he speaketh of the true body of Christ.

Rochest.

They receiue vnworthely, who neither iudge themselues, nor yet the sacraments taking them as other common bread.

Grind.

August. vpon the 33. psal. sayth Christ bare himselfe in his owne handes after a sort, not in deed or truely. &c.

Glin.

You omit many other thinges which August. sayth, & I confesse that he caried himselfe in his own handes after • sort, but August. deliuereth this vnto vs, and as a great miracle. And you know it was no great miracle to cary a figure of his body in his hands. And wheras you say y^t•hrist caryed himselfe after a sort in his owne handes, it is verye true, but yet diuersly, for he sat after one maner at his supper, & after an other maner he caried himselfe in his hands. For Christ in the visible figure bore himselfe inuisibly.^{*}

Grind.

Tertullian calleth it a figure, ergo, it is so.

Glin.

It is (as I haue sayd) a figure, but not a figure onely. But heare what Tertullian sayth, he tooke bread, and made it his body, saying, this is my body. &c.

Grind.

Heare what Chrisost. vpon Math. homil. 11. sup. ca. 5 if vessels sanctified to holy vses. &c.

Glin.

That worke is receiued not as Chrisostomes, but some mans els, as you know, or thus I answere, it is not y^e true body in proper and visible forme.

Here Mayster Gest disputed.

THE bread is not chaunged before the consecration, ergo not after it neither.

Glin.

I deny your argument M. Gest.

Gest.

Christ gaue earthly bread, ergo there is no transubstantiation.

Glin.

I deny your antecedent.

Gest.

That that Christ tooke he blessed, that which he blessed he brake, what he brake he gaue, ergo he receiuing earth^ly bread, gaue the same bread.

Glin.

Your order in reasoning standeth not, for by y^e same reason may you gather that God tooke a rib of man, and therof built a rib and brought it vnto Adam. Ergo, what he receiued, he brought, but he receiued a rib, Ergo, he brought a ribbe.

Gest.

How is the body of Christ in heauen, and how in the sacrament, whether circumscripitiuely or diffinitiuely?

Glin.

The body of Christ is in heauen circumscripiuely, but not so in the sacrament. The angels also are contained diffinitiuely. But I haue learned that the body of Christ is in the sacrament, but not locally nor circumscripiuely, but after an vnspeakable maner vnknownen to man.

Rochest.

Ah, know you not?

Glin.

Neither in other mysteries of fayth we know not the meane how, although this may partly be prooued by reason. For as my soule is wholly in my head, and wholly in my foote, and wholly in my finger, and so in other parts of my body: and as there is one voyce or sound which all men hearyng do vnderstand, so the body of Christ beyng one and the same, is wholly in the aulter, and in many places els. For if God could do this in my foule, how much more in hys owne body.

Rochest.

I beseech you shew vs what difference is betwixt these two, to be in a place circumscripiuely, & diffinitiuely.

Glin.

Your Lordship knoweth very well, but yet if any would know the difference, let hym read August. ad Volusianum, & ad Dardanium, &c.

Gest.

If the bread be changed, it is made the body of Christ, but that is not so, *Ergo, it is not changed.

Glin.

I deny your Minor.

Gest.

It is not generate or begot, ergo it is not the body.

Glin.

Gest.

The generation is the production of the accidents.

Glin.

A new definition of a new philosopher.

Gest.

That which he tooke, he blessed, that which he blessed, he brake, and gaue it vnto them, Ergo, &c.

Glin.

Christ tooke bread, brake bread, & gaue his body, that is the substance of his body, saying, This is my body.

Gest.

The bread is not chaunged into the bloud of Christ, Ergo, not into his body neither.

Glin.

I deny your antecedent.

Gest.

The maister of the sentences saith it.

Glin.

You vnderstand him not, for the bread is changed into the bloud of Christ,* by the power of Gods word.

Rochest.

Ye dreame of a reall presence of Christes body in the sacrament, by the force of the words spoken, which the holy scripture doth impugne.

Glin.

We say that not only by the power of the worde, but also by the spirit & secret vertue in the words it is brought to passe, for there is no power in one word alone, as before in baptisme: but in all the words duly prolated, according to the custome of the ancient catholike church.

Gest.

If there were any transubstantiation, the accidents should not remayne still,* but they haue no matter whereto they may leane or cleaue, but the accidentes remayne not themselues alone, Ergo, &c.

Glin.

I confesse the accidents cannot stande themselues alone by their own nature without a subiect, but by y^e power of God they may, not after the opinion of philosophers, but of the scriptures, although I could shew out of y^e scriptures, the accidents to haue bene without the subiect, as in Genesis, The light was made without a subiect, where as the subiect of the light was made the fourth day after, as Basill beareth me record.

Here M. Pilkington disputed.

Pilkington.

THis one thing I desire of you (most worshipfull M. Doctor) that you will answer me with like breuitie, as I shall propound, and thus I reason. The body of Christ that was broken on the crosse, is a full satisfaction for the sinnes of the whole world, but the sacrament is not the satisfaction of the whole world. Ergo, the Sacrament is not the body of Christ.

Glin.

I deny your argument.

Pilking.

It is a Sillogisme.

Glin.

It is not so, for there be 4. termes. Touching this word Sacrament, it is manifold: but thus I aunswer. If you take the sacrament for the matter of the sacramēt, that is the body of Christ, then is your Minor propositiō true, and y^e matter of y^e sacrament is the satisfaction for y^e sinnes of the whole world, but if you take the sacrament for the signe, which we call a sacrament, then is your Minor proposition false.

Pilking.

The body of Christ hath satisfied for the sinnes of the whole world, but the sacrament hath not satisfied, Ergo the sacrament is not the body of Christ.

Glin.

I deny your Minor, vnderstanding the Sacrament for the matter of the sacrament.

Pilking.

The sacrament only profiteth him that receiueth it but many were saued before the institution of this Sacrament was begun, ergo y^e sacrament is not y^e body of Christ.

Glin.

If you meane of the bare signe onely, it profiteth nothing, but if you meane of the thing signified, than what is spoke of the body of Christ, is spoke also of the thing of the sacrament it selfe.

Pilking.

Transubstantiation is not a Sacrament, but that which I meane is a sacrament, Ergo, that which I meane is not transubstantiated.

Glin.

I meane not that transubstantiation is a sacrament, neither do I say that the Sacrament is transubstantiate, but the bread.

Pilking.

The body of Christ is resiant in heauen, & the body of Christ is in the sacrament, Ergo the Sacrament is in heauen.

Glin.

A goodly reason forsooth: but I aunswer, he is after one sort in heauen, and after another sort in the sacrament: for in heauen he is locally, in the sacrament not so, in heauen visibly and circumscripitiuely, but in the sacrament inuisibly and sacramentally.

Rochest.

S. Augustine sayth, take away the spaces from the bodies, and they shall be no where, and that which is no where, is not at all, so whilst you take away the spaces and dymensions from the body of Christ, in the Sacrament you bryng to passe that it is not there at all.

Glin.

In that place Augustine speaketh of naturall bodies, not of supernaturall, otherwyse I could deny that Christ had a true body when he entred into his disciples, y^e gates beyng shut.

Rochest.

Of the gates beyng shut, a diuers and doubtfull meanyng may be gathered, for it may be that he entered in before the gates were shutte, and afterward opened them beyng shut, &c.

Glin.

Then it could be no myracle, but the Euangelists & all sound interpreters say and affirme this to be a miracle of our sauour Christ.

Rochest.

Whether Christ entred in miraculously, the gates beyng shut, or els open, the scripture setteth not downe.

Glin.

As Christ (the wombe of the virgin being shut) was borne into the world without violation of her pure virginitie, or apertion of her wombe (for so he might haue bene polluted) so entred he through the dores to hys Disciples miraculously.

Pilking.

In the bodye of Christ which was geuen for vs, there are no accidents of bread, but in the sacrament there be accidents of bread, ergo, in the Sacrament there is not the body of Christ.

Glin.

In the matter of the sacrament that is in the body of Christ, is no accidents of bread, but accidents are the very sacrament it selfe.

Pilking

I beseech you what do we eate, the substaunce, or the accidents?

Glin.

Both, as when we eate wholesome, and vnwholesome meates together, so we eate the substance of Christes body, and yet not without the accidents of bread.

Pilking.

I prooue that the accidents are eaten, for whatsoever entreth in by the mouth, goeth into the priuy, but the accidents go in by the mouth, Ergo into the priuy.

Glin.

This sentence whatsoever entreth in by the mouth, &c. is not ment of all kynd of meats, as not of that which Christ eate after hys resurrection.

Pilking.

You shall not eate this body which you see.

Glin.

That is not after that maner as you see it now, nor after the same visible forme.

Pilking.

Wheresoeuer Christ is, there be his ministers also (for so he promised) But Christ as you hold is in the Sacrament, Ergo his ministers are there also.*

Glin.

To bee with Christ is spoken diuers wayes, as in hart, in mynd and place, and sometymes both: or to bee with Christ is to minister vnto him, and to do his wil, &c.

The third disputation holden at Cambridge as before.

M. Perne.

CHrist at his last supper tooke bread, brake bread, distributed bread, Ergo, not his body, but a Sacrament of hys body, for the bones of Christ could no man breake, as witnesseth the Prophet, sayeng: Os non comminuetis ex eo, that is, you shall not breake a bone of hym. This cuppe is the cup of the new Testament in my bloud. In this sentence there is a trope by theyr owne confession, wherefore Page 1385 there is in the other also, This is my body, for the holy scripture is a perfect rule not onely of doying, but also of speakyng. Paule calleth it bread three tymes, Ergo it is bread, &c. And wheras they vrge so much this Pronoun (illum) it is not in the Greeke canon which hath panem, bread, not panem illum, that bread. There was no transubstantiation in the Manna, Ergo, nor in this sacrament, for there is this article (est) if that can prooue transubstantiation as they suppose. And if Manna were a figure (say they) then this is not. This myserie or Sacrament we hold to be true bread, and true meate. Manna gaue lyfe vnto them, as this doth vnto vs, yet was it but a figure. In euery sacrament there ought to be a certaine analogie,* both of the interne and externe thyng of the Sacrament, as Augustine sayth, writyng to Bonifacius, but betwixt the formes of bread and wyne, and the body of Christ, there is no analogie at all, Ergo, they make not a Sacrament. As of many graynes, &c. This similitude of Paule is spoken of y^e substance of bread, not of the forme thereof, otherwyse Paule should in vayne compare vs to bread. As in Baptisme there is materiall water, so in the sacrament of the Eucharist is materiall bread. Dionysius called the Sacrament of Christes bodye no otherwyse then bread. Eusebius in ecclesiastica historia doth the same▪ Tertullian, lib. 4. against Marcion, sayth thus, He gaue hys body, that is (sayth he) a figure or type of hys body. Cyprian sayeth, In his last supper he gaue bread and wyne, and hys body vpon the crosse. The same Cyprian epist 6. lib. 1.

and epist. 3. lib. 2. sayeth. Christ dranke wyne at his last supper,* because he would root out the heresie of certaine who onely vsed water in the ministration thereof. Chrysost. hom. 13. vpon Math. sayth, That onely bread remayneth, &c. Theodoretus sayth in hys first dialogue, bread remayneth still in hys first nature as before. Augustine sayth, The bread doth not loose his first nature after the consecration, but receyue y^e another qualitie, whereby it differeth from common bread. The same August. lib. 3. agaynst Maximinus sayeth.* Sacramentes are figures, beyng one thyng in deede, and shewyng forth an other thyng: he speaketh of no transubstantiation here. Agayne, writyng to Bonifacius he sayth, The Sacrament of the body of Christ is the body of Christ, and so is the sacrament of wyne also, &c. The sacraments of the olde and new law, are all one in substaunce of matter, notwithstanding they be diuers in signes: which Sacramentes, why should they not be one, whē as they signified al one thing. The body of Christ when it was on the earth, was not in heauen, so now it beyng in heauen, is not on the earth. Wherby it may appeare, that transubstantiation is a most blasphemous, sacrilegious, and damnable error, and a most vayne,* vnsauory, and diuelish papisticall inuention, defended and maintayned onely by the papistes, the professed and sworn enemies of all truth. Those who impugn this doctrine of transubstantiation, are no new vpstartes, as the enemies of the truth the papists beare the world in hand. But contrarily, those who maintayne this diuelish doctrine, are new sprong vp cocatrices, as Manicheus, Euticus and others. Gelasius sayth, The sacramentes which we receyue, are diuine thyngs, yet cease they not to bee bread and wyne in nature. Out of this puddle of transubstantiation, hath sprong vp adoration of the sacrament, and inducyng men to beleue that Christ hath many bodies.

The declaration of the sayd M. Perne in the 2. conclusion.

MAthew, Marke, Luke, and the apostle Paule, call it a commemoration or remembraunce of Christes body and bloud. And Paule to the Hebrews sayth: By one onely oblation once offered, are we made perfect to eternall saluation, &c. By hym therefore doe we offer vp the sacrifice of laud and prayse to God, that is the fruit of the lips, &c. It is called the Eucharist,* because we offer to God praise and thanksgeuyng, with deuout myndes, and it is called the cup of thanksgeuyng, because we geue thanks to God thereby also. You shall preach forth the Lordes death, &c. that is, you shall geue thanks & be myndfull of his death, &c. Geue your bodies a quick and liuyng sacrifice, &c. The sacrifice of prayse and thanksgeiuing, shall honour me, &c. Chrysostome sayth,* The wyse men offered three kyndes of sacrifices, gold, frankencense and myrrhe, so we doe also, namely vertue, prayer, and almes deedes. These be the sacrifices wherewith Christ is pleased. And Augustine sayth there are no other sacrifices thē prayer, prayse and thanksgeuyng, &c. Chrysostome homil. 46. vpon Iohn sayth, to be conuerted or turned into Christ, is to be made pertaker of hys body and bloud.

There disputed against him M. Parker, M. Poll•rd, M. Vauisor, and M. Yong.

Parker.

CHrist whose wordes are to be beleueed, sayd, This is my body, he said not this bread is my body, or w^t this bread, or vnder this bread, or by this bread, but sayd plainly, This is my body. And this he prooued by these reasons: First, for that it was prefigured before. Secondly,* for that it was promised. Thirdly, for that it was geuen. The transubstātiatiō of the bread was prefigured by the Manna which came downe from heauen, all that bread was heauenly, and without any earthly matter or substance adnexed. Secondly, it was promised in those wordes of Christ, y^e bread that I will geue, is my flesh, &c. Thirdly, it was geuen by Christ, and exhibited in hys last supper, sayeng: Take, eate, this is my body.

Here they were forced to breake of through the want of tyme, yet Parker replied thus agaynst Doct. Perne.

WE geue thee thanks most holy Father, that thou hast hid these thyngs from the wyse and prudent, and hast reuealed them to babes, for pryde is the roote of al heresies whatsoeuer. And on the other side, to acknowledge our owne infirmitie and imperfection, is the first steppe to the true vnderstandyng of the truth. Nestorius the heretike affirmed, that there were two persons in Christ, one that was man, another that was God, therefore he sayd that in the Eucharist was containyd true flesh, but onely of hys pure manhoode. Agaynst hym did the counsell of Ephesus conclude, sayeng: That there was the reall fleshe of the sonne of God, &c. This he proued by the words of Christ, My flesh is meate in deede, and what flesh that is, he teacheth vpon the sixt of Iohn, that is, quoth he, the fleshe vnited to the deitie, and quickened by the holy Ghost, &c. Now that that flesh is in the Sacrament, it is playn[•] by Hillarius, lib. 8. de Trinitate, he prooued the same also out of Chrysostome, homil. 45. vpon Iohn.* We are one bodye with hym, mēbers of his flesh, and bones of his bones, &c. Agayne in the same homilie, we are ioyned to hys flesh, not onely by fayth and loue, but also in very deede, and truely[•] And agayne it pleased me to become your brother, and by the same thyngs wherin I was ioyned to you, haue I geuen my selfe agayne vnto you, &c.

Perne.

I graunt vnto you that Christ is in the sacrament truely, wholly, & verely,* after a certaine propertie & maner: I deny not hys presence, but hys reall and corporall presence I vtterly deny, for doubtles hys true and natural body is in heauen, and not in the sacrament: notwithstanding he dwelleth with vs, and in vs after a certaine vnitie. And also in the 6. chapter of Iohn, he speaketh not of the flesh of Christ crucified, &c.

Parker.

The flesh of Christ as it is in the sacramēt, is quick and geueth lyfe, Ergo, his reall and substantiall fleshe is in the sacrament.

Perne.

The flesh of Christ in that it is vnited to the deitie, doth viuifie, and geueth lyfe, but not otherwyse.*

Rochest.

Christ dwelleth in vs by fayth, and by fayth we receiue Christ both God and man, both in spirit and flesh, that is, this sacramentall eatyng is the meane and waye whereby we attayne to the spirituall eatyng, and in deede for the strengthenyng of vs to the eatyng of this spirituall foode, was this sacrament ordeyned.* And these words This is my body, are ment thus, by grace it is my true body, but not my fleshly body, as some of you suppose.

Parker.

We are ioyned to Christ, not onely by faith, but also in very deede, ergo &c.

Rochest.

We are ioyned to Christ that is, we are made pertakers of his flesh and of immortalitie. And so lyke case is there a vnion betweene man and woman, yet is there no transubstantia•ion of eyther, or both, &c.

Pollard.

The sacrament is not bare bread and nothing els, onely because it is called bread so often in the Scriptures,* and that I prooue by three reasons. First, it is called bread because of the similitude. Secondly, because of the mutation. Thirdly, for the matter whereof it is made and compact, as the Angels are called men, the holy ghost a tonge, the rod of Aaron a serpent, and such lyke. The wordes of Christ do teach the same thyng, as appeareth in the healyng of the woman of Canaans daughter, Iairus sonne, and many others, &c. Ergo, &c. Then he prooued agaynst Rochester, that somewhat els was in the Sacrament besides power and grace by this reason. The euill receyue the body of Christ, as is playne out of Augustine, homil. 21. de verbis domini, but the euill and wycked receyue not the vertue or grace, Ergo, there is not onely grace and vertue in the sacrament.

Rochest.

The euill do not receyue the Lord in Sacrament, Page 1374 but the sacrament of the Lord,* as Iudas, who in deed eate not the true body of the Lord.

Pollard.

In the sacrament be three thyngs, to wit, an outward signe, the matter of the Sacrament, and the fruite of the same, the euill receyue the outward signe, and the subiect of the Sacrament, but not the fruite of the Sacrament, Ergo, there is somewhat els in the Sacrament than onely grace. Also euery Sacrament ought to haue a certaine similitude with the matter of the Sacrament, but the materiall bread hath not such similitude with the body of Christ, which is the matter of the Sacrament, Ergo, materiall bread is not a Sacrament.

Perne.

I deny your Minor, for materiall breade doth so nourish the bodye, as the fleshe of Christ doth the soule.

Here he beyng requested, gaue place to others.

M. Vauisor.

THorough the shortnesse of tyme I am so constrayned, that neyther I can speake without losse of my reputation, nor yet hold my peace without offence to God. For in speakyng (as I doe) without great premeditation before this honourable, worshipfull, and learned audience, I shall but shewe foorth my childishnesse herein, and if I should hold my peace, I myght be thought to betray the truth of Gods cause. And therefore whilest I can neyther speake for the breuitie of tyme, nor yet hold my peace gods truth beyng in controuersie, I haue determined although with the impairyng of my good name, to render a reason of my fayth, which if I cannot affourd probably in words, yet wyll I not faulte in sayeng nothyng at all. For it seemeth better that I be esteemed altogether foolish and vnlearned, amongst so many graue learned Fathers & Doctours, then to forsake the iust defence of the truth, which euery good christian man throughout the world, hath euer holden inuiolable. For who so forsaketh the manifest knowen truth, had neuer any true fayth therein. Which thyng that I may ouerpasse in Berengarius,* Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, and many others, who are certaynely knowen to be of no lesse variaunce amongst themselues, then vncertain of theyr fayth what to beleue. Zuinglius wryteth thus of hymselfe. Although this thyng which I meane to intreate of doth lyke me very well, yet notwithstanding, I dare define nothyng, but only shew my poore iudgement abroad to others, that if it please the Lord, others may be therby instructed by the spirit of God which teacheth all good thynges. In vayne doe I spende many wordes. You see playnely he dare not define anye thyng certainly, but doubteth whether it please GOD or not. Oecolampadius wrytyng to a certayne brother of hys, sayth thus: Peace be with thee. As farre as I can coniecture out of the learned Fathers these wordes, Iohn. 6. This is my body, be figuratiue locutions, &c. You see hereby how vncertaine they be of their opinions. They leane not to the Scriptures, to Doctors, nor yet to the trueth, but to supposals and coniectures, who therefore hereafter wyll cleane vnto them? But nowe I come to your Oration, whose beginnyng pleased me very well, and whose progresse therein offended me not. But in the end you concluded in such sort, that you left the whole matter to me, as it were confirmyng my partes by the same. And herein you framed a Syllogisme after this maner. What Christ tooke, that he blessed, what he blessed, that he brake, what he brake that he gaue,*Ergo, what he receyued he gaue, &c. Where to I aunswer wyth a lyke Syllogisme out of Genesis. God tooke a ribbe out of Adams side, what hee tooke, he built, what he built that he brought, what he brought, that hee gaue to Adam to be hys wyfe, but he tooke a ribbe, Ergo, he gaue a ribbe to Adam to wyfe, &c. Also in your sayd Oration, you shute much at those wordes of Paule, where he calleth it bread so often, &c. But the Scripture in another place calleth it water, when in deede it was wyne, a rodde when it was a playne serpent.

Rochest.

You haue pretended great zeale & words inough, but what pith or substance your reasons will affourd, we shall see hereafter.

Vauisor.

Christ gaue the same flesh to vs, that he receyued of the virgine,* but he tooke true and naturall flesh of her, Ergo, he gaue vs true and naturall fleshe. My Maior I prooue by August. vpon the 98. Psalme.

Rochest.

M. Uauisor you are in a wrong boxe, for y^e place maketh altogether for maintenāce of adoration, if it make for any thyng.

Vauisor.

I know it very well, and therefore I alledge it as the ground of my reason. These bee Augustines woordes, Christ of the earth receyued earth, and of the flesh of Mary, he receyued flesh, acknowledge his substance therefore?

Rochest.

I acknowledge it.

Vauisor.

And in the very same flesh he walked here vppon the earth, acknowledgge his substaunce.*

Rochest.

I acknowledge it.

Vauisor.

And the very same fleshe he gaue vs to eate, acknowledge hys substaunce.

Rochest.

I acknowlege not hys reall substance to be there, but the propertie of hys substance.

Vauisor.

Then Uauisor recited the place, to the ende hee myght prooue that hys reall substaunce ought to bee acknowledged as well in the last place, as in the first and second, affirmyng it out of Saint Augustine, who sayeth thus. The Disciples of Christ approchyng the Lordes table, by fayth dranke the same bloud which the tormenters most cruelly spilt, &c. but the tormenters spilt no figure of bloud, Ergo, &c. this place will not permit the other so to be illuded.

Rochest.

It is no illusion good M. Vauisor, but surely you would moue a Saint with your impertinent reasons.

Vauisor.

I beseech your fatherhood to pardon my rudenes, for surely I cannot otherwyse speake without breache of conscience.

Perne.

That place of Augustine is to bee vnderstoode of a spirituall kynd of eatyng.

Vauisor.

I demand whether the faythfull may receyue spiritually, so as they neede not to receiue sacramentally.

Perne.

They may.

Vauisor.

Then thus to you: To the spirituall eatyng, there is no need to come to the Lordes table, for so it is the meat of the soule, not of the teeth, but the faythfull come to the Lordes table, Ergo that place is to be vnderstood of a sacramentall eatyng. And agayne, Augustine sayth, that he caried hymselfe in hys hands.

Rochest.

Augustine sheweth a little after, what he meaneth thereby, where he sayeth he caried hymselfe in his owne hands, after a certayne sort or maner.

Vauisor.

True it is that after one maner he sate at the table, and after another maner was in the sacrament.

¶M. Yong here disputeth agaynst Perne, as followeth.

Yong.

I Understand the meanyng o• this worde Proprietas, proprietie, well enough, for in Hillarie and Eusebius, it signifieth not the vertue or power of any substance or beyng, but rather a naturall beyng or substance.

Rochest.

I commend your great diligence in searchyng of authors, but in diuinitie the matter standeth not so, for the proprietie of essence in the deitie, is the very essence, and whatsoeuer is in God, is God.

Yong.

True it is (most reuerend father) that this worde Proprietas, proprietie, in Hillary in hys 8. booke de Trinitate, intreatyng there of the diuinitie of the father, of the sonne, and of the holy ghost, is so meant and taken, but the same Hillary almost in the same place speaketh of our communion and vnitie wyth Christ, &c. Tertullian also writyng of the resurrection of the flesh, affirmeth that the fleshe of our sauour is that whereof our soule is allied to God, that is it which causeth that our soules are ioyned to hym, but our flesh is made cleane, that the soule may be purged, our flesh is annoynted, that the soule may be made holy, the flesh is sealed, that the soule may be comforted, the fleshe is shadowed with the imposition of the handes, that our soule may be lightened with the glory of the spirite. Our flesh is clothed with a body and bloud, that the soule may be fed and nourished of God.

Rochest.

The fleshe in deede is fed with the body and the bloud of the Lord,* when our bodies by mortification are made lyke to his body. And our body is nourished when the vertue and power of the body of Christ doth feede vs. The same Tertullian is not afrayd to cal it flesh, and bloud, but he meaneth a figure of the same.

Yong.

Then by your leaue it should follow by good consequence, that where any mortification is, there must needes be a sacramentall communion, which cannot be. Ergo, &c.

¶Here endeth the third, and last Disputation holden at Cambridge. 1549.

This disputation continued three dayes. In the first dyd aunswer Doctour Madew. Agaynst whome disputed Doctour Glinne, M. Langdale, M. Segewike, M. Young.

In the second disputation did answer Doctor Glinne. Agaynst whome disputed M. Grindall, M. Perne, M. Gest, M. Pilkington.

Page 1387*In the third disputation answered M. Perne. Against whome disputed one M. Parkar (not Doct. Math. Parkar) M. Pollard, M. Uauisour, M. Yong.

At length the disputations ended, the Bishop of Rochester Doct. Nicolas Ridley after the maner of Scholes,* made this determination vpon the foresayde conclusions, as here followeth.

¶The determination of Doctor Nicolas Ridley Bishop of Rochester, vpon the conclusions aboue prefixed.

There hath bene an ancient custome amongst you, that after disputations had in your common scholes,* there should be some determination made of the matters so disputed and debated, especially touching Christian religion. Because therefore it is seene good vnto these worshipfull assistentes ioyned with me in commission from the kings Maiestie, that I should performe the same at this tyme: I will by your fauourable pacience declare, both what I do thinke and beleue my selfe, and what also other, ought to think of the same. Which thing I would that afterwardees ye did with diligence way and ponder, euery man at home seuerally by himselfe.

The principal groundes or rather headsprings of this matter are specially fiue.

The first is the authoritie, maiestie, and veritie of holy Scripture.*

The second is the most certayne testimonies of the auncient Catholicke Fathers, who, after my iudgement, do sufficiently declare this matter.

The third is the definition of a Sacrament.

The fourth is the abhominable heresie of Eutiches that may ensue of Transubstantiation.

The fift is the most sure beliefe of the article of our fayth: He ascended into heauen.

¶The first grounde.

This Transubstantiation is cleane agaynst y^e wordes of the scripture,* and consent of the auncient Catholick Fathers. The scripture sayth: I will not drinke hereafter of thys fruite of the vine. &c. Now the fruite of this Uyne is wyne. And it is manifest that Christ spake these wordes after the Supper was finished, as it appeareth both in Mathewe, Marke, and also in Luke, if they be well vnderstanded. There be not many places of the scripture that do confirm this thing, neither is it greatly materiall: For it is enough if there be any one playne testimonie for the same. Neither ought it to be measured by the number of Scriptures, but by the authority,* and by the veritie of the same. And the maiestie of this veritie is as ample in one short sentence of the Scripture, as in a thousand.

Moreouer, Christ tooke bread, he brake bread, he gaue bread. In the Actes Luke calleth it bread. So Paule calleth it bread after the sanctification. Both of them speaketh of breakyng, which belongeth to the substaunce of bread, and in no wyse to Christes body, for the Scripture sayth: Ye shall not breake a bone of hym.* Christ sayth, Doe ye this in my remembraunce. Saint Paule also sayeth: Doe ye this in my remembraunce. And agayne, As often as ye shall drinke of this cup,* do it in the remembraunce of me. And our Sauour Christ in the 6. of Iohn, speakyng against the Capernaits, sayth: Labour for the meat that perisheth not. And when they asked: What shall we do that we may worke the workes of God? He aunswered them thus: This is the worke of God, that ye beleue in hym whom he hath sent.* You see how he exhorteth them to fayth, for fayth is that worke of God. Agayne, This is the bread which came downe from heauen. But Christes body came not downe from heauen. Moreouer, Hee that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me, and I in hym. My flesh (sayth he) is meat in deede, and my bloud is drinke in deede. When they heard this, they were offended. And whilest they were offended, he sayd vnto them: What if ye shall see the sonne of man ascend vp where he was before? Wherby he went about to draw them from the grosse and carnal eatyng. This body sayth he, shall ascend vp into heauen, meanyng altogether as S. Augustine sayth: It is the spirit that quickneth, the flesh profiteth nothyng. The wordes that I speake vnto you, are spirit and lyfe, and must be spiritually vnderstood. These bee the reasons which perswade me to incline to this sentence and iudgement.

Now my second ground agaynst this transubstantiation are the auncient Fathers a thousand yeares past. And so farre of is it that they do confirme this opinion of transubstantiation, that playne they seeme vnto me, both to thinke and to teach the contrary.

Dionysius in many places calleth it breade.* The places are so manifest and playne, that it needeth not to recite them.

Ignatius to the Philadelphians sayth:*I beseech you brethren cleaue fast vnto one fayth, and to one kynde of preachyng, vsing together one manner of thankesgeuyng: for the fleshe of the Lord Iesu is one, and hys bloud is one which was shedde for vs: There is also one bread broken for vs, and one cuppe of the whole Church.

Irenaeus writeth thus:*Euen as the bread that commeth of the earth receauyng Gods vocation is now no more common breade, but Sacramentall breade, consistyng of two natures, earthly and heauenly: euen so our bodyes receauyng the Eucharist, are now no more corruptible, hauyng hope of the resurrection.

Tertullian is very playne,* for he calleth it a figure of the body, &c.

Chrysostome writyng to Caesarius the Monke, albeit he be not receyued of dyuers,* yet wyll I read the place to fasten it more deeply in your myndes: for it seemeth to shewe playnely the substaunce of bread to remayne. The wordes are these.

Before the bread is sanctified, we name it bread: but by the grace of God sanctifyng the same thorough the ministry of the Priest, it is deliuered from the name of breade, and is counted worthy to beare the name of the Lordes body, although the very substaunce of bread notwithstanding doe still remayne therin, and now is taken not to be two bodies, but one body of the Sonne, &c.

Cyprian sayth: Bread is made of many graynes. And is that naturall bread, and made of wheate? Yea it is so in deede.*

The booke of Theodoret in Greeke, was lately printed at Rome, which if it had not bene his, it should not haue bene set forth there, especially seeyng it is directly against transubstantiation: For he sayth plainely, that bread styll remayneth after the sanctification.

Gelasius also is very playne in this manner. The Sacrament (sayth he) which we receyue of the body and bloude of Christ, is a diuine matter: by reason whereof we are made partakers by the same of the deuine nature, and yet it ceaseth not s^oil to be the substaunce of bread and wyne. And certes, the representation and similitude of the body and bloud of Christ be celebrated in the action of the mysteries, &c.

After this he recited certayne places out of Augustine and Cyrill, which were not noted.

Isichius also confesseth that it is bread. *

Also the iudgement of Bertram in this matter, is verye playne and manifest. And thus much for the second groūd.

The third ground.

The third ground, is the nature of the Sacrament, which consisteth in three things, that is, Unitie, * Nutrition, and Conuersion.

As touching vnitie, Cyprian thus writeth: Euen as of many graynes is made one bread, so are we one mysticall bodye of Christ. Wherefore bread must needes still remaine, or els we destroy the nature of a Sacrament.

Also they that take away nutrition, which commeth by bread, do take away likewise the nature of the sacrament. * For as the body of Christ nourisheth the soule, euē so doth bread likewise nourish the body of man.

Therefore, they that take away y^e graynes or the vnion of the graynes in the bread, and deny the nutrition or substaunce thereof, in my iudgement are Sacramentaries: for they take away the similitude betwene the bread & the body of Christ. For they which affirme transubstantiation are in deed right Sacramentaries and Capernites.

As touchyng conuersion (that lyke as the bread which we receyue, is turned into our substance, * so are we turned into Christes body) Rabanus and Chrysostome are witnesses sufficient.

The fourth ground. *

They which say that Christ is carnally present in the Eucharist, do take from him the veritie of mans nature. Eutiches granted the diuine nature in Christ, but his humane nature he denied. So they that defend transubstantiation ascribe that to the humane nature, which onely belongeth to the deuine nature.

The fift ground.

The fift ground is the certaine perswasion of this Article Page 1388 of fayth: He ascended into heauen, and sitteth on the right hand. &c.

Augustine sayth: The Lord is aboue euen to the end of the world: but yet the veritie of the Lord is here also. For his body wherein he rose agayne,* must needes be in one place, but his veritie is spread abroad euery where.

Also in another place he sayth: Let the godly receyue also that Sacrament, but let them not be carefull (speaking there of the presence of his body.*) For as touchyng hys maiesty, his prouidence, his inuisible and vnspeakeable grace, these woordes are fulfilled which he spake: I am with you vnto the ende of the world. But accordyng to the flesh which he took vpō hym, accor'dyng to that which was borne of the Virgin, was apprehēded of the Iewes, was fastened to a tree, taken downe agayne from the crosse, lapped in linnen clothes, was buried and rose agayne, and appeared after hys resurrection, so you shall not haue me always with you. And why? because that as concernyng his flesh he was conuersant with hys Disciples fourty dayes, and they accompanying hym, seyng hym, but not followyng hym, he went vp into heauen, and is not here, for he sitteth at the right hand of hys Father, and yet he is here, because he is not departed hence, as concernyng the presence of hys diuine Maiestie.

Marke and consider well what Saint Augustine sayeth: He is ascended into heauen, and is not here, sayth he. Beleeue not them therefore which say that he is yet here still in the earth.

*Moreouer, Doubt not (sayeth the same Augustine) but that Iesus Christ as concernyng the nature of hys manhoode, is there from whence he shall come. And remember well and beleeue the profession of a Christian man: that he rose from death, ascended into heauen, and sitteth at the right hand of his father, and from that place, and none other (not from the aultares) shall he come to iudge the quicke and the dead, and he shal come as the Angell sayd, as he was seene go into heauen: that is to say, in the same fourme and substaunce, vnto the which he gaue immortality, but chaunged not nature. After this fourme (meanynge hys humaine nature) we may not thynke that it is euery where.

And in the same Epistle he saith: Take away from the bodies the limitation of places and they shall be no where: * and because they are no where, they shall not be at all.

*Vigilius sayth: If the word and the flesh be both of one nature, seeyng that the word is euery where, why then is not the flesh also euery where? For when it was in earth, then verely it was not in heauen: and now when it is in heauen, it is not surely in earth. And it is so certayne, that it is not in earth, that as cōcernyng the same we looke for hym from heauen, whom as concernyng the word, we beleeue to be with vs in earth.

Also the same Vigilius sayth: Which thyngs seeyng they be so, the course of the scripture must be searched of vs, and many testimonies must be gathered to shew plainly what a wickednes and sacriledge it is to referre those thyngs to the property of the diuine nature, which do onely belong to the nature of the flesh: and contrarywyse, to apply those thinges vnto the nature of the fleshe, which doe properly belong to the diuine nature. Which thyng the transubstantiatours doe, whilst they affirme Christes body not to be conteyned in any one place, and ascribe that to hys humanity, which properly belongeth to hys diuinitie: as they do which will haue Christes body to be in no one certayne place limited.

Now in the latter conclusion concerning the sacrifice, because it dependeth vpon the first,* I will in fewe wordes declare what I thinke. For if we did once agree in that, the whole controuersie in the other would soone be at an end: Two things there be which do perswade me that this conclusion is true: that is, certayne places of the scripture, & also certayne testimonies of the fathers. Saint Paul saith, Heb. 9.* Christ beyng come an high Priest of good thinges to come, by a greater and more perfecter tabernacle not made with hands,* that is, not of this building, neyther by the bloud of Gotes and Calues, but by his owne bloud, entred once into the holye place, and obtayned for vs eternall redemption, &c. and now in the end of the world he hath appeared once to put away sinne by the sacrifice of hymselfe.

And agayne: Christ was once offerred to take away the sinnes of many.

Moreouer he sayth: With one offering hath he made perfect for euer those that are sanctified.*

These scriptures do perswade me to beleue that there is no other oblation of Christ (albeit I am not ignoraunt there are many sacrifices) but that which was once made vpon the crosse.*

*The testimonies of the auncient Fathers which confirme the same, are out of Augustine ad Bonifac. Epist. 23. Agayne in his booke of 43. Questions, in the 61. Question. Also in his 20. booke agaynst Faustus the Manichie, cha. 21. And in the same booke agaynst the sayd Faustus, cap. 28. thus he writeth: Now the Christians keepe a memoriall of the sacrifice past, with a holy oblation and participation of the body and bloud of Christ.

Fulgentius in hys booke De Fide, calleth the same oblation a Commemoration. And these thynges are sufficient for this tyme for a scholasticall determination of these matters.

Disputations of Martin Bucer.

Ouer and beside these disputations aboue mentioned, other disputations also were holden at Cambridge shortly after by Martin Bucer vpon these conclusions followyng.

Conclusions to be disputed.

1. The Canonically bookes of holy Scripture alone,* do sufficiently teach the regenerated all thinges necessarily belongyng vnto saluation.
2. There is no Church in earth which erreth not as well in faith as in maners.
3. We are so iustified freely of God, that before our iustification it is sinne, and prouoketh Gods wrath agaynst vs, what so euer good worke we seeme to doe. Then beyng iustified we do good workes.

In these three Propositions agaynst Bucer, disputed M. Segewike, Yong, and Perne.* Which disputations because they are long here to be recited, I mynde (the Lord willyng) to reserue them to some other conuenient place. In the meane season because great controuersie hath bene and is yet amongst the learned, and much effusion of Christen bloud about the wordes and meanyng of the Sacrament: to the intent that the veritie thereof more openly may be explained, and all doubtfull scruples discussed, it shall not be out of place to adioyne to the former discourses of Peter Martyr, and of Doctour Ridley aboue mentioned, an other certayne learned treatise in fourme of a Dialogue, as appertaynyng to the same Argument, compiled (as it seemeth) out of the tractations of Peter Martyr and other Authours,* by a certayne learned and reuerend person of this Realme: who vnder the persones of Custome and Veritie, manifestly layeth before our eyes, and teacheth all men not to measure Religion by Custome, but to try Custome by truth and the word of God, for els custome may soone deceyue, but the worde of God abydeth for euer.

A fruitfull Dialogue declaring these wordes of Christ: This is my body.

CVSTOME. VERITIE.

CVstome.

I maruell much what madnes is copen into those mens harts,* which now a days are not ashamed so violently to tread downe the liuely worde of God, yea and impudently to deny God hymselfe.

Veritie.

God forbid there should be any such. In deede I remember that the Romish bishop was wont to haue the Bible for his footestoole, & so to tread downe Gods worde euermore when he stood at his Masse. But thanks be to God he is now detected, and hys abhominations be opened and blown throughout all the world. And I heare of no moe that oppresseth Gods word.

Cust.

No mo say you? Yes doubtles there are an hundreth thousand moe, and your parte it is Veritie to withstande them.

Veri.

As touching my part, you know it agreeth not with my nature to stand with falsehood. But what are they, disclose them if you will haue them reprooued.

Custome.

What? are you so great a stranger in these quarters? Heare you not how that mē do daily speake against the Sacrament of the aulter, denying it to be the real body of Christ?

Veritie.

In good sooth I haue bene a great whyle abroad, and returned but of late into this countrey. Wherefore you must pardon me if my aunswere be to seeke in such questions. But goe forth in your tale. You haue bene longer here, and are better acquainted then I. What say they more then this?

Cust.

Then this? why, what can they possible say more?

Veri.

Yes there are many things worse then this: for this seemeth in some part to be tollerable.

Cust.

What? me thinketh you dally with me. Semeth it tolerable to deny the sacrament?

Veritie.

They deny it not so much as I can gather by your wordes.

Custome.

Nay then fare you wel: I perceyue you wil take Page 1389 their part.

Veri.

I am not parciall, but indifferent to all parties: For I neuer go further then the truth.

Cust.

I can scarsly beleue you. But what is more true then Christ, which is truth it self? or who euer was so hardy before this tyme to charge Christ with a lye for sayeng these wordes,This is my body. The words are euident & playne: there is in them not so much as one obscure or darke letter, there is no cause for any man to cauill. And yet that notwithstanding, where as Christ himselfe affirmed it to be his body, mē now a days are not abashed to say, Christ lyed, it is not his body. The Euangelists agree all in one, the old writers stand of our side, the vniuersall and catholike church hath bene in this mynd these xv. hundred yeare and more. And shall we thinke that Christ hymselfe, hys Euangelists, all the whole Catholike church hath bene so long deceyued, and the truth nowe at length begotten and borne in these dayes?

Veri.

You haue mooued a matter of great force and waight, and whereto without many words I can make no ful answer. Notwithstanding because you prouoke me thereto, if you will geue me licence I will take part with them of whome you haue made false report,* for none of them euer reproued Christ of any lye. But contrarywise, they say that many men of late days, not vnderstanding Christs words haue builded and set vp many fonde lyes vpon hys name. Wherefore, first I will declare the meaning of these words, This is my body,* and next in what sense the Church and the old fathers haue euermore taken them. First therefore you shall vnderstand, that

Scripture is not so to be taken always as the letter soundeth, but as the intent and purpose of the holy ghost was, by whom the scripture was vttered. For if you follow the bare wordes, you will soone shake downe & ouerthrow the greatest part of the christiā fayth. What is plainer then these words: Pater maior me est. My father is greater then I am.* Of those plaine words sprāg vp the heresy of the Arrians, which denied Christ to be equal with his father. What is more euident then this saying: I and my father are both one. Thereof arose the heresy of thē that denied three distinct persons. They all had one soule and one hart,* was spoken by the apostles. Yet had ech of thē a soule and hart peculiar to himselfe. They are now not two, but one flesh, is spoken by the man and his wife. Yet hath both the man and the wife his seuerall body.* He is our very flesh, sayd Ruben by Ioseph his brother, which notwithstanding was not their reall flesh. I am bread sayd Christ, yet was he flesh and no bread.* Christ was the stone, sayeth Paul, and was in deed no materiall stone. Melchisedech had neither father nor mother, and yet in deed he had both. Behold the Lambe of God, sayth Iohn Baptist by Christ, notwithstanding Christ was a man & not a lambe. Circumcision was called the couenant, where as it was but a token of the couenant. The Lambe named the Passeouer, and yet was it eaten in remembrance only of the passeouer. Iacob raised vp an aulter, & called it beyng made but of lyme and stone, the mighty God of Israel. Moses when he had conquered the Amalakites, set vp an aulter, & called it by y^e names of God,* Iehoua, and Tetragrammatum, We all are one loafe of bread, sayth Paule, yet were they not thereby turned into a loafe of bread. Christ hanging vpon the crosse, appoynted S. Iohn to his mother, saying: Lo there is thy sonne, & yet was he not her sōne.* So many as be baptised into Christ (saith Paule) haue put on Christ, and so manye as are baptised into Christ, are washed with the bloud of Christ. Notwithstanding no man tooke the fonte water to be the naturall bloude of Christ. The cup is the new Testament, sayth Paul, & yet is not the cup in deed the very new Testament. You see therfore that it is not strange, nor a thing vnwoont in y^e scriptures, to call one thing by an others name. So that you can no more of necessitie enforce the chaunging of the bread into Christes body in the sacrament, because y^e words be plaine, This is my body,* then the wiues flesh to be the naturall & reall body & flesh of the husbād, because it is written: They are not two but one flesh: or the aulter of stone to be very God, because Moses with euident and playne words pronounced it to be the mighty God of Israel. Notwithstanding, if you wil needs cleaue to the letter you make for me, and hinder your own cause. For this I will reason, & vse your owne weapon against you. The scripture calleth it bread. The Euangelists agree in the same.* Paule nameth it so v. times in one place, the holy ghost may not be set to schoole to learne to speake. Wherefore I conclude by your own argument, that we ought not only to say, but also to beleeeue that in the sacrament there remayneth bread.

Cust.

Me thinketh your answer is reasonable, yet cā I not be satisfied. Declare you therfore more at large, what mooueth you to thinke this of the sacrament. For I thinke you would not withstand a doctrine so long holdē and taught, vnles you were inforced by some strong and likely reasōs.

Veri.

First, in examining the wordes of Christ, I get me to the meanyng & purpose for which they were spoken.* And in this behalfe I see, that Christ ment to haue his death & passion kept in remembrance. For men of themselues bee & euermore were forgetfull of the benefites of God.

And therefore it was behouefull that they should be admonished & stirred vp with some visible and outward tokēs, as with the Passeouer Lambe, the brasen serpent, and other lyke. For the brasen serpent was a token that when the Iewes were stinged & wounded with serpents, God restored thē and made them whole. The passeouer Lambe was a memory of the great benefit of God, which when he destroyed the Egyptians, saued the Iewes whose dores were sprinkled with the bloud of a lambe. So likewise Christ left vs a memoriall & remembraunce of his death and passion in outward tokens, that when the childe should demaund of his father what the breaking of the bread, & drinking of the cup meaneth, he myght answer him, that like as the bread is broken, so Christ was broken and rent vpon the crosse, for to redeme the soule of man. And like as wine fostereth and comforteth the body, so doth the bloud of Christ cherish & relieue the soule. And this do I gather by the words of Christ, and by the institution and order of the sacramēt. For Christ charged the Apostles to do this in the remembrance of him. Wherupon thus I do conclude: ti- But the Sacrament is vsed in the remembraunce of Christ.

Fes- Nothyng is done in remembraunce of it selfe.

no. Therefore the Sacrament is not Christ.

Fe- Christ neuer deuoured hymselfe.

ri- Christ did eate the Sacrament with his Apostles.

son. Ergo, the Sacrament is not Christ hymselfe.

Beside this I see, that Christ ordeined not his body, but a sacrament of his body. A sacrament (as S. Augustine declareth) is an outwarde signe of an inuisible grace. Hys words are: Sacramentum est inuisibilis gratiae visibile signum. Out of which words I gather two arguments. The first is this, the token of the body of Christ is the thyng tokened, wherfore they are not one. The second is this.

Fe- One thyng cannot be both visible and inuisible.

ri- But the Sacrament is visible, and the body of Christ inuisible:

son. Therefore they are not one.

Which thing S. Augustine openeth very well by these wordes: Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud res Sacramenti. Sacramentum est quod in corpus vadit: res autem Sacramenti est corpus Domini nostri Iesu Christi. Moreouer, I remember that Christ ministred this sacrament not to great & deepe philosophers, but to a sort of ignorant and vnlearned fishers, which notwithstanding vnderstoode Christes meanyng right well, & deliuered it euen as they tooke it at Christes hand, to the vulgar and lay people, and fully declared vnto them the meanyng therof. But the lay people, nor scarsly the Apostles themselues could vnderstand what is mēt by transubstantiation, impanation, dimensions, qualitates, quantitates, accidens sine subiecto, terminus a quo, & terminus ad quem, per modum quanti. This is no learnyng for the vnlearned and rude people, wherefore it is likely that Christ ment some other thyng then hath bene taught of late daies. Furthermore, Christes body is food, not for the body, but for the soule,* & therfore it must be receyued with the instrument of the soule which is fayth. For as ye receiue sustenance for your body by your bodily mouth, so the foode of your soule must be receiued by fayth, which is the mouth of the soule. And for that S. Augustine sharply rebuketh them that thinke to eat Christ with their mouthe, saying: Quid paras dentem & ventrem, crede & manducasti. i. Why makest thou redy thy tooth & thy belly?* beleue & thou hast eatē Christ. Likewise speaking of eatyng the selfe same body, he sayth to the Capernaïtes which tooke hym grosly as men do now a dayes: The words that I speake are spirit and lyfe. It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothyng.* And S. Augustine vpon these words of Christ sayth: *Nō hoc corpus quod videtis manducaturi estis, neque bibituri sanguinem, quem effusuri sunt qui me crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis trado. Id spiritualiter acceptum viuificat: caro autē non prodest quicquam. August. Quinquagena. 2. Psal 98.

Custome.

What meane you by this spirite, and by spirituall eatyng? I pray you vtter your mynde more playnely. For I know well that Christ hath a bodye, and therefore must be eaten (as I thinke) with the mouth of the bodye. For the spirit and the soule as it hath no body and flesh, so Page 1390 it hath no mouth.

Veritie.

You must vnderstand, that a man is shaped of two partes: of the body, and of the soule. And eche of them hath his life and his death, his monthe, his teethe, his foode, and abstinence. For like as the body is nourished and fostered with bodily meats, or els can not endure, so must the soule haue his cherishing, otherwise it will decay, & pine away. And therefore we do & may iustly say that the Turkes, Iewes, and Heathen be dead, because they lacke y^t liuely foode of the soule. But how then, or by what meane wil you fede the soule? Doubtles not by the instrument of the body, but of the soule. For that which is receiued into the bodye, hath no passage from thence into the soul. For Christ sayth, That what •o entreth into the belly, is conueied into the draught. And where as you say that the spirite hathe no mouth, like as it hath no bodye or bones, you are deceiued. For the spirite hath a mouthe in his kinde, or else howe coulde a man eate and drinke Iustice? for vndoubtedly his bodily mouthe is no fit instrument for it. Yet Christ sayeth, that he is blessed that hungreth and thirsteth for Iustice. If hee hunger and thirst for Iustice,* belike he both eateth and drinketh it, or otherwise he neither abateth his hunger, nor quencheth hys thirst.* Nowe if a man eate and drinke righteousnesse wyth hys spirite, no doubt his spirite hath a mouth. Whereof I will reason thus:

Da- Of what soeuer sorte the mouth is, suche is hys foode.

*ti- But the mouth of the spirite is spirituall, not bodily:

si. Therefore it receiueth Christes body spiritually, not bodily.

And in like manner Christe speaking of the eatyng of hys bodye, nameth him selfe the breade, not for the bodye, but of life for the soule,* and sayth: He that commeth to me, shal not hunger, and he that beleeueth in me, shall neuer thirst. Wherefore who so will be relieued by the body of Christ,* must receiue him as hee will be receiued, with the instrumente of faith appoynted thereunto, not with his teethe or mouthe. And where as I say that Christes body must be receiued & taken with faith, I meane not that you shall plucke downe Christ from heauen, and put him in your faith, as in a visible place: but that you must with your faith rise and spring vp to him, and leauing this world, dwell aboue in heauen, putting all your trust, cōfort and consolation in him, which suffered grievous bondage to set you at libertye & to make you free, creeping into his wounds, which were so cruelly pearced and do•ted for your sake. So shall you feede the body of Christ, so shall you sucke the bloud that was poured out and shed for you. This is the spiritual, y^e very true, the onely eating of Christes body.* And therfore S. Gregorie calleth it Cibum mentis, non ventris. i. The foode of the minde and not of the bellie.* And S. Cyprian sayth likewise: Non accuimus dentem, nec ventrem paramus. i. We sharpen not oure tooth nor prepare our bellie.

Now to returne to our former purpose, seeing it is plain that Christes body is meat for our spirit, and hath nothing to do with our body, I wil gather thereof this reason. The sacrament is bodily foode and increaseth the body: Ergo, the sacrament is not the very body of Christ. That it nourisheth the body, it is euident: for Christe calleth it the fruite of the vine, whose duetie is to nourish. And for a prooffe, if you consecrate a whole loafe, it will feede you so well as your table bread.* And if a little Mouse get an host, he will craue no more meate to hys dinner. But you will saye these are worldly reasons. What then if the old Fathers recorde the same? Irenaeus sayth: Quando mixtus calix, & fractus panis percipit verbum Dei,* sit Eucharistia corporis & sanguinis Domini, ex quibus augetur & consistit carnis nostrae substantia. Beda witnesseth the same by these woordes: Quia panis carnem confirmat,* & vinum sanguinem operatur in carne, hic ac corpus Christi mysticè, illud ad sanguinem refertur. Wherefore as I sayde before, seeing that Christes body is spirituall meat, and the bread of the sacrament bodily, I may conclude that the sacrament is not Christes body. Beside this, where it was forbidden in the old law, that any man should eat or drinke bloud, the Apostles notwithstanding tooke the cup at Chri|stes handes, and dranke of it, & neuer staggered or shranke at the matter:,* whereby it may be gathered, that they tooke it for a myserie, for a token, and a remembraunce, farre otherwise then it hath of late bene taken.

Againe, when the sacrament was dealte, none of thē all crouched downe and tooke it for his God, forgetting hym that sate there present before their eies,* but tooke it, and eate it, knowing that it was a sacrament and a remembrāce of Christes body. Yea, the old Councels commanded that no man should kneele downe at the time of the Communion, fearing that it should be an occasion of Idolatry. And long after the Apostles time, as Tertullian wryteth, womē were suffered to take it home with them, and to lap it vp in their ch•stes. And the priest many times sent it to sicke persones by a childe: which no doubt would haue geuen more reuerence therto, if they had taken it for their God. But a great while after, about 300. yere agoe. Honorius 3. the Bishop of Rome tooke him and hanged him vp, and caused men to kneele and crouch downe, and all to b•god him.

Furthermore,* if the bread be turned and altered into the body of Christ, doubtles it is the greatest miracle that euer God wrought. But the Apostles saw no myracle in it. Nazianzenus an olde wryter, and Augustine entreating of al the myracles that are in the scripture, number the Sacrament for none. As for the apostles it appeareth wel that they had it for no maruel, for they neuer mused at it,* neither demanded how it might be: whereas in other thinges they euermore were ful of questions. As touching S. Augustine he not only ouerhippeth it, as no wonder, but by plaine & expres words, testifieth that ther is no maruel in it. For speaking of the Lords supper and of the other sacraments he sayeth these words. *Hic Sacramēta honorem vt religiosa habere possunt, stuporem autem vt mira non possunt. Moreouer, a little before the institution of the sacrament, Christe spake of hys ascension, saying, I leaue the world: I tary but a litle while wyth you. Let not your hearts be troubled because I go from you, I tell you truthe it is for your profite that I goe from you, for if I goe not, the spirite of comfort cannot come to you. Ihon 14. wyth many other like warnings of his departure. S. Steuen sawe hym sitting at the right hand of his Father, and thought it a speciall reuelation of God: but he neuer said that he sawe him at the Communion, or that he made him * euery daye himselfe. And in the Actes of the Apostles S. Peter sayeth, that Christ must needes keepe the heauen till all be ended. Esay, Salomon, and S. Steuen,* saye that God dwelleth not in temples made with mans hand: S. Paule wyseth that he were dissolued and dead, and were with Christ, not in the aultar doutlesse where he might be daily, but in heauen. And to be briefe, it is in oure Credo, & we do constantly beleue, that Christe is ascended into heauen, and sitteth at his fathers right hande: and no promise haue we that he will come iumping downe at euery priests calling. Hereof I gather this reason.

Christes body can not both be gone, and be heere.*

But he is gone, and hath left the world:

Therefore it is follie to seeke him in the world.

Cust.

Fie, you be farre deceiued, I can not in no wise brooke these words. You shut vp Christ too straitly, and imprisone hym in one corner of heauen, not suffering hym to goe at large. No, doubtlesse, he hath deserued more gentlenesse at your hande, then to be tied vp so shorte.

Veri.

I do neither locke vp, neither imprison Christ in heauen:* but according to the Scriptures declare that hee hath chosen a blessed place, & moste worthy to receiue his maiestie: in which place who so is inclosed, thinketh not himself (as I suppose) to be a prisonner: but if you take it for so hainous a thing, y^t Christ should sit resident in heauen in y^e glory of his father, what thinke you of them that imprison him in a litle boxe, yea and keepe him in captiuitie so long, vntil he be mouldy & ouergrowne with vermine, & when he is past mans meat, be not contented to hang him till he stincke, but will haue him to a newe execution, and burne hym too? This is wonderfull and extreme cruell imprisoning. But to returne to the matter, wee are certainly perswaded by the worde of God, that Christ the very sonne of God vouchsaued to take vppon him the body and shape of man, & that he walked & was conuersant amongst men in that same one, & not in many bodies, and that hee suffered death, rose againe, and ascended to heauen in the selfe same body, and that he sitteth at his fathers ryght hande in hys manhode, in the nature and substance of the said one body. This is our beliefe, this is the very word of God. Wherefore they are far deceiued, which leauing heauen, wil grope for Christes body vpon the earth.

Cust.

Nay sir, but I see now you are farre out of the way. For Christ hath not so grosse & fleshly a body, as you think,* but a spirituall and a ghostly body, and therefore without repugnaunce it may be in many places at once.

Veri.

You say right wel, and do graunt that Christes body is spiritual. But I pray you answer me by the waye: Can any other body then that which is spirituall, be at one time in sondry places.

Cust.

No truely?

Veri.

Haue we that same selfe sacrament that Christe gaue to his Disciples, at his Maundie, or no?

Cust.

No doubtlesse, we haue the same.

Veri.

When became Christes body spirituall? was it so euē from his birth.

Cust.

No, for doubtles before he arose from death, his bobody was earthly as other mens bodies are.

Veri.

Well, but when gaue Christe the Sacrament to hys Disciples? before he arose from death or after?

Cust.

*You know your selfe he gaue it before his resurrection, the night before he suffered hys Passion.

Veritie.

Why then, me thinketh he gaue the Sacrament at that time, when his body was not spirituall.

Cust.

Euen so.

Veri.

And was euery portion of the Sacrament delt to the Apostles, and receaued into their mouthes the very reall and substantiall body of Christ?

Cust.

Yea doubtles.

Veri.

Marke well what ye haue said, for you haue graunted me great repugnance. First you say that no body being not spiritual can be in sundry places at once. Then say you that at the maundy Christes body was not spirituall: and yet hold you that he was there present visible before the Apostles eyes, and in ech of theyr handes and mouthes all at one time: which graunts of yours are not agreeable. But I will gather a better and a more formall reason of youre wordes,* in this sort.

Fe- No body being reall, naturall, and organical, and not spirituall, can be in many places at once.

ri- Christes body in the Sacrament was in the Apostles handes and mouthes at one time, which were manye places:

son. Ergo, Christes body in the sacrament was not a reall, naturall, and organicall body, but spirituall.

Cust.

In deede you haue driuen me into the straites before I was ware of you, and I knowe not howe I may escape your handes honestly. But the best refuge that I haue, is thys, that I will not beleeeue you.

Veri.

I desire you not to geue credence to me. Beleeue the worde of God, yea beleue your owne beliefe, for they bothe witnesse againste you that Christes body is taken vp into heauen, and there shal remaine vntil he come to Iudge.

Cust.

Tush, what speake you of the word of God? There be many darke sayings therein, which euerye man can not attaine to.

Veri.

I graunt you there be certaine obscure places in the scripture,* yet not so obscure but that a man wyth the grace of God may perceiue: for it was wrytten not for Aungels, but for men. But as I vnderstand Custome medleth but litle with Scripture. How say you by S. Augustine, S. Hierom, S. Ambrose, what if they stand on our side?

Cust.

No, no, I know them well inough.

Veri.

So wel as you know them, for all old acquaintance, if they be called to witnesse, they will geue euidence against you. For S. Augustine commonly in euery of his bookes, but chiefly in an Epistle to his frende Dardanus, declareth that Christes body is placed in one rounge.* I maruell you be not nearer of his counsel. His words are these: Noli dubitare ibi nunc esse hominem Christum Iesum, vnde venturus est. Memoriter{que} recole & fideliter crede Christianam confessionem: quoniam resurrexit, ascendit in coelum, sedet a dextris Dei patris, nec aliundè quam indè venturus est, ad viuos mortuosque iudicandos. Et venturus est in eadem corporis substantia: cui immortalitatem dedit, naturam non abstulit. Secundum hanc formam non est putandus vbiq̃ue diffusus. Cauendum enim est, ne ita diuinitatem astruamus hominis, vt humanitatem amittamus Dei. i. Do not dout the man Iesus Christ to be there, frō whence he shall come. And remember well, and faithfully beleue the Christian confession, that he is risen, ascended into heauen, sitteth at the righte hande of God the father, and from thence shal come & from no other place, to iudge the quicke and the dead. And shall come in the same substaunce of body, to the which he gaue immortality, and tooke not the nature from it. After this forme he is to be thought not to be dispersed in all places, for we must beware so to defend his Diuinitie, that we destroy not his humanitie. And in an other place of the same Epistle. Vna persona Deus & homo, & vtrumque est vnus Christus.*Vbiq̃ue per id quod Deus, in coelo autem per id quod homo. Likewise vpon the 14. Psalme. Donec saeculum finiatur sursum est Dominus: sed etiam hic nobiscum est veritas Domini. Corpus enim in quo resurrexit, in vno loco esse oportet,*veritas autem eius vbiq̃ue diffusa est. i. While the world shall last, the Lorde is aboue, and also the veritye of the Lorde is with vs. For the body wherein he rose againe must be in one place. But the verity of him is euery where dispersed. In like manner wryteth Damasus an olde Byshop of Rome in his Credo.*Deuictis mortis imperijs, cum ea carne in qua natus, & passus est, & resurrexit, ascendit in coelum, manente eadem natura carnis in qua natus & passus est. S. Ambrose wryting vppon the 10. chapter of Luke recordeth the same: Ergo, nec supra terram, nec in terra, nec secundum terram quaerere debemus Dominum, si volumus inuenire. Non enim supra terram quaesiuit qui stantem ad Dei dextram vidit.Maria quaerebat in terra tangere Christum & non potuit. Stephanus terigit quia quaerebat in coelo. i. Wherefore, neither aboue the earth, nor vppon the earth, nor according to the earth we oughte to seeke the Lorde, if we wil finde him: For he did not seeke hym aboue the earth, which did see him sitting at the right hande. And Marie sought vppon the earth to touch Christ and coulde not. Steuen touched hym, because he soughte hym in heauen. S. Hierome in an Epistle to Marcella, prooueth that the bodye of Christe must needes be contained in some place, for he sayeth: Veri Dei est vbique esse: veri hominis alicubi esse. i. The property of God is to be euery where, the propertie of man is to be in one place. The same Hierome in an other place calleth it a foolish thing to seeke for him in a narowe place, or in a corner, which is the lyghte of all the worlde: Stultum est eum paruo in loco, vel abscondito quaerere, qui totius mundi est lumen. i. Foolishnesse it is, in a smal place or in a hidde corner to seeke hym which is the lyghte of all the whole worlde. Origine sayeth likewise: Audiendi non sunt qui Christum demonstrant in aedibus. i.* They are not to be heard, which shewe Christ in houses. The same also recordeth Beda, wryting vpon these woordes of Christe: Now a litle while shal you see me. He speaketh in Christes person. Therefore (sayeth he) shall you see me but a litle while after my resurrection, because I will not still abide in the earth bodily,but in the manhoode which I haue taken, will ascende vp to heauen. What needeth more woordes. All the olde fathers witnesseth the same. You may by these soone iudge the rest. Nowe to retourne to the matter, seeing that the worde of God in many and sundrye places, the Credo, and the abridgement of the faith, seeing all the olde fathers doe constantly agree in one, that the body of Christ is ascended into heauen, and there remaineth at the right hande of the father, and cannot be more then in one place, I doe conclude that the Sacrament is not the body of Christ:* first because it is not in heauen, neyther sitteth at the Fathers right hande: moreouer, because it is in an hundreth thousande boxes, where as Christes bodye filleth but one place. Furthermore, if the bread were turned into the body of Christe, then woulde it necessarily followe, that sinners and vnpenitent persones receiue the body of Christ.

Cust.

Marie, and so they do. For Paule saith plainly, that they receiue the body of Christ to their owne confusion.

Veri.

No not so. These are not Pauls woordes, but hee sayeth: Who so eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cuppe vnworthely, eateth and drinketh his owne condemnation,not iudging the bodye of the Lorde. Heere hee calleth it in playne woordes breade. And althoughe the Sacramente be very bread, yet doeth the iniurie redounde to the body of Christ. As if a man breake the kynges Mace, or treade the broade Seale vnder his foote, although hee haue broken and defaced nothyng but siluer and waxe. Yet is the iniurie the Kinges, and the doer shall be taken as a Traitor. Saint Ambrose declareth the meaninge of Saint Paule by these woordes. Reus est corporis Domini, qui poenas dabit mortis Christi, quoniam irritam fecit mortem Domini. The cause of the ordinance therof was the remembraunce of the death of Christe, which who so forgetteth, receiue the Sacrament to their condemnation.* That same witnesseth S. Augustine. For the Sacrament, sayeth he, is an outwarde token of loue and charitie. For like as many graines of come are become one pece of bread, euen so they that receiue it ought to be one. Then sayeth hee. Mysterium pacis ac vnitatis nobis Christus in mensa sua consecrauit. Quid accepit mysterium vnitatis, & non seruat vnitatem, non mysterium accepit pro se, sed testimonium contra se. Hee that readeth the Gospel, wherein is declared the passion and death of Christe,* and liueth contrary to the Gospell, shall doubtlesse be the more giltye of the death of Christe, because hee heareth and readeth the word of God, and regardeth it not. In a certaine countrey the maner is, that when the Gospell is read, the king shall stand vp with a naked sword in his hand, declaring thereby that he beareth his sword in defence of the Gospell. But if he himselfe oppresseth the Gospell, he beareth the sword against himself, for the Gospel shal turne to his iudgement, and condemnation. So wil Christ so much more extremely punish a manne which knowing him selfe to be wicked and without repentance, and therefore none of the flocke of Christe, yet notwithstanding will impudently creepe into the company of Christian men, & receiue the Sacramentes with them, as though he were one of the number. And this meant S. Paule by the vnworthy receiuing of the Sacrament of Christes body. Wherefore a man maye vnworthely take the Sacrament, and be giltye of the death of Christe, although he receiue not Christes body into hys mouthe, & chawe it with his teeth. But what if I prooue that euerye Massing priest is giltye of the body and bloud of Christ?

Cust.

I dare say, you can not prooue it.

Veri.

But if I do prooue it, will you beleeeue me.

Cu•t.

I may well inough, for it is impossible to doe it. For Priestes commonly are confessed before they go to Masse: and how can they then take the Sacrament vnworthely?

Veri.

In deede confession, if it be discretely vsed, is a laudable custome, and to the vnlearned man, and feeble cōscience so good as a Sermon. But notwithstanding because it was, neuer neither commaunded of Christ, nor receiued of the Apostles, nor much spoken of the olde Doctours, it can not make much for y^e due receiuing of the Sacrament. But how like you these woordes of S. Ambrose? Is indignè sumit, qui aliter sumit, quam Christus instituit. i. He taketh it vnworthely, that taketh it otherwise then Christ ordained it.

Custome.

This liketh me very wel. But what gather you of it?

Veritie.

This will I gather. The Massing Priest taketh the Sacrament otherwise then Christ either commaunded or taught: Ergo, he taketh it vnworthely, and so consequētlly to his condemnation.

Cust.

That is not so, for he doth altogether as Christ commaunded him.

Veritie.

That shall appeare. For Christ commaunded it to be done in his remembraunce: the Priest doth it in remembraunce of dead men.* Christ tooke breade: and left it breade: the Priest taketh bread and coniureth it away. Christ tooke bread and gaue thanks: the Priest taketh bread, and breatheth vppon it. Christe tooke bread, and brake it: the Priest taketh bread and hangeth it vppe. Christ tooke breade and dealt to hys Apostles: the Priest because hee is an Apostle him selfe, taketh breade and eateth it euery whitte alone. Christ in a Sacrament gaue his owne body to be eaten in faith: the Priest for lacke of faith receiueith accidentes, and dimensions. Christ gaue a Sacrament to strengthen mens faith: the Priest geueth a sacrifice to redeeme mens soules. Christ gaue it to be eaten: the Priestes giueth it to be worshipped.* And to conclude. Christe gaue bread: the Priest sayth he geueth a God. Here is difference inough betwene Christ, and the Priest. Yet moreouer Christ at his Supper spake his woordes out and in a plaine tounge: the Prieste speaketh nothing but Latine or Greeke, which tounge he oftentimes perceiueith not, and much he whispereth least any other poore man should perhaps perceiue him. So it commeth to passe that the Prieste knoweth no more what hee himselfe sayeth, then what he doeth. This you may see that the Massing Prieste receiueith the Sacrament of Christes body farre otherwise then euer Christ minded, and so therefore vnworthely and to his condemnation. Nowe if you thinke your selfe satisfied, I wil returne to my former question, and prooue more at large that Christes body can not be 〈◇〉 of the wicked, which thing must necessarily ensue if the bre•de were turned into the body of Christ. Christ in the 6. of Iohn,* speaking of the eating of his body, sayth•He that eateth of this bread, shall liue for euer. Whereof I gather thus: But sinnefull men take the Sacrament to theyr condemnation, and liue not for euer: Ergo, in the Sacrament they receiue not the body of Christ. Againe, Christe sayeth: He that eateth me, shall liue for my sake. Heereof I conclude thus: But impetinent personnes can not liue for Christes sake. Moreouer Christes bodye must be receiued, and not wyth the mouth,* as Gregorie recordeth, saying, that it is eaten wyth the teethe of the soule, not of the body, as I haue aboue more largely declared. But wicked, and impenitent persons lacke faith: Wherefore they can not eate the bodye of Christe. Againe, Christes body can not be deuied from his spirite, but wicked men haue not the spirite of God▪ Ergo, they haue not Christes body. Heereunto agreeth all the old wryters, affirming constantly that the vnfaithful he no meete vess•lles to receiue the body of Christe.S. Augustine sayth: Qui non manet in Christo, & in quo non manet Christus, 〈...〉 non manducat carnem Christi, nec bibit eius sanguinem 〈...〉 ad iudicium suum 〈...〉 And in the persons of Christ he sayeth likewise: Qui non 〈...〉 & in quo ego non maneo, ne se dica• 〈◇〉 existime• manducare corpus meum• aut sanguinem meum bibere. Ambrose auoweth the same, by these woordes: Qui discordat a Christo, non manducat carn•m eius▪ nec bibit sanguinem, ets• tantae rei Sacramentum accipiat. In like maner wryteth Prosperus:Qui discordat a Christo, nec carnem Christi edit, nec sanguinem bibit, etsi tantae rei Sacramentum, ad iudicium suae praesumptionis quotidie acciprat. And therefore S. Augustine sayth▪ Mali Sacramentum habent, re•• autem Sacramenti non habent. Thus by the woordes of God by reason and by the old fathers it is plaine that sinnefull men eate not the bodye of Christ receiue they the Sacrament neuer so ofte: Whiche thing coulde not be, if in the Sacramente there remained nothing but the body of Christ.*

The Sacramente in the Scriptures is named Fractio panis, the breaking of bread: whiche, to say the trueth, were but a colde breaking, if there remained no breade to breake, but certaine phantasies of white, and round. Yet where as they with wordes, crossinges, blessinges, breathings, leapings, and much a do can scarcely make one God, they haue suche vertue in their fingers, that at one crosse they be able to make 20. Gods, for if they breake the Sacrament euery portion, yea euery mite must needes be a God. After the Apostles time there arose vppe heretickes, whych sayde that Christ walking here amongst men bodely vpon the earth, had no very body, but a thing like a body, and so therewith dimmed mennes light. Against whom the old fathers vsed these arguments: Christ increased in growing, fasted, hungred, eate, wept, sweat, was weary, and in cōclusion died, & had all other properties of a very body: wherefore he had a body. I will vse the same kinde of reasoning. It feedeth,* it tasteth like bread, it looketh like bread, the litle sely mouse taketh it for bread, and to be short, it hath all the properties and tokens of bread: Ergo it is bread. The old fathers, whē there remained anye parte of the Sacramente, more then was spent at the Communion, they vsed to burne it, and of it there came ashes. But there is nothing in the Sacrament that can turne to ashes,* but onely bread (for I thinke they burned not Christes body to ashes): Ergo, in the Sacrament there remaineth bread. Henry the Emperour the 6, of that name was poysoned in the hoste: and Uictor the Bishop of Rome in the Chalice. But poyson can not hang in Gods body, and bloude: Wherefore there remayneth breade and wine. What needeth many wordes in a matter so euident? If you demaund either Gods word, or the doctours and the auncient wryters, or your reason, or your eyes, or nose, or tounge, or fingers, or the Cat, or the Ape, or the Mouse, all these agree in one, and aunswere together there is bread: wherefore if yo^r re[•]ecte so many and so constant witnesses, and so well agreeing in their tale, specially being such as will lie for no mans pleasure, I will appeale from you, and take you as no indifferent iudge. If all these witnesses suffice you not, I wil call the sacrament it selfe to record. It crieth vnto you, and plainely doth aduertise you what you should thinke of it. I am, it sayth, grated wyth y^e tooth: I am conueied into the belly: I perish: I can endure no space: I canker: I suffer grene mould, blew mould, red mould: I breede wormes:* I am kept in a boxe for feare of battes: if you leaue me out al night, I shalbe deuoured before morning, for if the mouse gette mee I am gone: I am bread, I am no God, beleue them not. This crieth the sacrament daily, and beareth witness it selfe.

Cust.

The deuill on such like reasons: and therfore I will neuer trouble my braines to make you aunswere. But if it be true that you haue sayde, why is the Sacrament so well of Christ himselfe, as of hys Apostles, and the olde fathers called the body of Christ?

Veri.

Because it is no straunge thyng in Scripture so to speake, as I haue declared before. But wil you stand to S. Augustines arbitrement in the matter?

Cust.

To no man sooner.

Veri.

S. Augustine in an Epistle to his frende Bonifacius,* geueth a good cause why the Sacramente, although it be not the body of Christ, is notwithstanding called the bodye of Christ. His wordes be these: Si Sacramenta quandam similitudinem earum rerum quarum Sacramenta sunt non haberent, om•i•o Sacramenta non essent. Ex hac autem similitudine plerumque •arum re•m nomina accipiunt. Ergo,*secundum quendam modum Sacramentum corporis Christi, corpus Christi est: Sacramentum sanguinis Christi, sanguis Christi est: If Sacraments had not a certaine similitude of those things wherof they be sacraments, then were they no Sacramentes. Of the which similitude many times they take their name. Wherefore after a certaine manner the Sacrament of the body of Christ, is the body of Christ, and the Sacrament of the bloud of Christ, is the bloud of Christ. &c. And vpon the 23. Psalme he wryteth likewise:Christus quod•mmodo se ferebat in manibus suis, cum diceret: Hoc est corpus meum. Christ after a certaine manner and fashion, as it were, did beare himselfe in his owne handes when he sayde: This is my bodye. In manner (he sayeth) and after a fashion, not in very dede. Again, when faithful menne receiue the Sacrament, they thinke not of the breade nor marke the wine, but they looke farther, & beholde the very body of Christ spread vppon the Crosse and his very bloud poured downe for their sakes: So in Baptisme men regarde not greatly the water, •ut accounte them selues washed wyth the bloude of Christ▪ So sayeth S. Paule: What so euer we bee that are Baptised, wee are washed in the bloude of Christ. Wherefore to the faithfull receiuers you may say that the water of Baptisme is the bloude of Christe, and the breade and wine the body and bloud of Christ: for to them it is no lesse then if the natures were altered and chaunged. Whyche thyng you maye very well learne of Chrysostome, whose woordes are these. Mysteria omnia interioribus oculis consideranda Page 1393 sunt, hoc est spiritualiter. Interiores autem oculi postquam panem vident, creaturas transuolant, neque de illo pane à pistore cocto cogitant,*sed de eo qui se dixit panem esse aeternae vitae. All mysteries must be considered with inwarde eyes, that is to say, spiritually: As the inwarde eyes when they see the bread, they passe ouer the creatures, neither do they thinke of that bread which is baked of the baker, but of him which called himself the bread of eternal life. For these two causes the bread and wine are called the body and bloud of Christe. Nowe I thinke you are satisfied concerning the meaning of these woordes: This is my body.

Cust.

Yet one thing mooueth me very much.

Veri.

What is that?

Cust.

The Doctors and old wryters, men inspired with the holy Ghost haue euermore bene against your doctrine: * Yea, and in these daies the wisest men and best learned call you heretickes, and your learning heresie.

Veri.

As touching the olde wryters, I remember well they speake reuerently of the Sacramentes, like as euery man ought to doe. * But where as they deliuer their minde wyth the right hand, you Custome receiue it wyth the left. For where as they say, that it is the bodye of Christe, and that it must be verely eaten, meaning that it doeth effectually lay before the eyes Christes body, and that it is to the faithfull man no lesse then if it were Christe him selfe, and that Christe must be eaten in faith, not torne nor rent wyth the teeth: * you say that howsoeuer it be taken, it is Christes bodye, and that there is none other eatyng but wyth the mouth. And that the fathers meant no other thing then I haue sayde, it shall appeare by their wordes. But as touching the learned and wise men of these dayes, I can not blame them if they call my doctrine heresie: for they would condemne al auncient wryters of heresie, if they were now aliue. But I will aunsweare you to them anone. In the meane while marke you how well their learning agreeth. They say, you must follow the letter, you must sticke to the letter. * But Origenes sayeth: Si secundum literam sequaris id quod scriptum est [nisi manducaueritis carnem filij hominis non erit vita in vobis] ea litera occidit. If ye folow after the letter, that which is wrytten [vnlesse yee shall eate the flesh of the sonne of man, * there shalbe no life in you] this letter killeth. Augustine in the third booke De doctrina Christiana: Principio cauendum est ne figuratam dictionem secundum literam accipias. Ad hoc enim pertinet id quod ait Apostolus * *litera occidit. Cum enim figuratè dictum sic accipitur tanquam propriè dictum sit, carnaliter sapitur, neque vlla animae mors congruentius appellatur. i. First, thou muste beware that thou take not a figuratiue speache after the letter. For thereto pertaineth that the Apostle sayeth: The letter killeth. For when a thing is spiritually meant, and the same is takē litterally and properly spoken that is a carnall taking. Neither can any other be called the killing of the soule rather then that. And in the same booke he teacheth a man to know the plain sense from a figure, * saying thus: Si praeceptiua loquutio est flagitium iubens, aut beneficentiam vetans, figurata est: Nisi m•nducaueritis carnem filij hominis, & biberitis eius sanguinem, non erit vita in vobis. Flagitium videtur iubere: Ergo, Figura est praecipiens passioni Domini esse communicandum, * & suauiter in memoria recōdendum, quòd pro nobis caro eius crucifixa sit. i. If the commaunding speach be such, as commandeth a thing wicked and horrible to be done, or a charitable thing to be vndone, then this is a figuratiue speach: Unlesse ye shal eat the flesh of the sonne of man, and shall drinke his bloud, there shall be no life in you. Because in this speach he seemeth to commaund a wicked thing, it is therefore a figuratiue speache, commaunding that we should communicate with the passion of our Lorde, and sweetely to retaine it in our remembraunce. In like manner Chrysostome plucketh you from the plaine letter, and the bare woordes by this saying: Caro non prodest: hoc est secundum spiritum verba mea intelligenda sunt. Quia qui secundum carnem audit, nihil lucratur. Quid est autem carnaliter intelligere? * Simpliciter vt res dicuntur, neque aliud quip piam cogitare. Non enim ita iudicanda sunt quae videntur, sed mysteria omnia interioribus oculis videnda sunt, hoc est spiritualiter. i. The flesh profiteth not: that is to say, my wordes must be taken and expounded after the spirite. For hee that heareth after the flesh, gaineth nothing. Nowe what is it to vnderstād carnally? To take things simply as they be spoken, and not to consider any meaning further therein. For things must not be iudged as they are seene, but all mysteries must be seene with inwarde eyes, that is to say, spiritually. What is so hainous in these dayes, as to cal the Sacrament the token or the remembrance of Christes body? Yet did the olde wryters in manner neuer call it other. Tertullian in the 4. booke against the Martionistes: Christus accepit panem, & corpus suum fecit: Hoc est corpus meū dicendo▪ id est figura corporis mei. Christ took bread & made it hys body, saying: This is my body, that is to say, a figure of my body. Ambrose vpon the 11. to the Corinthians: Quia morte Domini liberati sumus, huius rei memores in edendo & potando, carnem & sanguinem quae pro nobis oblata sunt significamus. Because we are deliuered by the Lords death, in y^e remembraunce of the same by eating and drinking we signify the body and bloud which were offered vp for vs. Chrysostome in the lxxxij. Homily vpon the Gospel of Mathew: Quando dicunt, vndè patet Christum immolatum fuisse, haec adferentes eorum ora consumimus. Si enim mortuus Christus non est, cuius Symbolum ac signum hoc sacrificium est? When they object vnto vs, and aske: howe knowe you that Christe was offered vppe? then alledging these things, we stoppe theyr mouthes. For if Christ died not, then whose signe or token is this sacrifice? Augustine to Adimantus: Non dubitauit Christus dicere: Hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui. Christ doubted not to say: This is my body, when he gaue but a signe of his body. Augustine vpon the thirde Psalme: Christus adhibuit Iudam ad conuiuuium, in quo corporis & sanguinis sui figuram discipulis suis commēdauit & tradidit. Christ receiued Iudas to the Supper, in the which he commended and deliuered a figure of his body and bloud vnto hys Disciples. Rabanus, de institutione clericorum: Quia panis corpus confirmat, ideo ille corpus Christi congruenter nuncupatur. Vinum autem quia sanguinem operatur in carne, ideo ad sanguinem Christi refertur. Because the breade strengtheneth the bodye, therefore it is aptly called Christes body. And likewise the wine, because it encreaseth bloud in the flesh, it doth resemble the bloud of Christ. Druthmarus Monachus in Mathaeum. Vinum laetificat & sanguinem auget, & ideo non inconuenienter per hoc sanguis Christi figuratur. Wine maketh glad the heart, and encreaseth bloud, and therefore the bloude of Christ is not vnaptly signified thereby. Irenaeus witnesseth plainly that in the Sacrament remaineth bread and wine by these woordes: Quemadmodum terrenus panis percipiens vocationem Dei, iam non communis panis est, sed Eucharistia ex duabus rebus constans, terrena, & coelesti: As the earthly breade receiuing the vocation of God, is now no common bread but the Eucharist, consisting of two things, the one earthly & the other heauenly. Heere he recordeth that there remaineth in the Sacrament an earthly nature, which is either breade or nothing. Gelasius wryting against Nestorius, auoweth the same, sayinge: In Eucharistia non definit substantia panis, & natura vini. Etenim imago & similitudo corporis & sāguinis Domini in actione mysteriorum celebratur. i. In the Eucharist the substance of the bread and nature of the wine ceaseth not to be: For the Image and similitude of the body and bloud of the Lorde is celebrated in the action of the mysteries. Chrysostome in his 20. Homely vpon the 2. Epistle to the Corinthians preferreth a poore man before the Sacramente, and calleth hym the body of Christe rather then the other. Whereof I maye gather this reason:

Bo- The poore man is not the naturall and reall bodye of Christ.

car- Euery poore member of Christe is the body of Christe, rather then the Sacrament: Chrysost.

do. Ergo, the Sacrament is not the naturall and reall body of Christ.

His wordes are: Hoc altare veneraris quoniam in eo proponitur corpus Christi▪ Eum autem qui reipsa corpus est Christi, afficis contumelia, & negligis pereuntem. This aultare thou doest reuerence because the body of Christ therein is set before thee: but him whiche is the body of Christe in deede, thou doest spitefully intreate, and doest neglect him readye to perish.

Chrysostome in the 11. Homely vppon Mathewe: Quod si haec vasa sanctificata ad priuatos vsus est transferre periculosum, in quibus non verum corpus Christi,*sed mysterium corporis Christi continetur, quanto magis vasa corporis nostri If it be so perillous a matter to translate these sanctified vessels vnto priuate vses, in the which not the true body of Christ, but a mysterie of the bodye of Christe is contained, howe muche more then these vesselles of our bodye? Athanasius vppon these woordes: Qui dixerit verbum contra filium hominis, sayeth: Ea quae Christus dicit non sunt carnalia, sed spiritualia. Quod enim •omedentibus suffecisset corpus, vt totius mūdi fieret alimonia▪ Sed id•irco meminit Ascensionis filij hominis in coelum vt eos a corporali cogitatione auelleret. The words that Christe heere speaketh, be not carnall but spirituall. For what bodye mighte haue suffised for all that shoulde ea•e, to be a nourishment of the whole worlde? But therefore hee maketh mention of the Ascension of the sonne of manne into Heauen, to the enten•e to plucke them awaye from that corporall cogitation. Augustinus ad Marcellinum: In illis carnalibus vi•ctimis figuratio fuit carnis Christi, quam pro peccatis nostris erat oblatu•us, & sanguinis quem erat effusus▪ In i•to autem Sacrificio gratiarum actio atque commemoratio est carnis Christi quam pro nobis obtulit, & sanguinis, quem pro nobis effudit. In i•lo ergo Sacrificio, quid Page 1394 nobis sit donandum figuratè significatur: in hoc autem sacrificio quid nobis donatum sit, euidenter ostenditur. In illis sacrificijs p••nunciabatur filius Dei occidendus: in hoc pro impijs annuntiatur occisus. In those carnall oblations the flesh of Christ was figured, which he should offer for our sinnes, and the bloud which he should bestow for vs. But in this sacrifice is the giuing of thanks and memorial of the flesh of Christ, which he hath offred for vs, and of the bloud which he hath shedde for vs. In that sacrifice therfore is signified figuratiuely what should be giuē for vs: in this sacrifice what is giuen to vs, is euidently declared. In those sacrifices, the sonne of God was before preached to be slaine: in thys sacrifice he is shewed to be slaine already for the wicked. Origenes vpon Mat. expounding these wordes: This is my body, sayth: Panis iste quem Christus corpus suum fatetur esse, verbum est nutritorium animarum. i. The bread which Christ confesseth to be hys body, is a nutritiue worde of our soules. Augustinus: Nulli aliquatenus dubitandum, vnumquemque fidelium corporis & sanguinis Domini tunc esse participem, quando in baptisate membrum efficitur Christi. Sacramenti quippe illius participatione ac beneficio non priuabitur, quando in se hoc inuenit quod Sacramentū significati. No manne ought in any wise to doubt but that euery faithfull man is then partaker of the body and bloud of the Lord, when in Baptisme he is made a member of Christ. For he shall not be depriued of the participation and benefite of that Sacrament, when he findeth in himselfe that thing which the Sacrament doeth signifie. Ambrosius: Tanta est vis verbi, vt panis & vinum maneant quae sunt, & mutētur in aliud. Such is the force & strength of the worde, that the bread and wine remaine the same as they were, and yet are changed into an other thing. For it is not any longer common breade,* but it is turned into a Sacrament: Yet notwithstanding there remaineth bread and wine. Tertullian wryting against an hereticke named Martion, which taught that the creatures of God, as flesh, bread,* wine and such like were naught and vncleanly: Non abiecit Deus creaturam suam, sed ea repraesentauit corpus suum. God hath not cast away his creature, but by it hee hath represented his body. Origenes vppon Leuiticus, speaking of the drinking of Christes bloud, sayeth: Non sanguinem carnis expetimus sed sanguinem verbi.* We doe not desire y^e bloud of the flesh, but the bloud of the woorde. Ambrose called the Sacrament, Typum corporis Christi, and Basilius Antitypum, whych is as much to say,* as a token, a figure, a remembrance and example of Christes body. Origine vpon the 14. chapt. of Mathew: In isto pane, quod est materiale eijcitur in secessum: id autem quod fit per verbum Dei pro fidei ratione prodest.* In thys bread that thing which is matoriall, passeth throughe mans body: but that which is made by the woord of God, by the meanes of faith doth profite. And least perhaps you thinke that hee spake those woordes of our common table bread, he concludeth the matter himselfe with these words: Haec diximus de pane symbolico: These things we haue spoken of the mysticall bread. Augustinus contra aduersarium legis & Prophetarum, declareth that it must needes be a figure and a remembrance of the body of Christ:*Ista secundum sanae fidei regulam figuratè intelliguntur. Nam alioqui horribilius videtur esse humanam carnem vorare quam perimere, & humanum sanguinem potare quàm fundere. These things are vnderstanded figuratiuely, according to the rule of sound and true faith. For otherwise it seemeth to be more horrible to eate mannes flesh, then to kill a man, and more horrible to drinke mannes blood, then to shed it. And therfore he saith vpon the 98. Psalme: Non hoc corpus quod videtis estis manducaturi,*nec bibituri sanguinem quem fundent qui me crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis trado. i. Ye shall not eat this body which you see, and drinke that blood which they shal shed that shall crucifie me: I commend vnto you a Sacrament. Tertullian: Aliud a pane corpus Iesus habet: nec pro nobis panis traditus,*sed ipsum Christi verum corpus traditum est in crucem, quod panis figura in coena exhibitum est. i. Iesus hath an other body then breade, for breade was not geuen for vs, but the very true body of Christ was geuen vpon the crosse, which body was exhibited in the Supper vnder the figure of bread.

This recordeth Theodoretus an auncient wryter, and anoweth that there is no turning or altering of the bread in the Sacrament.* His woordes are these: Symbola visibilia corporis & sanguinis, sui appellatione honorauit, non mutans naturam sed naturae addens gratiam. i. He hath honoured and dignified the visible signes wyth the name of his body and of his blood, not changing the nature, but adding grace to nature. And in an other place, where hee maketh a true Christian man to reason with an heretike, he geueth to the hereticke this part, to holde with the turning of breade and wine into the natural body and blood of Christ. The hereticke's wordes are these: Sacramentum Dominici corporis & sanguinis, alia sunt ante sacram inuocationē: post inuocationem verò mutantur, & alia fiunt. The sacramentes of the Lordes body and bloude before the holy inuocation are one thing, but after inuocation they are changed and made an other. This maketh Theodor. to be the heretikes part. Then bringeth he forth the true Christian man, which reprooueth the hereticke for so saying: Incidisti in laqueos quos ipse struxeras: Ne{que} enim sancta illa symbola post consecrationem discedunt a natura sua: Manent enim in priori & substantia, & figura, etenim & oculis videri & digitis palpari vt ante possunt. Thou art fallen into the snares which thou thy selfe hast laid. For those selfe same holy signes after this consecration, do not go frō their nature, for they abide still both in their former substance and figure, and may be both with eyes seene and felt wyth handes, as before. To the same agreeth well Chrysostome, saying, Postquam sanctificatur panis,*non amplius appellatur panis, tametsi maneant natura panis. i. After the breade is sanctified, it is called breade no more, althoughe the nature of bread stil remaine. Hereby you may vnderstand, how & in what sort the old fathers, how the primatiue and beginning church, how the Apostles, howe Christ himselfe tooke these wordes: This is my body.

Now to withstand and stoutly to go against, not onely ancient wryters, or the congregation of Christian people, which at that time was not ouergrown, no neither spotted with couetousnesse and worldly honour, but the Apostles also, and God himselfe, no doubt it is great fondnesse. But what speake I of the olde fathers? It is not long since the sacrament grew out of his right vnderstanding.* For thys word Transubstantiatio, wherby they signifie turning of the breade into the body of Christ, was neuer neyther spoken, neither heard, neither thought among y^e auncient fathers, or in the olde Church. But aboue 500. yeares past, Pope Nicolas 2. in a Councell holden at Lateranum in Rome, confirmed that opinion of the changing of bread, & woulde haue made an article of the faith, and placed it in the Credo. After whiche time ensued Corpus Christi daye, Masses of Corpus Christi, reseruatiō of the sacrament, with honoure, with canopies, with sensing, w^t kneeling, wyth worshyping and adoration, and with so much as any man coulde deuise. For they thought they could not do to much to hym after that the Bishoppe of Rome had allowed hym for a God. But not fully 200. yeare before that time, when thys doctrine first began to bud, and yet notwithstandinge had not so preuailed, but that a greate number of learned and good men could know the Sacrament to be a Sacrament, and not himselfe: Charles the great king of Fraunce, and Emperour of Rome demaunded of a great learned man,* whose name was Bertramus, what hee thoughte by that straunge kinde of calling downe Christe from heauen, and turning a litle gobbet of bread into his naturall body. To whom Bertram made answeere in this wise: Dicimus quòd multa differentia feparantur corpus in quo passus est Christus & sanguis quem in cruce pendens fudit, & hoc corpus quod in mysterio passionis Christi quotidie a fidelibus celebratur. Etenim hoc corpus pignus & species est, illud autem ipsa veritas. Apparet ergo quod tam multa differētia separentur, quantum est inter pignus & eam rem pro qua pignus traditur, & quantum inter imaginem, & rem eam cuius imago est, & quantum inter speciem & veritatem. This wee say, that there is a great difference and separation betwixt the body in the which Christe suffered, and the bloud which he shed vpon the Crosse, & thys body which euery day is celebrated in the mysterie of the Passion of Christe. For this body is a pledge and a similitude, but the other is the very truthe it selfe. Ergo, it appeareth that these two are seperated a sunder by no lesse difference, then is betweene a pledge, and the thing whereof y^r pledge is geuen, or then is betweene an Image of a thing and the thing it selfe whereof the Image is, or then is betwene the forme of a thing and the veritie it selfe. This wrote Bertramus, Druthmarus & manye other,* and yet were neuer in all their time once reprooued of heresie. Thys wrote Ioannes Scotus also, in whose life time men had not eies to espie his heresies. But about 200. yeare after his death, he was iudged and condemned for an hereticke, & his bookes burned in a Councell holden at Vercellae in Lombardie, in the yeare of our Lorde God .1015.* Since which time euen vntill this day although Idolatrye had great encrease, yet there neuer wanted some good men whiche boldly woulde professe and sette foorth the truth, although they were well assured that theyr worldly reward shoulde be spite, malice, imprisonning, sworde, fire, and all kindes of tormentes. Thus so shortly, and in so few woordes as I could, I haue declared to you what Christe meant by these woordes: This is my bodye, what the Apostles thought therein, & in what sorte they deliuered them to theyr successors, in what sense and meaning the holy Fathers and olde wryters, and the Uniuersall and Catholicke Church hath euermore taken them.

The ende and deceasse of king Edward the sixt.

THus hauing discoursed thinges done and past, vnder the raigne of king Edwarde,* suche as seemed not vnfruitfull to be knowen, we will now draw to the ende and death of this blessed king, our young Iosias. Who about a yeare and a halfe after the death of the Duke of Somerset hys Uncle,* in the yeare of our Lorde 1553. entring into the 17. yeare of his age, and the 7. yeare of his raigne, in the month of Iune, was takē from vs, for our sinnes no dout. Whome if it had so pleased the good wil of the Lord to haue spared with longer life, not vnlike it was by all cōiectures probably to be esteemed by those his towarde and blessed beginnings, but proceeding so as he began he would haue reformed suche a Common wealth heere in the Realme of England, as by good cause it might haue bene sayd of hym, y^t was sayd in y^e olde time of the noble Emperour Augustus in reforming and aduauncing the Empire of Rome: Quam quum ille lateritiam (vt aiebat) accepit,*marmoream reliquit. Which Empire he receiued (he sayd) of bricke, but he left it of fine Marble. But the condition of this Realme, and the customeable behaiour of English people (whose propertie is commonly to abuse the lighte of the Gospell when it is offered) deserued no suche benefite of so blessed a reformation, but rather a contrarye plague of deformation, suche as hapned after his raigne, as ye shall heare (the Lord graunting) in the nexte Queenes dayes that followed.

Thus then this godly and vertuous Impe, in the time and moneth aboue mentioned was cut from vs, of whose worthy life and vertues haue bene partly afore declared. Neuerthesse, to haue some monument of him remaining to testifie of the good nature and gentle disposition of that Prince, we will adde heere for a remembraunce, thys little Epistle of his own hand wryting to the Archb. of Canterbury, his Godfather as followeth.

An Epistle of yong Prince Edward to the Archb. of Canterbury his Godfather.

*IMpertio te plurima salute colendissime Praesul, & charissime Susceptor Quia abes longè a me, vellem libenter audire te esse incolumem. Precor autem vt viuas diu, & promoueas verbum Dei. Vale.

Antilae decimo octauo Iunij.

Tuus in Christo filius Edwardus Princeps.

An other Epistle of the young Prince Edward to the Archb. his Godfather.

ETsi puer sum colendissime Susceptor, non tamen immemor sum vel officij erga te mei,* vel humanitatis tuae quam indies mihi exhibere studes. Nō exciderūt mihi humanissimae tuae litterae pridie diui Petri ad me datae. Quibus ante hac respondere nolui, non quòd illas neglexerim, aut non minerim, sed vt illarum diuturna meditatione fruerer, fidelique memoria reponerem, atque demum bene ruminatis pro mea virili responderem. Proinde affectum erga me tuum verè paternum, quem in illis expressisti, amplector & veneror, optoque vt multos viuas annos, tuo{que} pio ac salubri consilio pergas esse mihi venerandus pater. Nam pietatem ante omnia mihi amplectendam & exosculandam esse duco, quoniam diuus Paulus dicit:* Pietas ad omnia utilis est▪ Optimè valeat tua paternitas in plurimos annos.

Hartefordioe tertio decimo Ianuarij.

Tui studiosissimus EDOVARDVS Princeps.

The aunswere of the Archbishop to Prince Edwardes Epistle.

Non magis poterit ipsa me seruare salus (fili in Christo charissime) quam salus tua. Mea vita non dicenda est vita abs{que} tua & salute & valitudine. Quapropter cum te incolumem ac saluum intelligo, vitam etiam mihi integram esse & incolumem sentio. Neque certè absentia mea tam est iniucunda tibi quàm sunt litterae tuae periucundae mihi. Quae arguunt tibi iuxta adesse & ingenium dignum tanto principe, & praeceptorem dignum tanto ingenio. Ex quibus tuis litteris te sic litteras video colere, vt interim doctrinae coelestis tua nequaquam minima sit cura: quae cuicunque sit curae, non potest illum quaeuis cura frangere. Perge igitur qua via incoepisti Princeps illustrissime, & Spartam quam nactus es hanc orna, vt quam ego per literas video in te virtutis lucem, eadem olim illuminet vniuersam tuam Angliam. Nō scribam prolixius, tum quidem vt me intelligas breuitate non nihil affici, tum etiam quod credam te aetate quidem adhuc paruulum paruo gaudere, & similem simili: tum etiam praeterea ne impolita mea oratio in causa sit, quò generosa illa tua indoles barbariae vitium contrahat.

The report of the Princes Scholemaister, in commendation of his towardnes to the Archb.

R^Ight honorable and my singular good Lorde,* after my most harty cōmendations: the oportunitie of this messenger forceth me to wryte at this time, hauing litle matter but onely to signify vnto your grace, that my Lords grace your godsonne is mery and in health, and of such towardnes in learning, godlinesse, gentlenes and all honest qualities, y^t both you and I, and all this realme ought to thinke him and take him for a singular gift sent of God, an Impe worthy of such a father: for whome we are bound sine intermissione, to render to God most harty thanks, wyth most humble request of hys long & prosperous continuance. He hath learned almoste foure bookes of Cato to construe, to parse, and to say wythout booke. And of hys owne courage nowe in the latter Booke hee will needes haue at one time 14. Uerses which he konneth pleasantly and perfectly, besides things of the Bible, Sattellitium Viuis, Aesops Fables, and Latin making, wherof he hath sent your Grace a litle tast. Dominus Iesus te diutissimè seruet.

Thus muche hetherto hauinge declared,* touchinge the worthy vertues and singulare towardnesse of this godlye impe, king Edward the sixth, although I haue not, neither can insert all things due to his commendation, but am enforced to let passe many memorable matters, well worthy to be prosecuted, if they might haue come to our hands: yet this one briefe note I thought not to ouerslip (somethinge to recreate the wery reader in suche a dolfull storye) being notified to me by one M. Edward Hunderhill, who wayting y^e same time, w^t the rest of his felowes pensioners, and men at armes, as Syr Henry Gates, M. Robert Hal, M. Henry Harston, and M. Stafforton hearde these woordes betweene the king and his counsaile.

The relation and testimonie of which persone and persons aboue named, come to this effect, that king Edw. the 6. the 4. yere of his raigne, being then but 13. yeres old and vppward, at Greenewiche vpon S. Georges day, when he was come from the sermon, into y^e presence chamber, there being his vncle, the Duke of Somerset, the Duke of Northumb. with other Lordes & Knights of that order, called the order of the Garter, he said vnto them: My Lordes, I pray you, what saincte is S. George, that we here so honour hym▪ At which question the other Lordes being all astonied, the L. Treasurer (y^t then was) perceiuing this, gaue answer, and said: If it please your Maiestie, I did neuer read in any hystorie of S. George, but only in Legenda aurea, where it is thus set downe, that S. George out with his sworde, and ran the Dragon through with his speare. The king, when he could not a greate while speake for laughing, at length saide: I pray you my Lorde, and what did he with his sworde the while? That I can not tell your maiesty, said he. And so an end of y^t question of good s. Georg.

Now to returne againe from whence we haue digressed, which is to signifie some part of the order & manner of his godly departing: as the time approched when it pleased almighty God to call this young king from vs, whych was the 6. day of Iulye, the yeare aboue sayde, about three houres before his death, this Godly childe, his eyes being closed, speaking to himselfe, & thinking none to haue heard him, made this prayer as followeth.

The prayer of king Edward before his death.

Lorde God, deliuer me out of this miserable & wretched life, & take me among thy chosen: how be it not my will, but thy wil be done: Lord I commit my spirit to thee.*Oh Lord thou knowest howe happy it were for me to be with thee: yet for thy chosens sake send me life and health, that I may truely serue thee. Oh my Lorde God, blesse thy people, and saue thine inheritaunce. Oh Lord God, saue thy chosen people of England. Oh my Lord God, defend this Realme from papistrie, and maintaine thy true religion, that I and my people may praise thy holy name, for thy sonne Iesus Christes sake.

Then turned he his face, & seeing who was by him, sayd vnto them: Are ye so night, I thought you had bene further off? Then Doc. Owen said, We heard you speake to your selfe, but what you saide we knowe not. He then (after his fashion smilingly) said, I was praying to God. The last words of his pangs were these: I am faint, Lord haue mercy vpon me, & take my spirite. And thus he yeelded vp the ghost, leauing a wofull kingdom behinde vnto his sister. Allbeit he in his will hadde excluded his sister Marye from the succession of the crowne, because of her corrupt religion: yet y^e plague which God had destinate vnto this sinfull Realme, coulde not so be voided, but that shee beinge the elder and daughter to king Henry, succeeded in possession of y^e crowne. Of whose dreadfull and bloody regiment, it remaineth nowe consequently to discourse.

Page 1396This briefly may suffice to vnderstande, that for all the writing, sending, and practising with the Lady Mary, by the King and his Counsaile, and also by the Bishop Ridley, yet would she not be reclaymed from her owne singular opinion fixed vpon custome, to giue anye indifferente hearing to the word and voice of veritie. The whiche set will of the said Lady Mary,* both this yong King and also his father King Henry before him right well perceauing and considering, they were both much displeased agaynst her: In so much that not onely her brother did vtterly sequester her in his will,* but also her own father considering her inclination, conceiued suche hart against her, that for a great space he did seclude her from the title of Princesse, yea and seemed so egerly incensed against her, that he was fully purposed to proceede further with her (as it is reported) had not the intercession of Thomas Cranmer the Archbyshop, reconciled the King againe to fauour and pardon his owne daughter. For the better vnderstanding whereof, by these her owne letters copied out of her owne hand writing (which I haue to shew) something may be perceiued, and more peraduenture may be gessed. The words out of her owne hand writing be these. And first her letter to King Henry her father heere followeth.

A Letter of the Lady Mary, to King Henry her father.

IN my most humble wise I beseeche your grace of your dayly blessing.* Pleaseth it the same to be aduertised, that this morning my Lord my Chamberleyne came and shewed me, that hee had receyued a letter from sir William Paulet Controller of your house. The effect whereof was, that I should with all diligence remoue vnto the Castle of Herford. Whereupon I desired him to see the same letter, which he shewed me. Wherein was written, that the Lady Mary the Kings daughter should remooue to the place before sayd, leauing out in the same the name of Princesse. Which when I heard, I could not a little marueyle, trusting verily that your grace was not priue to the same letter as concerning the leauing out of the name of Princesse, for as much as I doubt not in your goodnes, but your grace doth take me for your lawfull daughter, borne in true Matrimonie. Wherefore if I should agree to the contrary, I should in my conscience runne in the displeasure of God, whiche I hope assuredly your grace will not that I so should. And in all other things your grace shall haue me alwayes as humble and obedient daughter and handmayd, as euer was child to the father, which my duty bindeth me to: as knoweth our Lorde, who haue your grace in his most holy tuition, wyth much honour and long life, to his pleasure.

Written at your Manor of Beaulien this second day of October.

By your most humble daughter, Mary Princesse.

A protestation of the Lady Mary, to certayne Lordes sent by the King her father, with certayne requestes vnto her.

MY Lordes, as touching my remouing to Hatfield, I will obey his Grace,* as my duety is, or to any other place that his grace will appoint me. But I protest before you and all other that be heere present, that my conscience will in no wise suffer me to take any other then my selfe for the Kings lawfull daughter, borne in true matrimonie, or Princesse, and that I will neuer willingly and wittinglye say or do, whereby any person might take occasion to thinke that I agree to the contrary, not of any ambition or proud mind, as God is my Iudge: but that if I should say or do otherwise,* I shuld in my conscience sclaunder the deede of our mother holy Church and the Pope, who is the iudge in this matter, and none other: and also dishonor the King my Father, the Queene my Mother, and falsly confesse my selfe a Bastard, which God defende that I should do, seeing the Pope hath not so declared it by his sentence definitiue, for to his iudgement I submit me.

As you haue heard some part already of the stout courage of the Lady Mary toward her father, and also by her letters no lesse was d•clared toward king Edward her brother and other of his Counsaile: as well may appeare by the letters aboue specified, betweene her and the King her brother and his counsaile: So now let vs inferr somewhat likewise of the stoute talke and demeanor of the sayd Lady Mary toward D. Ridley Bishop of London, who gently comming to her of meere good will, had his communication w^t her, and she with him as here followeth.

About the eight of Sept. 1552. D. Ridley then Byshop of Londō, lying at his house at Hadham in Hartfordshire: * went to visite the Lady Mary then lying at Hunsden two myles off: & was gently entertayned of Sir Tho. Wharton & other her officers, til it was almost xi. of the clock. About which time the said Lady Mary came foorth into her chamber of presence, and then the said bishop there saluted her grace, and sayde, that he was come to doe his duety to her grace. Then she thanked him for his paynes, and for a quarter of an houre talked with him very pleasauntly: and sayd, that she knew him in the Court when he was Chapleine to her father, and could wel remember a sermon that hee made before king Henry her father, at the mariage of my Lady Clinton y^t now is, to Sir Anthony Broune &c. and so dismissed him to dine with her officers.

After dinner was done, the bishop being called for by the said Lady Mary, resorted againe to her grace, betwene whome this communi•ation was, first the bishop beginning in maner as followeth.

Bishop.

Madame I came not onely to do my duetye to see your Grace, * but also to offer my selfe to preache before you on Sunday nexte, if it will please you to heare me. At thys her countenance chaunged, and after silence for a space, she aunswered thus.

Mary.

My Lorde, as for this last matter, I pray you make the aunswere to it yourselfe.

Bishop.

Madame, considering mine office and calling, I am bounde of duety to make to your grace this offer, to preach before you.

Mary.

Well, I pray you make the aunswere (as I haue sayd) to this matter yourselfe: for you know the aunswere well enough. But if there be no remedy but I must make you aunswere, this shall be your aunswere: The doore of the parishe Church adioyning shalbe open for you, * if you come, and ye may preach, if you list, but neither I, nor none of mine shall heare you.

Bishop.

Madame, I trust you will not refuse Gods word.

Mary.

I cannot tell what ye call Gods word. That is not Gods worde now, that was Gods word in my fathers dayes.

Bishop.

Gods worde is all one in all times, but hath bene better vnderstanded and practised in some ages, then in other.

Mary.

You durst not for your eares, haue aduouched that for Gods worde in my fathers dayes, that now you doe. And as for your new bookes, I thanke God I neuer read none of them: neuer did, nor neuer will doe.

And after many bitter wordes against the forme of religion then established,* and against the gouernment of the Realme, and the lawes made in the young yeares of her brother, which she sayd she was not bound to obey, til her brother came to perfect age, and then affirmed shee woulde obey them. She asked the Bishop whether he were one of the Counsaile: He aunswered, No. You might well enough (sayd she) as the Counsaile goeth now a dayes.

And so she concluded with these wordes: My Lord, for your gentlenes to come and see me, I thanke you, but for your offering to preache before me, I thanke you neuer a whit.

Then the sayd B. was brought by sir Thomas Wharton, to the place where he dined, & desired to drink. And after he had dronke, he paused a litle while,* looking very sadly, & sodenly brake out into these woordes: Surely I haue done amisse. Why so, quoth sir Thomas Wharton? For I haue dronke (sayd he) in that place where Gods word offred, hath bene refused: Whereas if I had remembred my duetie, I ought to haue departed immediately, and to haue shakē of the dust of my shoes for a testimonie agaynst this house. These wordes were by the sayd bishop spoken with such a vehemencie, that some of the hearers afterward cōfessed their heare to stand vpright on their heades. Thys done, the sayde Bishop departed, and so returned to hys house. Testified by a certayn reuerend personage yet aliue, being then the bishops Chaplaine.

¶And thus making an ende of this ninth Booke, touching the story and raigne of King Edward, and hauing also somewhat sayde before of the nature and disposition of the Lady Mary, whereby the way may be prepared the better to the troubles of the next Booke following: we intend (the grace of God assisting vs therein) now further to proceede in describing the actes and proceedings of the foresayde Lady Mary, comming now to be Queene, and aduaunced next after this godly King Edward, to the Crowne of this Realme of England.

¶The ende of the ninth Booke.

The beginning of the tenth booke conteyning the horrible and bloudy tyme of QVEENE MARY.

The Preface to the Reader.

FORASMVCH AS WE ARE come now to the tyme of Queene Mary, when as so many were put to death for the cause especially of the Masse, and the sacramente of the Altar (as they cal it) I thought it conuenient vppon the occasion geuen, in the ingresse of this foresayd story, first to prefixe before, by the way of Preface, some declaration collected out of dyuers Writers and Authors, whereby to set foorth to the Reader the great absurditie, wicked abuse, and perillous idolatry of the popish Masse, declaring how and by whom it came in, clouted and patched vp of diuers additions, to the intent that the Reader, seeing the vayne institution thereof, and waying the true causes why it is to be exploded out of all Churches, may the better thereby iudge of their death, which gaue their liues for the testimonie and the word of truth.

First, concerning the origine of this word Missa, whether it came of Missath in Hebrue. Deut. 16. or Mincha, Leuit. 6. which signifieth oblation: or whether it came of sending away the Catechumeni, and persons vnwoorthy, out of the place of ministration,* (as certayne writers suppose) or else, Ex missis donarijs & symbolis quae in offertorio proponerantur: that is, of gifts and oblations wont to be offred before the Communion: or whether Missa is deriued of Remissa, which in the former writers was vsed pro remissione: or whether Missa, pro licentia dimittendi populum, is taken of sending away the congregation by the words of the Deacon, Ite missa est: or whether Missa hath his denomination of that which the Grecians call < in non-Latin alphabet >, dimission of the people, alluding to the story of the Hebrues, licensed of Pharaon to depart out of captiuitie after the eating of the Pasche Lambe, as I read in an old popish booke intituled De Sacramentis Sacerdotalibus: or what tearme soeuer it be else, either Latin, Syrian, Dutch, or French: or howsoeuer else it taketh his appellation, as there is no certaintie amongst themselues that most magnifie the Masse, so it is no matter to vs that stand against it. To my iudgemente and coniecture this latter exposition of the word seemeth more probable, both for that it is ioined with the word Ite, which signifieth departing: and also the time and order in speaking the same, agreeth well thereunto. For as the old Hebrues, after the supper of the Lamb, and not before, were set at liberty streight way, to departe out of captiuitie: so belike to declare our mysticall deliuerance by Christ, offred and slaine for vs, first goeth before the action of the holy supper: that done, then the Priest or Deacon sayth, Ite missa est: meaning thereby the deliuerance and liberty which is spiritually wrought in vs, after that the body of Christ hath bene offered for vs. Or else, if Missa otherwise should signifie the celebration or the action of the supper, it would be saide Ite, but venite, missa est, &c. Moreouer, besides other arguments, there be certayne places in Cassianus which seeme to declare, that Missa signifieth dimission of the congregation: as where he writeth of him which commeth not in time to the howers of prayer, saying it not to be lawfull for him to enter into the oratory, Sed stantem prae foribus congregationis, missam praestolari debere. i. that he ought standing without the doores, to waite for the misse of the congregation. And againe in the next Chapter following, he inferreth the same vocable Missa in like sense: Contenti, inquit somno qui nobis post vigiliarum missam vsque ad lucis indulgetur aduentum. i. Contented (sayeth he) with so much sleepe as serueth vs for the misse, or breaking vp of the night vigill, vnto the comming of the day, &c.

But to let passe these coniectures, this by the way I geue to the Reader to note and vnderstande, that as thys word Missa neuer yet entred into the Church nor vsage among the Greekes: so it is to be obserued among our Latin interpretors,* such as haue translated of old time the ancient Greeke Authours, as Eusebius, and the Tripartite history, and others: that where the Greeke Writers haue these tearmes 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is, to call the congregation, to conuent assemblies, and so frequent together, the old translator of Epiphanius, and other translate vppon the same Missas facere, collectas agere, missas celebrare, &c. wherby it is not obscure to be seene, that this word Masse in the olde time, was not onely and peculiarly applied to the action of consecration, but as wel to all Christen assemblies collected, or congregations conuented, according as in the Dutch language this name (Messe) signifieth any solemne frequency, or panagyrie, or gathering together of the people. But of the name inough, and too much.

To expresse now the absurditie of the saide Masse, and the irreligious application thereof, vnseemely, and perilous for Christians to vse, I will bring two or three reasons of the worthy seruauant and Martyr of God, Iohn Bradford, to which many more may be also added out of others.

First the Masse, sayeth he, is a most subtile and pernicious enemie against Christ, and that double wayes: namely, against his Priesthode, and against his sacrifice, which he prooueth by this way. For the Priesthooe of Christe, (sayeth he) is an euerlasting Priesthooe, and such an one as can not go to another. But the Masse vtterly putteth him out of place, as though he were dead for euer: and so God were a lier, which said that Christ should be a Priest for euer: which briefly commeth vnto this Argument.

- Fes- That thing is not perpetuall, nor standeth not alone, which admitteth succession of other to do the same thing that was done before.
- ti- But the Masse Priests succeede after Christ, doing the same sacrifice (as they say) which he did before.
- no. Ergo, the Masse Priests make Christs Priesthode not to be perpetuall.

Another Argument.

- Ba- All Priests eyther be after the order of Aaron, or after the order of Melchisedech, or after the order of the Apostles, or after that spirituall sort whereof it is written, Vos estis spirituale sacerdotium, &c.
- ro- But our Masse Priests neither be after the order of Aaron,* (for that is to resume that which Christ hath abolished:) neither after the order of Melchisedech (for that is peculiar only to Christ:) neither after the order of the Apostles (for then should they be Ministers, not Maisters, not Priests, but Preachers: (and which of the Apostles was euer named by the title of a Priest?) Againe, neither are they after the generall sorte of the spirituall priesthooe. For after that prerogatiue, euery true Christian is a spirituall Priest as well as they, offering vp spirituall, not bodily sacrifice, as prayers, thanksgeuing, obedience, mortification of the bodie framed to the obedience of his commaundements.
- co. Ergo, our Masse Priests are no Priests (vnlesse it be after the order of the Priestes of Baal.*)

Secondly,* concerning the sacrifice of Christ aboue mentioned, hee reasoneth in lyke manner: whyche wee haue reduced in the waye of Argumente, as followeth:

- Da- To reiterate a thing once done, for the attaining or accomplishing of the end wherefore it was begon, declareth the imperfection of the same thing before.
- ri- The Masse Priestes do reiterate the sacrifice of Christ once done for the end wherefore it was begonne (that is, * for propitiation and remission à poena & culpa pro viuīs & pro defunctis:)
- j. Ergo, Masse Priestes make the sacrifice of Christe to be vnperfect, and so are they iniurious to the sacrifice of Christ.

¶For the confirmation of the premisses, marke heere (Reader) I beseech thee, the Rubrike heere following, written before the Masse of the fiue woundes in the Masse booke.

BOniface Bishop of Rome lay sicke, and was like to die, to whome our Lord sent the Archangell Raphael with the office of the Masse, of the fiue woundes, saying: Rise and write this office, and say it fiue times, and thou shalt be restored to thy health immediately: and what Priest soeuer shall say this office for himselfe, or for any other that is sicke, fiue times, the person for whome it is sayde, shall obtaine health and grace, and in the world to come, (if he continue in vertue) life euerlasting. And in whatsoever tribulation a man shall be in this life, if he procure this office to be said fiue times for him, of a Priest, without doubt he shall be deliuered. And if it be saide for the soule of the dead, anone as it shall be saide and ended fiue times, hys soule shall be rid from paines. This hearing the Byshop, he did erect himselfe vp in his bed, coniuring the Aungell, by the name of almighty God, to tell him what he was, and wherefore he came, and that he should depart without doing him harme: who aunswered, that he was Raphaell the Archangell, sent vnto him of God: and that all the premisses were vndoubtedly true. Then the sayde Boniface confirmed the said office of the fiue woundes, by the Apostolike authoritie.

An other Argument against the Masse, for that it is an hinderance to the true seruice of God, * and to the godly life of men: the declaration whereof is more at large by the saide Authour set out: but briefly in fourme of Argument may thus be contracted.

Another Argument.

- Da- Whatsoever causeth or occasioneth a man to rest in outward seruing of God, whose seruice should be all inward in spirit and veritie, that hindreth the true seruice of God.
- ti- The Masse occasioneth a man to rest in outward seruing, (as in hearing, seeing, and saying Masse, which be but outward senses of a man, * and as they say meritorious ex opere operato, etiam sine bono motu intētionis.)
- si. Ergo, the Masse hindreth y^e right & true seruice of God.

Conclusio. Another Argument, proouing that Masse hindreth good life.

- Di- Upon the Masse riseth false hope: and false remedie is promised to wicked liuers. * For euill men hearing Masse in the morning, vpō hope therof take more securitie in doing al day what they list. And such as haue in bibbing, brauling, tauerning, swearing, whoring, dicing, * carding, committed wickednes, to them the masse is set vp, promising sufficient propitiation sacrifice, remedy of body and soule, for man and beast, a poena & culpa, pro viuīs & mortuis: Though they neuer hearde preaching, neuer vsed praying, neuer repented, or how wicked so euer they haue bene: yet if they come to the Church, take holy bread and holy water, and heare a Masse, or finde a soule Priest vpon the remedie thereof, then they thinke themselues discharged, and good Catholicke men.

- sa- Upon what cause soeuer riseth false hope and false remedy is promised to wicked liuers,* that hindreth good life.
- mis. Ergo, the Masse hindreth good life.

Conclusio. Another Argument.

- Da- Where one thing is sufficient and serueth alone, there all other helps be neadeles thereunto,* wherein it serueth.
- ti- The Masse, as they say, hath all, serueth for all: for by it commeth pardon for sinnes,* by it commeth deliuerance from Hell and Purgatory, by it commeth health for man and beast. In summa, the Masse is Mare bonorum, &c.
- si. Ergo, all other helps else be needelesse: hearing of Gods word,* faith, praying in spirit, repenting, preaching, pietie, and other helps to good life, &c.

An other Argument, proouing that the Masse is diuers and contrary from the institution of Christes Supper.

- 1. CHrist ordeined his Supper to be a memoriall of his death and passion, to be preached vntill he come.
- The Masse is no memoriall thing of Christ remembred in the Sacrament: but rather they make the Sacrament to be Christ himselfe offered and sacrificed for remission of sinnes, both for the quicke and the dead.
- 2. Christ ordeined his Supper to be celebrate and receaued of the congregation. And therefore Paule biddeth the Corinthians to tarry one for another. In the Masse there is no such thing, choose the people whether they will come or no, Sir Iohn is kinne to the tide, he will tarry for no man: if he haue a boy to say Amen, it is enough.
- 3. Christ receaued not but he distributed also the whole in euery part. Sir Iohn when he hath receaued all alone, he sheweth the people the empty chalice. And if he distribute to the people once a yeare, it is but in one kinde alone.
- 4. Christ ordeined the Supper to be a taking matter, an eating matter, a distributing and a remembring matter. Contrary our Masse men make it a matter not of taking, but of gazing, peeping, piking, boxing, carying, recarying, worshipping, stouping, kneeling, knocking, with stoupe downe before, hold vp higher, I thanke God I see my maker to day, &c. Christ ordeined it a table matter. We turne it to an altar matter: he for a memorie, we for a sacrifice: he sate, our men stand: he in his common tongue, we in a forreigne tongue. Whereby it is manifest to appeare how diuers and repugnant the Masse is to the institution of the Lords Supper.*

Another Argument, proouing that the Masse is contrary to Gods Commaundementes.

- Item, where the first table of Gods blessed and sacred commaundements teacheth men to woorship and serue him, and to direct the meditations of their harts only vnto him: and that in all places, at all times, both publikely and priuately.

- The Masse booke doth point out seruice for Saints and for creatures, by name, to be serued,* at the least 300. dayes and yeares, as appeareth by the Calenders, Masses, Collectes, martiloge, &c.
- Ergo, the doctrine and institution of the Masse booke, tendeth contrary to Gods holy commaundements.*

Another reason against the Masse.

- Item, where S. Paule in expresse woordes willeth all things to be done in an edifying tongue, the Masse is celebrate in a tongue forreigne, straunge, and vnknowne to the people, so that although the matter therein conteyned were holesome, and consonant to Scripture (as much as disagreeing from the same) yet for the straungenes of the tongue, it geueth but a sound, and worketh no edifying to the ignorant. Now both the tongue being strange to the eares of the people, and the matter also in the Masse contained, being repugnant to Gods word, what defence can the Masse haue, but vtterly it is to be reiected?
- And for somuch therefore, as the Masse so long vsed in a forreigne language hath not hitherto come to the vnderstanding of the simple and vulgare sort, to the intende they may themselues perceiue the matter, and be theyr owne iudges, I haue heere set forth the chieftest parte thereof (which is the Canon) in Englishe, so as I found it in a certayne written copie, by Maister Couerdale translated, adioining withall the Rubricke and circumstance of the same in euery point, as is in the Masse booke conteyned.

¶The whole Canon of the Masse, with the Rubricke thereof, as it standeth in the Massebooke, after Salisbury vse. Translated word by word out of Laten into English.

After the Sanctus, the Priest immediately ioining hys handes together, and lifting vp his eies, beginneth these wordes: Te igitur clementissime, &c. that is to saye:* Therefore most gracious father, thorough Iesus Christ thy sonne our Lord, we humbly beseech thee.

Let him bowe downe his body, while he sayth: And we desire

Heere the Priest standing vpright, must kisse the altar (a) on the right hand of the sacrifice, saying: that thou accept and blesse,

Heere let the Priest make three crosses vpon the chalice and the bread, saying: these ✙ giftes these ✙ (b) presentes: these ✙ holy and vnspotted sacrifices.

When the signes are made vpon the chalice, let him lift vp his hands, saying thus: Which first of al (c) we offer vnto thee for thy holy Catholike Church: that thou vouchsafe to pacifie, keepe, vnite, and gouerne it, throughout the whole world: with thy seruauant our Pope N. and our Bishop N.

That is (d) his owne Byshop only. and our King N.

And they are expressed by name.

Then let there follow. and all true beleeuers, and such as haue the Catholike and Apostolike faith in due estimation.

Heere let him pray for the liuing.

Remember Lord thy seruants & handmaides N. and N.

Mary the mother of our God and Lord Iesu Christ, & also of thy blessed Apostles and Martyrs, Peter, Paule, Andrew, Iames, Iohn, Thomas, Phillip, Bartholomew, Mathew Simon & Tadeus, Timis, Cletus, Clemens, Sextus, Cornelius, Ciprianus, Laurence, Chrisogonus, Iohn and Paule, Cosme and Damian, and of all thy Saints: By whose \(e\) merites & praiers, graunt thou, that in all things we may be defended wyth the helpe of thy protection, through the same Christ our Lord, Amen.

Heere let the Priest behold the hoste \(a\) with great veneration, saying:

Therefore Lord we beseech thee, that thou being pacified, wilt receaue this oblation of our bond seruice, and of all thy houshold: and order our dayes in thy peace, and commaund vs to be deliuered from eternall damnation, & to be nombred in the flocke of thine elect, through Christ our Lord, Amen.

Heere againe, let him \(b\) behold the hoste, saying: Which oblacion we beseech O almighty God in all things to make.

Heere let him make \(c\) three crosses vpon both, when he sayth: ✚ Blessed: ✚ appointed: ✚ ratified: reasonable and acceptable: that vnto vs it may be.

Heere let him make a crosse vpon the bread, saying: ✚ The body.

Heere vpon the chalice.

And ✚ bloud.

Heere with hands ioined together, let him say: Of thy most dearely beloued Sonne our Lorde Iesu Christ.

Heere let the Priest lifte vp his hands, and ioyne them together, and afterward wipe his fingers, and lift vp the hoste, saying: Who \(d\) the next day afore he suffered, tooke bread into his holy and reuerent hands: and his eyes beeing lift vp into heauen

Thorow + him: and with + him: and in him, is vnto thee God father + almighty▪ in the vnitie of the + holy Ghost, all honour and glory.

Here let the Priest couer the chalice, and holde hys handes still vppon the altar till the pater noster be spoken saying thus.

Worlde without ende, Amen. Let vs praye. Being aduertised by holsome preceptes and taught by *Gods Page 1400 institution, we are bold to say.

Heere let the Deacon take the paten, and holde it vncovered on the right syde of the Priest * hys arme beeyng stretched out an high vntill da propitius. Heere let the Priest lift vp his hands, saying: pater noster, &c. The quire must say: Sed libera nos &c.

Deliuier vs we beseeche thee O Lorde from all euill past, present, and for to come, and that * by the intercession of the blessed, glorious, and our virgin Mary the mother of God, and thy blessed Apostles Peter and Paule and Andrew, with all Saints.

Heere let the Deacon commit the patten to the Priest, kissing hys hande: and let the Priest * kisse the patten. Afterward let him put it * to his left eye, and then to the right. After that, let him make a crosse with the paten * aboue vpon his head, and so lay it downe againe into hys place, sayeng: geue peace graciously in our dayes: that we being helped through the succour of thy mercy, may both be alway free from sinne, and * safe from all trouble.

*Heere let him vncover the chalice, and take the body, doing reuerence, shifting it ouer in the holow roome of the chalice, holding it betweene his thombes and forefingers: and let him breake it into three partes: the first breaking, while there is sayd: Through the same our Lord Iesus Christ thy Sonne.

The second breaking.

Who with thee in the vnity of the holy Ghost, liueth and reigneth God.

Heere let him hold two peeces in his left hand, and the third peece in the right hand vpon the brinke of the chalice, sayeng this with * open voice.

World without ende.

Let the quire answer Amen. Heere let him make three crosses * within the chalice with the thirde parte of the hoste, saying: The peace of the Lord * + be alwayes + with + you.

Let the quire answer

And with thy spirite.

To saye Agnus dei, let the Deacon and subdeacon approch neere vnto the Priest, both being on the right hande, the Deacon neerer, the subdeacon farther off. And let them say * priuately.

O lambe of God that takest away the sinnes of the world, haue mercy vpon vs: O lambe of God that takest away the sinnes of the world, haue mercy vpon vs: O lambe of God that takest away the sinnes of the world, graunt vs peace.

In Masses * for the dead it is sayd thus.

O lambe of God that takest away the sinnes of the world, geue them * rest.

With this addition in the third repetition.

Euerlasting.

Heere making a crosse, let him put downe the said third part of the hoste into the sacrament of the bloud, sayeng: This holy mingling together of the body and bloud of our Lord Iesu Christ * be vnto me, and to all that receiue it, saluation of mind and body: an holesome preparation both to deserue and to receiue eternall life through the same Christ our Lord.

Afore the Paxe be geuen, let the Priest say: O Lord holy father almighty eternall God, graunt me so woorthily to take this holy body and bloud of thy Sonne our Lord Iesu Christ, that * by this I may * merite to receyue forgeuenesse of all my synnes, and be replenished wyth thy holy spirite, and to haue thy peace: for thou art GOD alone, * neyther is there anye other without thee, whose glorious kingdome and Empyre endureth continuallye, worlde without ende. Amen.

Heere let the Priest * kisse the corporas on the right side, and the brinke of the chalice, and afterwarde let hym say to the Deacon.

Peace be vnto thee, and to the Church of God.

Aunswere. And with thy spirite.

On the right hand of the Priest, let the Deacon receaue the pax of him, and reach it to the subdeacon. Then to the step of the quere, let the Deacon himselfe beare the pax vnto the rector of the quere. And let them bring it to the quere, eyther of them to his owne side, beginning at the eldest. But in feastes and feriall dayes * when the quere is not gouerned, the pax is borne from the deacon vnto the quere by two of the lowest of the seconde forme, like as afore.

After the pax geuen, let the Priest say the prayers folowing, priuately, before he communicate, holding the hoste (c) with both his hands.

O God father, thou fountaine & originall of all goodnesse, who being moued with mercye, haste willed thine onely-begotten sonne for our sakes, to descende into the lower partes of the worlde, and to be incarnate: whom I (d) vnworthy hold in my handes.

Here let the priest bowe (e) him selfe to the hoost, saying I worshippe thee, I glorifie thee, I prayse thee, wyth whole intention of mind and hart: And I beseech thee that thou (f) faile not vs thy seruauntes, but forgeue our sinnes so as with pure hart and chaste body wee may be able to serue thee (g) the onely liuing and true God, through the same Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Lord Iesu Christ, thou sonne of y^e liuing God, who according to the will of the father, the holy Ghost working with all, hast quickened the world through thy death: Deliuer me I beseeche thee, through this thy holy body, and this thy bloude, from all my iniquities, and from all euils. And make me alway obey thy commaundements, and neuer suffer me to be seperated from thee for euermore, thou Sauour of the worlde: Who with God▪ the father and the same holy Ghost, liuest and raignest God worlde without end. Amen.

O Lord Iesu Christ let not the sacramēt of thy body & bloud which I receiue (though vnworthy) be to my iudgment and damnation: but thorow thy goodnes, let it profite to the saluation of my body and soule. Amen.

To the body let him say with humilation afore he receaue. Haile for euermore, thou most holy (a) flesh of Christ: vnto mee afore all thinges and aboue all thinges the highest sweetnesse. The body of our Lord Iesu Christ be vnto me sinner, the way and life, in the ✝ name of the father and of the sonne and of the holy Ghost. Amen.

Here let him take the body, (b) a crosse being first made with the same body afore his mouth, saying.

Haile for euermore, thou heauenly drinke: vnto me before all thinges and aboue all thinges, the highest sweetnesse. The body and bloud of our Lord Iesu Christ profite me sinner for a remedy euerlastyng into life eternall Amē. In the ✝ name of the Father, and of the Sonne and of the holy Ghost. Amen.

Here let him take the bloud: whiche when it is receaued, let bow him selfe and say.

¶The Prayer.

I render thākes to thee O Lord holy Father almightie eternall God, whiche hast refreshed me out of the most holy body and bloud of thy Sonne our Lord Iesu Christ. And I beseech thee that this Sacrament of our saluation, whiche I vnworthy sinner haue receiued, come not to my iudgement nor condemnation after my merites, but to the profite of my body, and to the saluation of my soule into life euerlastyng. Amen.

Which prayer being said(c) let the Priest go to the right side of the altar, with the chalice betwene his handes, his f•ngers beyng yet ioyned together as afore & let the Subdeacon approch neare, and poure out wine and water into the chalice. And let the Priest reuce his handes (d) least any parcels of the body or bloud be left behind in his fingers or in the chalice (e). But whē any Priest must celebrate twice in one day, then at the first Masse hee must not receiue any ablutiō, but put it in the Sacristie, or in a cleane vessell till the end of the other Masse: and then let both the ablutions be receiued.

After the first ablution is sayd this prayer.

That we haue receaued with mouth O Lorde, let vs take with a pure mynde, and (f) out of a temporall gift, let it be to vs a remedy euerlastyng.

Here let him (g) wash his fingers in the holow rowme of the chalice with wyne beyng poured in by the Subdeacon: which, when it is drunke vp, let the prayer folow.

Lord let this (h) communion purge vs from sinne, and make vs to be partakers of the heauenly remedy.

After the receiuyng of the ablutions, let the Priest lay the chalice vpo the paten: that if ought remayne behynd, it may drop. And afterward bowyng him selfe let him say.

Let vs (a) worship the signe of the Crosse, whereby we haue receaued the Sacrament of saluation.

Afterwarde let hym (b) washe his handes. In the meane season, let the Deacon fold vp the corporas. When handes are washen, and the Priest returneth to the right ende of the altar (c) let the Deacon reache the chalice to y^e Priestes mouth, that if ought of that which was poured in, doe remayne behynde (d) he may receaue it. After that, let hym say (e) the communion with his Ministers. Then makyng a signe of the Crosse in his owne face, lette the Priest turne hym selfe to the people: and (f) with his armes somewhat lifted vp, and his handes ioyned together, Page 1401 let him say, Dominus vobiscum: and turning him againe to the altar, let him say oremus: (let vs pray.)

Then let him say the (g) postcommon, according to the number and order of the aforesayd prayers. Before the Epistle, when the last postcommon is ended, and the Priest hath made a signe of the crosse in his forehead, let him turne him agayne to the people, and say Dominus vobiscum. Then let the Deacon say Benedicamus domino. At another tyme is sayd Ite missa est. As oft as Ite missa est is sayd, it is alway sayd in turning to the people. And when Benedicamus domino, or Requiescant in pace must be sayde, let it be sayde in turning to the altar. When these things are spoken, let the Priest (with his body howed downe, and his hands ioyned together) in the middes before the altar, say (h) with a still voice, this prayer.

O holy Trinitie, let the office of my (i) bond seruice please thee, and graunt that this sacrifice which I vnworthy haue offred in the eyes of thy maiesty, may be acceptable vnto thee: and that vnto me and all them for whome I haue offred it (k) it may auayle to obteyne remission, thou beeyng mercifull, who lyuest and reigest God, &c.

Which prayer being ended, let the Priest stand vpright, (l) crossing himselfe in his face, saying: In nomine patris, &c. And so, (when obeysance is made) after the same order wherein they came afore to the altar at the beginning of the Masse, so hauing on their apparayle with the censor bearer, and other Ministers, let them (m) go theyr waye agayne.

The ende of the Canon.

NOW it remayneth (as we haue promised before) to entreate of the partes and parcels of the Masse, declaring likewise how and by whome this popish or rather apish Masse became so clamped and patched together with so many dyuers and sondry additions: whereby it may the better appeare what hath bene the continuance of the same.

First, in the beginning of this Preface it was declared before, how this word Masse was neuer vsed nor knowne in the old primatiue Church among the first Christians, nor among the Grecians. Therefore they that deduce and deriue the origine of the Masse from Saint Iames, and Basilius, are farre deceiued. As I thinke that Saint Iames was once Byshop at Ierusalem, so I thinke not contrary, but sometymes he ministred the Communion there in breaking of bread, and that not without the Lords prayer, and other prayers of thankes gyuing. As we now in our Communion vse like prayers, and these prayers make not the Communion to be a Masse. And like is to be sayde of Saint Peter: who though he dyd celebrate the Communion at Rome, yet it followeth not that he sayde Masse at Rome, as some report him to do.

Neither is it hard to fetch out the origine how this error first came vp among the people,* that Saint Iames sayd Masse at Ierusalem, if a man consider well histories and authors which haue written. For in the history of Eusebius, Egesippus thus writeth of Saint Iames, Eum ab Apostolis primum constitutum fuisse Episcopum & liturgum, &c. vpon the which word liturgus, it is not vnlike, and diuers suppose this error to come, that Saint Iames dyd first set and institute the order of Masse. For so lightly the old translators, wheresoeuer they synde liturgia, or collecta, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, they translated it Missa: whereupon, the greatest occasion of this error riseth to make the people beleue the Masse to be so auncient to proceede from the Apostles, and from Saint Iames. Notwithstanding that error as it lightly came vp, so it may be as lightly exploded. For how could Saint Iames say Masse then at Ierusalem, or Saint Peter at Rome, when as yet neyther the name of Masse was heard, nor the partes thereof inuented. And although Sigibertus in his Chronicles reporte, that in the Citie of Uasath, being delyuered from the siege of the H••es, the pastor of that Church dyd celebrate Masse with thankes geuing aboute the yeare 453. yet Sigibert in so saying is to be taken, as speaking rather after the vse and maner of his time,* when he wrote it, then of that time when it was done. For in all the workes of Saint Augustine, and of Chrisostome, and in all that age, the name of Masse is not founde, but is called eyther the Supper of the Lord, or the Lords boord, or communion, Synaxis, sacrifice, oblation, mistery, celebration of the Sacrament, Eucharistia, the misticall table, Mistagogia, coena mystica, or with some other like tearme they nominate it. The name of Masse was not yet deuised, nor the patches thereof compiled.* Platina testifieth, that before Celestinus Pope, only the Epistle and Gospell were read at the Communion, which being done, the Communion ended.

And Gregory sayeth,* that the Apostles afore the ministration of the Sacrament, did vse only the Lords prayer, that is, the Pater noster. Let vs heare what Walafridus Strabo writeth of that matter, lib. de rebus Ecclesiastic. Capitu. 22. Quod nunc agimus multiplici orationum, lectionum, cantilenarum, & consecrationum officio totum hoc Apostoli, & post ipsos proximi, (vt creditur) orationibus, & commemoratione passionis dominicae, sicut ipse praecepit, agebant simpliciter, &c. i. That which nowe is done in the Church with such a long circumstance of so manie orisons, lessons, or readings, songs, and consecrations: all that the Apostles, and they that nexte succeeded the Apostles (as it is thought) dyd accomlishe simply with prayer onely, and wyth the commemoration of the Lords passion, &c. it followeth in the same Authour. And, as the report is, like as it is in the Romane Church vpon Good Friday, where the Communion is wont to be taken without any Masse: so it was in the old time with them, &c.

Now how this Masse hath growne vp and increased since, let vs search out, by the Lords helpe, out of Authors, so much as may be found.

The Introit.

Coelestinus Pope gaue the first Introite, as Platina and Sigibertus writeth.

The Psalme. Iudica me deus, &c.

And before the Priest do prepare himselfe to his Masse,* first with the Psalme, Iudica me deus & decerne causam meam, &c. that was ordeined by the sayd Coelestinus.

☞ And where they ascribe to Sainct Ambrose the two prayers which be vsed in the preparation to the Masse, and be added to the bookes of Ambrose, Erasmus iudgeth the same to be none of his, and that rightly as it seemeth, for therein is contained errors, not else to be found in the bookes of Ambrose, both in geuing adoration to the bread in the Sacrament, and making inuocation to Saintes, namely, to blessed Mary: as in the second prayer, where he sayth: Vt efficax haec mea sit deprecatio, beatae Mariae virginis suffragia peto, &c. i. And that this my prayer may be of efficacie, I desire the suffrage and intercession of blessed Mary the virgine, &c. Whereby it may appeare, learned Ambrose not to be the authour of such an errour.

Chrysostome in the xj. homely vpon the Gospell of Math. sayth,* that in his time (and afore his time) the vse was to sing whole psalmes, till they were entred and assembled together. And so belike Coelestinus borrowed thys custome of the Greekes,* and brought it into the Laten Church as Rupertus writeth.

Gregory the great (as some write) called a Sinode at Rome, about the yeare of our Lord 594. In which Synode he appointed,* that the introite of the Masse should be taken out of some psalme.

The Confiteor.

The Confiteor Pope Damasus brought into the Masse as it is written:* albeit peradventure not this popish confiteor, which in the latter Church hath bin vsed, stufte full of Idolatry, & inuocation of Saints, against y^e word of God.

The Kyrie eleyson.

The Kyrie eleyson ix. times to be repeated in such a tong,* as few priests either vnderstand, or do rightly pronounce, Gregory did institute, about 600. yeares after Christ, taking it out of the Greekes Church, and yet transposing it otherwise, then there was vsed. For among the Greekes this Kyrie eleyson (which they called their Letany) was song of all the people: The which Gregory ordeined to be song only of the Quere, adding thereto also Christe eleyson, which the Grecians vsed not,* as Gregory himselfe writing to the Byshop of Siracuse, doth testifie.

Gloria in excelsis.

Next followeth Gloria in excelsis, &c. Which words were song of the Angels at the birth of our sauour. Albeit these words also were corrupted, (as many other things were) in the Church. For where the words of the Angels himne were hominibus bona voluntas. i. to men good wil, y^e Masse sayd hominibus bonae voluntatis. i. to men of good will, &c. This himne was brought into the Masse by Pope Symmachus (and not by Telesphorus, as some not truely write that he ordeined three Masses on Christmas day, for in his time there was no Masse.* An. 140.) about the yeare of our Lord 510. And after, the said himne was augmented by Hillarius Pictauiensis, with those words that follow: Laudamus te, &c. singing it first in his owne church, which was Anno. 340. And afterward brought into other Churches by Pope Symmachus. An. 510. as is aforesayd.

Dominus vobiscum, with the aunswere Oremus and the Collectes.

Dominus vobiscum: with the answer of y^e people, although Page 1402 we haue no certayne author named by whom it came: Yet this is certayn, that it was deduced out of the Greek church into the latin: as may appeare by the Liturge of Chrisostome and Basilius (if the liturgie be rightly ascribed vn|to them) also by Origene, and other auncient writers: by whom,* it may seeme that the liturgy, or masse (as they call it) did first begin with Dominus vobiscum, and then sursum corda: after that Gratias agamus domino deo nostro and so folowing vpon the same, verè dignum & iustum est &c. To the which beginning of the Canon, other additiōs after were put vnto by others, as ye shal heare (by the Lordes grace) hereafter more at large.

*Hugo de S. victore, writeth that this prayer was taken out of the auncient salutation of Booz saluting his haruest folkes. And out of the booke of Paralip. Where the prophet saluteth Azan the king with his company about him saying: *Dominus vobiscum. Honorius writeth thus: Praesbiter cū salutatione veteris testamenti, & Episcopus cum salutatione noui testamenti salutatur populum quia dignius est nouum quam vetus testamentum.i. As the Prieste saluteth the people with the wordes of the olde Testament. Dominus vobiscum. So the Bish. vseth the wordes of the new testament, saying: pax vobiscum. &c. Concerning the Collectes Walfredus writeth: that as they be diuers and vncertayne, so they were made of diuers and sondry authors, as euery of them thought it congrue. Hugo de S. victore affirmeth that chiefly they were made by Gelasius and Gregorius.

*Why they were called collects, W. Durandus and Micrologus shew the cause, for that in the city of Rome they sayd them ouer the people collected together in the station day, therefore they were called collectae.

¶The Graduell with Alleluya Tracte & Sequenties.

*The Responsorie, which is called the Graduell (beyng wont to be song at the steps going vp) with alleluya, Honorius saith that Ambrose made them, but Pope Gregory ordeined them to be receiued.

Upon festiuall dayes the Sequencies, which were wont to be song, were chiefly composed by an Abbot, called Nokkerus de S. Gallo,* And by Pope Nicholas commaunded to be song in the Masse.

The graduall the people were wont to sing when the Bishop was about to go vp to the pulpit, or some higher standing, where the word of God might be the better and more sensibly heard at his mouth, reading the Epistle and the Gospell.

¶The Epistle and the Gospell.

The reading of the Epistle and the Gospell, although it was not vsed in the Apostles time:* yet it seemeth to bee of auncient continuance: as Hugo sayth, Primis temporibus ab Epistola Pauli, missa incipiebatur, post quam sequebatur Euangelium, sicut nunc. i. In former time, the Masse begon first with the Epistle of S. Paule: after which Epistle thē folowed the Gospell,* as also now. &c.

Walafridus sayth: it is vncertaine who first ordered & disposed them so to be.*

Some attribute them to Hierome, some to Damasus, some to Telesphorus aforesayde. This is certayne, that Pope Anastasius ordeined to stand vp at the hearing of y^e Gospell read,* about the yeare of our sauour .406.

Petrus Ciruelus, writeth thus: Legimus & circa annos Christianae Salutis .500. fere, iam institutas Epistolas in officio missali. &c. About 500. yeares almoste, the Epistle sayth he, was first brought into the masse.

Honorius lib. 1. Epistolam & Euangelium Alexander Papa legi ad missam cōstituit. Hieronimus autem praesbiter lexionariū, & Euangeliarium, vt hodie habet Ecclesia, collegit. Sed Damasus Papa, vt nunc moris est, legi censuit. Alexander sayth he, appoynted the Epistle, and the Gospell, to be read at Masse. The translation and the disposition of them, in that order, as they stand, Hierome the Priest collected: but Damasus would them to be read in the Church,* so as the vse is now Betwixt the Epistle and the Gospell, the olde Canons of the Spanyardes did forbid any Hymne or Canticle to be songe, in the order of the Masse, which now by the Romish order is broken.

¶The Creede.

The Creede was made by the Synode of Constantinople,* but by Damasus the Pope, ordeined to be song at y^e Masse. And where some affirme that it was brought in by Pope Marcus, about the yeare of our Lord .340. to reconcile these two together, peradventure thus it may be takē, that the one brought in the Creede,* or Symbole of Nicene counsell, the other appoynted the Creede of Constantinople, as is sayd.

¶The Offertory.

After this,* oblations were wont to bee offered of the people to the Priest: and the Offertorye to be songe of the quere.

☞ Of these oblations speaketh Irenaeus. Pro diuersis sacrificiorum ritibus, simplex oblatio panis & vini fidelibus sufficiat. &c.

In stead of the sondrye rites of sacrifices, let the simple oblation of bread and wine suffice the faythfull.*

Item, Walafrid. omnis populus intrans ecclesiam debet sacrificare, sicut docet ordo institutionis ecclesiasticae. i. Euerye person entring in the Church must doe sacrifice,* as the order of Ecclesiastical institution doth teach, what order this was, it is declared in ordine Romano by these wordes: populus dat oblationes suas, id est panem & vinum: primo masculi, deinde faeminae nouissimè vero sacerdotes & Diaconi offerunt, sed solum panem, & hoc ante altare. i. The people geue euerye one his oblacions, that is, bread and wine: first the men, then the women, after them Priestes and Deacons offer, but bread onely. &c.

Likewise Bucardus testifieth the same In synodo Matiscon decretum est, vt in omnibus Dominicis diebus,* alijsque festiuitatibus oblatio ab omnibus qui ad Missam conuenerint vtriusque sexus offeratur in Ecclesia, singulas oblationes offerentes, finita missa oblationes a praesbitero accipiant. i. In y^e Sinod Matiscon it was ordeined that euerye sonday and festiuall day oblation was made of al the people which came to the masse, or liturgy, both men and women, in the church,* euery person bringing and offering his owne oblation.

The liturgye being done, they receiue the oblations of the priest. &c.

☞ Thus ye maye see what was theyr oblations and sacrifice in the auncient time, in their liturgy. Wherof now remayneth nothing, but the name onely with the song.

This offertory some ascribe to Eutichianus about the yeare of our Lord .280. but thereof no certayne euidence appeareth.

Orate pro me fratres. &c.

Naclerus writeth that Pope Leo broughte in that which is sayd in y^e Masse: Orate pro me fratres & sorores. &c.*

¶The Preface and the Canon.

The Preface of the Canon from verè dignum & iustum est. &c. to per Christum Dominum nostrum is geuen to Gelasius. su•sum corda,* seemeth to be borrowed out of the old maner of the Greeke Church, S. Cyprian also maketh mention of the same and S. Aust. de vera religione. cap 3.

☞ And therefore Thomas Waldēsis iudgeth that this part of the preface cannot be attributed to Gelasius.

After Christum dominum nostrum, in the old liturgy then followed Qui pridie quàm pateretur as Rhenanus supposeth, but then came Pope Gelasius the first, about y^e yeare of our Lord 497. which inserted that which foloweth: Te igitur clementissime. &c.

☞ Whereby it is to bee noted that Polidorus Virgilius (which ascribeth Qui pridie to Pope Alexander) De inuent. lib. 5. cap. 10. is deceiued.*

The like is also to be said of Panormitanus, who referreth the same clause Qui pridie. &c. to the Apostles.*lib. de celebratione Missae Cap. Cum Martha.

Furthermore note (good reader) howe this doth agree with the long Canon of Saynt Ambrose lib. 4 De sacramentis. cap. 5. Dicit Sacerdos: fac nobis hanc oblationem adscriptam, rationalem, acceptabilem quod est figura corporis & sanguinis Domini nostri Iesu Christi. Qui pridie quam pateretur, in sanctis manibus suis accepit panem, respexit ad coelum ad te sancte pater omnipotens aeterne Deus, gratias agens benedixit, fregit. &c. if it be true that either Panormitanus saith, or that Gelasius made Qui pridie. &c. Howe can this Canon then be fathered vpon S. Ambrose? And by the same reason also hys whole booke entituled De Sacramentis may be suspected, as of diuers learned men it is.

Then came Pope Sixtus, 10. yeares after him, whiche broughte into the Canon Sanctus, Sanctus,* thrise to be song out of the booke of Esay. And to annexe it together, ioyned also that whiche goeth before: per quem maiestatem tuam. &c.*

☞ He that writeth the liturgy of Basilius, ascribeth it to his name: whether hee doth it truely or no, I will not here contend. This is to be noted, that seeing in the sayde liturgie of Basilius, the same Particle, sanctus, sanctus sãctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth: pleni sunt coeli & terra gloria tua, osanna in excelsis, is song: Therefore it must needes folowe, that either Leo whiche was aboute the yeare of our Lord. Page 1403 460. borrowed this out of Basilius Liturgie, or els y^e same is falsly attributed to Basilius.

After this foloweth: Sanctum sacrificium immaculatam hostiam, till ye come to placatus accipias, which Leo the first did make and institute.

*The wordes in the communion, Hoc quotiescunque feceritis in mei memoriam facietis, &c were put in by Pope Alexander. i. as Humbertus writeth: vnder Byshop Alexander martyr & papa .5. ab Apost. Petro passionem Domini inserēs Canoni Missae, ait: Hoc quotiescunque feceritis. &c.

*Pope Gregory the third about the yeare of our Lord .732. put to his piece: Et eorum quorum memoria. &c.

☞ This Gregory the 3. called a coucell at Rome where in he decreed that Images shoulde not onely be had in tēples, but also worshipped, and that all gaynesayers should be counted as heretickes.

Innocentius the 3. of that name affirmeth Pope Gelasius,* which was about 490. yeares after Christ, to haue made a great piece of that Canon, as he himselfe did something therein, about the yeare of our Lord .1215.

Panormitanus affirmeth that Gregory did adde to the Canon,* this clause, Diesque nostros in pace disponas.

Briefely Gregorius in registro sayth that one Scholasticus made the most part of the Canon, finding also fault with the same, that in composing the Chanon, he woulde put in his owne prayers, & leaue out the Lords prayer. &c.

☞ Where is to be noted, for the reconciling of these wryters together, of whom some impute the Canon to Gelasius, some agayne to Scholasticus: In my coniecture it may be sayd, that both these be one, and so the matter is reconciled. The reason that moueth me is this, for so I finde In vetusto quodam libro de officio missae, after these wordes, Gelasius Papa ex Scolastico effectus in ordine 48. fecit tractatus & hymnos.*&c.

The eleuation and adoration.

The eleuation and adoration of the sacrament, we cānot find to come in by any other, then by Honorius the iij. about the yeare of our Lord 1222. which ordeined that the people then should kneele downe and worship the sacrament.*

The Pater noster.

*Ioannes Diaconus writing of Gregory, sayth: Orationem dominicam mox post Canonem super hostiam censuit recitari. i that Gregory caused the Lordes prayer to be recited immediately after the Canon vpon the host. &c.

☞ Although the Apostles euer vsed the Lordes prayer at the supper of the Lord, as is sayd before: yet Gregory belike placed it so in that order after the Canon, and brought it in with those wordes: praeceptis salutaribus &c.

Gregorius in Reg. Dominica oratio apud Graecos ab omni populo:* Apud nos vero a solo sacerdote cantatur. i. The Lords prayer, sayth he, amonge the Grecians was wonte to •ee song generally of all the people: with vs it is song onelye of the priest.

Agnus.

The Agnus Pope Sergius aboute the yeare of our Lord .700. brought into the Masse,* as witnesseth Exposit. R. ord. propter officium confractionis dominici corporis, constitutum est a papa Sergio vt agnus dei decantetur. &c.

The Pax.

Innocentius ordeined the paxe to be geuen to the people.*Pacis ait, osculum dandum post confecta mysteria, vt constet populum ad omnia quae in mysterijs aguntur, praeuisse consensum. &c.

☞ Peter Martyr in his commētaryes in Iud. saith that it it was brought in by Pope Leo .2. as it is said: and yet supposeth the same not to be so, saying that this was an auncient custome in the Apostles time, for Christians to salute one an other with the kisse of peace. &c.

To this of Peter Martyr agreeth also Gabriell Biel. writing in these wordes:*Porrexit in primitiua ecclesia sacerdos osculum pacis ministro, caeteris impartiednum, vt per hoc significaret, &c. i. In the primitiue Church, the priest gaue a kisse of peace to the minister, to be geuen by him to the people.

The distribution and communion.

After this foloweth the comunion, where in our popish Masse and Ministers therof do much alter and degenerate from auncient antiquity, two maner of wayes.

First in that they make no communion thereof, receyuing onely to thēselues, cōtrary both to theyr own words: where they say after theyr receiuing: Sacramenta que sumpsimus. &c. and also to the auncient examples and decrees of the Apostles and others. And where it is decreed in the Epistle of Anacletus. Paracta autē consecratione omnes communicent, qui noluerint Ecclesiasticis carere liminibus. Sic enim & Apostoli statuerunt, & S. Romana tenet ecclesia. &c. i. The consecration being done, let all communicate together, vnles they will be thrust out of the church dores. &c.

☞ Here note by the way (gentle Reader) how Gratianus the writer of the Popes decrees, is ouersene,* which in hys booke De consecrat. dist. 2. referreth this saying of Anacletus to Pope Calixtus. And likewise also Chocleus writing agaynst Musculus, followeth Gracianus in the same error.

Likewise in the Canons of the Apostles (if the Canōs were theyrs) we read: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . &c. i. All the faithfull which resort to the Church, and tary not out the end of the seruice, and receiue not the holy communion, suche, as bringing in disorder to the Church, ought to be disseuered, &c. And agayne: Si quis episcopus, praesbiter, aut diaconus, aut quicunq̃ue ex sacerdotali consortio, oblatione facta•, non cōmunicauerint, causam dicito. &c.

For how can that be a communion called, which is not common but priuate to one? As Micrologus writeth: Nec enim proprie communio dici potest, nisi plures de eodem sacrificio participant. i. It can not be called a communion, except mo then one do participate of one sacrifice. &c.

And Durandus: In primitiua ecclesia omnes qui celebrationi Missarum intererant, singulis diebus communicare solebāt,*eo quod Apostoli omnes de calice biberunt. &c. i. In the primitiue time all that were present at the ministration, were wont euery day to communicate, because that the apostles did altogether drinke of the cup. &c.

Secondly, they alter and degenerate therein from aūcient antiquity, in that when they communicate also wyth the people, yet they depriue them of the holy cup: which deprauation was not in the church before the counsel o• Cōstance, about the yere of our Lord .1414. For before it was so autentikly receiued, that it was counted a sacriledge, to receiue the one without the other,* as appeareth by the wordes of Pope Gelasius: Cōperimus quod quidam sumpta tantum modo corporis sacri portione. &c. the whole in english is thus: we vnderstand that there be some, which receiuing the one part onely of the holy body,* absteine from the cup of the sacrate blood: who (because they be taught so to do, by what superstition I cannot tell) eyther let thē receiue the sacrament whole together, or let them absteine from the whole sacrament altogether, because the diuision of that one and whole sacrament, cannot be without great sacriledge. &c.

Hytherto also pertaineth the testimony of S. Austen in these wordes: Et ibi vos estis in mensa,*& in calice nobiscum vos estis. Simul enim hoc sumimus, simul bibimus, quia simul viuimus. &c. i. There be you at the table, and at the cup there also be you with vs: for together we receiue, and together we drinke, because we liue together.

As also out of the booke of Gregory it is manifest that not onely the people receiued then in both kindes:* but also the words were prescribed to the minister, what he should say in geuing the cup: Item sacerdos calicem dando dicat: Sanguis Domini nostri Iesu Christi custodiat te ad vitam aeternam. i. Let the priest say in geuing the cup: The blood of our lord Iesus Christ keepe thee to euerlasting life. Amen.

Further in rēdering the cause, why it should so be done, Thomas Aquine writeth:*Nam hoc valet ad repraesentand•m passionem Christi, in qua seorsum fuit sanguis a corpore separatus. &c. Secundo, hoc est conueniens vsui huius sacramenti, vt seorsum exhibeatur corpus Christi fidelibus in cibum, & sanguis in potum. i. For that serueth to represent the passion of Christ, wherein his blood was parted seuerally from the body. &c Secondly, for that is conuenient to the vse of the sacramēt, that the body shoulde seuerally be geuen to the faythfull to meat. and the blood to drinke.

And therefore serued the office of the deacōs as we read, vt oblata a populo super altare consecranda disponant,*& perfectis mysterijs calicem sacrosancti sanguinis Domini, fidelibus propinent i. To lay the offeringes of the people vpon the altar to be halowed, and when the misteries be consecrated, to distribute the cup of the sacrate blood of the Lord to the faythfull, &c.

But among all other testimonies to proue that the sacrament ought to be common to all people in both kinds, there is none more euidēt then the place of Hierome.*Caeterum dominica caena omnibus debet esse communis, quia ille omnibus discipulis suis, qui aderant aequaliter tradidit sacramenta. i. The supper of the Lord ought to be indifferently comen to all his disciples there present. &c.

And thus haue ye heard the Canon described, which otherwise is called secretum. i. the secrete of the masse, beinge so termed, because the priest was wont to read it in secrete or in scilence.* The reason thereof Pope Innocentius .iij. declareth in his third booke, for that the holy wordes, sayth he of the Canon, shoulde not growe in contempt with the people by the dayly vse and hearing thereof. And bringeth Page 1404 in an example concerning the same of certeine shepheards which in the fieldes vsing the same wordes of the Chanon vpō theyr bread and wine, the matter was turned saith he, into flesh and bloud, and they plagued therefore from heauen: but with such popish tales the Church hath bene lōg replenished.

The Postcommon.

*After the Canon and communion, then followeth the Postcommon, with the collectes, which the masse booke requireth alwayes to be vsed in an odde number, sometime teaching to vse but one, as in the sondayes in Lent: and sometime three: as in certen masses, from lowsonday, tyll the Ascention: but neuer to passe the number of seauen.

Ite Missa est.

Last of all commeth Ite missa est, wherby the minister dimitteth and sendeth away al the congregation there present to theyr businesse,* for as you hearde before, it was decreed in auncient time, that it was not lawefull to departe from the congregation in the time of holy ministration, be|fore the end of the whole cōmunion. And therfore, all thinges being accomplished, the minister turning to the assēbly, pronounceth Ite missa est.

☞ Where note that vpon sondayes and festiuall dayes onely when Gloria in excelsis, was songe, Ite missa est was wont to be sayd: on the workedayes, Benedicamus Domino: sometime Requiescant in pace.

NOW concerning such trinckets as were to the foresaid Masse apperteining or circumstant, first the linnin Albes and Corporasses were brought in by Pope Marcus.* Ann. 340. if that be true whiche is thought of some, where note agayne, that in the time of this Pope, it was nothyng offensiue for euery honest Priest, to haue his owne proper wife. In the time also of this Marcus, was concilium Elib•rtinum, which condemned all kindes of Images and pictures in temples.

Contrary to the whiche counsell, Pope Gregorye the thyrd, about the yeare of our Lord. 732. calling a counsel at Rome, did not onely stablish the Images before condēned, but condemned the gaynesayers for Heretickes, as is aforesayd.

By Sixtus the second it was ordeined that no liturgy should be done saue onely vpon altars halowed,* about the yeare of our Lord 260. as some suppose. But as I see no firme probation vpon the same: so haue I probable coniecture the same not to be true.

Some there be that shame not to say that S. Clement brought in the Albe and vestmentes,* to the popish masse.

Item that the sacramēt of the bloud of the Lord should be cōsecrate in chalices of glasse and not of wood, as it was in time before,* they say it was the ordinaunce of Pope Seuerinus.

After this came in golden chalices, and a true prouerbe with all. That once they had woodden chalices, and goldē Priestes, nowe they haue golden Chalices, and woodden Priestes.

Schenianus ordeined the ringing of bels, and burning of lampes in churches.*

Uitalianus the playing on the organes.

*Damasus by the instinct of Hierome appoynted gloria patri after the psalmes.

Pelagius deuised the Memento for the dead.

*Leo brought in the Incense.

Eutichianus as other say, brought in the Offertorye, which was then after a farre other wise then it is, or hath bene vsed now a great whyle. For what time as manye of the Heathen being greatly accustomed with offeringes▪ were conuerted vnto Christ, and could not be wel brought from theyr olde long vse of Offeringes, the Pope thought to beare somewhat with the weake, and permitted them to bring meares into the congregation or church, that whē the Byshoppe had blessed them, they that brought them, mighte distribute them to the poore, or take them to theyr owne vse. But afterward did Pope Gregory so helpe vp this sentence: Non apparebis in conspectu Dei tui vacuus. &c. Thou shalt not appeare in the sight of thy God empty. &c. that as he willed the people to lay theyr offeringes vppon the Aultare: so they did, and haue not yet forgotten to do• so still.

Soule masses, and masses appplied for the dead, came in partly by Gregory, partly by Pelagius, which brought in the Memento as is sayd.*

☞Wherein note (good Reader) and marke, how these two stand together, that which our Sauour sayth in hys Euangely, hoc facite in mei commemorationem, do this in remembraunce of me:* and that which they say In quorum memoria Corpus Christi sumitur. &c. i. In whose commemoration the bodye of Christ is taken. &c. Christ woulde it to bee done in his remembraunce, and the Pope sayth, doe it in remembraunce of the deade. &c. What can be more contrary.

Innocentius the third, ordeined that the Sacrament should be reserued in the Church.* The same brought also in auriculare confession as a lawe, about the yeare of our Lord 1215. he did also constitute that no Archbishop should enioy the pall, vnlesse he were of his owne religion: and therefore no great maruell if there be such vnity in popery.

Uigilius ordeined that the Priest should say masse hauing his face toward the east.

Platina writeth how the first latin masse was song in the sixte counsell of constantinople,* whiche was about the yeare of our Lord, 680. so that the sayd Masse was there & then first allowed and not before. And yet they (I thinke) the greek Church should haue knowne as soone the masse, if it had proceeded from Iames or Basilius, as the Latine Church did know it.

The opinion to thinke the Masse to helpe soules in Purgatory was confirmed by Pope Ioannes 19. by reasō of a dreame wherein he dreamed that he saw and heard the voyces of deuilles lamenting and bewayling,* that soules were deliuered from them, by the saying of Masses and diriges. And therefore did approue and ratify the feast of all soules brought in by Odilo:* moreouer adioined also to the same, the feast of al hallowes, about the yeare of our Lord. 1003.

Concerning lent fast, some thinke that Telesphorus, about the yeare of our Lord. 140. was the author therof.* But that peraduenture may be as true, as that which they also attribute to him, that he ordeined three masses of one priest to be sayd on Christmas day. Or if he did ordeine that fast, yet he did ordeine it but freely to be kept:* for so I finde among the decrees, that lent was commaunded first to bee fasted, but onely of the Clergy or church men.

Pope Leo commaunded the Sacrament to be censed.

Pope Boniface set in his foot for couerting of y^e altars.

In S. Cyprians time, it seemeth that water was then myngled with the wyne,* whereof we read mention in his second booke of Epistles: which mixture is referred to Alexander the first, in the order of the Romaine Canon.

As concerning the breaking of the body in 3. partes we read also mention to be made in the same book of order, but no certaine author thereof to be named. The words of the booke be these: Tripliciter, inquit, corpus Domini intelligitur. Vnum quod resurrexit a mortuis, quod significat particula in sāguinem missa: Aliud quod adhuc viuit in terra significatū per particulam a sacerdote consumptam. Tertium, quod iam requiescit in Christo, quod etiam a tertia particula in altari reseruata apte figuratur. &c. i. Three wayes is the body of the Lord vnderstanded: One which rose agayne from the dead, being signified by that part, which is let fall to the bloud in the chalice. The other is, that yet is liuing in the earth, whiche the part of the priest eaten doth signify. The third is that now resteth in Christ, which also is figured by that particle, that is reserued vpon the aultar.

Dedication of churches came in by Felix the third: and that Churches might not be hallowed but by a Byshoppe an. 492.*

The canticle Gloria laus. &c. in the procession before the Masse▪ on Palmesonday, was instituted by Theodulphus bishop of Aurelia, as Sygibertus writeth, about the yeare of our Lord. 843.

Geuing of holy bread came in by this occasion, as it is to be gathered, partly out of Honorius, partly out of Durandus, and other. The maner was in auncient time, that the Ministers were wont to receiue certaine meale of euerye house or family, wherewith a great loafe was made, called Panis Dominicus, able to serue in the Communion and to be distributed vnto the people, which then was wont euerye day to be present and to receiue, especially they that offered the meale:* for whom it was wont therfore to be sayd in the Canon: Omnium circumstantium, qui tibi hoc sacrificium laudis offerunt. &c. But afterward the number of the people increasing, and pietye decreasing, as Durandus writeth, it was then ordeined to communicate but onely vpon sondayes.

At length folowed the thyrd constitution, that thrise a yeare, at least at Easter, euery man should communicate, being thus prouided, that in stead of the dayly communiō before vsed, the pax did serue. And in stead of receiuing vpon the Sunday, bread was hallowed and sondaylye geuen and distributed vnto the people, whyche also was called Eulogia: the constitution whereof seemeth to proceed from Pope Pius. For so wee reade in the decrees of the sayde Pope Pius: Vt de oblationibus quae offeruntur a populo, & consecrationibus supersunt,*vel de panibus quos deferūt fideles ad ecclesiam, vel certe de suis praesbiter conuenienter Page 1405 partes incisas habeat in vase nitido & conuenienti, & post Missarum solennia qui communicare non fuerint parati, eulogias omni die dominico, & in diebus festis exinde accipiāt. That is: That the Minister shal take of the oblations offered of the people,*remayning of the consecration, or els of the breade, which the faythfull bring vnto the Church or els to take of theyr owne bread and cut it conueniently in portions in a cleane, & a conuenient vessell: so that after the solemnity of the ministration being done, they that were not prepared and ready to communicate, may receiue euery sondaye or festiuall day, Eulogies, or benedictions with the same. Hec ille.

As cōcerning holly water which they vsed to sprinckle at the Church doore, vpon them that entred in, I will not say that it spronge from the Idolatrous vse of the Gentiles.

This I say as I finde in historia Sozomeni. Erat autem Romanis vetusta consuetudo vt quum limen templi transeūdū esset,*sacerdos secundum morē ethnicum madidos quosdam oliue ramusculos manu tenens ingredientes aspergebat. &c. i. It was an olde custome among the Romans, that at the entring in at the Church doore, the priest after the vsuall maner of the Ethniks, hauing in his hand moist braūches of Oliue, did sprinckle with the same such as entred in. &c.

To the which custome this our maner of geuing of holye water is so like, that it seemeth to proceede out of the same.

In the booke of the Popes decrees, & in the distinctiōs of Gratianus, there is a certayne decree fathered vpon Alexander the first,*about the yeare of our Lord. 121. Whiche decree may well seme to be a bastard decree, neither agreing to such a father, nor such a time, concerning the coniuring of holy water. The wordes of the decree be these: Aquam sale conspersam in populis benedicimus, vt ea cuncti aspersi sanctificentur, & purificentur, quod omnibus sacerdotibus faciendum esse mandamus. Nam si cinis vitule aspersus populum sanctificabat, atque mundabat, multo magis aqua sale aspersa, diuinisque precibus sacrata populū sanctificat atque mundat. Et si sale asperso per Helisaeum Prophetam sterilitas aquae sanata est: quanto magis diuinis precibus sacratus sal sterilitatem rerū aufert humanarum, & coinquinos sanctificat & purgat, & caetera bona multiplicat, & insidias diaboli auertit, & a phātsmatis versutijs homines defendit? That is: We blesse water sprinckled with salt among the people, that all such as be sprinckled with the same may be sanctified and purified: which thyng we charge and commaund all priests to do, for if the ashes of the Cow, in the old law, being sprinckled among y^e people did sanctify, and clense them, much more water sprinckled with salt, and hallowed with godly prayers sanctifieth and clenseth the people: and if that Heliseus the Prophet by the sprinckling of salt, did heale and helpe the barrennesse of the water: how much more the salt being halowed by godly prayers taketh away the barrennes of humayne thinges, and sanctifieth and purgeth them that bee defiled: also multiplieth other things that be good and turneth away the snares of the deuill, and defendeth mē from deceptions of phantasy. &c.

Thus ye haue heard the author and father of holly water, which some also ascribe to Pope Sixtus which succeeded Alexander. But as y^e Papists do not agree in the fyrst authour or institutor of this hallowing of Elementes, so I thinke the same vntruely to be ascribed to either, but leauing the probation of this to farther leasure, let vs nowe heare in our owne tongue theyr owne words, which y^e vse in this theyr coniuration.

The forme and wordes vsed of the Priest in coniuring Salt.

I coniure thee thou creature of Salte by the ✚ liuyng God,* by the ✚ true God, by the holy God. &c. That thou mayest be made a coniured Salte, to the saluation of them that beleue: And that vnto all suche as receiue thee, thou mayest be health of soule and body: and that from out of y^e place, wherein thou shalt be sprinckled, may flie away and depart all phantasy, wickednes, or craftines of the deuils subtlety, and euery foule spirit. &c.

The forme of coniuring water.

*I coniure thee, thou creature of water in the name of ✚ God the father almighty, and in the name of Iesu Christ his sonne, our Lord, and in the vertue ✚ of the holy Ghost that thou become a coniured water to expell all power of the enemy. &c.

Who seeth not in these wordes blasphemye intollerable, how that which only is due to the bloud of Christ, and promised to fayth onely in him, the same is transferred to earthly and insensate creatures, to be saluation both to bodye and spirite, inwardlye to geue remission of sinnes, to geue health and remedy agaynst euils and deuils, against all phantasies, wickednesse, and all foule spirites, and to expell the power of the enemy. &c. If this be true whereto serueth the bloud of Christ, and the vertue of Christian fayth?

Therefore iudge thy selfe (gentle Reader) whether thou thinke this trompery rightly to be fathered vpon those ancient fathers aforenamed, or els whether it may seme more like trueth that Iohn Sleydan writeth, whose woordes in his second booke de Monarchijs are these:Horum decreta sunt in libris inserta conciliorum, sed ex his plaeraque tam sunt leuicula, tam nugatoria, tam aliena prorsus a sacris literis, vt credibile sit ab alijs longo post tēpore fuisse conficta.* &c. That is: The decrees of these foresaid Bishops and Martyrs be inserted in the booke of Counsels, but of these decrees many therof be so childish, so trifling, and so farre disagreeing from the holy scripture,* that it is very like that the same were fayned and counterfayted of others, long after theyr time. &c. Thus muche sayth Sleydane with moe woordes in that place. Unto whose testimony, if I might be so bolde also to adde my coniecture, I would suppose the coniuration of this foresayd water and Salte, to spring out of the same fountayne, from whence proceeded the coniuring of flowers and braunches, because I see the order and manner of them both to be so like and vniforme, as may appeare.

The maner of halowing flowers and braunches.

I coniure thee, thou creature of flowers and braūches in the name of ✚ God the father almighty: and in the name ✚ of Iesu Christ his sonne, our Lord: and in the vertue of the holy ✚ Ghost. Therefore be thou rooted out, and displāted from this creature of flowers and braunches all thou strength of the aduersary, all thou host of the deuill, and all the power of the enemy: euē euery assault of the deuils. &c.

And thus much concerning the antiquity of holy bread and holy water: wherby thou mayst partly coniecture the same not to be so olde, as Steuen Gardiner, in hys Letter agaynst mayster Ridley aboue mentioned, woulde haue, Pag. 753. being both deceiued himselfe, and also goyng about to seduce other.

Furthermore as touching the reseruing of reliques & the memoriall of sayntes brought into the masse,* Gregory the thyrd is the author therof, who also added to the canon therof, this clause: Quorum solennitates hodie in cōspectu diuinae maiestatis tuae celebrantur. &c.

Finally it were to long to recite euery thing in order deuised and brought in particularly to the masse, and to y^e Church. For after that mans brayne was once set on deuising, it neuer coulde make an end of heaping rite vppon rite, and ceremony vpon ceremony, till all religion was turned well nighe to superstition. Thereof commeth oyle and creame brought in by Pope Siluester not wont to be hallowed but by a byshop.* That the corporas shuld not be of silcke, but onely of fine linnen cloth. That the Psalmes should be song on sides, the one side of the quier singing one verse the other an other with gloria patri. &c. That bap'tisme should be ministred at no other time in the yere but onely at Easter and at whitsontide (saue onely to infantes and such as were in extreame infirmity) and that it should be requyred 40. dayes before:* so determined by Pope Siricius: and therefore was it that fontes were halowed onely at these two seasons, the which halowing they keep yet still, but the ordinaunce they haue reiecte. Item that belles also were Christened. Item, no Prieste shoulde weare a beard, or haue long hayre, so appoynted by Pope Martine the first. Item that auriculare confession shoulde be made, that the booke of decrees and decretals should be stablished and transubstantiation confirmed, in whiche three Actes Pope Innocentius the thyrd was the chieftest doer,* about the yeare of our Lord. 1215.*

And thus haue ye in sum the gatheringes of the masse, with the Chanon and all the appurtenaunce of the same, which, not much vnlike to the Crow of Esope being patched with the feathers of so manye byrdes, was so long a gethering, that the temple of Salomon was not so long in building, as the Popes Masse was in making. Whereby iudge now thy selfe (good Reader) whether this Masse did proceede from Iames and other Apostles or no. And yet this was one of the principall causes for which so much turmoyle was made in the Church, with the bloudshed of so many Godly men, suffering in so many quarters of this realme: some consumed by fire, some pined away with hūger, some hanged, some slayne, some racked, some tormented one way, some another: and that onely or chiefelye, for the cause of this aforesayd popish Masse, as by the reading of this story folowing, by the grace of Christ our Lord, shall appeare more at large. In whome I wyshe thee to continue in health and to perseuere in the trueth.

👉The first entring of Queene Mary to the Crowne, with the alteration of Religion, and other perturbations happening the same time in this Realme of England.

What time King Edward by long sicknesse beganne to appeare more feble and weake, in the meane while during the time of this his sicknesse, a certayne mariage was prouided, concluded and shortly also vpon the same solempnised in the moneth of May, betwene the Lord Gilford, sonne to the Duke of Northumberland,* and the Lady Iane the Duke of Suffolkes daughter, whose mother being then aliue, was daughter to Mary King Henryes second sister, who first was married to the French king, and afterward to Charles Duke of Suffolke. But to make no long tariance hereupon, the mariage being ended, and the king waxing euery day more sicke then other, where as in deede there seemed in him no hope of recouerye, it was brought to passe by the consent not onely of the Nobility, but also of all the chiefe Lawyers of the Realme, that the king by his Testament did appoynt the foresayde Ladye Iane, daughter to the Duke of Suffolke, to be inheretrix vnto the crowne of England, passing ouer his two sisters Mary and Elizabeth.

To this order subscribed all the kinges Counsell, and chiefe of the Nobility,* the Maier and city of London, and almoste all the Iudges and chiefe Lawyers of this Realme, sauing onely Iustice Hales of Kent, a man both fauoring true Religion, and also an vpright iudge as any hath bene noted in this Realme, who geuing his consent vnto Lady Mary, would in no case subscribe to Lady Iane. Of this man (God willing) you shall perceiue more in the sequele of this story. The causes layd agaynst Lady Marye, were as well for that it was feared she would mary with a Straunger, and thereby entangle the crowne: as also that she would cleane alter Religion, vsed both in king Henry her father, and also in king Edward her brothers dayes, & so bring in the pope, to the vtter destruction of the Realme, which indeed afterward came to passe, as by the course and sequele of this story may well appeare.

*Much probable matter they had thus to coniecture of her, by reason of her great stubbornnes shewed and declared in her brothers dayes, as in the letters before mentioned, passing betwene her and king Edward, & the Counsell, may appeare. The matter being thus concluded, and after confirmed by euery mans hand, King Edward an Impe of so great hope, not long after this departed, by the vehemency of his sicknes, when he was sixtene yeares of age: with whom also decaid in maner the whole flourishing estate and honor of the English nation.

*When king Edward was deade, this Iane was established in the kingdome by the Nobles consent, and was forthwith published Queene by proclamation at London, and in other Cityes where was any great resort, and was there so taken and named. Betweene this young Damosell and kyng Edward there was litle difference in age, though in learning & knowledge of the tongues she was not onely equall, but also superior vnto him, being instructed of a Mayster right notablie learned. If her fortune had bene as good as was her bringing vppe, ioyned wyth •inenesse of wit: vndoubtedly she might haue semed comparable, not onely to the house of the Uaspasians, Semp•onians, and mother of the Grachies, yea, to anye other women beside that deserved high prayse for theyr sigulart learning: but also to the vniuersity men, which haue taken many degrees of the Schooles.

In the meane time while these thinges were a working at London, Mary which had knowledge of her Brothers death, writeth to the Lords of the Councell in forme as foloweth.

¶A Letter of the Lady Mary, sent to the Lordes of the Counsell, wherein shee claymeth the Crowne after the decease of king Edward,*

MY Lordes, we greete you well, and haue receiued sure aduertisement that our dearest Brother the king our late soueraigne Lord, is departed to Gods mercye: whiche newes howe they be woefull vnto our hart, he onely knoweth, to whose will and pleasure we must and do humbly submitte vs and our willes. But in this so lamentable a case, that is to witte, now after hys Maiesties departure and death, concerning the Crowne and gouernaunce of thys Realme of England, with the title of Fraunce, and all thinges thereto belonging, what hath bene provided by Act of Parliament and the Testament and last will of our dearest Father, besides other circumstaunces aduauncing our right, you know, the Realme, and the whole world knoweth, the Rolles and Recordes appeare by the authority of the kyng our sayde Father, and the king our sayde brother, and the subiectes of thys Realme, so that we verily trust that there is no good true subiect, that is, can, or would pretend to be ignoraunt therof, and of our parte wee haue of our selues caused, and as God shall ayde and strength vs, shall cause our right and title in this behalfe to be published and proclaymed accordingly. And albeit this so weighty a matter seemeth straunge, that the dying of oure sayde brother vpon Thursday at night last past, we hytherto hadde no knowledge from you thereof, yet we consider your wisdomes and prudence to be such, that hauing eftsoones amongst you debated, pondered, and well wayed this present case with our estate, with your own estate, the common wealth, and all our honours, wee shall and may conceiue greate hope and trust with much assuraunce in your loyaltye and seruice, and therefore for the tyme interprete and take thinges not to the worst, and that ye yet will like Noble men worke the best. Neuerthelesse wee are not ignoraunt of your consultations, to vndoe the prouisions made for our preferment, nor of the great bandes and prouisions forceable, wherewith yee bee assembled and prepared, by whom, and to what ende, God and you know, and nature can but feare some euill. But be it that some consideration politicke, or whatsoever thing else hath mooued you thereto, yet doubtte you not my Lordes, but we can take all these your doynges in gracious part, being also right ready to remit & fullye pardon the same, with that freely to eschewe bloudshed and vengeance agaynst all those that canne or will intend the same: trusting also assuredly you will take and accept this grace and vertue in good part as appeateyneth, and that wee shall not be enforced to vse the seruice of other our true subiectes and frendes which in thys our iust and right cause, God in whom our whole affiaunce is, shall send vs. Wherefore my Lordes we require you and charge you, and euery of you, that euery of you, of your allegiance whyche you owe to God and vs, and to none other, for our honour and the surety of our parson, onely employ your selues, & forth with vpon receit hereof, cause our right and title to the Crowne and gou•rnement of this Realme to be proclaymed in our Citty of London, and other places as to your wisdomes shall seeme good, and as to this case apperteineth, not fayling hereof as our verye trust is in you. And thus our Letter signed with our hande, shalbe your sufficient warrant in this behalfe.

Yeu•n vnder our Signet, at our Manor of Kenyngall, the ninth of Iuly. 1553.

To this Letter of the Ladye Marye, the Lordes of the Counsell make aunswere agayne as foloweth.

¶Aunswere of the Lordes vnto the Lady Maryes Letter.

MAdame,* we haue receiued your letters the ninth of this instant, declaring your supposed title, which you iudge your self to haue to the Imperiall crowne of this Realm, & all the dominions thereunto belonging. For answeere whereof, this is to aduertise you, that forasmuch as our soueraign Lady Quene Iane is after the death of our soueraign Lord Edward the sixt, a prince of most noble memorye inuested and possessed with the iuste and right title in the Imperiall Crowne of this Realme,* not onely by good order of olde aunciente lawes of this Realme, but also by our late soueraigne Lordes Letters patentes signed with his own hand, and sealed with the greate seale of Englande in presence of the most parte of the Nobles, Counsellours, Iudges, with diuers other graue and sage personages, assenting & subscribing to the same: We must therefore as of most boūd duety and allegiance assent vnto her sayde Grace, and to none other, except wee shoulde (which faythfull subiectes can not) fall into greuous and vnspeakeable enormities. Wherefore we can no lesse do, but for the quiet both of the realme and you also, to aduertise you, that forasmuch as the diuorce made betwene the king of famous memory K Henry the 8. & the Lady Katherine your mother, was necessary to be had both by the euerlasting lawes of God, and also by the Ecclesiasticall lawes, & by the most part of the noble & learned Page 1407 Vniuersities of Christendome, and confirmed also by the sundry actes of Parliamētes remaining yet in theyr force, and therby you iustly made illegitimate and vnheritable to the crown Imperiall of this realme, and the rules and dominions, and possessions of the same:* you will vpon iust consideration hereof, and of diuers other causes lawfull to be alledged for the same, & for the iust inheritaunce of the right line and godlye order taken by the late king our souereigne Lord king Edward the sixt, and agreed vpon by the Nobles and greatest personages aforesayd, surcease by any pretence to vexe and molest any of our soueraigne Ladye Queene Iane her subiectes from theyr true fayth and allegiance due vnto her grace: assuring you, that if you will for respect shew your selfe quiet and obedient (as you oughte) you shall finde vs all and seuerall ready to doe you any seruice that we with duety may, and be glad with your quietnes to preserue the cōmon state of this realme: wherin you may be otherwise greuous vnto vs, to your selfe, and to them. And thus we bid you most hartily well to fare, from the Tower of London, this 9. of Iuly. 1553.

Your Ladyships frendes, shewing your selfe an obedient subiect.

All these aforesayd, except onely the Duke of Northūberland and syr Iohn Gates, afterward were either by especiall fauor or speciall or generall pardon discharged.

After this aunswere receiued, and the mindes of the Lordes perceiued,* Lady Mary speedeth her selfe secretlye away farre of from the City, hoping chiefly vpon the good will of the Commons, and yet perchaunce not destitute altogether of the secret aduertisementes of some of the Nobles. When the Counsell heard of her sodiene departure, and perceiued her stoutnesse, & that all came not to passe as they supposed, they gathered speedily a power of mē together, appointing an army, and first assigned that the Duke of Suffolke shoulde take that enterprise in hand, & so haue the leading of the Bande.* But afterwarde alteringe their mindes, they thought it best to sēd forth the Duke of Northumberland, with certaine other Lords and Gentlemen, and that the Duke of Suffolke shoulde keepe the Tower, where the Lord Gilford and the Lady Iane the same time were lodged.

In the which expedition y^e Gard also, albeit they were much vnwilling at the first therunto, yet notwithstanding through the vehemēt perswasions of the Lord Treasurer, M. Chomley, & other, they were induced to assist the duke, and to set forward with him.

These thinges thus agreed vpon, and the Duke nowe being set forward after the best array out of London, hauing notwithstanding his times prescribed, and hys iourneys appoynted by the Counsell, to the entent he woulde not seeme to do any thing but vpon warrant, Mary in the meane while tossed with muche trauell vp and downe, to worke the surest way for her best aduauntage, withdrew her selfe into the quarters of Northfolke and Suffolke,* where she vnderstood the Dukes name to be had in muche hatred, for the seruice that had ben done there of late vnder king Edward,* in subduing the rebels: and there gathering to her such aid of the commons in euery side as she might, keepeth her selfe close for a space within Fremingham Castle. To whom first of al resorted the suffolke men: who being alwayes forward in promoting the procedinges of the Gospell,* promised her theyr ayd & helpe, so that she would not attempt the alteration of the religion which her Brother king Edward had before established by lawes and orders publickely enacted and receiued by the consent of the whole Realme in that behalfe.

To make the matter short, vnto this condition she eftsoones agreed, with suche promise made vnto them, that no innouatiō should be made of religiō,* as that no mā would or could then haue misdoubted her. Whiche promise, if shee had as constantly kepte, as they did willingly preserue her with theyr bodyes and weapons, she had done a deed both worthy her bloud, & had also made her raygne more stable to her selfe through former tranquility. For though a man be neuer so puissant of power, yet brech of promise is an euill vpholder of quietnes, feare is worser, but cruelty is y^e worst of all.

Thus Mary being garded with the power of y^e Gospellers, did vanquish the Duke, and all those that came agaynst her. In consideration wherof, it was (me thinks• an heuy word that she aunswered to the suffolke men afterwarde, which did make supplication vnto her grace to performe her promise:) For so muche (sayth she) as you being but mēbers, desire to rule your head you shall one day well perceiue that members must obey theyr head, and not looke to beare rule ouer the same. And not onely that, but also to cause the more terror vnto other, a certaine Gentleman named M. Dobbe, dwelling about Wyndam side, for the same cause, that is, for aduertising her by humble request, of her promise, was punished, beyng three sundrye times set on the pillory to be a gasing stocke vnto all men. Diuers other deliuered her books and supplications made out of the Scripture, to exhorte her to continue in the true doctrine then stablished, and for theyr good wils were sent to prison. But such is the cōditiō of mans nature (as here you see) that we are for the most part more ready alway to seeke frendship whē we stand in need of helpe, thē ready to requite a benefit once past & receiued. Howbeit against all this, one shoote anker we haue, which may be a sure cōfort to all miserable creatures, y^e equity & fidelity are euer perfect and certainly found with the Lord aboue, though the same being shut out of the doores in this world, be not to be founde here among menne. But seeing our intent is to write a story, not to treat of office, let vs lay Suffolke men aside for a while, whose desertes for theyr redines and diligence with the Queene, I will not here stand vpon. What she performed on her part, the thing it selfe, and the whole storye of this persecution doth testifye, as hereafter more playnely will appeare.

On the contrary side, the Duke of Northumberlande, hauing his warrant vnder the broade Seale, with all furniture in readines, as he tooke his voyage and was now forward in his way, what ado ther was, what stirring on euery side, what sending, what riding and posting, what letters, messages, and instructions went to and fro, what talking among the souldiers, what hartburning among y^e people, what fayre pretēses outwardly, inwardly what priuay practises there were, what speeding of Ordinance dayly and hourelly out of the Tower, what rumors and comming downe of soulders from all quarters there was, a world it was to see, & a processe to declare, enough to make a whole Ilias. The greatest helpe that made for the Ladye Mary, was the short iourneis of the Duke, which by commission were assigned to him before, as is aboue mentioned. For the longer the Duke lingered in his voyage, the Lady Marye the more encreased in puissaunce, the hartes of the people being mightily bent vnto her. Which after the Counsell at London perceiued, and vnderstoode howe the common multitude did withdraw theyr hartes from them to stand with her,* and that certaine Noble men begā to go the other way, they turned theyr song, and proclaymed for Queene the Lady Mary, eldest daughter to kyng Henrye the eight, and appoynted by Parliament to succeed K. Edward dying without issue.*

And so the Duke of Northumberland, being by counsell and aduise sent forth agaynst her, was left destitute and forsaken alone at Cambridge, with some of his sonnes, & a few other, among whome the Earle of Huntington was one:*) who there were arrested and broughte to the Tower of London, as traytors to the Crowne, notwithstandinge that he had there proclaymed her Queene before.

Thus haue you Mary now made a Queene, and the sword of authority put into her hād, which, how she afterward did vse, we may see in sequele of this booke. Therefore (as I say) when she had bene thus aduaūced by y^e gospellers,* & saw all in quiet by meanes y^t her enemies were conquered, sending the Duke captiue to the Tower before (which was the xxv. of Iuly) she folowed not long after, being brought vp the third day of August to Londō, with the great reioysing of many men, but with a greater feare of moe, and yet with flatterye peradventure most great, of fayned hartes.

Thus comming vp to London, her first lodgyng shee took at the Tower,* where as the foresaid Lady Iane with her husband the Lord Gilford, a litle before her commyng* were imprisoned: where they remained waiting her pleasure almost fiue monethes. But the Duke within a moneth after his comming to the Tower, being adiudged to death, was brought forth to the scaffold, and there beheaded. Albeit he hauing a promise,* and being put in hope of pardon (yea though his head were vpon the blocke) if he would recant and heare masse, consented therto, and denied in wordes that true religion, which before time, as well Page 1408 in K. Henry the 8. dayes, as in K. Edwards he had oft evidently declared hymselfe both to fauour and further: exhortyng also the people to returne to the Catholike fayth (as he termed it.)* Whose recantation the papistes foorthwith did publish and set abroad, reioysing not a litle at his conuersion or rather subuersion, as then appeared.

Thus the Duke of Northumberland with Sir Iohn Gates, and sir Thomas Palmer (which Palmer on the other side confessed his fayth that he had learned in the gospel, and lamented that he had not lyued more Gospellike) beyng put to death: In the meane tyme Queene Marye, entring thus her raigne with the bloud of these men: besides hearyng Masse her selfe in the Tower, gaue a heauy shewe and signification hereby, but especially by the sodaine deliuering of Steuen Gardiner out of the Tower, that she was not mynded to stand to that which she so deep'ly had promised to the Suffolke men before, concernyng the not subuerting or alteryng the state of religion: as in very deede the surmise of the people was therein nothyng deceyued.

Besides the premisses, other things also folowed which euery day more and more discomforted the people, declaring the Queene to beare no good will to the present state of religion: as, not onely the releasing of Gardiner beyng then made Lord Chauncellor of England and B. of Winchester, Doct. Poynt beyng put out, but also that Boner was restored to his bishoprike agayne,* and D. Ridley displaced. Itē, D. Day to the bishoprike of Chichester, Iohn Scory beyng put out. Item, D. Tonstall to the bishoprike of Duresme. Item, D. Heath to the bishoprike of Worcester, and Iohn Hooper committed to the Fleete. Item, D. Uesi• to Exceter, and Miles Couerdale put out. These things beyng marked and perceiued, great heauinesse and discomfort grew more and more to all good mens hartes: but contrary to the wicked, great reioysing. In which discord of minds, and diuersitie of affections, was now to be seene a miserable face of things in the whole commō welth of England. They that could dissemble, tooke no great care how the matter went. But such whose consciences were ioyned to truth, perceiued already coales to bee kindled, which after should be the destruction of many a true Christian man, as in deed it came to passe. In the meane while Queene Mary after these beginnings,* remoouyng from y^e Tower to Hampton Court, caused a Parliamt to bee sūmoned against the x. day of Octob. next ensuing, wherof more is to be sayd hereafter.

Ye heard before how diuers Bishops were remooued, and other placed in their rouses: amongst whome was D. Ridley B. of London, a worthy man both of fame and learnyng. This D. Ridley in tyme of Queene Iane had made a Sermon at Paules crosse, so commaunded by the Counsaile:*

declaryng there hys mynde to the people, as touching the Lady Mary, and dissuading them, alledging there the incommodities and inconueniēces which might ryse by receiuyng her to be their Queene, prophesieng as it were before, that which after came to passe, y^t she would bryng in forraigne power to raigne ouer them: besides the subuerting also of Christian Religion then already established: shewyng moreouer, that the same Mary beyng in hys Diocesse, he accordyng to his duetie, beyng then her Ordinary, had trauailed much with her to reduce her to this Religion, and notwithstanding in all other poyntes of ciuilitie, she shewed her selfe gentle and tractable, yet in matters that concerned true fayth and doctrine, she shewed her selfe so stiffe and obstinate, that there was no other hope of her to be conceyued, but to disturbe and ouerturne all that which with so great labours had bene confirmed and planted by her brother afore. Shortly after this Sermon, Queene Mary was proclaymed, whereuppon hee speedily repairyng to Fremingham to salute the Queene, had such colde welcome there: that beyng dispoyled of all his dignities, he was sent backe vpon a lame halting horse to the Tower.

After hym preached also Maister Rogers the next sonday,* entreatyng very learnedly vpon the Gospell of the same day.

This so done, Queene Mary seyng all things yet not goyng so after her mynd as she desired, deuiseyth wyth her Counsaile, to bring to passe that thyng by other meanes, which as yet by open lawe she could not well accomplish, directing forth an Inhibition by Proclamation, that no man should preach or read openly in churches the word of God, besides other thynges also in the same Proclamation Inhibited, the cōpye whereof here followeth.

¶An inhibition of the Queene, for preaching, Printyng, &c.

THE Queenes highnes well remembryng what great inconuenience and daungers haue growen to this her highnes Realme in tymes past,* thorough the diuersitie of opinions in questions of religion,* and hearyng also that now of late, sithence the beginnyng of her most gracious Raigne, the same contentions be agayne much reuiued thorough certayne false and vntrue reportes and rumors spreade by some lyght and euyll disposed personnes, hath thought good to doe to vnderstand to all her highnes most louyng subiectes, her most gracious pleasure in manner followyng.

First,* her Maiestie beyng presented by the onely goodnesse of God, settled in her iust possession of the Imperiall Crowne of this Realme, and other Dominions thereunto belongyng, cannot now hide that religion which God and the world knoweth she hath euer professed from her infancie hitherto. Which as her Maiestie is mynded to obserue and maintaine for her selfe by gods grace during her tyme, so doth her highnesse much desire and would be glad the same were of all her subiectes quietly and charitably embraced.

And yet she doth signifie vnto all her maiesties louyng subiects, that of her most gracious disposition & clemency, her highnesse myndeth not to compell any her sayde subiects thereunto, vnto such tyme as further order by common assent may be taken therein: forbiddyng neuertheles all her subiects of all degrees, at their peryls to mooue seditions, or stirre vnquietnes in her people by interpreting the Lawes of this Realme, after their braynes and fantasies, but quietly to continue for the tyme, tyll (as before is sayd) further order may be taken, and therefore willeth and straitly chargeth and commaundeth all her sayd good louyng subiects, to lyue together in quiet sort and Christian charitie, leauyng those new found diuelish termes of Papist or heretike, and such lyke, and applying their hole care, study and trauaile to lyue in the feare of God, exercising their conuersations in such charitable & godly doyng, as their lyues may in deed expresse that great hunger and thirst of Gods glory and holy worde,* which by rash talke & wordes many haue pretended: and in so doing they shal best please God, and lyue without daungers of the lawes, and maintaine the tranquillitie of the Realme. Wherof as her highnes shall be most glad, so if any man shall rashlye presume to make any assemblies of people, or at any publike assemblies or otherwyse, shall go about to stir the people to disorder or disquiet, shee myndeth according to her dutie, to see the same most surely reformed & punished accordyng to her highnes lawes.

And furthermore, forasmuch also as it is well known,* that sedition and false rumours haue bene nourished and maintayned in this Realme by the subtletie and malice of some euill disposed persons, which take vpon them without sufficient authoritie to preach & to interprete the word of God after their owne brayne in churches and other places, both publike and priuate,* & also by playing of Enterludes, and printyng of false fond bookes, ballades, rymes, and other lewd treatises in the English tongue, concernyng doctrine in matters now in question, and controuersie touchyng the high poyntes and mysteries of christen religion, which bookes, ballades, rymes, and treatises,* are chiefly by the Printers and Stationers set out to sale to her graces subiects of an euil zeale, for lucre and couetousnes of vile gayne. Her highnes therefore straitly chargeth and commaundeth all and euery of her sayde subiectes, of whatsoever state, condition or degree they be, that none of them presume from hencefoorth to preach, or by way of readyng in Churches or other publike or priuate places, except in schooles of the Uniuersitie, to interprete or teach any scriptures or any maner poynts of doctrine concerning religion, neither also to print any bookes, matter, ballade, ryme, Enterlude, processe or treatise, nor to play any Enterlude, except they haue her graces speciall licence in writyng for the same, vpon payne to incurre her highnesse indignation and displeasure.

And her highnes also further chargeth and commaundeth all and euery her sayd subiectes, that none of them of their owne authoritie do presume to punish, or to ryse against any offender in the causes abouesayde, or any other offender in words or deeds in the late rebellion* committed or done by the Duke of Northumberland or his complices, or to cease any of their goods, or violently to vse anye such offender by strikyng or imprisonyng, or threatenynge the same, but wholly to referre the punishment of all suche offenders vnto her highnes and publike authority, wherof her maiestie myndeth to see due punishment, accordyng Page 1497 to the order of her highnes lawes.*

Neuertheles, as her highnesse myndeth not hereby to restraine and discourage any of her louyng subiectes, to geue from tyme to tyme true information against any such offenders in the causes abouesayd, vnto her grace or her Counsaile, for the punishment of euery such offender, according to the effect of her highnes lawes prouided in that part: so her sayde highnes exhorteth and straitly chargeth her sayd subiects to obserue her commaundement & pleasure in euery part aforesayd, as they will auoyd her highnes sayd indignation and most grieuous displeasure. The seueritie and rigor whereof, as her highnes shall bee most sory to haue cause to put the same in execution: so doth she vtterly determine not to permit such vnlawfull and rebellious doyngs of her subiects, wherof may ensue the daunger of her royall estate to remayne vnpunished, but to see her sayd lawes touching these points, to be throughly executed, which extremities, she trusteth all her sayd louyng subiects will foresee, dread, and auoyde accordingly: her sayd highnes straightly charging and commaundyng all Mayors, Shiriffes, Iustices of Peace, Bailiffes, Constables, and all other publike Officers and Ministers, diligently to see to the obseruyng and executyng of her sayde commaundementes and pleasure, and to apprehende all such as shall wilfully offend in this part, committynge the same to the next Gaole, there to remayne without bayle or maineprise, till vpon certificate made to her highnes or her priuy Counsaile, of their names and doyngs, and vpō examination had of their offences, some further order shall be taken for their punishment to the example of others, according to the effect and tenour of the lawes aforesayd. Yeuen at our Manor of Richmond, the 18. day of August, in the 1. yeare of our most prosperous raigne.

M. Bourne preaching at Paules Crosse.

*ABout this tyme or not long before, Boner B. of London beyng restored, appoynted M. Bourne a Canon of Paules, to preach at the Crosse, who afterward was B. of Bathe, he takyng occasion of the Gospell of the day to speake somewhat largely in iustifieng of Boner beyng thē present: * which Boner sayd he, vpon the same text in that place, that day foure yeares had preached before, and was vppon the same most cruelly and vniustly cast into y^e most vile Dungeon of the Marshalsey, and there kept duryng the tyme of King Edward. Hys wordes sounded so euill in the eares of the hearers, that they could not keep silence but began to murmur and to stirre in such sort, that the Mayor and Aldermen with other estates thē present, feared much an vprore. But the truth is, that one hurled a dagger at the preacher, but who it was, it could not then be prooued, albeit afterward it was knowen.

In fine, the sturre was such, that the Preacher pluckt in hys head, and durst no more appeare in that place. The matter of hys Sermon tended muche to the derogation and dispraise of King Edward: * which thyng the people in no case could abyde. Then M. Bradford at the request of the Preachers brother, and other then beyng in the pul: pit, stode foorth and spake so my^{••}ely, Christianly, and effectuously, that with fewe woordes he appeased all: and afterward he and M. Rogers conducted the Preacher betwixt them from the Pulpit to the Grammar schole doore, where they left him safe, as further in the story of Maister Bradford is declared. But shortly after they were both rewarded with long imprisonment, and last of all, with fire in Smithfield.

By reason of this tumult at Paules Crosse, an order was taken by the Lordes of the Counsaile with the Mayor and Aldermen of London, * that they calling the next day followyng a common counsaile of the Citie, should therby charge euery housholder to cause their children, apprentices, and other seruaunts, to keep their owne parish Churches vpon the holydays, and not to suffer them to attempt any thyng to the violatyng of the common peace. Willyng them also to signify the sayd assembly the Queenes determination vttered vnto them by her highnes the 12. of August in the Tower. Which was, that albeit her graces cōscience is stayed in matters of religion: yet she graciously ment not to compell or strayne other mens conscience otherwyse then God shal (as she trusted) put in their harts a perswasion of the truth that she is in, thorough the openyng of hys word vnto them, by godly vertuous, & learned preachers, &c.

Also it was then ordered, that euery Alderman in hys Ward, should forthwith send for the Curates of euery parish within their liberties, and to warne them not only to forbear to preach themselves, but also not to suffer any other to preach, or make any open or solemne readyng of scripture in their churches, vnles the sayd preachers were seuerally licensed by the Queene.

After this Sermon at Paules Crosse aforementioned, the next day after it followed, that the Queenes Gard was at the crosse with their weapons to gard the Preacher. And when men withdrew themselves from the Sermon, order was taken by the Mayor, that the Ancients of all companies should be present, least the preacher should be discouraged by hys small Auditorie.

August. 1553.

The 5. of August,^{*} an. 1553. was one William Rutler committed (by the Counsaile) to the Marshalsey, for vtterying certayne wordes agaynst Maister Bourne Preacher, for hys Sermon at Paules Crosse on Sunday last before.

The 16. of August, was Humfrey Palden committed to the Counter for wordes agaynst the sayd Bournes sermon at Paules crosse.

A letter to the Shiriffe of Buckingham and Bedford, for the apprehending of one Fisher person of Ammersham a preacher.^{*}

Another letter to the B. of Norwich, not to suffer any preacher or other to preach or expound the scripture openly without speciall licence from the Queene.

The same day was M. Bradford, M. Uernon and M. Beacon preachers committed to the charge of the Lieuutenant of the Tower.

The same day also was M. Iohn Rogers Preacher commanded to keepe himselfe prisoner in his owne house at Paules, without hauing conference with any other thē those of hys owne houshold.

The 22. of August, there was two letters directed to M. Couerdall B. of Exceter, & M. Hooper B. of Gloucester, for their indelayed repayre to the Court, and there to attend the Counsailes pleasure.

The same day Fisher person of Ammersham made his appearance before the Counsaile,^{*} according to their letter the 16. of August, and was appointed the next day to bring in a note of hys sermon.

The 24. of August was one Iohn Meluin a Scotte and and Preacher sente to Newgate in London by the Counsaile.

The 26. of August there was a letter sent to the Mayor of Couentry and his brethren, for the apprehension of one Symonds of Worcester preacher, and then Uicare of S. Michaels in Couentry,^{*} and for the sendyng of hym vp to the counsaile with his examinations and other matters they could charge hym with. With a Commission to them to punish all such as had by meanes of his preachyng▪ vsed any talke against the Queenes proceedings.

The 29. of August, M. Hooper B. of Worcester made his personall appearance before the Counsaile, accordyng to their letters the 22. of August.

The 31. of August, M. Couerdall B. of Exceter, made hys appearaunce before the Counsaile, according to theyr letters the 22. of August.

September. 1553.

The 1. of September, M. Hooper and M. Couerdall appeared againe before the Counsaile, whence M. Hooper was committed to the Fleete, and M. Couerdall commāded to attend the Lordes pleasure.

The 2. of September M. Hugh Saunders Uicare of S. Michaels in Couentry, was before the Counsaile for a sermon, and was commanded to appeare agayne vppon Monday next after.

The 4. of September a Letter was directed from the Counsaile to M. Hugh Latimer for his appearaunce before them.

About the 5. day of September the same yeare, Peter Martyr came to London from Oxford, where for a tyme he had bene commaunded to kepe his house, & found there the Archbishop of Canterbury, who offered to defend the doctrine of the booke of Common prayer, both by the scriptures and Doctors, assisted by Peter Martyr and a fewe other, as hereafter ye shall heare. But whilst they were in hope to come to Disputations, the Archbishop and other were imprisoned, but Peter Martyr was suffered to returne whence he came.

The same day there was a letter sent to the Mayor of Couentry to set Hugh Symonds at liberty if he would recant his Sermon, or els to stay hym,* and to signify so much to the Counsaile.

The 13. of September M. Hugh Latymer appeared before the counsaile accordyng to their letter the 4. of September, Page 1410 and was committed to the Tower close prisoner, hauing his seruant Austen to attend hym.

The same day the Archbishop of Caunterbury appearyng before the Counsaile, was commaunded to appeare the next day at after noone before them in the Starre chamber.

The 14. of September, the Archbishop of Caunterbury, accordyng to their former dayes commandement, made his appearaunce before the Lordes in the Starre chamber. Where, they charyng hym with treason, & spreadyng abroad of sedicious bils, to the disquieting of the estate, they committed hym from thence to the Tower of London, there to remayne till further Iustice and order at the Queenes pleasure.

The 15. of September, there was a letter sent to M. Horne Deane of Durham, for his appearaunce before thē, and another was sent to hym the 7. of October next after, for his speedie appearance.

The 16. of September, there was letters sent to the Mayors of Douer and Rye, to suffer all French Protestantes to passe out of this Realme, except suche, whose names shall be signified to them by the French Embassadour.

October. 1553.

*The first day of October, Queene Mary was crowned at Westminster, and the x. day of the sayd moneth of October then followyng, began the parliament with a solemne Masse of the holy Ghost, after the popish maner, celebrated with great pompe in the pallaice of Westminster. To the which Masse among the other Lordes, accordyng to the maner, should come the bishops, which yet remayned vndeposed, which were the Archb. of Yorke, D. Taylor B. of Lincolne, Iohn Harley B. of Herford. Of the bishops, D. Taylor, and M. Harley presenting themselues according to their duetie, and taking their place amongst the Lordes, after they saw the Masse begin, not abidyng the sight therof, withdrew themselues from the company: for the which cause the Bishop of Lincolne beyng examined, and protestyng his fayth, was vppon the same commanded to attend: who not long after at Ankerwyke by sicknesse departed. M. Harley, because he was married, was excluded both from the Parliament, and from hys bishoprike.

Masse beyng done, the Queene accompanied with the Estates of the Realme, was brought into the Parliament house, there according to the maner, to enter and begin the consultation.* At which consultation or Parliament were repealed all statutes made in the tyme of king Henry the 8. for Premunire, & statutes made in K. Edward the sixtes time for administration of common praier & the sacramēts in the English tongue: & further, the attainder of the duke of Northumberland was by this Parliament confirmed. In this meane while many men were forward in the erecting of aulters & masses in churches. And such as woulde sticke to the lawes made in K. Edwardes tyme, till other should be established: some of them were marked, & some presently apprehended.* Among whom sir Iames Hales, a knight of Kent, and Iustice of the Common place was one, who notwithstanding he had ventured hys lyfe in Queene Maries cause, in that he would not subscribe to y^e disheriting of her by the kings will, yet for that he did at a quarter Sessions geue charge vpon the statutes made in the tyme of Henry the 8. and Edward the 6. for the supremacie and religion,* he was imprisoned in the Marshalsey, Counter, and Fleete, and so cruelly handled & put in feare by talke, that the Warden of the Fleete vsed to haue in hys hearyng,* of such torments as were in preparyng for heretikes (or for what other cause God knoweth) y^t he sought to rid himselfe out of this life, by wounding himselfe wyth a knife: and afterward was contented to say as they willed him: wherupon he was discharged, but after that hee neuer rested till he had drowned himselfe in a riuer, halfe a myle from his house in Kent. Of whom more is to be seen when you come to his story.

During the time of this parliament, the Clergie lykewyse after their woonted maner,* had a Conuocation, with a disputation also appoynted by the Queenes commaundement, at Paules Church in London the same tyme, which was about the 18. of October. In the which Conuocation, first M. Iohn Harpesfield Bachelor of Diuinitie, made a sermon ad Clerum, the 16. of October. After the sermon done, it was assigned by the bishops, that they of the Clergye house, for auoyding confusion of woordes should chuse them a Prolocutor. To the which roome and office by common assent, was named Doc. Weston Deane of Westminster, and presented to the Bishops, with an Oration of M. Pie Deane of Chichester,* and also of Maister Wymbisley Archdeacon of London. Which D. Weston beyng chosen and brought vnto the bishops, made his gratulatory Oration to the house, with the answer agayne of B. Boner.

After these things thus sped in the conuocation house, they proceeded next to the Disputation appoynted, as is abouesayd, by the Queenes Commaundement, about the matter of the sacrament. Which disputation continued sixe dayes. Wherein D. Weston was chiefe on the Popes part who behaued himselfe outrageously in tauntyng and checking. In conclusion, such as disputed on the contrary part were driuen some to flee, some to deny, & some to die, thogh to the most mens iudgements that heard the disputation, they had the vpper hand, as here may appeare by y^e report of the sayd disputation, the copy whereof we thought here to annexe, as followeth.

The true report of the disputation had and begun in the Conuocation house at London, the 18 of October. Anno. 1553.

WHere as dyuers and vncertayne rumoures bee spread abroad of the Disputation had in the Conuocation house,* to the entent that all men may know the certaintie of all things therein done and sayd, as much as the memory of him that was present▪ thereat can beare away, hee hath thought good at request, throughly to describe what was sayd therein on both parties of the matters argued and had in question, and of the enterance thereof.

¶Acte of the first day.

First vpon Wednesday, beyng the 18. of October,* at after noone, M. Weston the Prolocutor certified the house that it was the Queenes pleasure,* that the company of the same house beyng learned men, assembled, should debate of matters of Religion, and constitute lawes therof, which her grace and the Parliament would ratifie. And for that (sayd he) there is a booke of late set forth, called the Catechisme (which he shewed forth) bearing the name of this honorable Synode, & yet put forth without your consents as I haue learned, beyng a booke very pestiferous, and full of heresies, and likewyse a booke of Common prayer very abominable (as it pleased hym to terme it) I thought it therefore best, first to beginne with the articles of the Catechisme, concernyng the sacrament of the aultar, to confirm the naturall presence of Christ in the same, and also transubstantiation: Wherefore (sayd he) it shall be lawfull on Friday next ensuyng, for all men freely to speake their conscience in these matters, that all doubts may be remooued, and they fully satisfied therein.

¶Acte of the second day.

The Friday commyng, beyng the 20. of October, whē men had thought they should haue entred Disputation of the questions proposed,* the Prolocutor exhibited two seuerall bils vnto the house: the one for the naturall presence of Christ in the sacrament of the aultar, the other concernyng the Catechisme, that it was not of that houses agrement set forth, and that they did not agree therunto: requiryng all them to subscribe to the same, as he hymselfe had done. Wherunto the whole house did immediately assent, except sixe, which were the Deane of Rochester,* the Deane of Exceter, the Archdeacon of Winchester, the Archdeacon of Hertford, the Archdeacon of Stow, and one other. And while the rest were about to subscribe these two articles. Iohn Philpot stood vp and spake first concernyng the Article of the Catechisme, that he thought they were deceiued in the title of the Catechisme, in that it beareth the tytyle of the Synode of London last before this, although many of them which then were present, were neuer made priuie thereof, in setting it forth,* for that this house had granted the authoritie to make ecclesiasticall lawes vnto certayne persons to be appoynted by the kings maiestie, & what so euer ecclesiasticall lawes they or the most part of them dyd set forth, according to a statute in that behalfe prouided, it might be well sayd to bee done in the Synode of London, although such as be of this house now, had no notice therof before the promulgation. And in this poynt he thought the setter forth therof, nothyng to haue slaundered y^e house as they by their subscription went about to perswade the world, since they had our Synodall authoritie vnto them committed, to make such spirituall lawes as they thought conuenient and necessary.

And moreouer he sayd, as concernyng the article of the naturall presence in the sacramēt, that it was against reason Page 1411 and order of learnyng, and also very preiudiciall to the truth, that men should be mooued to subscribe before the matte were throughly examined and discussed. But when he saw that allegation might take no place,* being as a mā astonied at the multitude of so many learned men as there were of purpose gathered together to maintayne olde traditions more then the truth of Gods holy word, he made his request vnto the Prolocutor, that where as there were so many auncient learned men present on that side,* as in y^e realme the like againe were not to be found in such number, & that on the other side of them that had not subscribed, were not past v. or vj. both in age and learnyng far inferior vnto them: therefore, that equalitie might bee had in this disputation, he desired that the Prolocutor would bee a meane vnto the Lords, that some of those that were learned, & setters forth of the same Catechisme might be broght into the house to shew their learning that mooued them to set forth the same,* and that D. Ridley & M. Rogers, with two or three mo, might be licenced to be present at this disputation, and to be associate with them.

This request was thought reasonable, and was proposed vnto the Bishops, who made this aunswer: that it was not in them to call such persons vnto our house, since some of them were prisoners. But they sayd, they would be petitioners in this behalfe vnto the Counsaile, and in case any were absent that ought to bee of the house, they willed them to bee taken in vnto them if they listed. After this they mindyng to haue entred into disputation, there came a Gentleman as messenger from the Lord great master, signifiyng vnto the Prolocutor, that the L. great maister, and the Earle of Deuonshire would be present at the disputations, and therefore he deferred the same vnto monday, at one of the clocke at after noone.

¶The Acte of the third day.

Upon Monday the xiiij. of October, at the time apointed,* in the presence of many Erles, Lordes, Knights, gentlemen, and diuers other of the Court and of the Citie also, the Prolocutor made a Protestation, that they of the house had appoynted this disputation, not to call the truth into doubt, to the which they had alredy all subscribed, sauing v. or sixe, but that those gainsayers might be resolued of their arguments in the which they stood, as it shall appeare vnto you, not doubting but they will also condescēd vnto vs.

Then he demanded of M. Haddon whether he would reason against the questions proposed, or no. To whom he made answer, that he had certified hym before in writyng, that he would not, since the request of such learned men as were demaunded to be assistent with them, would not bee graunted. M. Elmar likewyse was asked. Who made the Prolocutor the like aunswer, addyng moreouer this, that they had done too much preiudice already to the truth, to subscribe before the matter was discussed: and little or nothyng it might auayle to reason for the truth, since all they were now determined to the contrary. After this he demaunded of M. Cheyney, whome the Prolocutor sayd allowed the presence with them, but he denyed the transubstantiation by the meanes of certayne authorities vppon the which he standeth, and desireth to be resolued, as you shall heare, whether he will propose his doubtess concernyng Transubstantiation or no. Yea, quoth he, I would gladly my doubts to be resolued, which mooued me not to beleue Transubstantiation.

The first is out of S. Paule to the Cor. who speakyng of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ,* calleth it oft tymes bread after the consecration.

The second is out of Origene, who speaking of this sacrament sayth, that the material part therof goeth down to the excrements.

The third is out of Theodoretus, who making mention of the sacramentall bread and wine after the consecration, saith that they go not out of their former substance, forme, and shape. These be some of my doubts among many other, wherein I require to be answered.

Then the Prolocutor assigned D. Moreman to answer him,* who to Saint Paule answered him thus: That the Sacrament is called by hym bread in deede, but it is thus to be vnderstood, that it is the sacrament of bread, that is, the forme of bread.

Then M. Cheyney inferred and alledged, that Hesychius called the sacrament both bread and flesh.

Yea quoth Moreman, Hesychius calleth it bread, because it was bread, & not because it is so. And passing ouer Origen, he came to Theodoretus, & sayd, that men mistooke hys authoritie, by interpreting a general into a special, as Peter Martyr hath done in y^e place of Theodoret, interpretyng 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, for substance, which is a special signification of y^e word whereas 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is a general word, as well to accident, as to substance, and therefore I answer thus vnto Theodoret, y^t the sacramental bread and wine do not go out of their former substance, forme, and shape, that is to say, not out of their accidentall substance and shape.

After this M. Cheyney sat him downe, & by and by M. Elmar stood vp as one that could not abide to heare so fōd an answer to so graue an authoritie,* & reasoned vpon the authoritie of Theodoret alledged before by M. Cheyney▪ & declared that Moremans aunswer to Theodoret, was no iust nor sufficient answer, but an illusion and a subtil euasion contrary to Theodorets meaning. For, said he, if 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, should signify an accident in the place alledged, as it is answered by M. Moreman, then were it a word superfluous set in Theodoret there, where do follow two other wordes which sufficiently do expound the accidēces of y^e bread, y^t is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signify in English, shape and forme: & so prooue out of the same author by diuers allegations,* y^t 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in Greek could not be so generally taken in that place as Moreman for a shift would haue it. But Moreman, as a man hauing no other salue for that sore, affirmed stil that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifieth substance, must needs signify an accidental substance properly. To whose importunity, since he could haue no other answer. Elmar as a man wearied with his importunity, gaue place.

After this stood vp Iohn Philpot and sayd, * y^t hee could prooue that by the matter that Theodoret intreateth of in the place aboue alledged, and by the similitude whiche hee maketh to prooue his purpose, by no meanes M. Moremans interpretation of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, might be taken for an accidētall substaunce, as he for a shift would interprete it to be. For the matter which Theodoret intreateth of in y^t place, * is against Eutiches an hereticke, whiche denied two natures of substance to remayne in Christ beyng one person, and that his humanitie after the accomplishment of y^e mysterie of our saluation, ascendyng into heauen, * & being ioined vnto the Diuinitie, was absorpt or swallowed vp of y^e same, so that Christ should bee no more but of one deuine substance only by his opiniō. Against which opiniō Theodoret writeth, and by the similitude of the sacrament prooueth the contrary against the hereticke: that like as in the sacrament of the body of Christ after the consecratiō, there is the substance of Christes humanitie, with the substance of bread, remaining as it was befor, not beyng absorpt of y^e humanitie of Christ, but ioined by the deuine operation therunto, euen so in the person of Christ being now in heauen, of whom this sacrament is a representation, there bee two seuerall substances, that is, his diuinitie & humanitie vnited in one hypostasie or person, which is Christ, the humanitie not beyng absorpt by the coniunction of the diuinitie, but remaining in his former substance.

And this similitude quoth Philpot, brought in of Theodoret to confound Eutiches, should prooue nothing at al, if the very substance of the sacramentall bread dyd not remayne, as it did before. But if D. Moremans interpretation might take place for transubstantiatiō, then should the heretike haue thereby a strong argument by Theodorets authoritie, so taken to maintayne his heresie, * and to prooue hymselfe a good christen man, and he might well say thus vnto Theodoret. Like as thou Theodoret, if thou were of D. Moremans mynd, doest say, that after the consecration in the sacrament, the substaunce of the bread is absorpt or transubstantiate into the humane body of Christ commyng thereunto, so that in the sacrament is now but one substance of the humanitie alone, and not the substance of bread as it was before: euen likewise may I affirme and conclude by thine owne similitude, that the humanitie ascending vp by the power of God into heauen, & adioyned vnto the deitie, was by the might therof absorpt & turned into one substance with the deitie: so that now there remayneth but one diuine substance in Christ, no more then in the sacramental signes of the Lords supper, * after y^e consecration doth remayne any more then one substaunce, accordyng to your beliefe and construction.

In aunsweryng to this D. Moreman stackerd, whose defect Philpot perceiuyng, spake on this wyse. Well, M. Moreman, if you haue no answer at this present ready, I pray you deuise one, if you can conueniently, agaynst our next meetyng here agayne. *

With that his saying the Prolocutor was grieuously offended, tellyng hym that he should not bragge there, but that he should be fully answered. Then sayd Philpot, it is the thing that I only desire, to be answered directly in this behalfe, & I desire of you, & of all the house at this present▪ that I may be sufficiently answered, which I am sure you are not able to do, sauyn Theodoretus authoritie and similitude Page 1412 vpright, as he ought to be taken. None other answer then was made to Philpots reasons, but that hee was commaunded to silence.

Then stode vp the Deane of Rochester offering hym selfe to reason in the first question agaynst the natural presence,* wishing that the scripture and the auncient Doctors in this poynt might be weyghed, beleueed, and followed. And agaynst this naturall presence he thought the saying of Christ in Saint Mathew to make sufficiently enough, if men would credite and follow scripture, who sayd there of hymselfe, that poore men wee should haue alway with vs, but hym we should not haue alwayes: which was spoken, quoth he, concernyng the naturall presence of Christes body, therefore we ought to beleuee as hee hath taught, that Christ is not naturally present on earth in the sacrament of the aaltar.

To this was aunswered by the Prolocutor, that we should not haue Christ present alwayes to exercise almes deeds vpon hym,* but vpon the poore.

But the Deane prosecuted his argument, and shewed it out of S. Austen further,* that the same interpretation of the scripture alledged, was no sufficient aunswere, who writeth in the 50. treatise of S. Iohn on this wise, on the same sentence: When as he sayd (sayth S. Austen) me shall ye not haue alwayes with you, he spake of the presence of his bodye. For by his maiestie,* by his prouidence, by his vnspeakable & vnvisible grace, that is fulfilled which is sayd of him. Behold I am with you vntill the consummation of the world. But in the fleshe which the worde tooke vpon hym, in that which was borne of the virgin,* in that which was apprehended of the Iewes, whiche was crucified on the Crosse, which was let down from the crosse, which was wrapped in cloutes, which was hid in the Sepulchre, which was manifested in the resurrection, you shall not haue me alwayes with you. And why? for after a bodily presence he was conuersant with his disciples fortie dayes, and they accompanying him, seying and not folowing him, he ascended & is not here, for there he sitteth at the right hand of the father, and yet here he is, because he is not departed in the presence of hys maiestie. After another maner we haue Christ alwayes by presence of hys maiesty, but after the presence of his flesh it is rightly sayd: You shall not verily haue me alwayes with you. For the Church had hym in the presence of his flesh a few dayes, and now by fayth it apprehendeth hym and seeth hym, not with eyes.

*To this authority D. Watson tooke vpon him to aunswer, and sayd, he would answer S. Austen by S. Austen, and hauyng a certaine booke in hys hand of notes, he alledged out of the 70. treatise vpon S. Iohn, that after that mortall condition and maner we haue not now Christ on the earth as he was heretofore before his passion.

Agaynst whose aunswer, Iohn Philpot replyed and said,* that M. Watson had not fully answered S. Augustine by S. Augustine, as he would seeme to haue done, for that in the place aboue mentioned by M. Deane of Rochester, he doth not onely teach the mortall state of Christes body before his passion, but also the immortall condition of the same after his resurrection: in the which mortal body S. Augustine seemeth plainely to affirme, that Christ is not present vpon the earth, neither in forme visibly, neither in corporall substance inuisibly, as in few lynes after y^e place aboue alledged. S. Augustine doth more plainely declare by these wordes, saying: Now these two manners of Christes presence declared, which is by his maiestie, prouidence, & grace now present in the world, which before his ascension was present in flesh, and beyng now placed at the right hand of the father, is absent in the same from the world, I thinke (saith Saint Augustine) that there remaineth no other question in this matter.

Now quoth Philpot, if S. Augustine acknowledged no more presence of Christ to be now on earth, but onely his diuine presence, and touching his humanitie to bee in heauen, we ought to confesse and beleue the same. But if we put a third presence of Christ, that is, corporally to bee present always in the sacrament of the aultar inuisibly, according to your suppositions, whereof S. Augustine maketh no mention at all in all his works: you shal seeme to iudge that which S. Augustine did neuer comprehend.

*Why, quoth Watson, S. Augustine in the place by me alledged, maketh he not mention how S. Steuen beyng in this world, saw Christ after his ascension?

It is true, said Philpot, but he saw Christ, as the scripture telleth, * in the heauens beyng open, standyng at the right hand of God the father. Further to this Watson answered not.

Then the Prolocutor went about to furnish vp an answer to S. Augustine, saying, that he is not now in the world after that maner of bodily presence, * but yet present for all that in his body.

To whom Philpot answered, that the Prolocutor dyd grate much vpon this worde Secundum, in S. Augustine, * which signifieth after the maner, or in forme: but he doth not answer to id quod, which is that thyng or substance of Christ, in the which Christ suffred, arose, and ascended into heauen, in the which thing and substance he is in heauen, and not on earth, as S. Augustine in the place specified most clearely doth define.

To this nothing els beyng aunswered, the Deane of Rochester proceeded in the maintenance of his argument, * and read out of a booke of Annotations, sundry authorities for the confirmation therof. To the which Moreman, who was appointed to answer him, made no direct aunswer, but bade him make an argument, * saying that maister Deane had recited many wordes of Doctors, but he made not one argument.

Then said the Deane, the authorities of the doctors by me rehersed, be sufficient arguments to proue mine intent, to the which my desire is to be answered of you. But still Moreman cried, make an argument to shift of the authoritie, which he could not answer vnto. After this y^e Deane made this argument out of the institution of the sacramēt: Do this in remembraunce of me: and thus ye shall shew foorth the Lordes death vntill he come.

The sacrament is the remembrance of Christ: Ergo, * the sacrament is not very Christ: for yet he is not come. For these words, Vntill he come, do plainly signify the absence of Christes bodye. Then the Prolocutor went about to shew that these wordes Vntill he come, * did not import any absence of Christ on the earth, by other places of scripture, where, Donec, vntill, was vsed in like sense: but directly to the purpose he answered nothing.

In conclusiō, the Deane fel to questioning with Moreman, whether Christ did eate the Paschal lambe with hys disciples, or no? He answered, Yea. Further, he demanded whether he eate likewise the Sacrament with them, as he did institute it? Moreman aunswered, Yea. * Then he asked what he did eate, and whether he eate his owne naturall body, as they imagine it to be, or no? Which when Moreman had affirmed, then said the Deane, it is a great absurditie by you granted, and so he sate downe.

Against this absurditie, Philpot stood vp and argued,* saying, he could proue it by good reason deduced out of scripture, that Christ eat not his owne natural body at the institution of the sacrament, and the reason is this.

Ba- Receiuing of Christes body hath a promise of remission of sinnes with it annexed.*

ro- Christ eating the sacrament, had no promise of remission of sinne.

co. Ergo, Christ in the Sacrament did not eate his owne body.

To this reason Moreman answered,* denyng the former part of the argumēt, that the sacrament had a promise of remission of sinnes annexed vnto it.

Then Philpot shewed this to be the promise in the sacrament: Which is geuen for you, which is shed for you for the remission of sinnes. But Moreman would not acknowledge that to be any promise, so that he droue Philpot to the 6. of S. Iohn, to vouch this saying with these words: The bread which I will geue, is my flesh, which I will geue for the lyfe of the world.

Moreman aunswering nothing directly to this argument,* Harpsfield start vp to supply that which wanted in hys behalfe, and thinking to haue answered Philpot, confirmed more strongly his argumēt, saying: Ye mistake the promise which is annexed to the body of Christ in the Sacrament: for it pertained not to Christ, but to his Disciples, to whom Christ said: This is my body which is geuen for you, and not for Christ hymselfe.

You haue sayd well for me, quoth Philpot,* for that is myne argument. The promise of the body of Christ, tooke no effect in Christ: Ergo, Christ eate not his owne body.

Then the prolocutor to shoulder out the matter, sayd: the argument was naught.* For by the lyke argument he might go about to proue that Christ was not baptised, because the remission of sinne which is annexed vnto Baptisme, tooke no effect in Christ. To the which Philpot replied, that like as Christ was baptised,* so he eate the sacrament: but he tooke on hym Baptisme, not that he had any neede thereof, or that it tooke any effect in hym, but as our maister, to geue the church an example to folow him in the ministration of the sacrament, and therby to exhibite vnto vs hymselfe, and not to geue hymselfe to hymselfe.

No more was said in this. But afterward the Prolocutor demanded of Philpot, whether he would argue against the naturall presence, or no? To whom he answered, Yea, if he would heare hys Argument without interruption, Page 1413 and assigne one to aunswer him, and not many, which is a confusion to the Opponēt, & specially for him that was of an ill memory. By this time y^e night was come on, wherfore the Prolocutor brake vp the disputatiō for that tyme, and appointed Philpot to be the first that should begin the disputation the next day after,* concernyng the presence of Christ in the sacrament.

*ON the Wednesday the xxv. of Octob. Ioh. Philpot, as it was before appointed, was redy to haue entred the disputation, mynding first to haue made a certaine Oration, and a true declaration in Latine of the matter of Christes presence, which was then in question. Which thing the Prolocutor perceiuyng, by and by he forbade Philpot to make any Oration or declaration of any matter, commanding him also, that he should make no argument in Latin but to conclude on his arguments in English.

*Then said Philpot, this is contrary to your order takē at the beginning of this disputatiō. For then you appointed that all the arguments should be made in Latine, and thereupon I haue drawn and deuised all myne argumēts in Latine. And because you M. Prolocutor haue said heretofore openly in this house, that I had no learning, I had thoght to haue shewed such learning as I haue, in a brieue Oration and short declaration of the questions now in cōtrouersie, thinking it so most conuenient also, that in case I should speake otherwise in my declaration then should stand with learnyng, or then I were able to warrant and iustifie by gods word, it might the better be refourmed by such as were learned of the house, so that the vnlearned sort beyng present, might take the lesse offence therat. But this allegation preuayled nothyng with the Prolocutor, who bade hym still forme an argument in Englishe, or els to hold hys peace.

Then sayd Philpot, You haue sore disappoynted me, thus sodenly to go from your former order: but I will accomplish your commandement, leauyng myne oration apart: and I wil come to my arguments, the which as wel as so sodaine a warnyng will serue, I will make in English.* But before I bring forth any argument, I will in one word declare what maner of presence I disallow in the sacrament, to the intent y^e hearers may the better vnderstand to what end & effect myne arguments shal tend: not to deny vtterly the presence of Christ in his Sacrament truely ministred according to his institution, but onely to deny that grosse & carnal presence which you of this house haue alrede subscribed vnto, to be in the sacrament of the aultar contrary to the true & manifest meaning of the scriptures:* that by Transubstantiation of the sacramentall bread and wyne, Christes naturall body should by the vertue of the words pronounced by the Priest, be conteyned and included vnder the formes or accidences of bread & wyne. This kind of presence imagined by men, I do deny, quoth Philpot, and agaynst this I wyll reason. But before he could make an end of that he would haue sayd, he was interrupted of the Prolocutor, and commaunded to descend to hys argument. At whose vniust importunitie Philpot beyng offended, and thinkyng to purchase hym a remedy therefore,* he fell downe vpon hys knees before the Earles and Lordes which were there present, beyng a great number: wherof some were of the Queenes counsaile, beseechyng them that he might haue libertie to prosecute hys arguments without interruption of any man: the which was gently graunted hym of the Lordes. But the Prolocutor puttyng in vre a poynt of the practise of Prelates, would not condescend therunto, but still cryed: hold your peace, or els make a short argument. I am about it, quoth Philpot, if you would let me alone. But first I must needes aske a question of my Respondent (who was D. Chedsey) concerning a word or twaine of your supposition, that is, of the sacrament of the aultar, what he meaneth thereby, and whether he take it as some of the ancient writers doe,* termyng the Lordes Supper the Sacrament of the aultar partly because it is a Sacrament of that liuely sacrifice which Christ offered for our sinnes vpon the aultar of the Crosse, and partly because that Christes body crucified for vs, was that bloody sacrifice which the bloudsheddyng of all the beastes offered vpon the aultar in the old lawe, dyd prefigure and signify vnto vs: in signification whereof the old writers sometime do call the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, among other names which they ascribe there vnto the sacrament of the aultar, or whether you take it otherwyse, as for the sacrament of the aultare, which is made of lime and stone, ouer the which the sacrament hangeth, and to be all one with the sacrament of the Masse, as it is at this present in many places. This done, I wyll direct mine arguments according as your answer shall geue me occasion.

Then made D. Chedsey this answer,* that in their supposition they tooke the sacrament of the aultar, and the sacrament of the Masse to be all one.

Then quoth Philpot, I wyll speake plaine English, as M. Prolocutor willeth me, and make a short resolutiō therof: that the sacrament of the aultar which ye reckon to be all one with the masse, once iustly abolished, & now put in full vse agayne, is no sacrament at all, neither is Christ in any wyse present in it: and this his sayeng he offred to prooue before the whole house, if they listed to cal him therunto: and likewyse offered to vouche the same before the Queenes grace, & her most honourable Counsaile, before the face of vj. of the best learned men of the house of the contrary opinion, and refused none. And if I shall not be able (quoth he) to maintayne by Gods word that I haue said, & confound those vj. which shall take vpon them to withstand me in this poynt, let me be burned with as many fagots as be in London, before the court gates. This he vttered with great vehemency of spirit.

At this the Prolocutor with diuers other, were very much offended, demanding of hym whether he wist what he sayd, or no? Yea, quoth Philpot, I wote well what I say, desiring no mā to be offended with his saying, for that he spake no more thē by gods word he was able to proue.* And praysed be God, quoth he, that the Queenes grace, hath granted vs of this house (as our Prolocutor hath informed vs) that wee may freely vtter our consciences in these matters of controuersie in Religion: and therefore I will speake here my conscience freely grounded vpō gods holy worde for the truth, albeit some of you here present mislike the same.

Then diuers of the house beside the Prolocutor, taunted & reprehended hym for speaking so vnfaringly against the Sacrament of the Masse:* and the Prolocutor sayd he was mad, & threatned hym that he would send hym to prison, if he would not cease hys speakyng.

Philpot seeyng hymselfe thus abused,* & not permitted with free liberty to declare his mynd, fel into an exclamation, castyng his eyes vp towards the heauen, and said, O Lord what a world is this, that the truth of thy holy word may not be spoken & abidden by? and for very sorrow and heauines, the teares trickled out of hys eyes.

After this, the Prolocutor beyng moued by some that were about hym,* was content that he should make an argument, so that he would be briefe therein. I wyll be as briefe, quoth Philpot, as I may conueniently be in vtterynge all that I haue to say. And first I wil begin to groūd myne arguments vpon the authority of scriptures, wherupon all the buildyng of our fayth ought to be grounded: & after I shall confirme the same by ancient doctors of the church. And I take the occasion of my first argument out of the 28. of Mathew,* of the sayeng of the angell to the thre Maries sekyng Christ at the sepulchre, sayeng: He is risen, he is not here: and in S. Luke in the 23. chap. the angell asketh thē, why they sought hym that lyueth among y^e dead.* Likewyse the scripture testifieth that Christ is risen, ascēded into heauen, and sitteth on the right hand of y^e father: all the which is spoken of hys naturall body: Ergo, it is not on earth included in the sacrament.

I will confirme this yet more effectually by the sayeng of Christ, in the 16. of S. Iohn: *I came (sayth Christ) from my father into the world, and now I leaue the world, and goe away to my father. The which commyng and goyng he ment of hys naturall body. Therefore we may affirme thereby, that it is not now in the world.

But I looke here (quoth he) to be aunswered wyth a blynd distinction of visibly and inuisibly, * that he is visibly departed in his humanitie, but inuisibly he remaineth, not withstanding in the sacrament. But that answer I preuēt my selfe, that w^t more expedition I may descend to the pith of myne arguments, whereof I haue a dosen to propose, & will proue that no such distinction ought to take away the force of that argument, by the answer which Christes disciples gaue vnto hym, speakyng these words: Nowe thou speakest plainly, and vttrest forth no Prouerbe. * Which wordes S. Cyrill interpretyng, sayth: That Christ spake without any maner of ambiguitie, or obscure speach. And therefore I conclude hereby thus, that if Christ spake plainely & without parable, saying: I leaue the world now, and goe away to my father, then that obscure, darke, & inperceptible presence of Christes natural body to remayne in the sacrament vpon earth inuisibly, contrary to the playne wordes of Christ, ought not to be allowed. For nothing can be more vncertain, or more parabolical & vnsensible, then so to say. Here now will I attend what you will answer, & so descend to the confirmation of all that I haue said, by anciēt writers.

Page 1414 Then D. Chedsey reciting his argument in such order as it was made, * tooke vpon him to answeere seuerally to euery parte therefore on this wise. First to the saying of the Angell, * That Christ is not heere: And why seeke yee the liuing among the dead? He answered, that these sayings pertained nothing to the presence of Christes naturall body in the sacrament, but that they were spoken of Christes body being in the Sepulchree when the three Maries thought hym to haue bene in the graue still. And therfore the Angell sayde: Why doe yee seeke him that liueth, among the deade? And to the authoritie of the 16. of Iohn where Christ saith: Now I leaue the worlde, and goe to my Father. Hee meant that of hys Ascension. And so likewise did Cyril, interpreting the saying of the disciples that knewe plainly that Christ would visibly ascend into heauen, but that doeth not exclude the inuisible presence of his naturall body in the Sacrament. For S. Chrysostome wryting to the people of Antioche, doeth affirm the same, comparing Helias and Christ together, and Helias cloake vnto Christes flesh. * Helias (quoth he) when he was taken vppe in the fierie chariote, leaft his cloake behinde him vnto his disciple Helisaeus. But Christe ascending into heauen, tooke his flesh with him, and left also his flesh behind him. Wherby we may right well gather, that Christes flesh is visibly ascended into heauen, and inuisibly abideth still in the Sacrament of the altare.

To this Philpot replied, and said, you haue not directly answered to the saying of the angel: Christ is risen, and is not heere, because you haue omitted that which was y^e chiefest poynt of all. * For (sayd he) I proceeded further, as thus: He is risen, ascended, and sitteth at the right hande of God the father: Ergo, he is not remaining on the earth. Neither is your answeere to Cyril, by me alleaged, sufficient. But by and by I will returne to your interpretation of Cyrill, and more plainly declare the same, after that I haue first refelled the authority of Chrysostome, which is one of your chief Principles that you alleaged to make for your grosse carnall presence in the sacrament. Which being wel weied and vnderstanded, pertaineth nothing thereunto.

At that the Prolocutour startled, that one of the chiefe pillars in this point should be ouerthrowen, & therefore recited the sayd authoritie in Latine first, & afterward Englished the same, wyllinge all that were present, to note that saying of Chrysostome, which he thought inuincible on their side. But I shall make it appeare, quoth Philpot, by and by to make litle for your purpose. And as he was about to declare his minde in that behalfe, the Prolocutor did interrupt him as he did, almost continually. Wherwith Philpot not being content,* said: Master Prolocutour thinketh that he is in a Sophistrie schoole, where he knoweth right well the maner is, that when the Respondent perceiueth that he is like to be inforced with an argument to the which he is not able to answer, then he doth what he can with caullation & interruption to driue him from the same. This saying of Philpot was ill taken of the Prolocutor and his adherents: and the Prolocutor said, that Philpot could bring nothing to auoid that authoritie, but his owne vaine imagination. Heare quoth Philpot, and afterward iudge. For I wil do in this as al other authorities wherwith you shal charge me in refelling any of my argumentes that I haue to prosecute, answering either vnto the same by sufficient authorities of scripture, or els by some other testimonye of like authoritie to yours, & not of mine owne imagination: the which if I doe, I will it to be of no credite. And concerning the saying of Chrysostom, I haue 2. wayes to beat him from your purpose, the one oute of Scripture, the other of Chrysostome him selfe, in the place here by you alleaged.

First, where hee seemeth to say, that Christe ascending, tooke hys flesh with him,* and least also hys flesh behinde him, truth it is: for we all do confesse and beleue that Christ tooke on hym oure humane nature in the virgine Maryes wombe, and through his passyon in the same, hath vnyted vs to hys flesh, and thereby are we become one fleshe with him, so that Chrysostome might therfore right well say, that Christ ascending tooke his fleshe which hee receiued of the virgin Mary, away with him: and also left his flesh behind him, which are we that be his electe in this worlde, whych are the mēbers of Christ, and flesh of his flesh: as very aptly S. Paul to the Ephes. in the 5. chap. doth testifie, saying: We are flesh of his flesh, and bones of his bones. And if percase any man will reply, that he entreateth there of the Sacrament, so that this interpretation can not so aptly be applied vnto him in that place,* then will I yet interpret Chrysostome an other way by himselfe. For in that place a fewe lines before those woordes, whyche were heere no rather read, are these woordes: that Christe after hee Ascended into heauē, lea^t vnto vs indued w^t his Sacramēts, his flesh in mysteries, that is, Sacramentally. And that mysticall flesh Christ leaueth as well to his Church in the Sacrament of Baptisme, as in the sacramentall bread and wine. And that S. Paul iustly doth witnes, saying: As many of vs as are baptised in Christ, haue put vpon vs Christ.* And thus you maye vnderstande that S. Chrysostome maketh nothyng for your carnall and grosse presence in the Sacrament, as you wrongfully take him.

Nowe in this meane while M. Pye rounded the Prolocutor in the eare to put Philpot to silence and to appoint some other, mistrusting lest he would shrodely shake theyr carnal presence in cōclusion, if he held on long, seeing in the beginning he gaue one of their chiefe foundations suche a plucke. Then the Prolocutor sayde to Philpot,* that he had reasoned sufficiently enough, & that some other shuld now supply his rowme. Wherwith he was not wel cōtent, saying: Why sir, I haue a dosen Argumentes concerning this matter to be proposed, and I haue not yet scarce ouergone my first Argument: for I haue not brought in any confirmation therof out of any auncient wryter (whereof I haue for the same purpose manye) beinge hitherto still letted by your oft interrupting of me.

Wel, quoth y^e Prolocutor, you shal speake no more now, and I commaund you to holde your peace. You perceyue, quoth Philpot, that I haue stufte enoughe for you, and am able to withstand your false supposition, and therefore you commaund me to silence. If you will not geue place, quoth y^e Prolocutor, I wil send you to prison. This is not,* quoth Philpot, accordinge to youre promise made in this house, nor yet according to your brag made at Paules crosse, that men should be answered in this disputation, to whatsoeuer they cā say, since you wil not suffer me of a dosen arguments to prosecute one.

Then M. Pie tooke vpon him to promise that he shuld be answered an other day. Philpot seeing he myghte not proceede in hys purpose, being therewith iustly offended, ended, saying thus: A sort of you here, which hitherto haue lurked in corners, and dissembled with God & the worlde, are nowe gathered together to suppress the sincere truthe of Gods holy woorde, and to sette forth euerye false deuise, which by the Catholike doctrine of the Scripture, yee are not able to maintaine.

Then stepped forth M. Elmar Chapleine to the Duke of Suffolke:,* whome M. Moreman tooke vpon him to answere. Against whō M. Elmar objected diuers and sundry authorities for the confirming of the argument he toke the day before in hand to proue, that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in the sentence of Theodoret brought in by M. Cheiney,* must needes signifie substance, and not accidence. Whose reasons and approbations, because they were all grounded and broughte out of the Greeke I doe passe ouer, for that they want theyr grace in English, and also their proper vnderstanding.* But hys allegations so incombred M. Moreman, that hee desired a day to oueruiew them, for at that instant he was wythout a conuenient answeare.

Then did the Prolocutor cal M. Haddon deane of Exeter, & Chaplaine to the Duke of Suffolke,* who prosecuted Theodoret's authoritie in confirminge M. Elmar's argument. To whom D. Watson tooke vpon hym to geue aunswer, who after long talk was so confounded, that he was not able to answer to the word Mysterium. But for as much as he seemed to doubt therein, M. Haddon tooke out of his bosome a Latine author to confirme his saying, & shewed the same to M. Watson, asking him whether he thought y^t translation to be true, or y^t the Printer were in any fault.* There may be a fault in the Printer, quoth Watson, for I am not remembred of this worde. Then did M. Haddon take out of his bosome a Greeke booke, wherein he shewed forth with his finger the same wordes, whiche M. Watson could not deny. His arguments further I omit to declare at large, because they were for the moste parte in Greeke, about the boulding out of the true signification of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

Thē stept forth M. Perne,* & in argument made declaration of his minde against transubstātiation, & confirmed the sayings and authorities alleaged by M. Elmar & M. Haddon. To whome the Prolocutor answered, saying: I much maruel, M. Perne, that you wil say thus, for somuch as on friday last you subscribed to the contrary. Which hys saying master Elmar did mislike, saying to the Prolocutor that he was to blame so to reprehend any man,* partlye for that this house (quoth he) is an house of free libertye for euery man to speake his conscience, and partly for that you promised yester day, that notw^tstanding any man had subscribed, yet he should haue free libertie to speake his mind. And for that the night did approche, and y^e time was spent, the Prolocutor geuing them praises for their learning, did yet notwithstanding conclude, that al reasoning set apart, the order of the holy churche must be receiued, & all thyngs must be ordered thereby.

The acte of the fift day.

ON Friday the 27. of Octob. D. Weston the Prolocutor did first propounde the matter, shewing that the Conuocation had spent 2. dayes in disputation already aboute one only doctor,* which was Theodoret, & about one onely worde, which was 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Yet were they come the 3. daye to answer al things that could be obiected, so that they would shortly put out their argumēts. So M. Haddon Deane of Exeter, desired leaue to appose M. Watson, which wyth 2. other mo, that is, Morgan & Harpsfield, was apoynted to answer.* M. Haddon demaunded this of him, whether any substāce of bread or wine did remaine after the consecration. Then Master Watson asked of him againe, whether he thought there to be a reall presence of Christes body or no? M. Haddon saide, it was not meete nor orderlike, that hee which was apoynted to be respondent, should be opponent, & he whose duty was to obiect, shuld answer. Yet M. Watson along while would not agree to answer, but that thing first being granted him. At last an order was set, and M. Haddon had leaue to go forward with his argument.

Then he prooued by Theodorets words, a substance of breade and wine to remaine. For these are his wordes: The same they were before the sanctification,whiche they are after. M. Watson sayde, that Theodoret meant not the same substance, but the same essence. Whereupon they were driuen againe vnto the discussing of the Greeke woorde 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , and M. Haddon prooued it to meane a substaunce, bothe by the Etimologie of the word, and by the wordes of the Doctor. For 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 (quoth he) cōmeth of the Participle 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , which descendeth of the verbe 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , and so commeth the Noun 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , which signifieth substance.

Then M. Watson answered that it had not that signification onely. But M. Haddon prooued y^t it must nedes so signifie in that place. Then hee asked Watson when the bread & wine became Symboles? Wherunto he answered: after the consecration and not before. Then gathered M. Haddon this reason out of hys author.

Da- The same thing, saieth Theodoret, that the bread and wine were before they were Symboles, the same they remaine still in nature and substance,* after they are Symboles.

ti- Bread and wine they were before:

si. Therefore bread and wine they are after.

Then M. Watson fell to the deniall of the authour, and said he was a Nestorian:* and he desired y^t he might answer to master Cheiney, whyche stode by, for that he was more meete to dispute in the matter, because he had granted and subscribed vnto the real presence. M. Cheyney desired pacience of the honorable men to heare hym, trusting that he should so open the matter, that the veritie should appeare: protesting furthermore,* that he was no obstinate nor stubburne man, but would be conformable to all reason: and if they by their learning, which he acknowledged to be much more then his, could answer his reasons, then he would be ruled by them, and say as they sayd: for he would be no author of schisme, nor hold any thing cōtrary to the holy mother the church, which is Christes spouse. D. Weston liked this well, and commended him highly, saying that he was a well learned and a sober man, & well exercised in all good learning, and in the Doctors, and finallye a man meete for his knowledge to dispute in that place: I pray you heare him, quoth he. Then Master Cheiney desired such as there were present to pray 2. words with him vnto God, and to say, Vincat veritas, Lette the veritie take place, and haue the victorie:* and all that were present cried with a loud voyce, Vincat veritas, vincat veritas.

Then sayde D. Weston to him, that it was hypocriticall. Men may better say (quoth he) Vincit veritas, Trueth hath gotten the victorie.* Master Cheyny sayd againe, if he woulde geue hym leaue, he woulde bryng it to that poynte that he might wel say so.

Then he began wyth M. Watson after thys sorte: you sayd,* that M. Haddon was vnmete to dispute, because hee graunteth not the naturall and real presence: but I say you are muche more vnmeete to aunswere, because you take away the substance of the sacrament.

M. Watson said, he had subscribed to the real presence, & should not go away from that.* So sayde Weston also, & the rest of the Priestes, in so muche that for a greate while hee could haue no leaue to say any more, till the Lordes spake, and willed that he should be heard.

Then he tolde them what hee meant by his subscribing to the reall presence, farre otherwyse then they supposed. So then he went forward, and prosecuted M. Haddons argument in prouing that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 was a substance, vsing the same reason that M. Haddon did before him: and when he had receiued the same aunswere also that was made to M. Haddon, he said it was but a le•d refuge, when they could not answer, to deny the author, & proued the author to be a catholike doctor: and that being proued, he confirmed that was saide of the nature and substance, further. The similitude of Theodorete is this, quoth he: As the token of Christes body and bloud after the inuocation of the Prieste, doe change their names, & yet continue the same substaunce, so the body of Christ after his ascension changed his name, & was called immortall, yet had it his former fashion, figure, & circumscription, and to speake at one word, the same substance of his body. Therefore said M. Cheiney,* if in the former part of the similitude you denye the same substaunce to continue, then in y^e later parte of the similitude which agreeth with it, I wil deny the body of Christ after his ascensiõ to haue the former nature & substance. But y^t were a great heresy: therefore it is also a great heresye to take away the substance of bread and wine after the sanctification.

Then was M. Watson enforced to saye, that the substaunce of the bodye in the former parte of the similitude brought in by him, did signifie quantitie & other accidentes of the sacramentall tokens which be s•ene, and not the very substance of the same: and therfore Theodorete saith, Quae videntur. &c. that is, Those things which be seene. For according to Philosophie, the accidentes of things be seene, and not the substances.

Then M. Cheiney appealed to the honorable mē, and desired that they shoulde geue no credite to them in so saying: for if they should so thinke as they woulde teache,* after theyr Lordshippes had ridden 40. miles on horsebacke (as their busines doth sometime require) they should not be able to say at night, that they sawe their horses all y^e day, but only the colour of theyr horsses: and by hys reason Christe must go to schole & learne of Aristotle to speake. For when he saw Nathanaell vnder the fig tree, if Aristotle had stand by, he would haue said no Christe, thou sawest not him, but the colour of him. After this Watson sayde, what if it were graunted that Theodoret was on the other side? whereas they had one of that opinion, there were an hundred on the other side.

Then the Prolocutor called for M. Morgan to helpe: and sayd,* that Theodoret did not more then he might lawfully do. For first he graunted the truthe, and then for feare of suche as were not fully instructed in the faythe, he spake, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is, couertly, and in a mysterie: and thys was lawfull for him to do, for first he graunted the trueth, and called them the body of Christ, & bloud of Christ. Then afterward he seemed to geue somewhat to the sences, and to reason, but that Theodorete is of the same minde that they were of, the words folowing, quoth he, do declare. For that which followeth is a cause of that whiche went before, and therefore he sayth: The immortalitie. &c.* Whereby it doth appeare, that he meante the diuine nature, & not the humane. Then was Morgan taken w^t misalleging of the text. For the booke had not this word (for). For the Greeke word did rather signify (truly) & not (for) so that it mighte manifestly appeare that it was the beginning of a newe matter, & not a sentence rendring a cause of that he had sayd before.

Then was it said by Watson again: suppose that Theodoret be wyth you, whych is one that we neuer hearde 〈◇〉 printed, but two or three yeres ago: Yet he is but one, and what is one against the whole consent of the church? After this M. Cheyney inferred, that not only Theodorete was of that minde, that the substance of bread and wine doe remaine, but diuers other also, & speciallye Irenaeus, who making mention of this sacrament, sayth thus: when the cuppe whych is mingled with wine, and the breade that is broken,*doe receiue the worde of God, it is made the Euchariste of the bodye and bloude of Christ, by the whiche the substaunce of our flesh is nourished, and doeth consist. If the thanks geuing doe nourish our body, then ther is some substance besides Christes body.

To the which reason both Watson and Morgan aunswared, that Ex quibus, By the whych,* in the sentence of Irenaeus, was referred to the next antecedent, that is, to the body and bloud of Christ, and not to the wine which is in the cup, and the bread that is broken.

Master Cheiney replied,* that it was not the bodye of Christ which norished our bodies. And let it be that Christes flesh norisheth to immortalitie, yet it doth not answere that argument, although it be true, no more then that aunswere which was made to my allegation out of S. Paule: The bread which we breake, &c. w^t certaine other like: whereunto you answered, that bread was not taken there in hys proper signification, but for that it had bene: no more then the rod of Aaron which was taken for the serpent, because it had beene a serpent. After this M. Cheyney broughte in Page 1416 Hesechius,* and vsed the same reason that hee did of the custome of burning of Symboles, and hee asked them what was burnt. Master Watson sayd, we must not enquire nor aske, but if there were any faulte, impute it to Christ. Then sayde M. Cheiney, whereof came those ashes? not of a substance? or can anye substance arise of accidents?

Then was M. Harpsfield called in to see what he could say in the matter.* Who told a faire tale of the omnipotencie of God, and of the imbecilitie and weaknesse of mans reasons not able to attaine to godly things. And he sayde, that it was conuenient whatsoeuer we sawe, felt, or tasted, not to trust our sences. And he tolde a tale out of S. Cyprian, how a woman sawe the Sacrament burning in her cofer,* and that which burned there, quoth Harpsfielde, burneth heere, and becōmeth ashes. But what that was that burnt he could not tell. But M. Cheiney continued still, and forced them with this question, what it was that was burnt? It was eyther (sayde he) the substance of breade, or els the substaunce of the body of Christe, which were too much absurditie to graunt. At length they answered, that it was a miracle, wherat M. Cheiney smiled, and sayd that he could then say no more.

Then D. Weston asked of the company there, whether those menne were sufficiently answered or no.* Certaine Priestes cried Yea, but they were not heard at all: for the great multitude which cried No, no. Which cry was heard and noised almost to the ende of Paules. Whereat D. Weston being much mooued, answered bitterly, that hee asked not the iudgement of the rude multitude & vnlearned people, but of them which were of the house. Then asked he of M. Haddon and his fellowes, whether they woulde aunswere them other three dayes. Haddon, Cheiney, and Elmar, sayd No. But the Archdeacon of Winchester stode vp and sayde, that they should not say but they should be aunswared, and though all other did refuse to answer, yet he would not,* but offered to answer them all one after another.* wyth whose profer the Prolocutor was not contēted, but raised on him, and sayd that he should goe to Bedlem: to whome the Archdeacon soberly made this answer: that he was more worthy to be sent thether, who vsed himselfe so ragingly in that disputation, without any indifferent equalitie. Then rose D. Weston vp, and sayde:

All the company hath subscribed to our Article, sauing only these men which you see.* What their reasons are, you haue heard. We haue answered them 3. daies, vppon promise (as it pleased him to descāt, wythout truth, for no such promise was made) that they should answer vs againe as long, as the order of disputation doeth require, and if they be able to defend theyr doctrine, let them so doe.

Then M. Elmar stood vp & prooued how vaine a man Weston was,* for hee affirmed that they neuer promised to dispute, but only to open & testifie to the worlde their consciences: For whē they were required to subscribe, they refused, and sayd that they would shewe good reasons whych mooued them that they coulde not with their consciences subscribe, as they had partly alreadye done, and were able to doe more sufficiently: therefore (quoth he) it hath bene ill called a disputation, & they were worthy to be blamed that were the authours of that name. For we meant not to dispute, nor now meane not to answer, before our argumēts (quoth he) which we haue to propounde, be soluted, according as it was appoynted: For by answering we shoulde but incumber ourselues, and profit nothing, since the matter is already decreed vppon and determined, what soeuer we shall prooue, or dispute to the contrary.

The acte of the sixte day.

*ON Mondaye following, being the 30. of October, the Prolocutor demaunded of Iohn Philpot Archdeacon of Winchester, whether he would answere in the questions before propounded to their obiections, or no? To whome he made this answeare, that he woulde willingly so doe, if, according to theyr former determination, they would firste aunswere sufficiently to some of hys argumentes, as they had promised to do: wherof he had a dozen, not halfe of the first being yet decided: And if they woulde aunswere fully, and sufficiently but to one of his Arguments, he promised that he would answere all the obiections that they shoulde bryng.

Then the Prolocutor bade him propounde hys Argument, and it should be resolutely answered by one of them: whereunto M. Morgan was appoynted.* Upon Wensday last (quoth he) I was inforced to silence before I had prosecuted halfe of mine Argument: the summe whereof was this (as was gathered by the iust context of the scripture) that the humain body of Christ was ascended into heauen, and placed on the right hand of God the father: wherefore it coulde not be situate vpon earth in the sacrament of the altare, inuisible after the imagination of man. The argument was denied by Morgan: For the profe wherof, Philpot sayd, that this was it wherwith he had to confirme his first argument, if they would haue suffred him y^e other day, as now he trusted they would.

Fe- One selfe and same nature (quoth he) receiueh not in it selfe any thing that is contrary to it selfe.*

ri- But the body of Christ is an humane nature, distincte from the Deitie, and is a proper nature of it selfe.

o. Ergo, it cannot receiue any thyng that is contrarye to that nature, and that varieth from it selfe.

But bodely to be present, and bodely to be absent, to be on earth, and to be in heauen, and al at one present time, be things contrary to the nature of an humaine body, Ergo, it cannot be saide of the humaine body of Christ, that the selfe same body is both in heauen, & also in earth at one instant, either visibly or inuisibly.

Morgan denied the Maior, that is,* the firste parte of the argument. The which Philpot vouched out of Vigilius an auncient wryter.* But Morgan caulled that it was no scripture, and bade him prooue the same out of scripture.

Philpot sayd he could also so do, and right well deduce the same out of S. Paule, who sayeth, that Christ is like vnto vs in all poyntes, except sinne: and therefore like as one of our bodies cannot receiue in it selfe any thing contrarye to the nature of a body, as to be in Paules church, and at Westminster at one instant, or to be at Londō visibly, & at Lincoln inuisibly at one time: for that is so contrary to the nature of a body,* and of all creatures (as Didimus and Basilius affirme) that an inuisible creature, as an Angell, cannot be at one time in diuers places, wherefore he concluded, that the body of Christ might not be in moe places then in one, which is in heauen, and so consequently, not to be contained in the sacrament of the altare.

To thys the Prolocutor tooke vpon him to answeare,* saying, that it was not true that Christe was like vnto vs in all poynts, as Philpot tooke it, except sinne,* For y^t Christ was not conceiued by the seede of man, as we be.

Whereunto Philpot againe replied, that Christes conception was prophesied before by the Angel to be supernatural, but after he had receiued our nature by the operation of the holy Ghost in the virgins wombe, hee became in all poynts like vnto vs, except sinne.

Then Morgan inferred that thys saying of Paule dyd not plainly proue his purpose. Wel, quoth Philpot,* I perceiue that you do answere but by cauillation, yet am I not destitute of other scriptures to confirme my first argumēt,* although you refuse the probation of so ancient and catholicke a doctour as Vigilius is. Sainte Peter in the sermone that he made in the thirde of the Actes, making mention of Christe, sayth these woordes, whome heauen must receiue vntill the consummation of all things. &c.* Which words are spoken of hys humanitie. If heauen must holde Christ, then can hee not be heere on earth in the Sacrament, as is pretended.

Then Morgan laughing at this,* and geuing no direct answer at all, Harpfield stooode vp, being one of the Bishop of Londons chaplaines, and tooke vpon him to answer to the saying of S. Peter, & demaunded of Philpot, whether he would, ex necessitate, that is, of necessitie, force Christ to any place, or no?

Philpot sayd, that he would no otherwise force Christe of necessity to any place,* then he is taught by the wordes of the holy Ghost, which sounde thus: that Christes humaine body must abide in heauen vntill the day of iudgement, as I rehearsed out of the chapter before mentioned.

Why quoth Harpsfield, do you not knowe that Christe is God omnipotent? Yes said Philpot,* I know that right wel, neither doubt I any thing at all of his omnipotencie. But of Christes omnipotencie what he may do, is not our question, but rather what he doeth. I knowe he may make a stone in the wall a manne, if he liste, and also that he may make moe worldes, but doeth he therefore so? It were no good consequent so to conclude: hee maye doe this, or that, therefore he doth it.

Ba- Only so much is to be beleueed of Gods omnipotencie, as is in the worde expressed.

ra- That Christes body is both in heauen and heere also really in the sacrament, is not expressed in the word.

co. Ergo, it is not to be beleueed that the body of Christe, being in heauen is heere also really in the sacrament.

Why quoth the Prolocutor, then you will putte Christ in prisone in heauen. To the which Philpot answered, doe you reckon heauen to be a prisone? God graunt vs all to Page 1417 come to that prisone.

After this, Harpsfield inferred that this word Oportet in S. Peter,* which signifieth in Englishe must, did not import so much as I woulde inferre of necessitie, as by other places of Scripture it may appeare, as in the first to Tim. where Paule sayeth, Oportet Episcopum esse vnus vxoris virum: A bishop must be the husband of one wife. Here quoth he, Oportet doeth not import suche a necessitie, but that hee that neuer was married may be a Bishop.

To this Philpot saide againe, that the places were not like whych he went about to compare, and that in comparing of the Scriptures wee muste not consider the naked wordes,* but the meaning rather of the Scriptures, for y^t in the place by him alleaged,* S. Paule doeth declare of what qualitie a Bishop ought to be. But in the other S. Peter teacheth vs the place where Christ must necessarily be vntill the ende of the worlde: which we ought to beleeeue to be true. And this comparison of this worde Oportet, doeth no more aunswer mine argument, then if I should say of you now being here Oportet te hic esse, you must nedes be heere, which importeth such necessity for the time, that you can no otherwise be but here, & yet you would go about in words to auoide this necessitye with another Oportet, in an other sense, as this, Oportet te esse virū bonum, you must be a good man, where Oportet doeth not in very deede conclude any such necessity, but that you may be an euill man. Thus you may see that your answere is not sufficient, & as it were, no answere to mine argument.

Then the Prolocutour brought in another Oportet, to helpe this matter (if it mighte be) sayinge,* what say you to this, Oportet haereses esse, must heresies needes be therefore because of thys word Oportet?

*Yea truely, quoth Philpote, it cannot otherwise be, if you will adde that which followeth immediatly vpon these woordes of Paul, that is, Vt qui electi sunt, manifestentur, that is: That suche as be y^e elect of God, may be manifested and knowen.

Why, quoth the Prolocutor, the time hath bene that no heresies were.* I knowe no suche time quoth Philpot. For since the time of Abell and Caine, heresies haue bene, and then began they.* Then sayd the Prolocutor, wil you nowe answer Morgan an argument or two? I wil quoth Philpot, if I may first be answered to my argument any thyng according to truth and learning.* What quoth the Prolocutor, you will neuer be answered. Howe I am answered, quoth Philpot,* let all men that are here present, iudge: and specially such as be learned, & with what cauillations you haue dallied with me.

First to the auncient authority of Vigilius, you haue answered nothing at all, but only denying it to be scripture y^t he sayth. Secondly, to the saying of S. Peter in the actes, yee haue aunswared thus, demaunding of me whether I would keepe Christ in prison or no, let men nowe iudge if this be a sufficient answere or no.

Then stode Morgane vp againe, and asked Philpote whether he would be ruled by the vniuersal church,* or no.

Yes, quoth he, if it be the true Catholicke Church. And sith you speake so much of the Churche,* I would faine that you would declare what the church is.

The church, quoth Morgan, is diffused and dispersed throughout the whole worlde.* That is a diffuse definition quod Philpot, for I am yet as vncertaine as I was before what you meane by y^e church: * but I knowlege no church, but that which is grounded and founded on Gods woord, as S. Paul sayth, * vpon the foundation of the Apostles & Prophets, and vpon the scriptures of God.

What quoth Moreman, was the Scripture before the church? yea quoth Philpot. But I will prooue nay, quoth Moreman, and I wil begin at Christes time. The Church of Christ was before any scripture wrytten. For Mathewe was the first that wrote the Gospell, about a dosen yeares after Christ, Ergo, the church was before the scripture.

To whom Philpot answering, denied this argument. Which when Moreman could not prooue, Philpot shewed that his argument was Elenchus, or a fallace, that is, a deceiueable argument. For he tooke the Scripture only to be that, whych is wrytten by men in letters, wheras in very deede, * all Prophecie, vttered by the spirite of God, was counted to be Scripture before it was wrytten in paper & inke, for that it was wrytten in the heartes, and grauen in the mindes, yea, and inspired in the mouthes of good men, and of Christes Apostles by the spirite of Christ: As the salutation of the Angel was the scripture of Christe, and the word of God before it was written. At that Moreman cried, fie, fie, wondring that the Scripture of God shoulde be counted scripture, before it was wrytten, and affirmed that he had no knowledge that said so.

*To whom Philpot answered, that concerning knowledge in this behalfe, for the triall of the truth about y^e questions in controuersie, he woulde wish hymselfe no worse matched then with Moreman.

At the which saying the Prolocutor was greuously offended, saying, that it was arrogantly spoken of hym, * that woulde compare with suche a worshipfull learned man as Moreman was, being himselfe a manne vnlearned, * yea a madde man, meter to be sent to Bedlem, then to be among such a sorte of learned and graue men as there were, and a man that neuer woulde be answered, and one that troubled the whole house: and therefore he did commaund him that he shoulde come no more into the house, demaunding of the house whether they would agree thereuppon, or no. To whome a great number aunsweraed, yea. Then sayde Philpot againe, that he might thinke himselfe happye that was out of that companie.

After this, Morgan rose vp, and rounded the Prolocutor in the eare. * And then againe the Prolocutor spake to Philpot and said, least you should slaunder the house, & say that we will not suffer you to declare youre minde, we are content you shal come into the house as you haue done before, so that you be apparelled wyth a long gowne & a tippette as we be, and that you shall not speake, but when I commaund you. Then quoth Philpot, I had rather be absent altogether.

Thus they reasoning to and fro, at length about the 13. of December, Q. Mary, to take vp the matter, sendeth her commaundement to Boner Byshoppe of London, that he should dissolue and breake vp the conuocation. * The copie of which commaundement here followeth.

The precept of the Queene to Boner, Bishop of London, for the dissoluing of the foresayde Conuocation.

MARIA. &c. Reuerendo in Christo patri & Domino, Domino Edmundo London. Episcopo, salutem. * Cum praesens cō••catio Cleri Cantuariensis prouinciae apud Sāctum Paulum London.

Teste meipsa apud Westmonasterium 13. die Decembris. Anno regni nostri primo.

During the time of this disputation, the 20. day of Nouēber, y^e Maior of Couentrie sent vp vnto y^e Lordes of the Coūsel Baldwine Clarke, I. Carelesse, Tho. Wilcockes, and Richard Estlin, for their behaiour vpon All halowe day last before. Whereupon Carelesse and Wylcocks were committed to the gatehouse, and Clarke and Astelyn to the Marshalsey.

The same day there was a letter directed to Sir Christopher Heydon, and Sir William Farmer knight, for the apprehension of Iohn Huntingdon preacher, for making a rime against D. Stokes and the sacrament. Who appearing before the counsell the 3. of December next after, was vpon his humble submission and promise, to amend aswel in doctrine as liuing, againe suffered to depart.

In the daies of king Henry,* and also of king Edward raiging after him, diuers noble men, Bishops and other, were cast into the Tower, some charged with treason as Lord courtney and the Duke of Northfolke (whose sonne Lorde Henry Earle of Surrey had bene the same time beheaded, a worthy & ingenious gentlemen, for what cause, or by whom, I haue not hear to deale, this is certaine, that not many yeres after his death, folowed the beheading of both the L. Semers, and at last of the Duke of Northumberland also) some for y^e Popes supremacie,* and suspicious letters tending to sedition, as Tonstal B. of Durham, and other for other things, all which continued there prisoners til Q. Maries comming in. Unto whome the saide Q. eftsoones graunted their pardone, and restored them to theyr former dignities. Amongst whom also was Gardiner B. of Winchester, whom she not onely freed out of captiuitie, but also aduanced him to be high chancelor of Englande. Furthermore to the L. Courtney she shewed such fauour,* that shee made him Earle of Deuonshire, in so much that there was a suspition amongst many, that she would marie him, but that prooued otherwise.

Page 1418The same time Bonner also had bene prisonner in the Marshalsey, whome likewise Queene Mary deliuered, & restored to the Bishopricke of London againe, displacing Doct. Ridley, with diuers other good Bishops moe, as is aboue mentioned, as Cranmer from Canterb. the Archbyshoppe of Yorke likewise, Poynette from Winchester, Iohn Hooper from Worcester,* Barlow from Bath, Harley from Hereforde, Taylor from Lincolne, Ferrar from S. Davids, Couerdale from Excester, Scorye from Chichester, &c. with a great number of Archdeacons, Deanes, and briefly all suche beneficed men, which either were married, or would constantly adheere to theyr profession. All which were remooued from their liuings,* and other of the contrary secte sette in the same, as Cardinall Poole (who was then sent for) Gardiner, Heath, White, Daye, Troublefield, &c.

And as touching Cranmer, of whome mention was made before,* for so much as there was a rumor spreade of hym the same time at London, that he hadde recanted, and caused Masse to be sayde at Caunterburye, for purging of hymselfe hee published abroad a declaration of hys truth and constancie in that behalfe, protestinge that hee neyther had so done,* nor mineded so to doe: adding moreouer, that if it woulde so please the Queene, he wyth Peter Martyr, and certayne other whome he would chuse, would in open disputation sustaine the cause of the doctrine taught and set foorth before in the time of king Edward, againste all persons whomesoeuer. But while he was in expectation to haue this disputation obtained, he with other bishops wer laid fast in the Tower, and P. Martir permitted to depart the realme, and so wen• he to Argentine.

After this, in the moneth of Nouemb. the Archbyshop Cranmer (notwithstāding he had earnestly refused to subscribe to the kings wil,* in disheriting his sister Marye, •lledging many graue and pithy reasons for her legitimation, was in Guild hall of London arraigned and attainted of treason, with the L. Iane, and three of the Duke of Northumberlandes sonnes, which at the intreatye of certayne persons were had againe to the Tower, and there kept for a time. All which notwithstanding, Cranmer beinge pardoned of treason, stode onely in the action and case of doctrine, why•h they called heresie, whereof hee was ryghte glad and ioyfull.

This beinge done in Nouember, the people, and especially the Churchmen, perceiuing the Queene so eagerlye set vpon her olde religion, they likewise for theyr partes, to shewe themselues no lesse forward to serue the Queenes appetite (as the manner is of the multitude, commonlye to frame themselues after the humour of the Prince and time present) began in their Quiers to set vp the pageants of s. Katherine,* and of S. Nicholas, and of their processions in Latine, after all their olde solemnitie with their gaye garde•iance, and gray ami•es.

And when the month of December was come, the Parliament brake vp, but first of all such statutes were repealed, which were made either of Premunire, or touched anye alteration of religion and administration of Sacramentes vnder king Edward. In the which parliament also communication was mooued of the Queenes mariage, wyth king Phillip the Emperors sonne.

In this meane while Cardinal Poole beinge sent for by Q. Mary,* was by the Emperour requested to staye wyth hym, to the intente (as some thinke) that hys presence in England should not be a let to the mariage which hee intended betweene Philip his sonne and Q. Marye. For the making wherof, he sent a most ample Ambassade, with full power to make vp the mariage betwixt them: which tooke such successe that after they had communed of the matter a few daies, they knit vp the knot.

Anno. 1554.

The 13. of Ianuarie 1554. Doctor Crome for his preaching vpon Christmas day without licence, was committed to the Fleete.

The 21. of Ianuarie, M. Thomas Wootten Esquire, was for matters of religion committed to the Fleete close prisoner.

This mention of mariage was about the beginning of Ianuary, and was very euill takē of the people, & of many of the nobility, who for his, and for religion, conspiring among themselues, made a rebellion: whereof sir Thomas Wyate knight was one of the chief beginners: who beyng in Kent, said (as many els perceiued) that the Queene and the Counsel would by forraine mariage bring vpon thys Realme moste miserable seruitude, & establish popish religion. About the 25. of Ianuary newes came to London of this stur in Kent,* and shortlye after of the D. of Suffolke, who was fled into Warwikeschier & Lecestershire: there to gather a power. The Queene therefore caused them bothe wyth the two Carewes of Deuonshire to bee proclaimed Traitors: and sent into Kent against Wyate,* Thomas D. of Norfolk, who being aboute Rochester bridge forsaken of them that went with him, returned s••e to London with out any more harme done vnto him, and wythoute bloudshed on either partie.

Furthermore to apprehende the Duke of Suffolke, being fled into Warwikeschiere, was sent the Earle of Huntington in post,* who entring the Citie of Couentrie before the Duke, disappoynted him of his purpose. Wherefore the Duke in great distresse committed himselfe to the keeping of a seruauant of his named Underwoode in Astley Parke, who like a false traitor bewraied him. And so was brought vp to the Tower of London.

In the meane while Sir Peter Carewe hearynge of that was done, fledde into Fraunce, but the other were taken,* and Wyat came towards London in the beginning of February. The Queene hearing of Wyates comminge, came into the Citie to the Guilde Hall, where shee made a vehement Oration against Wyate: the contentes, at least, the effect wherof here foloweth, as nere as out of her owne mouth could be penned.

The Oration of Queene Marie in the Guild Hall.

I Am come vnto you in mine own person, to tel you that,* which already you see and know, that is, how traiterously and rebelliously, a number of Kentish mē haue assembled them selues against both vs and you. Their pretence (as they sayde at the first) was for a mariage determined for vs: to the which, and to all the Articles therof ye haue bene made priuie. But sithens we haue caused certaine of our priuie Counsaile to goe againe vnto them, and to demaunde the cause of this their rebellion, and it appeared then vnto our sayde Counsel,* that the matter of the mariage seemed to be but as a Spanish cloake to couer their pretended purpose against our religion, so that they arrogantly and traiterously demaunded to haue the gouernance of our person, the keeping of the Tower, and the placing of our Counsailers.

Nowe louing subiectes, what I am ye right well knowe, I am your Queene, to whome at my Coronation when I was wedded to the Realme, and lawes of the same (the spousall Ring wherof I haue on my finger, which neuer hetherto was, nor heereafter shall be left off) you promised your alleageaunce and obedience vnto me. And that I am the right, and true inheritour of the crowne of this Realme of England I take all Christendome to witnesse. My Father, as ye all know, possessed the same regall state, which nowe rightly is descended vnto me: and to him alwaies ye shewed your selues most faithfull and louing subiectes, and therefore I doubt not, but ye will shew your selues likewise to me, and that yee will not suffer a vile Traitour to haue the order & gouernance of our person, and to occupie our estate, especially being so vile a Traytor as Wyat is. Who most certainly as he hath abused mine ignorant subiects, which be on his side,* so doth he entend and purpose the destruction of you, and spoile of your goodes. And this I say to you in the woorde of a Prince, I can not tel how naturally the mother loueth the childe, for I was neuer the mother of anye, but certainly, if a Prince and gouernour maye as naturally and earnestly loue her subiectes, as the Mother doeth the Childe, then assure your selues, that I being your Ladie and Maistres, doe as earnestly and as tenderly loue & fauour you. And I thus louing you, cannot but thinke that yee as heartely and faithfully loue me, and then I doubt not, but we shall geue these rebelles a short & speedy ouerthrow.

As concerning the Mariage, ye shall vnderstand that I enterprised not the doing thereof without aduise, and that by the aduice of all our priuie Counsell, who so considered and wayed the great commodities that might ensue thereof, that they not onely thought it very honorable, but also expediēt, both for the wealth of the Realme, and also of you our Subiects. And as touching my selfe, I assure you, I am not so bente to my will, neither so precise, nor affectionate, that either for mine own pleasure,* I wold chuse where I lust, or that I am so desirous, as needes I would haue one. For God I thanke him, to whome bee the praise therefore, I haue hetherto liued a Virgin, and doubt nothing, but with Gods grace am able so to liue stil. But if as my progenitors haue done before, it might please God that I might leaue some fruit of my body behinde me, to be your Gouernour, I trust you would not onely reioyce therat, but also I know it would be to your great comforte. And certainly, if I either did thinke or knowe, that this Mariage were to the hurt of any of you my Commons, or to the impeachment of any part or parcel of the royall state of this realme of England, I would neuer consent therunto, neither wold I euer mary while I liued. And in the word of a Queene I promise you, that if it shall not probably appeare to all the Nobilitie and Commons in the highe Court of Parliament, that thys Marryage shall be for Page 1419 the high benefit & cōmoditie of all the whole Realme, then I wil abstaine from Mariage while I liue.

And now good Subiects, plucke vp your hearts, and like true men,* stande fast against these rebels, both our enemies and yours, and feare them not: for I assure you I feare them nothing at all, And I will leaue with you my Lord Haward, & my Lord Treasoror, who shalbe assistants with the Mayor for your defence.

¶Here is to be noted, that at the comming of Queene Mary to the Guild hall, being bruted before that shee was comming w^t harnessed men, such a feare came among them that a number of the Londiners fearing least they shoulde be there intrapped & put to death, made out of the gate before her entring in. Furthermore note, that when shee had ended her Oration (which she semed to haue perfectly conned without booke) Winchester standing by her, when the Oration was done, with great admiration cried to y^e people: O how happy are we, to whom God hath geuen such a wise and learned Prince. &c.

Two dayes after, whiche was the 3. of Februarie, the L. Cobham was committed to the Tower,*and M. Wyat entred into Southwarke. Who, for so muche as he coulde not enter y^t way into London, returning another way by Kingstone with his army, came vp through the streetes to Ludgate, and returning thence, hee was resisted at Temple barre,*and there yealded himself to Sir Clement Parson, and so was brought by him to the Courte, & with hym the residue of his armye (for before, Sir George Harpar & almost halfe of his men ran away from him at Kingstone bridge) were also taken,*and aboute an 100. killed, and they that were taken were had to prisone, and a great manye of them were hanged, and he himselfe afterwarde executed at the Tower hill, and then quartered, whose heade after being set vp vpon Haihil,*was thence stolne away, and great search made for the same. Of which story ye shal here more (the Lord willing) heereafter.

The 12. day of February was beheaded the lady Iane, to whom was sent M. Fecknam, alias Howman, from the Queene 2. dayes before her deathe,* to commune wyth her, and to reduce her from the doctrine of Christe, to Queene Maries religion. The effect of which communication here followeth.

The communication had betweene the Ladie Iane and Fecknam.

FEcknam.

Madam, I lament your heauy case, and yet I doubt not,* but that you beare out this sorow of youre wyth a constant and patient minde.

Iane.

You are welcome vnto me sir, if your comming be to geue Christian exhortation. And as for my heauye case (I thanke God) I do so litle lament it, that rather I accompt the same for a more manifest declaration of Gods fauor towarde me, then euer he shewed me at any time before: And therefore there is no cause why either you, or other, whych beare me good wil,* should lament or be grieved wyth thys my case, being a thing so profitable for my soule health.

Feck.

I am heere come to you at this present sent from the Queene and her counsaile, to instructe you in the true doctrine of y^e right faith: although I haue so great confidence in you, that I shall haue (I trust) little neede to trauaile wyth you much therein.

Iane.

Forsooth I heartely thanke the Queenes highnesse, which is not vnmindful of her humble subiect: and I hope likewise that you no lesse will doe your duety therein both truely and faithfully according to that you were sent for.

Feck.

What is then required of a Christian?

Iane.

That he should beleue in God the Father, y^e Sonne, and the holy Ghost, three persons and one God.

Feck.

What? is there nothing els to be required or looked for in a Christian, but to beleue in him?

lane.

Yes, we must also loue him with all our heart, with all our soule, and with all our minde, and our neighbor as our selfe.

Feck.

Why? then faith iustifieth not, nor saueth not.

lane.

Yes verely, faith (as Paule sayth) only iustifieth.

Feck.

Why? S. Paul sayeth: If I haue all faith without loue it is nothing.

lane.

*True it is: for how cā I loue him whom I trust not? or how can I trust him whome I loue not? Faith and loue go both together, and yet loue is comprehended in faith.

Feck.

How shall we loue our neighbour?

lane.

To loue our neighbor is to feede the hungry, to cloth the naked, and geue drinke to the thirsty, and to doe to him, as we would doe to our selues.

Feck.

Why? then it is necessary vnto saluation, to doe good workes also, and it is not sufficient only to beleue.

lane.

I denye that, and I affirme that faith onely saueth:* but it is meete for a Christian, in token that hee followeth his Maister Christe, to doe good workes: yet may wee not say that they profit to our saluation. For whē we haue done all, yet we be vnprofitable seruāts, and faith only in Christes blood saueth vs.

Feck.

How many Sacraments are there?

lane.

Two. The one the Sacrament of Baptisme,* and the other the Sacrament of the Lordes Supper.

Feck.

No, there are seuen.

lane.

By what Scripture finde you that?

Feck.

Well, we will talke of that heereafter.* But what is signified by your two Sacraments?

lane.

By the Sacramente of Baptisme I am washed wyth water, and regenerated by the spirite, and that washing is a token to mee that I am the childe of God. The Sacrament of the Lordes Supper offered vnto mee,* is a sure seale and testimonie that I am by the bloude of Christ, which he shedde for me on the Crosse, made partaker of the euerlasting kingdome.

Feck.

Why? what doe you receiue in that Sacrament? Doe you not receiue the very body and bloud of Christ?

lane.

No surely, I doe not so beleeeue. I thinke that at the Supper I neyther receiue flesh nor bloude,* but bread and wine: Which bread when it is broken, and the wine when it is dronken, putteth mee in remembraunce howe that for my sinnes the body of Christ was broken, & his bloudshed on the Crosse, and with that breade and wine I receiue the benefites that come by the breaking of his body, & shedding of his bloud for our sinnes on the Crosse.

Feck.

Why? doeth not Christ speake these woordes: Take eate, this is my body? Require you any plainer words? doeth he not say it is his body?

lane.

I graunt hee sayeth so: and so he sayth, I am the vine, I am the doore,* but hee is neuer the more for that the dore not the vine. Doth not S. Paul say, He calleth things that are not as though they were? God forbid that I should say that I eat the very naturall body and bloud of Christ: for then eyther I should plucke away my redēption, either els there were two bodies, or two Christes. One body was tormēted on the Crosse. And if they did eate an other body, then had hee two bodies: either els if his body were eaten, than was it not broken vpon the Crosse: or if it were broken vpon the Crosse, it was not eaten of his Disciples.

Feck.

Why? is it not possible that Christe by hys power coulde make his body both to be eaten and broken, as to be borne of a woman wythout seede of man, and as to walke vppon the sea hauing a body, and other suche like myracles as he wrought by his power onely?

lane.

Yes verely:* if God would haue done at his Supper any myracle, he myght haue done so: but I say that then he minded no worke nor myracle, but onely to breake his body, and shed his bloud on the Crosse for our sinnes. But I pray you to answeere me to thys one question: where was Christ when he sayd: Take, eate, this is my body? Was hee not at the table when he sayde so? Hee was at that time alyue, and suffered not till the next day. What tooke he but bread? What brake he but breade? and what gaue hee but breade? Looke what he tooke, he brake: and looke what hee brake, he gaue: and looke what he gaue, they did eate: and yet all this while he himselfe was aliue, and at Supper before his disciples, or else they were deceiued.

Feck.

You ground your faith vppon such authours as say and vnsay both with a breath, and not vpon the Church,* to whom ye ought to geue credite.

lane.

No, I grounde my faith on Gods woorde, and not vpon the Church. For if the Church be a good Church,* the faith of the Church must be tried by Gods worde, and not Goddes woorde by the Church, either yet my Faithe. Shall I beleue the Church because of antiquitye? or shal I geue credite to the Church that taketh away from mee the halfe parte of the Lordes Supper, and will not lette any man receiue it in both kindes? Whych thing if they denie to vs, then denie they to vs part of our saluation. And I saye that it is an euill Church, and not the Spouse of Christ, but the Spouse of the Deuill that altereth the Lordes Supper, and both taketh from it, and addeth to it. To that Church (say I) God will adde plagues, and from that Church will he take their parte out of the booke of life. Doe they learne that of S. Paule, when he ministred to the Corinthians in both kindes? Shall I beleue this Church? God forbid.

Feck.

That was done for a good intent of the Church, to auoide an heresie that sprong on it.*

lane.

Why? shal the church alter Gods wil & ordinance for a good intēt? How did king Saul? The Lord God defend.

With these and such like persuasions he would haue had her leaue to the Church, but it woulde not be. There were Page 1420 many more things whereof they reasoned, but these were the chiefest.

After this Fecknam tooke his leaue, saying, that he was sorry for her: For I am sure (quoth he) that we two shall neuer meete.

lane.

True it is (sayd she) that we shall neuer meete, except God turne your hart.* For I am assured, vnlesse you repent and turne to God, you are in an euill case: and I pray God, in the bowels of his mercy, to send you his holy spirite: for he hath geuen you his great gift of vtterance, if it pleased him also to open the eyes of your hart.

¶A letter of the Lady Iane sent vnto her father.

FATHER, although it hath pleased God to hasten my death by you, by whome my life should rather haue bene lengthened: yet can I so patiently take it,* as I yeeld God more hartly thanks for shortening my wofull dayes, then if all the world had bene geuen into my possession with life lengthened at my owne will. And albeit I am well assured of your impacient dolours, redoubled manyfold wayes, both in bewayling your owne woe, and especially (as I heare) my vnfortunate state, yet my deare father (if I may without offence reioyce in my owne mishaps) me seemes in this I may accompt my selfe blessed, that washing my handes with the innocencie of my fact, my giltles blood may cry before the Lord, mercy to the innocent. And yet though I must needs acknowledge, that being constrayned, and, as you wot well enough, continually assayed, in taking vpon me I seemed to consent, and therein greuously offended the Queene and her lawes: yet do I assuredly trust that this mine offence towards God is so much the lesse, in that being in so royall estate as I was, mine enforced honour being neuer with mine innocent hart. And thus good father I haue opened vnto you the state wherein I presently stand. Whose death at hand, although to you perhaps it may seme right wofull, to me there is nothing that can be more welcome, then from this vale of miserie to aspire to that heauenly throne of all ioy and pleasure with Christ our Sauour.* In whose stedfast fayth (if it may be lawfull for the daughter so to write to the Father) the Lord that hetherto hath strengthened you, so continue you that at the last we may meete in heauen with the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost.

At what time her father was flourishing in freedome and prosperitie in the time of King Edward, there belonged vnto him a certayne learned man, student and Graduate of the Uniuersitie of Oxford. Who then being Chaplayne to the sayd Duke, and a sincere Preacher (as he appeared) of the Gospell, according to the doctrine of that time set foorth and receiued, shortly after that the state of Religion began to alter by Queene Mary, altered also in his profession with the time, and of a Protestant, became a friend and defender of the Popes proceedings. At whose sodayne mutation and inconstant mutabilitie, this Christian Lady being not a little agreeued, and most of all lamenting the daungerous state of his soule, in sliding so away for feare from the way of truth, writeth her minde vnto him in a sharp and vehement letter: which as it appeareth to proceede of an earnest and zealous hart, so woulde God it might take such effect with him, as to reduce him to repentaunce, and to take better holde againe for the health and wealth of his owne soule. The copie of the letter is thys as followeth.

¶Another letter of the Lady Iane to M. Harding, late Chaplayne to the Duke of Suffolke her father, and then fallen from the truth of Gods most holy worde.

SO oft as I call to mynde the dreadfull and fearefull saying of God: That he which layeth holde vpon the plough, and looketh backe, is not meete for the kingdome of heauen: and on the other side, the comfortable words of our Sauour Christ to all those that forsaking themselues, do folow him: I can not but maruell at thee and lament thy case: which seemedst sometime to be the liuely member of Christ, but now the deformed impe of the deuil, sometime the beutifull temple of God, but now the stinking and filthy kenel of Sathan, sometime the vnspotted spouse of Christ, but now the vnshamefast paramour of Antichrist, sometyme my faythfull brother, but now a straunger and Apostata, sometime a stoute Christen souldiour, but now a cowardly runneaway. Yea, when I consider these things, I can not but speake to thee, and cry out vpon thee, thou seede of Sathan, and not of Iuda, whome the deuill hath deceyued, the world hath begiled, and the desire of life subuerted, and made thee of a Christian an Infidell: wherefore hast thou taken the Testament of the Lord in thy mouth? * Wherefore hast thou preached the law and the wil of God to others? Wherefore hast thou instructed other to be strong in Christ, when y^u thy selfe doest now so shamefully shrink, and so horrible abuse the Testament and lawe of the Lord? When thou thy selfe preachest, not to steale, yet most abhominably stealest, not from men but from God, and committing most haynous sacriledge, robbest Christ thy Lorde of his right members thy bodye and soule, and chocest rather to liue miserably with shame to the worlde, then to dye and gloriously with honor to reigne with christ in whome euen in death is life? Why doest thou now shew thy selfe most weake, when in deede thou oughtest to bee most strong? The strength of a for• is vnknowne before the assault: but thou yeldest thy hold before anye battrie be made.

Oh wretched and vnhappy man, what art thou but dust and ashes? and wilt thou resist thy maker that fashioned thee and framed thee? Wilt thou nowe forsake hym y^t called thee from the custome gathering amōg y^e Romish Antichristians, to be an Ambassadour & messenger of hys eternall worde? Hee that first framed thee, and since thy first creation and byrth preserued thee, nourished and kept thee, yea and inspired thee with the spirit of knowledge (I cannot say of grace) shall he not now possesse thee? Darest thou deliuer vp thy selfe to an other, * being not thine owne but his? How cāst thou hauing knowledge, or how darest thou neglect the law of the Lord, and follow the vayn traditions of men: * and whereas thou hast bene a publicke professor of his name, become now a defacer of his glorye? Wilt thou refuse the true God, and worship the inuention of man, the golden calfe, the whore of Babilon, y^e Romish Religion, the abhominable Idoll, the most wicked masse? Wilt thou torment agayne, rent, and teare the most precious body of our Sauour Christ with thy bodily and fleshly teeth? Wilt thou take vpon thee to offer vp anye sacrifice vnto God for our sinnes, considering that Christ offered vp himselfe (as Paule sayth vpon the crosse a liuely sacrifice once for all? Can neither the punishment of the Israelites (which for their Idolatry they so oft receaued) nor the terrible threatnings of the Prophetes, nor the curses of Gods owne mouth feare thee to honour anye other God then him? Doest thou so regard him that spared not hys deare and onely sonne for thee, so diminishing, yea, vtterly extinguishing his glory that thou wilt attribute the prayse and honour due vnto him to the Idols, which haue mouthes and speak not, eyes and see not, eares and heare not: which shall perish with them that made them?

What sayth the Prophet Baruc,* where hee recited the Epistle of Ieremy written to the captiue Iewes? Did hee not forwarne them that in Babilon they should see Gods of gold, siluer, wood, & stone borne vpon mens shoulders, to cast a feare before the Heathen: But be not ye afayrd of them (sayth Ieremy) nor doe as other doe? But when you see other worship thē, say you in your hartes: it is thou (O Lord) that oughtest onely to be worshipped: for as for those Gods, the Carpenter framed them and polished them, yea gilded be they, and layde ouer with siluer, and vayne thinges and cannot speake. He sheweth moreouer, the abuse of theyr deckings, howe the Priestes tooke off their ornamentes and aparelled their women withall: how one holdeth a scepter, an other a sworde in his hand, and yet can they iudge in no matter, nor defend themselves, much lesse anye other, from either battell or murther, nor yet from gnawing of wormes, nor any other euill thing. These, & such like wordes, speaketh Ieremy vnto them, whereby he proueth them to be but vayne thinges, and no Gods. And at last he concludeth thus: Confounded be they that worship them. They were warned by Ieremy, and thou as Ieremye hast warned other, and art warned thy selfe by many Scriptures in many places. God sayth: he is a ielous God, which will haue all honour, glory, and worship geuen to him onely. And Christ saith in the 4. of Luke to Sathan which tempted him: euen to the same Sathan, the same Belzebub, the same deuill, whiche hath preuayled agaynst thee:*It is written (saith he) thou shalt honor the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue.

These and such like doe prohibite thee and all Christians to worship anye other God then whiche was before all worldes, and layd the foundations both of heauen and earth: and wilt thou honour a detestable Idol, inuented by Romish Popes, and the abhominable Colledge of craftye Cardinals? Christ offered himselfe vp once for al, and wilt thou offer him vp agayne dayly at thy pleasure? But thou wilt say, thou doest it for a good intēt. O sinck of sinne: Oh child of perdition: doest yⁿ dreame therein of a good intent, where thy conscience beareth thee witnes of Gods threatned wrath against thee? How did Saule? who for that hee disobeyed the worde of the Lorde for a good intent was Page 1421 throwne from his worldlye and temporall kingdome. Shalt thou then that doest deface Gods honour, and rob him of his right, inherite the eternall and heauenly kingdome? Wilt thou for a good intent dishonour God, offend thy brother, and daunger thy soule, wherefore Christ hath shed his most precious bloud? Wilt thou for a good intent plucke Christ out of heauen, and make his death voyde, and deface the triumph of his crosse by offering him vp dayly? Wilt thou either for feare of death, or hope of life, denie and refuse thy God, who enriched thy pouertie, healed thy infirmitie, and yeilded to thee his victory, if thou couldest haue kept it? Doest yⁿ not consider that the threed of thy life hangeth vpon him that made thee, who can (as hys will is) eyther twine it harder to last the longer, or vntwine it againe to breake it the sooner? Doest thou not then remember the saying of Dauid a notable King, to teach thee a miserable wretch, in his 104. Psalme, where he sayth thus: When thou takest away thy spirit (oh Lord) from men, they die and are turned agayne to their dust: *but when thou lettest thy breath go forth, they shall be made, and thou shalt renew the face of the earth. Remember the saying of Christ in his Gospell: Whosoever seeketh to save his life, shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it. And in the same place: Whosoever loveth father or mother above me, is not meete for me. *He that will follow me, let him forsake himselfe, and take up his crosse and follow me. What crosse? the crosse of infamy and shame, *of misery and poverty, of affliction and persecution for his names sake. Let the oft falling of those heavenly showers, pierce thy stony hart. Let the two edged sword of Gods holy word there asunder the sinewes of worldly respects, *even to the very marrow of thy carnall hart, that thou mayest once againe forsake thy selfe and embrace Christ. And like as good subjects will not refuse to hazard all in the defence of their earthly and temporal Governour, so flie not like a white livered milkesop from the standing wherein thy chiefe captaine Christ hath set thee in array of this life. Viriliter age, confortetur cor tuum, *sustine dominum. Fight manfully, come life, come death: the quarrell is Gods, and undoubtedly the victory is ours.

But thou wilt say, I will not breake vntie. What? not the vntie of Sathan and his members? not the vntie of darkenes, *the agreement of Antichrist and his adherents? Nay thou deceauest thy selfe with the fond imagination of such an vntie as is among the enemies of Christ. Were not the false Prophetes in an vntie? Were not Iosephes brethren and Iacobs sonnes in an vntie? Were not the Heathen, as the Amelechites, the Ph•resites and Iebusites in an vntie? Were not the Scribes and Phariseis in an vntie? Doth not King Dauid testifie: Conuenerunt in vnum aduersus dominum? Yea theeves, murtherers, conspiratours, haue their vntie. But what vntie? Tully sayeth of amitie: Amicitia non est, nisi inter bonos. But marke my friend, yea friend, if thou be not Gods enemy: there is no vntie but where Christ knitteth the knot among such as be his. Yea, be well assured, that where his truth is resident, there it is verified that he himselfe sayeth: Non veni mittere pacem in terram, sed gladium, &c. but to set one against another, the sonne against the father, and the daughter against the mother in lawe. Deceave not thy selfe therefore with the glittering and glorious name of vntie: *for Antichrist hath this vnity, not yet in deede, but in name. The agreement of ill men is not an vntie, but a conspiracie.

Thou hast heard some threatnings, some curses, and some admonitions out of the scripture to those that loue themselves above Christ. Thou hast heard also the sharpe and biting words to those that denie him for loue of lyfe: *Sayth he not: He that denieth me before men, I will denie him before my father in heauen? And to the same effect writeth Paule Heb. 6. *It is impossible (sayth he) that they which were once lightned, and haue tasted of the heavenly gifte, and were partakers of the holy Ghost, and haue tasted of the good word of God, if they fall and slide away, crucifyeng to themselves the sonne of God afresh, and making of him a mockingstocke, should be renewed againe by repentance. *And againe saith he: if wee shall willingly sinne after we haue receiued the knowledge of his truth, there is no oblation left for sinne, but the terrible expectation of iudgement and fire which shall deuoure the aduersaries. Thus S. Paule writeth, and this thou readest, and doest thou not quake and tremble?

Well, if these terrible and thundring threatnings can not sturre thee to cleaue vnto Christ, and forsake the world: yet let the sweete consolations and promises of the scriptures, let the example of Christ and his Apostles, holy Martyrs and Confessours encourage thee to take faster holde by Christ. *Harken what he sayth: Blessed are you when men reuile you, *and persecute you for my sake: reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen: for so persecuted they the Prophetes that were before you. Heare what Esay the Prophet sayth: Feare not the curse of men, be not afrayde of theyr blasphemies, for woormes and mothes shall eate them vp like cloth and wooll, but my righteousnes shall endure for euer, and my sauing health from generation to generation. What art thou then (sayth he) that fearest a mortall man, the child of man which vadeth away like the flower: and forgettest the Lord that made thee, that spread out the heauens, and laid the foundation of the earth▪ I am thy Lorde thy God, that make the sea to rage, and be still,*whose name is the Lorde of hostes. I shall put my word in thy mouth, and defend thee with the turning of an hand. And our Sauour Christ saith to his Disciples: They shall accuse you and bring you before Princes and Rulers for my names sake,*and some of you they shall persecute and kill: but feare you not (saith he) nor care you not what you shall say:*for it is the spirit of your father that speaketh within you. Euen the very hea•es of your head are all numbred. Lay vp treasure for your selues (sayth he) where no theefe commeth, nor moth corrupteth. Feare not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soule, but feare hym that hath power to destroy both soule and body. If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne:*but because ye are not of the world, but I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

Let these and suche like consolations taken out of the Scriptures, strengthen you to godward. Let not the examples of holy men and women go out of your minde, as Daniel and the rest of the prophets, of the three children, of Eleazarus that constāt father, of the vij. of the Machabies children, of Peter, Paule, Steuen, and other Apostles and holy Martyrs in the beginning of the Church: As of good Symeon Archbishop of Seloma, and Zetrophone, with infinite other vnder Sapoires the King of the Persians and Indians, who contemned all torments deuised by the tyrants for their sauours sake. Returne, returne agayne into Christes warre,*and as becommeth a faithfull warriour, put on that armour that S. Paule teacheth to be most necessary for a Christian man. And aboue all things take to you the shield of fayth, and be you prouoked by Christes own example to withstand the diuell, to forsake the world, and to become a true and faythfull member of his mysticall body, who spared not his owne body for our sinnes.

Throw downe your selfe with the feare of his threatned vengeaunce for this so great and haynous an offence of Apostasie: and comfort your selfe on the other part wyth the mercy, bloud and promise of him that is ready to turne vnto you whensoever you turne vnto him. Disdayne not to come agayne with the lost sonne, seing you haue so wādred with him. Be not ashamed to turne againe with hym from the swill of straungers, to the delicates of your most benigne and louing father, acknowledging that you haue sinned against heauen and earth. Against heauen, by stayning the glorious name of God, and causing his most sincere and pure word to be euill spoken of through you. Against earth, by offending so many of your weake brethren to whom you haue bene a stumbling blocke through your sodaine sliding. Be not abashed to come home againe with Mary, and weepe bitterly with Peter, not only with shedding the teares of your bodily eyes, but also powring out the streames of your hart, to wash away out of the sight of God the filth and mire of your offense. Be not abashed to say with the Publicane,*Lord be mercifull vnto me a sinner. Remember the horrible hystory of Iulian of olde, and the lamentable case of Spyra of late, whose case (me thinke) should be yet so greene in your remembrance, that being a thing of our time, you should feare the like inconuenience, seeing you are falne into the like offence.

Last of all, let the liuely remembrance of the last day be alwayes afore your eyes, remembering the terrour that suche shall bee in at that time, with the runnagates and fugitiues from Christ, which setting more by the worlde then by heauen, more by theyr lyfe, then by him that gaue them lyfe, dyd shrinke, yea, did cleane fall away from him that forsooke not them: and contrarywise, the inestimable ioyes prepared for them, that fearing no perill, nor dreading death, haue manfully fought, and victoriously triumphed ouer all power of darkenesse, ouer hell, deathe, and damnation, thorough theyr most redoubted Captaine Christ, who now stretcheth out his armes to receaue you, ready to fall vpon your necke and kysse you, and last of all to feast you with the deynties and delicates of his owne precious bloud, which vndoubtedly, if it might stand with his determinate purpose, he woulde not set to shed againe, rather then you should be lost. To whome with the Father and the holy Ghost be all honour, prayse and glory euerlasting. Amen.

Be constant, be constant, feare not for no payne,

Christ hath redeemed thee, and heauen is thy gayne.

¶A Letter written by the Lady Iane in the ende of the new Testament in Greeke, the which she sent vnto her sister Lady Katherine, the night before she suffered.

I Haue heere sent you (good Sister Katherine) a booke, which although it be not outwardly trimmed with gold,* yet inwardly it is more worth then precious stones. It is the booke (deare Sister) of the lawe of the Lord. It is his Testament and last will which he bequeathed vnto vs wretches: which shall leade you to the path of eternall ioy: and if you with a good minde reade it, and with an earnest mind do purpose to follow it, it shall bring you to an immortall and euerlasting life. It shall teache you to liue, and learne you to die. It shall winne you more then you should haue gained by the possession of your wofull fathers landes. For, as if God had prospered him, you should haue inherited his landes: so if you apply diligently this booke, seeking to direct your lyfe after it, you shall be an inheritour of such riches, as neither the couetous shall withdrawe from you, neither theefe shall steale, neyther yet the mothes corrupt. Desire with Daud (good Sister) to vnderstande the lawe of the Lorde your God Liue still to dye, that you (by death) may purchase eternall life.* And trust not that the tendernesse of your age shall lengthen your life. For as soone (if God call) goeth the yong as the olde, and labour alwayes to learne to dye. Defye the world, denie the deuill, and despise the fleshe, and delite your selfe onely in the Lorde. Be penitent for your sinnes, and yet despayre not: be strong in fayth, and yet presume not, and desire with S. Paule to be dissolued and to be wyth Christ, with whome euen in death there is lyfe. Be like the good seruaunt, and euen at midnight be waking, least when death commeth and stealeth vpon you like a theefe in the night, you be wyth the euill seruaunt found sleeping, and least for lacke of oyle, you be found like the fyue foolish women: and lyke hym that had not on the wedding garment, and then yee be cast out from the marriage. Reioyce in Christ, as I do. Follow the steps of your mayster Christ, and take vp your Crosse: lay your sinnes on hys backe, and alwayes embrace hym. And as touching my death, reioyce as I do (good Sister) that I shall be deliuered of this corruption, and put on incorruption. For I am assured that I shall for losing of a mortall life, winne an immortall life: the which I pray God graunt you, and send you of his grace to liue in hys feare, and to dye in the true Christian fayth, from the which (in Gods name) I exhort you that you neuer swarue, neither for hope of life, nor for feare of death. For if ye will denie his truth to lengthen your lyfe, God will denie you, and yet shorten your dayes. And if you will cleaue vnto him, he will prolong your dayes to your comfort and his glory: to the which glory God bring me now and you heereafter when it pleaseth him to call you. Fare you well good Sister, and put your only trust in God, who only must helpe you.

Heere followeth a certayne effectuall prayer made by the Lady Iane, in the time of her trouble.

O Lord, thou God and father of my life, heare mee poore and desolate woman,* which flyeth vnto thee, onely in all troubles and miseries. Thou O Lord art the onely defendour and deliuerer of those that put their trust in thee: and therefore I beeyng defiled wyth sinne, encombred with affliction, vnquieted wyth troubles, wrapped in cares, ouerwhelmed with miseries, vexed with temptations, and greeuously tormented wyth the long imprisonment of this vile masse of clay my sinfull body: do come vnto thee (O mercifull Sauour) crauing thy mercy and helpe: without the which so little hope of deliuerance is left, that I may vtterly despayre of any libertie. Albeit it is expedient, that seeyng our life standeth vpon trying, we should be visited sometye wyth some aduersitie, whereby we might both be tryed whether we be of thy flocke or no, and also knowe thee and our selues the better: yet thou that saydest that thou wouldest not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our power, be mercifull vnto me now a miserable wretch, I beseech thee: which with Salomon do cry vnto thee, humbly desiring thee, that I may neyther be too much puffed vp with prosperitie, neither too much pressed down wyth aduersitie: least I beeyng too full, should denie thee my GOD, or beeyng too lowe brought, should despayre and blaspheme thee my Lord and Sauour. O mercifull GOD, consider my miserie best knowne vnto thee, and be thou now vnto me a strong tower of defence, I humbly require thee. Suffer me not to be tempted aboue my power, but eyther be thou a deliuerer vnto me out of thys great miserie, eyther else geue me grace patiently to beare thy heauie hand and sharpe correction. It was thy righte hande that delyuered the people of Israell out of the handes of Pharao, which for the space of foure hundred yeares, did oppresse them, and keepe them in bondage. Let it therefore lykewyse seeme good to thy fatherly goodnes,* to delyuer mee sorrowfull wretch (for whome thy Sonne Christ shedde hys precious bloud on the Crosse) out of thys miserable captiuitie & bondage, wherein I am now. Howe long wilt thou be absent? for euer? Oh Lord hast thou forgotten to be gracious, and hast thou shut vp thy louing kindnes in displeasure? wilt thou be no more entreated? Is thy mercy cleane gone for euer, and thy promise come vtterly to an end for euermore? why doest thou make so long taryng? shall I despaire of thy mercy O God? farre be that from me. I am thy workmanship created in Christ Iesu: geue me grace therefore to tary thy leysure, and patiently to beare thy woorkes: assuredly knowing, that as thou canst, so thou wilt deliuer me when it shall please thee, nothing douting or mistrusting thy goodnes towards me: for thou wottest better what is good for me then I do: Therefore do with me in all thinges what thou wilt: & plague me what way thou wilt. Onely in the meane time arme me I beseech thee, with thy armour, that I may stand fast, my loynes being girded about with veritie, hauing on the brest plate of righteousnes, & shod with the shoes prepared by the Gospell of peace,* aboue all thinges taking to me the shield of fayth, wherewith I may be able to quench all the fiery dartes of the wicked, and taking the helmet of saluatiō & the sword of the spirit, which is thy most ho|ly word: praying alwaies with al maner of praier & supplicatiō that I may refer my selfe wholly to thy wil, abiding thy pleasure and comforting my selfe in those troubles that it shall please thee to send me: seeing such troubles be profitable for me, and seeing I am assuredly perswaded that it can not be but well, all that thou doest. Heare me O mercifull father for his sake, whō thou wouldest shoulde be a sacrifice for my sinnes: to whome with thee and the holy Ghost be all honour and glory. Amen.

After these thinges thus declared, it remayneth nowe, comming to the end of this vertuous Lady, next to inferre the maner of her execution, with the words and behaiour of her in time of her death.

¶These are the wordes that the Lady Iane spake vpon the Scaffold at the houre of her death.

First when she mounted vpon the Scaffold,* she sayde to y^e people standing thereabout: good people I am come hether to dye, and by a lawe I am condemned to the same. The fact against the Queenes highnes was vnlaw full, and the consenting thereunto by me: but touching the procurement and desire therof by me or on my behalfe, I doe wash my handes thereof in innocency before God, and the face of you, good Christian people, this day: and therewith she wrong her handes, wherein she had her booke. Then said she, I pray you all, good Christian people, to beare me witnes that I dye a true Christian woman, and that I do look to be saued by no other meane, but onely by the mercy of God in the bloud of his only sonne Iesus Christ: and I confesse that when I did know the word of God, I neglected y^e same, loued my selfe and the world, & therefore thys plague and punishment is happily and worthily happened vnto mee for my sinnes: and yet I thanke God of hys goodnes that hee hath thus geuen me a time and respite to repent: and now (good people) while I am aliue I praye you assist me with your prayers. And then kneeling down she turned her to Fecknam saying: shall I say this psalme? and he sayd, yea. Then sayd she the Psalme of Miserere mei Deus in English, in most deuoute maner throughout to y^e end, and then she stode vpp and gaue her mayden Maistresse Ellen her gloues and handkercheffe, and her book to Maister Bruges, and then she vntyed her gowne, and the hangman pressed vpon her to helpe her off with it, but she desiring him to let her alone, turned towardes her two Gentlewomen, who helped her of therewith, and also with her frowes past and neckercheffe, geuing to her a fayre handkercheffe to knit about her eyes.

Then the hangman kneeled downe and asked her forgeuenesse, whom she forgaue most willingly. Thē he willed her to stand vpon the straw: which doing she sawe the blocke. Then shee sayd, I pray you dispatche me quickly. Then she kneeled downe, saying: wil you take it off before I lay me downe? & the hangman sayd, no Madame. Then tyed she the kercheffe about her eyes, and feeling for y^e block she sayd: what shall I doe? where is it? where is it? One of the standers by guiding her thereunto, she layd her head downe vpon the blocke, and then stretched forth her body and sayd: Lord into thy handes I commend my spirit, and so finished her life in the yeare of our Lord God. 1553. the 12. day of February.

¶Certaine Epitaphes written in commendation of the worthy Lady Iane Gray.

De Iana Graia Ioan. Parkhursti Carmen.

*Miraris Ianam Graio sermone valere?

Quo primum nata est tempore, Graia fuit.

In historiam Ianae. I. F.

Tu, quibus ista legas in certum est lector, ocellis:

Ipsaequidem siccis scribere non potui.

De Iana, D. Laurentij Humfredi decastichon.

Iana iacet saeue non aequae vulnere mortis,

Nobilis ingenio, sanguine, martyrio.

Ingenium latius ornauit foemina musis,

Foemina virgineo tota dicata choro.

Sanguine clara fuit, regali stirpe creata,

Ipsaque Reginae nobilitata throno.

Bis Graia est, pulchre Graijs nutrita camaenis,

Et prisco Graiûm sanguine creta ducum.

Bis Martyr, sacrae fidei verissima testis:

Atque vacans regni crimine, Iana iacet.

Thus the xij. day of February (as I sayd) was beheaded the Lady Iane,* and with her also the Lord Gilford her husband, one of the Duke of Northumberlands sonnes, two innocēts in comparison of them that sate vpon them. For they did but ignorantly accept that which the others had willingly deuised, and by open Proclamation consented to take from others and geue to them.

Touching the condemnation of this Lady Iane, heere is to be noted, that the Iudge Morgan who gaue the sentence of condemnation against hir,* shortly after he had condemned her, fell madde, and in his raving cried out continually to haue the Lady Iane taken away from hym, and so ended his life.

And not long after the death of the Lady Iane, vppon the xxj. of the same moneth, was Henry Duke of Suffolke her father also beheaded at the Tower Hill, the iiij. day after his condemnation: about which time also were condemned for this conspiracie many Gentlemen and Yeomen,* whereof some were executed at London, and some in the Countrey.* In the number of whome was also Lorde Thomas Gray, brother to the sayde Duke, being apprehended not long after in North Wales, and executed for the same. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton very hardly escaped, as ye shall heare (the Lord willing) in another place.

The xxiiij. of the same moneth, the yeare of our Lorde 1554. Boner Bishop of London sent downe a Commission, directed to all the Curates and Pastors of his dioces, for the taking of the names of such as would not come the Lent following to auriculare confession,* and to the receyuing at Easter: the copie of which monition heere followeth.

¶A monition of Boner Byshop of London, sent downe to all and singular Curates of his Dioces, for the certifying of the names of such as would not come in Lent to Confession and receiuing at Easter.

EDmund by the permission of God, Byshop of London, to all Parsons,* Vicares, Curates and Ministers of the Church, within the Citie and Dioces of London, sendeth grace, peace, and mercy, in our Lorde euerlasting. For as much as by the order of the Ecclesiasticall lawes and constitutions of thys Realme, and the lawdable vsage & custome of the whole Catholicke Church, by many hundreth yeares agone, duely and deuoutly obserued and kept, all faithfull people beeing of lawfull age and discretion, are bounde once in the yeare at least (except reasonable cause excuse them) to be confessed to theyr owne proper Curate, and to receaue the Sacrament of the aultar, with due preparation and deuotion: and for as much also as we be credibly enformed, that sundry euill disposed and vndeuous persons, geuen to sensuall pleasures and carnall appetites, following the lusts of their body, and neglecting vtterly the health of their soules, do forbear to come to confession according to the sayd vsage,* and to receaue the Sacrament of the aultar accordingly, geuing therby pernicious and euill example to the yonger sort, to neglect and contemne the same: we minding the reformation heereof for our owne discharge,* and desirous of good order to be kept, and good example to be geuen: do will and commaund you by vertue heereof, that immediately vpon the receipt of this our commaundement, yee and euery ech of you within your cure and charge, do vse all your diligence and dexteritie to declare the same, straightly charging and commaunding all your parishioners, being of lawfull age and discretion, to come before Easter next comming, to confession, according to the sayd ordinaunce and vsage, and with due preparation and deuotion to receiue the sayd Sacrament of the aulter, and that ye do note the names of all such as be not confessed vnto you, and do not receiue of you the sayd Sacrament, certifying vs or our Chauncellour or Commissary thereof before the sixt day of Aprill next ensuing the date heereof: so that we knowing thereby who did not come to confession, and receyuing the Sacrament accordingly, may proceede agaynst them, as beeyng persons culpable, and transgressours of the sayd ecclesiasticall lawe and vsage: Further also certifying vs or our sayd Chauncellour or Commissary, before the day aforesayde, whether ye haue your aultars set vp, chalice, booke, vestiments, and all things necessary for Masse, and the administration of sacraments and sacramentals, with procession and all other diuine seruice prepared and in readines, according to the order of the Catholike Church, and the vertuous and godly example of the Queenes Maiesties: and if ye so haue not, yee then with the Churchwardens cause the same to be prouided for, signifying by whose faulte and negligence the same want or faulte hath proceeded, and generally of the not comming of your parishioners to Church, vndue walking, talking, or vsing of themselues there vnreuerently in the tyme of diuine seruice, and of all other open faults and misdemeanours, not omitting thus to doo, and certifie as before, as you will answeere vpon your perill for the contrarye. Geuen at London the 23. of February, in the yeare of our Lord 1554.

The next moneth following, which was the moneth of March, and the 4. day of the sayd moneth, there was a letter sent from the Queene to Boner Bishop of London, with certaine Articles also annexed, to be put in speedy execution, conteining as heere followeth.

¶Articles sent from the Queene to the Bishop of London, by him and his officers at her commaundement to be put in speedy execution, with her letter to the sayd Byshop before prefixed.

Right reuerend Father in God, right trusty and welbeloued we greeete you well.* And wheras heretofore in y^e time of the late raigne of our most dearest brother K. Edward y^e 6. whose soule god pardon, dyuers notable crimes excesses and faults, with sundrye kindes of heresies, s•••ny, adultery, & other enormities haue bene committed wⁱn this our Realme and other our dominions, the same continuing yet hitherto in like disorder since the beginning of our raigne, without any correction or reformation at all, & the people both of the laitie and also of the clergie, & chiefly of the clergy haue bene geuen to much insolency & vngodly rule, greatly to the displeasure of almighty God, & very much to our regret & euill contentation, & to no litle slander of other Christen realmes, and in a maner to the subuersion & cleane defacing of this our realme, and remembring our duety to almighty god, to be to foresee (as much as in vs may be) y^t all vertue and godly liuing shoulde be embraced, flourish & increase, and therewith also, y^t all vice & vngodly behaiour shuld be banished and put away, or at y^e least wise (so nigh as might be) so bridled and kept vnder that godlines and honesty might haue y^e ouer hand, vnderstanding by very credible report and publike fame, to ou• no smal heauines and discomfort, that within your dioces as well in not exempted as exempted places, the like disorder and euill behaiour hath bene done & vsed, like also to continue and increase vnlesse due prouision be had and made to reforme y^e same, which earnestly in very deede we do mind & intend to the vttermost all y^e waies we can possible, trusting of Gods furtherance and helpe in y^t behalfe. For these causes, and other most iust cōsiderations vs mouing, we send vnto you certayne articles of suche speciall matter, as among other thinges be most necessary now to be put in execution by you & your officers, extending to the end by vs desired, and the reformation aforesaide, wherein ye shall be charged with our speciall commaundement, by these our letters to the intent you and your officers may y^e more earnestly and boldly proceed therunto without feare of any presumption to be noted on your part, or danger to be incurred of any such our Lawes, as by our doinges of that is in the said articles contened, might any wise greue you whatsoeuer be threatned in any such case. And therefore we straightly charge and commaund you, and your sayde officers to proceede to the execution of the said Articles, w^tout all tracte and delay, as ye will answeare to the contrary. Geuen vnder our signet, at our Palace of Westminster the 3. day of march the first yeare of our raigne.

Articles sent from the Queene vnto the Ordinary, and by him and his Officers by her commaundement to be put in execution in the whole dioces.

First, that euery Byshop and his Officers, with all other hauing Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction,* shall with all speede and diligence, and all maner of waies to them possible, put in execution all such Canons and Ecclesiasticall Lawes,* heeretofore in the time of King Henry the eyght vsed within this Realme of England, and the dominions of the same, nor being directly and expresly contrary to the lawes and statutes of this Realme.

Item, that no B. or any his Officer, or other person aforesayd,* heereafter in any of their ecclesiasticall writings, in processe or other extraiuditiaall actes, doe vse to put in this clause or sentence, Regia autoritate fulcitus.

Item, that no Byshop or any his officers or other person aforesaid, do hereafter exact or demaund in the admission of any person to any ecclesiasticall promotion, order or office, any oth touching the primacy or succession, as of late in few yeares passed hath bene accustomed and vsed.

Item, that euery B. and his officers, with all other persons aforesayd, haue a vigilant eie, and vse speciall diligēce and foresight, that no person be admitted or receiued to any ecclesiasticall function, benefice or office being a sacramentary infected or defamed with any notable kinde of heresie or other great crime, and that the said B. do stay and cause to be stayed, as much as lieth in him, that benefices and Ecclesiasticall promotions do not notably decay or take hinderāce by passing, or cōfirming of vnreasonable leases.

Item, that euery Bishop and all other persons aforesayde,* do diligently trauaile for the repressing of heresies and notable crimes, especially in the Cleargie, duely correcting and punishing the same.

Item, that euery B. and all the other persons aforesayd, do likewise trauell for the condemning and repressing of corrupt and naughty opinions, vnlawfull bookes, ballades, and other pernicious and hurtfull deuices, engendring hatred amongst the people, and discord amongst the same: And the Scholemaisters, Preachers, and Teachers, do exercise and vse their offices and duties without teaching, preaching, or setting foorth any euill and corrupt doctrine, and that doing the contrary, they may be by the Bishop and his said officers punished and remoued.

Item, that euery B. and all the other persons aforesayd, proceding summarely & with all celerity & speed,* may and shall depriue or declare depriued and amoue, according to their learning & discretion, all such persons frō their benefices & ecclesiasticall promotiōs, who cōtrary to the state of their order, & the laudable custome of the church, haue married & vsed women as their wiues, or otherwise notably, and slaunderously disordered or abused themselues: sequestering also, during the said proces, the fruites and profites of the said benefices and Ecclesiasticall promotions.

Item, that the said B. and all other persons aforesayd, do vse more lenity and clemency with such as haue married, whose wiues be dead, then with other whose women do yet remayne aliue. And likewise such Priestes, as with the consents of their wiues or women openly in the presence of the B. do professe to abstaine,* to be vsed more fauourably. In which case after penaunce effectually done, the Bishop according to his discretion and wisdom, may vpon iust consideration, receiue and admit them agayne to their former administration, so it be not in the same place, appointing them such a portion to liue vpon, to be payde out of their benefice, whereof they be depriued, by discretion of the said Bishop, or his Officer as he shall thinke may be spared of the said Benefice.

Item, that euery Byshop, and all other persons aforesaid,* do foresee that they suffer not any religious man, hauing solemnely professed chastitie, to continue with hys woman, or wife, but that all such persons, after depriuation of their benefice or Ecclesiasticall promotion, be also diuorced euery one from his saide woman, and due punishment otherwise taken for the offence therein.

Item, that euery Bishop and all other persons aforesaid, do take order and direction with the Parishioners of euery Benefice where Priests do want,* to repayre to the next Parish for diuine seruice, or to appoint for a conuenient time, till other better prouision may be made, one Curate to serue, Alienis vicibus, in diuers Parishes, and to allot to the saide Curate for his labour some portion of the Benefice that he so serueth.

Item, that all and all maner of processions of y^e Church, be vsed,* frequented, and continued after the old order of the Church in the latine tongue.

Item, that all such holydaies and fasting daies be obserued and kept, as were obserued and kept in the latter time of king Henry the eight.

Item, that the laudable & honest ceremonies which wer wont to be vsed, frequented and obserued in the Churche,* be also hereafter frequented, vsed and obserued.

Item that children be christened by the Priest, and confirmed by the Bishop, as heretofore hath bene accustomed and vsed.

Item, touching such persons as were heretofore promoted to anye orders after the new sorte and fashion of orders: considering they were not ordered in very deede,* the bishop of the Dioces finding otherwise sufficiency and habilitie in those men, may supply that thing which wanted in them before, and then according to his discretion admit them to minister.

Item,* that by the bishop of the Dioces an vniforme doctrine be set forth by Homelies, or otherwise for the good instruction & teaching of al people: And that the sayd bish. and other persons aforesaid, doe compell the parishioners to come to their seuerall Churches, and there deuoutly to heare deuine seruice, as of reason they ought.

Item, that they examine all Scholemaisters & teachers of children, & finding them suspect,* in any wise to remoue them and place Catholicke men in theyr rowmes, with a speciall commaundement to instructe their children, so as they may be able to aunswere the priest at the masse, and so helpe the priest to masse, as hath bene accustomed.

Item, that the sayd Bishop, and all other the persons aforesaid, haue such regard, respect, and consideration of and for the setting forth of the premisses with all kind of vertue godly liuing, and good example, with repressing also and keping vnder of vice and vnthriftines as they and euerich of them may be seene to fauour the restitution of true Religion, and also to make an honest accompt and reckening of their office and cure, to the honor of God, our good contentation, and the profite of this our Realme: and the dominions of the same.

A like prescript also with Articles, was sent from the said Queene Mary to the Lord Mayor of London,* the 4. day of March, in the yeare abouesayd, which Lord Mayor vpon the same directed his commandement to the Aldermen, euerye one seuerally in his warde, conteing as followeth.

By the Lord Mayor.

ON the Queene our most gracious & most benigne soueraigne Ladies behalfe,* we most straightly charge & commaund you, that ye the said Aldermen, faile not personally to call before your owne person in such place within your sayde warde as to you shall seeme most conuenient & meete vpon Wednesday nexte comming, which shalbe the 7. daye of this present moneth, at 7. of the clocke in the morning of the same daye, all and euery the householders both poore and rich of your sayd warde, & then & there, openly and plainly for your owne discharge and for the eschewing of the perils that to you might otherwise be iustly imputed & layd, do not onely straitly admonish, charge, & commaund in the Queene our sayd soueraigne Ladyes name and behalfe, al and euery the sayd householders, that both in theyr own persons, and also their wiues, children, and seruantes being of the age of xij. yeares and vpwards and euery of them, do at al and euery time, and times from henceforth, and namely at the holy time of Easter now approaching, honestly, quietly, obediently, and Catholickely, vse and behaue themselues like good and faithful christian people in all and euery thing and thinges touching & concerning the true fayth, profession, and Religion of his Catholicke Church, both according to the lawes and precepts of almighty God, and also theyr bounden duetie of obedyence towards our soueraigne Lady y^e Queene her lawes and Statutes, and her highnes most good example & gracious proceeding according to the same, and according also to y^e right wholesome charitable & godly admonitiō, charge and exhortation late set forth and geuen by y^e right reuerēd father in God the bishop of London, our Diocesan and ordinary to all the Persons, Uicars, and Curates wythin this Dioces: but also that they and euery of them do truely without delaye aduertise you of the names & surnames of all and euery person and persons that they or any of them, can or may at any time hereafter know, perceiue, or vnderstand to transgresse or offend in anye poynt or Article concerning the premisses, at their vttermost perilles▪ That ye immediately after such notice therof to you geuen do forthwith aduertise vs thereof, fayle ye not thus to do with all circumspection and dilligence, as ye will aunswere to our sayd most dread soueraigne Lady the Queene, for the contrary at your like perill. Geuen at the Guildhall of the Citie of London, the v. day of March in the first of the raigne of our said saueraigne Lady the Queene. Blackwell.

Page 1425 And likewise do you geue to euery of the sayd housholders straightly in commaundemente, that they or theyr wiues depart not out of the said Citie vntill this holy time of Easter be past.

ABout the same yeare and time, when Doct. Boner set foorth this prescript or monitory, there came from the Quene another proclamation against straungers and forreiners within this realme. The purpose & intent of which proclamation, because it chiefly and most specially concerned religion and doctrine, and the true professors thereof, I thought here to annexe the tenor and maner of the same.

A copy of the Queenes Proclamation for the driuing out of the Realme Straungers and Forreiners.

*THE Queene our soueraigne Lady vnderstanding that a multitude of euill disposed persons, being borne out of her highnes dominions in other sondry nations, flyeng from the obeysaunce of the Princes and Rulers vnder whome they be borne, some for heresie, some for murther, treason, robbery, and some for other horrible crimes, be resorted into this her maiesties Realme, and heere haue made theyr demour, and yet be commoraunt and lingring, partly to eschew such conding punishment as their said horrible crimes deserue, and partly to dilate, plant, and sowe the seedes of their malicious doctrine and lewd conuersation among the good subiectes of this her said Realme, of purpose to infect her good subiectes with the like, in so much as (besides innumerable heresies, which diuers of the same beeing heretickes haue preached and taught within her highnes sayd Realme) it is assuredly knowne vnto her Maiesty, *that not only their secret practises haue not fayled to stirre, comfort and ayde dyuers her highnes subiectes to this most vnnaturall rebellion against God and her grace, but also some other of them desist not still to practise with her people eftsoones to rebell, her Maiestie therefore hauing (as afore is sayd) knowledge and intelligence heereof, hath for remedie heerein determined, and most straightly chargeth and commaundeth, that all and euery such person or persons borne out of her highnes dominions, now commoraunt or resident within this Realme, of whatsoever Nation or Countrey, beeing eyther Preacher, Printer, Bookeseller, or other Artificer, or of whatsoever calling else, not being Denizen or Marchant knowne, vsing the trade of Marchaundize, or seruauant to such Ambassadors as be liegers heere from the Princes and states ioyned in league with her grace, shall within 24. dayes after this Proclamation, auoyde the Realme, vpon payne of most greuous punishment by enprisonment and forfayture and confiscation of all their goodes and moueables, and also to be delyuered vnto their natu•all Princes, or Rulers, agaynst whose persons or lawes they haue offended. Geuing to all Mayors, Sheriffes, Bayliffes, Constables, and all other her ministers, officers, and good subiectes, straightly also in charge, if they knowe any such person not borne in the Queenes highnes dominion• (〈◇〉 before excepted) that shall after the time and day limited in •his Proclamation, tarry within thys Realme, that they shall apprehende the same person or persons, and commit him or them to 〈◇〉, there to remayne without bayle or mayneprise, till her graces pleasure or her Counsayles be signified vnto them for the further ordering of the sayde person or persons. And that if any of her sayde officers, after the sayd 24. dayes apprehend, take, or knowe of any such, they shall with diligence immediatly certifie her sayd Counsell thereof, to the intent order may forthwith be geuē for their punishmēt according.

In the meane while, vpō the Proclamation before mencioned, not only y^e strangers in K. Edwards time receiued into the Realme for Religion,* amōg whō was Pet. Martir, Iohn Alasco vnclē to the King of Poleland, but many Englishmen fled, some to Freeseland, some to Cleueland, some to high Germany, where they were diuersly scattered into diuers companies & congregations, at Wesell, at Frankford, Emden, Markpurgh, Strausborough, Basill, Arow, Zurich, Geneua, and other places: where by the prouidence of God they were al susteined, and there entertained with greater fauour among strangers abroad,* then they could be in their owne countrey at home, welneare to the number of 800. persons, Students, & other together.

In the saide moneth of March, the Lorde Courtney Earle of Deuonshire, whome the Queene at her first entring deliuered out of the Tower, and Lady Elizabeth also the Queenes Sister, were both in suspesction to haue consented to Wiats conspiracie, and for the same this March were apprehended and committed to the Tower.

Touching the imprisonment of which Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, thou shalt note heere for thy learning (good Reader) a politicke point of practise in Steuen Gardiner Bishop of Wint. not vnworthy to be considered. This Gardiner being alwayes a capitall enemie to the Lady Elizabeth, and thinking •owe by the occasion of maister Wyate to picke out some matter against the Lorde Courtney, and so in the end, to entangle the Lady Elizabeth, deuised a pestilent practise of conueyance, as in the story heere following may appeare.

The story is this. The same day that Sir Tho. Wyate died,* he desired the Lieutenant to bring him to the presence of the Lord Courtney. Who there before the Lieutenaunte and the Sheriffes, kneeling downe vpon his knees, besought the Lorde Courtney to forgeue him, for that he had falsly accused both the Lady Elizabeth and him, and so being brought from thence vnto the scaffold to suffer, there openly in the hearing of all the people cleared the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lorde Courtney to be free and innocente from all suspition of that commotion. At which confession,* Doctor Weston there standing by, cryed to the people, saying: Beleeue him not good people, for he confessed otherwise before vnto the Counsell.

After the execution done of Sir Thomas Wyat, which was the 11. day of Aprill, word was brought immediately to the Lord Maior Sir Thomas White, a little before dinner,* how maister Wyate had cleared the Lady Elizabeth and Lorde Courtney, and the wordes also which Doctor Weston spake vnto the people, wherunto the Lord Maior aunswering: Is this true quoth he? said Weston so? In sooth I neuer tooke him otherwise but for a knaue. Upon this, the Lord Maior sitting downe to dinner (who dyed the same day at the Bridgehouse) commeth in Sir Martin Bowes with the Recorder, newly come from the Parliament house, who hearing of the Maior and Sheriffes this report of Wiats confession, both vpon the Scaffold and also in the Tower, marueiled thereat, declaring how there was another tale contrary to this, told the same day in the Parliament house, which was, that Sir Thomas Wyate should desire the Lord Courtney to confesse the truth, so as he had done before.

Upon this it followed not lōg after that a certaine prentice dwelling in S. Laurence lane, named Cut, as he was drinking with one Denhā a plasterer being one of Quene Maries seruauents, amongst other talke made mentiō how Sir Thomas Wyate had cleared the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, to be no cōsenter to his rising. Which wordes being brought to Gardiner (by what meanes I know not) incōtinent vpon the same,* Syr Andrew Iudde was sent by the sayd Bishop to y^e Lord Maior, commaunding him to bring the said prentise to the Star Chamber, which was accused of these words, that he should say that Wyat was constrained by the Counsell to accuse the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney. Which fellow when he was come to the starre Chamber, the aforesaid Gardiner letting passe other matters that were in hand, began to declare to the whole multitude, how myraculously almighty God had brought the Queenes Maiesty to the Crowne, y^e whole Realme in a maner being against her, & that he had brought this to passe for this singular intent and purpose,* that this Realme being ouerwhelmed with heresies, shee might reduce againe the same vnto the true Catholicke faith. And where she tooke the Lady Elizabeth into her fauour, and loued her so tenderly, and also the Lord Courtney, who of long time had bene deteined in prison, and by her was set at libertie, and receiued great benefites at her hands, and notwithstanding all this, they had conspired most vnnaturally and traiterously against her with that haynous Traytour Wiates, and by the confession of Wyate (sayde he) and the letters sent to and fro may playnely appeare: Yet there was some in the City of London, whiche reported that Wyat was constrained by the Counsell to accuse the Lady Elizabeth and the L. Courtney, & yet you my L. Maior (quoth he) haue not seene the same punished.

The party is heere, sayd the Lord Maior. Take hym with you (said Gardiner) and punish him according to his desert, & said further: My Lord, take heede to your charge, the Citie of London is a whirlepoole and sincke of all euill rumours, there they be bread, and from thence spread into all partes of this Realme.

There stood by the same time the Lord Shandoys,* who being then Lieutenaunt of the Tower, and now hearing the Byshop thus speake, to sooth his tale, came in wyth these words as followeth.

My Lordes (quoth he) this is a trueth that I shall tell you, I being Lieutenant of the Tower when Wiat suffred he desired me to bring him to the Lorde Courtney, whych when I had done, he fell down vpon his knees before him in my presence, and desired him to confesse the truth of hym selfe, as he had done before, and to submit himselfe vnto the Queenes Maiesties mercy.

And thus much I thought of this matter to declare, to the entent that the Reader perceiuing the proceedings of Page 1426 the bishop in the premisses, and comparing the same with the true testimony of Wyat himselfe, & with the testimony o^r the Sheriffes whiche were present the same time when Syr Thomas Wiat asked the Lord Courtney forgeuenes, may the better iudge of the whole case and matter for the whiche the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney were so long in trouble. Of which her Graces trouble, hereafter (God willing) more shall be said in the story of her life. In the meane time, to let this matter stay, let vs now passe fur^ther in our history.

NOt longe after this, Queene Mary partly fearing the Londiners by occasion of Wiats cōspiracy partly per^{ce}iuing most part of the City for religions sake not greatly to fauour her proceedings, to theyr displeasure and hinderaunce sommoned a Parliament to be holdē at Oxford: as it were to gratify that Citty, where both the Uniuersity, Towne, and Country had shewed themselues very obedient and forward, especially in restoring popish religion. For this purpose great prouision was made, as wel by the Queenes officers and by the townes men and inhabitantes of Oxford and the Country about.

*But the Queenes minde in short space chaunged, and the same Parliament was holden at Westminster in aprill folowing. Then the Queene, beside other thinges, proposed concerning her mariage to king Philip, and restoring of the Popes supremacy. As touching her maryage it was agreed vpon: but the other request could not as then be obteyned.

The same time when this Parliamēt was sommoned, she also sommoned a conuocation of bishops & of the Clergy,* writing vnto Boner (whom she had made Uicegerēt in the stead of Cranmer being in the Tower) after y^e tenor and forme of a new stile, differing from the olde stile of K. Henry, and K. Edward as foloweth.

The stile of Q. Mary altered writing to Boner for the summoning of a Conuocation.

MARIA Dei gratia Angliae, Franciae, Hiberniae Regina, fidei defensor.*Reuerendo in Christo patri Edmondo London. Epis. Salutem. Licet nuper quibusdam arduis & vrgentibus negotijs nos securitatem, & defensionem Ecclesiae Anglicanae ac pacem & tranquillitatem &c.

Where note good Reader, concerning the altering and chaunging the Queenes stile, the latter part thereof to bee left out of her title, which is: Ecclesiae Anglicanae Hiberniae supremum caput, because in this present Parliament the supremacy being geuen away from the crowne of Englande to the Pope,* therupon this parcell of the title was also taken away. Likewise the sayd Boner geuing his certificate vpon the same, leaueth out autoritate illustrissimae. &c. legitime suffultus: which parcel also in the same Parliament was repriued and taken away the same time.

¶The dignity of Priestes extolled by Byshop Boner.

IN this foresayd conuocation, Bonor B. of Londō being Uicegerent and President as is said, made a certayne exhortation or oration to the Clergy (whether it was in this conuocatiō or much about the sayd time) wherein he semeth to shew a great piece of his profound and deep learning in setting forth the most incomparable & superangelical order of Priesthood,* as may appeare by this parcell or fragment of his foresayd Oration. Being collected and gathered by some that stode by, whiche as it came to our handes so I thought to impart it to the Reader, both for that the Author of so worthy a worke should not passe vnknown, and partly also, for that y^e estimatiō of this blessed order should los• nothing of his preeminence, but might be knowne in most ample perfection, so as it standeth aboue Angels and kinges, if it be true that Boner sayth.

¶A piece or fragment of the exhortation made by Boner Bishop of London, to them of the Conuocation house, copyed out by them that stood by and heard him.

Boners Oration in prayse of Priesthood.

Wherefore it is to be knowne that Priestes & Elders be worthy of all mē to be worshipped for the dignity sake which they haue of God,* as in Mat. 16. Whatsoever ye shall lose vpon earth. &c. And whatsoever you shall binde. &c. For a priest by some meanes is like Mary the Uirgin, and is shewed by three poyntes: As the blessed Uirgine by fiue wordes did conceiue Christ, as it is sayd: Luke. 1. Fiat mihi secundum verbū tuum: that is to say. Be it vnto me according to thy word:* so the priest by 5. wordes doth make the very body of Christe. Euen as immediately after the consent of Mary, Christ was all whole in her wombe: so immediatly after the speaking of the wordes of consecration, y^e bread is transubstantiated into the very body of Christ. Secondly, as the Uirgin caried Christ in her armes, and layd him in an Oxe shall after his byrth: euen so the Priest after the consecration, doth lift vp the body of Christ, & placeth it, & caryeth it, and handleth it with his hands. Thyrdly, as the blessed Uirgin was sanctified before she was conceiued: so the Priest being ordeined & annoynted before he doth consecrate, because without orders he could cōsecrate nothing, therefore the lay man cannot do the thing, although he bee neuer so holy, and do speake the selfe same wordes of consecration. Therefore here is to be knowne, that the dignity of Priestes by some meanes passeth the dignity of angels,* because there is no power geuen to any of the Aungels to make the body of Christ. Whereby the least priest may do in earth, that the greatest and highest Aungell in heauen can not do as S. Barnard sayth: O worshipful dignity of Priestes in whose hands the Sonne of God is, as in the wombe of the Virgin he was incarnate. S. Augustine sayth, that Angels in the consecration of the sacred host do serue him, and the Lorde of heauen descendeth to him. Whereupon Saynt Ambrose vpon Saynt Luke sayth: Doubt thou not the Aungels to be where Christ is present vpon the Aultare. Wherefore Priestes are to be honoured before all kinges of the earth, Princes and Nobles. For a Priest is higher then a King,* happyer then an Aungell, Maker of his Creator. Wherefore. &c.

It was declared a litle before, how Doct. Ridley was had from Fremingham to the Tower: where being in duraunce, and inuited to the Lieftenants table, he had certain talke or conference with Secretary Bourne M. Fecknam and other concerning the controuersies in religiō: y^t sūme whereof, as it was penned with his owne hand, hereafter ensueth.

Here foloweth the summe and effect of the communication betwene D. Ridley, and Secretary Bourne with others, at the Lieuetenauntes table in the Tower.

MAister Thomas of Bridges sayd at his brother mayster Lieuetenantes boorde: I pray you M. Doctours,* for my learning tell me what an heretick is. M. Secretary Bourne sayd, I will tell you who is an hereticke: who so stubbornly & stifly maynteineth an vntruth, he is an hereticke.* Ye meane syr (sayd I) an vntrueth in matters of religion, & concerning our fayth. Yea that is true sayd he: & in this we are soone agreed. Then sayd maister Fecknam, sitting at the vpper end of the table, whom they called M. Deane of Paules: I wil tell you by S. Austine who is an hereticke. Qui adulandi principibus vel lucri gratia falsas opiniones gignit vel sequitur, hereticus est, sayth S. Austine.* And then he englished the same. Sir sayd I, I wene S. Austine addeth the thyrd member, which is, vel vanae gloriae causa. Ye say euen true M. Doctor, sayd he, and thus farre we did agree all three.

M. Fecknam began againe to say, who so doth not beleue that scripture affirmeth,* but will obstinately maintein the contrary, he is Haereticus, as in the sacramēt of the aultar: Mathew doth affirm there to be Christs body. Marke doth affirme it, Luke affirmeth it, Paule affirmeth it, and none denyeth it: therefore to hold the cōtrary it is heresy. It is the same body and flesh that was borne of the virgine: & this is confirmed by vnity, antiquity & vniuersalitye. For none before Berengarius did euer doubt of this,* & he was an heretick, as M. doctor there knoweth full well: I do testify his owne conscience sayd he.

Mary sir, saide mayster Secretary, maister Fecknam hath spoken well. These be great matters, vnitie antiquitie and vniuersalitie. Do ye not thinke so maister Doctour said he to me?

Here while I strayned curtesye and pretended as nothinge to talke, sayd one of the Commissioners: peraduenture M. Ridley doth agree with M. Fecknam, and then there needes not much debating of the matter.

Syr saide I in some thinges I doe and shall agree with him, and in some things which he hath spoken to be playne. I doe not agree with him at all. Maister sayde I, ye be (as I vnderstād) the Queenes Commissioners here and if ye haue commissiō to examine me in these matters, I shall declare vnto you playnely my faythe, if yee haue not, then I shall pray you either geue mee leaue to speake my minde freely, or els to hold my peace.

There is none here, sayde M. Secretary, that doth not fauour you: and thē euery man shewed what fauour they Page 1427 bare towards me, and howe glad they woulde be of an agreement.

But as I strayned to haue licence of thē in playn wordes to speak my minde,* so me thought they graunted me it but vix or agrè. Well at the last I was content to take it for licenced, and so began to talke.

To M. Fecknams argumentes of the manifold affirmatiō where no denial was,* I answered: where is a multitude of affirmations in scripture, and where is one affirmation, all is one concerning the trueth of the matter: for that any one of the Euangelists spake inspired by the holy ghost,* was as true as that which is spoken of them all. It is as true that Iohn sayth of Christ: Ego sum ostium ouium. i. I am the dore of the sheepe, as if all had sayde it. For it is not in scripture as in witnes of men where the number is credited more then one, because it is vncertayne of whose spirit he doth speake. And where M. Fecknam spake of so many, affirming without any negation. &c. Syr sayd I, all they do affirme the thing which they ment. Now if ye take theyr wordes to leaue theyr meaning then do they affirme what ye take,* but not what they ment. Syr sayde I, if in talke with you, I should so vtter my minde in words, that ye by the same do, and may playnely perceiue my meaning & could (if ye wold be captious) cauil at my words & writh them to an other sense, I would thinke ye were no gentle companion to talke with, except ye would take my words as ye did perceiue that I did meane.

Mary, quoth M. Secretary, we should els do you plain iniury and wrong.

M. Fecknam perceiuing whereunto my talke went, why (quoth he) what circumstaunces can ye shew me that should moue to thinke of any other sense, then as the wordes playnely say: Hoc est corpus meum, quod pro vobis tradetur. i. This is my body which shall be betrayed for you?

Syr sayd I, euen the next sentence that foloweth: vix. Hoc facite in meam commemorationem. i. Do this in my remembraunce.* And also by what reason, ye say the bread is turned into Christes carnall body: By the same I may say, that is turned into his misticall body. For as that sayth of it: Hoc est corpus quod pro vobis tradetur:* so Paule which spake by Christes spirit sayth: Vnus panis & vnum corpus multi sumus omnes, qui de vno pane participamus. i. We being many are all but one bread and one body, in as much as we are partakers of one bread.

Here he calleth one bread, one loafe, sayd Maister Seretary.

Yea sayd I, one loafe, one bread, all is one with me.

But what saye ye quoth maister Secretary, of the Uniuersalitye, antiquitye, and vnity, that M. Fecknam dyd speake of?

I ensure you sayd I, I thinke them matters weighty and to be considered well.* As for vnity, the truth is, before God, I doe beleue it and embrace it, so it be with verity, & ioyned to our head Christ, and such one as Paule, speaketh of saying: Vna fides, vnus Deus, vnum Baptisma. i. On fayth, one God,* one Baptisme. And for antiquity I am also persuaded to be true that Iraeneus sayth: Quod primum verum. i. That is first is true. In our Religion Christes fayth was first truely taught by Christ himselfe, by his Apostles and by manye good men that from the beginning did succeede next vnto them: and for this controuersy of the Sacramēt I am perswaded, that those olde writers which wrote before the controuersye and the vsurping of the sea of Rome do all agree, if they be well vnderstanded in this truth.

I am glad to heare, sayd Maister Secretary, that ye do so well esteme the Doctors of the church.

*Now as for vniuersality, it may haue 2. meanings: one to vnderstand that to be vniuersall which from the beginning in all ages hath bene allowed, another, to vnderstand vniuersalitye for the multitude of our age or of anye other singuler age.

No, no, sayth maister Secretary, these 3. doe alwayes agree, and where there is one, there is all the rest, and here he and I chaunged many wordes. And finally, to be shorte in this matter we did not agree.

There was none quoth mayster Fecknam, before Berengarius, Wickliffe, and Hus, and now in our dayes Carolostadius, Oecolampadius. And Carolostadius sayth, Christ poynteth to his owne body and not to the Sacrament, and sayd: Hoc est Corpus meum. And Melancton writeth to one Micronius (Miconius sayde I) these or like wordes:*Nullam satis grauem rationem inuenire possum, propter quam a fide maiorum in hac materia dissentiam. i. I can finde no grounded reason to cause me to dissent from the beliefe of our foreelders.

*Thus when hee had spoken at length, with manye other wordes mo: Sir sayd I, it is certain that other before these haue written of this matter. Not by the way onelye, and obiter, as doth for the most all the olde writers, but euen ex professo, and theyr whole bookes intreat of it alone, as Bertram.

Bertram said the Secretary, what man was he? & whō was he, and how do ye know? &c. with many questions.

Syr quoth I, I haue read his booke: He proponeth the same which is now in controuersy, and aunswereth so dyrectly that no man may doubt but that he affirmeth, that y^e substance of bread remaineth still in the Sacrament, and he wrote vnto Carolus Magnus.

Mary (quoth he) marke for there is a matter. He wrote quoth he, ad Henricum, and not ad Carolum, for no Authour maketh any such mention of Bertramus.

Yes quoth I, Trithemius in Catalogo illustrium scriptorū, speaketh of him. Trithemius was but o• late time: but he spebeth quoth I of them that were of antiquitye. Here, after much talke of Bertram, what authors haue ye quoth M. Secretary to make of the sacrament a figure?

Syr quoth I, ye knowe (I thinke) that Tertullian in playne wordes speaketh thus: Hoc est corpus, id est, figu• Corporis mei. i. This is my bodye, that is to say, a figure o• my body. And Gelasius sayth playnly that Substantia panis manet. i. The substaunce of bread remayneth. And Origene sayth likewise, Quod sanctificatur secundum materiam, ingreditur stomachum & vadit in secessum. i. That which is sanctified, as touching the matter or substance, passeth away into the draught. This when I had englished, M. Secretarye sayd to me, you know very well as any man. &c. and here, if I woulde, I might haue bene set in a foolishe Paradise of his commendation of my learning, and quòd essem vir multae Lectionis. i. A manne of much readyng. But thys I woulde not take at his hand. He set me not vp so high, but I brought my selfe as low againe: and here was much adoe.

As for Melancton (quoth I) whō M. Fecknam spake of, I maruell that ye will alledge him, for we are more nye an agrement here in England, then the opinion of Melācton to you: for in this poynt we all agree here, that there is in the sacrament but one materiall substance: & Melanctō as I weene, sayth there are two.

Ye say trueth quoth M. Secretary: Melanctons opinion is so. But I pray you, ye haue read that the sacramēt was in olde time so reuerenced, that many were then forbidden to be present at the ministration thereof. Catecumeni (quoth he) and many moe.

Truth sir (quoth I) there were called some Audientes, some Poenitentes, some Catechumeni, and some Euergumeni, which were commaunded to depart.

Now (quoth he) then. And howe can ye then make but a figure or a signe of the Sacrament, as that booke whyche is set forth in my Lord of Canterburyes name, I wisse, <◇> can tell who made it, did not ye make it? & here was much murmuring of the rest, as though they would haue geuen me the glorye of the writing of the booke, whiche yet there was sayd of some there, to conteyne most haynous heresy that euer was.

Mayster Secretary (quoth I) that booke was made of a great learned man, and him which is able to do the like a'gain: as for me I ensure you (be not deceiued in me) I was neuer able to do or write any such like thing, he passeth me no lesse, then the learned mayster his yong scholer.

Now, here euery man would haue his saying, which I passe ouer, not much materiall for to tell. But sir quoth I, me thinkes it is not charitably done, to beare the people in hand that any man doth so lightly esteeme the sacrament, as to make of it a figure. For that [but] maketh it a bare figure without any more profit, which that book doth often deny, as appeareth to the reader most playnely.

Yes quoth he that they do.

Sir, no quoth I, of a truth: and as for me, I ensure you I make no lesse of the sacrament then thus: I say whosoeuer receiueth the sacrament, he receiueth therewith eyther life or death.

No quoth M. Secretary, scripture sayth not so.

Sir quoth I, although not in the same soūd of words, yet it doth in the same sense, and S. Augustine sayth, in the sound of words also: for Paule sayth: The bread which we breake, is it not the partaking or felowship of the bodye of Christ? And S. Augustine, Manduca vitam, Bibe vitam, i. eate life, drinke life.

Then sayd mayster Pope, what can ye make of it whē ye say, there is not the reall body of Christ? Whiche I doe beleue. &c. & I pray God I may neuer beleue other. How can it bring (as ye say) either life or death,* when Christes body is not there?

Syr quoth I, when you heare Gods word truely preached, if ye do beleue it and abide in it, ye shal and do receiue life withal: and if ye do not beleue it, it doth bring vnto you Page 1428 death: and yet Christes body is still in heauen and not carnall in euery preachers mouth.

I pray you tell me quoth he, how can you aunswere to this:*Quod pro vobis tradetur, which shall be geuen for you: was the figure of Christes body geuen for vs?

No sir quoth I, but the very body it selfe, wherof the sa|crament is a sacramentall figure.

How say ye then quoth he, to Quod pro vobis tradetur: which shall be geuen for you.

*Forsoothe quoth I, Tertullians exposition maketh it playne, for he sayth, Corpus est figura Corporis. i. The body is a figure of the body. Nowe put to Quod pro vobis tradetur: Whiche shall bee geuen for you, and it agreeth exceedyng well.

In fayth quoth he, I would geue xl. poūd that ye were of a good opinion. For I ensure you I haue heard you, and had an affection to you.

I thanke you mayster Pope, for your hart and minde, and ye knowe quoth I, I were a very foole if I woulde in this matter dissent frō you, if that in my conscience y^e truth did not enforce me so to do. For iwise (as ye do perceiue, I trowe) it is somewhat out of my way, if I would esteeme worldly gayne.

*What say ye, quoth he, to Cyprian? Doth he not saye playnly, Panis quem dedit Dominus non effigie sed natura mutatus omnipotentia verbi factus est caro? i. The Bread whiche the Lorde did deliuer, being changed, not according to the forme, but according to the nature thereof, by the omnipotent word is made flesh.

True Syr, so he doth say, and I answere euen the same which once by chaunce I preached at Paules Crosse in a Sermon,* for the which I haue bene as vniustly & as vntruely reported as any pore man hath bene. For there, I speaking of the sacrament, and inueying against them that esteemed it no better then a piece of bread, told euē the same thing of Poenitentes, Audientes, Catecumeni, Energumeni, that I spake of before: and I bad them depart as vnworthy to heare the misterye, and then I sayd to those that be Sancti: Cyprian the Martyr shall tel you how it is that Christ calleth it, saying Panis est corpus, cibus, potus, caro, &c. i. Breade is the body,* meat, drinke, flesh, because that vnto this materiall substance is geuen the property of the thing whereof it beareth the name: and this place then tooke I to vtter as the time would then suffer, that the materiall substaunce of bread doth remaine. M. Fecknam (which as is reported to me) did belie me openly in y^e same matter at Paules crosse, heard all this my talke (as red as skarlet in his face) and herein aunswered me neuer one word.

You do know wel, quoth M. Secretary, that Origenes and Tertullian were not Catholicke but erred.

*Syr quoth I, there is none of all the Doctors that are holden in all points, but are thought to haue erred in some thinges. But yet I neuer heard that it was eyther layd to Origēs charge or to Tertullian, y^t euer they were thought to haue erred in this matter of the sacrament.

What quoth M. Chomley, late chiefe Iustice, doth not christ say plainly, that it is his very flesh, & his very bloud, and we must needes eate him,* or we can haue no life? Syr, quoth I: if you wil heare how S. Augustin expoūdeth that place, you shal perceiue that you are in a wrong boxe. And when I began to tell S. Augustines minde in his book de Doctrina Christiana: Yea, yea, quoth M. Secretary, that is true, S. Augustine doth take it figuratiuely in deed.

Forty yeares agoe quoth M. Fecknam, all were of one opinion in this matter.

Forty yeares ago (quoth I) all held that the Bishop of Rome was supreme head of the vniuersall Church.

What then? was master Fecknam beginning to say. &c. but M. Secretary tooke the tale, and sayde, that was but a positieue law.

A positieue law? quoth I, No Syr, he would not haue it so: for it is in his decrees, that he challēged it by Christes owne word.* For his decree sayth: Nullis Synodicis constitutis, ne{que} Consilijs, sed viua voce Domini praelata est Ecclesia Romana omnibus Ecclesijs in toto Mundo: dicente Domino Petro, tu es Petrus. &c. The Church of Rome was aduaunced aboue all other Churches in the world, not by any Sinodicall constitutiōs, nor yet any counsell, but by the liuely voyce of the Lord, according as the Lord sayd to Peter: Thou art Peter. &c. And in an other place he entreateth. Tu es Cephas, id est, caput. i. Thou art Cephas, that is to say, the head.

Tush, it was not counted an article (quoth M. Secretary) of our fayth.

Yes, sayd I, if ye call that an article of our fayth, which is to be beleued vnder payne of damnation. For he sayeth: Omninò definimus, declaramus, pronunciamus, omnem creaturam subesse Romano pontifici, de necessitate salutis. i. We do absolutely determine, declare, and pronouñce, that euery creature is subiect to the obedience of the Byshop of Rome vpon necessity of saluation.

And here whē we spake of lawes and decrees M, Roger Chomley thought himself much wrounged, y^t he could not be suffred to speake, the rest were so ready to interrupt him: and then he vp and told a long tale what lawes were of kings of England made against the Bish. of Rome, and was vehemēt to tell how they alway of the Clergy did flie to him. And here because he semed to speak of many things beside our purpose, whereof we spake before, he was aunswered of his owne felowes, and I let them talke.

Finally, we departed in peace,* and Maister Secretary promised in the end, that of theyr talke there shoulde come to me no harme. And after I had made my mone for lacke of my books, he sayd they were all once geuen him: but sith I know (said he) who hath them now, write me the names of such as ye would haue and I wil speake for you the best I can.

Upon the Articles aboue mentioned,* and Inquisition made vpon the same, diuers Ministers were diuorced from theyr wiues. Amongest whom was one Iohn Draper, and Ioane Golde his wife, in the Dioces of London, troubled and vexed for the same by Boner Bish. of Londō, who sent forth a Commission with a processe, to sequester and separate them, enioyning also penaunce to the poore woman.

Besides this Iohn Draper, diuers other also were diuorced the same time agaynst theyr wils, & some contented of theyr owne vnconstant accorde, to be separated of theyr wiues: as of Chichester one (who because he soone recouered againe shall be here nameles) an other named Edmōd Alstone, an other Alexander Bull, amongst whome also was D. Standish, with many other: whose names together in the end of this story of Queene Mary, we may peraduenture, by Gods grace in a generall Catalogue, together comprehend.

March. 1554.

The 10. of March a letter was sēt to the Lieuetenant of the Tower to deliuer the bodyes of M. Doc. Cranmer the Archhishop of Caunterbury, M.D. Ridley, and M. Latimer, to Syr Iohn Williames to be conueyed by him vnto Oxford.

The 26. of March there was a letter directed to Syr Henry Doell and one Foster to attach the bodyes D. Tailor Parson of Hadley, and of Hēry Askew, and to send thē vp to the Counsell.

¶How Thomas Cranmer Archbishop, Bishop Ridley, and M. Latimer were sent downe to Oxford to dispute, with the order and maner, and all other circumstances vnto the sayd disputation, and also to theyr condemnation apperteining.

ABout the tenth of April,* Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Ridley B. of London, and Hugh Latimer B. also sometime of Worcester, were cōueyed as prisoners frō the Tower to Windsore: and after from thence to the Uniuersity of Oxford, there to dispute with the Diuines & learned men of both the Uniuersities, Oxford and Cambridge, about the presence, substance and sacrifice of the sacrament.* The names of the Uniuersity doctors and Graduates, appoynted to dispute agaynst them were these: Of Oxford, Doctor Weston Prolocutor, D. Tresham, Doctor Cole, D. Oglethorp, D. Pie, M. Harpsfield, M. Fecknam. Of Cambridge, D. Yong Uicechauncellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Seton, D. Watson, D. Sedgewike, D. Atkinson, &c. The Articles or questions whereupon they should dispute, were these.

1 Whether the natural body of Christ be really in the sacrament after the wordes spoken by the Priest, or no?*

2 Whether in the Sacrament after the wordes of consecration, any other substance do remayne, then the substance of the body and bloud of Christ.

3 Whether in the Masse be a sacrifice propitiatory for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead.

Touching the order and maner of al which things there done, with the notes, arguments,* & all circumstances there vnto perteyning, to deduce the matter from the beginning-leauing out nothing (as nere as we may) y^t shall seeme necessary to be added, first here is to be vnderstand that vpon saterday the 7. day of Aprill, the heads of the Colledges in Cambridge being congregate together, letters commyng downe from Steuen Gardiner L. Chauncellor, were red Page 1429 with Articles therewith annexed, that should be disputed vpon at Oxford: the contentes of the which three Articles are sufficiently expressed before. Wherupon in the sayd con|gregation of the aforesayd Uniuersity of Cambridge, there was graunted first a grace in this fourme proposed by the Seniour Proctor: Placet vobis vt instrumentum fiat, quod horum iam praelectorum articulorum doctrina sana sit & catholica, atque, cum veritate orthodoxae fidei consentiens, & vestro consensu, & suffragijs comprebatur? That is: may it please you to haue an instrument made that the doctrine of these foresaid Articles may be sound and catholicke and consonant with the verity of the right meaning fayth,* & that the same may be approued by your consent and voyces? Secondly in the sayd congregation, an other grace was geuen and graunted, that Doctor Yong being the Uicechauncellor, D. Glin Doct. Atkinson,* Doct. Scot, and M. Sedgewicke shoulde goe to Oxford to defend the sayde Articles agaynst Caunterbury, London, and Latimer: Also to haue letters to the Oxford men, sealed with theyr common seale: Item, an other grace graunted to M. Sedgewike, to be actuall Doctor, being therupon immediately admitted. The foresayd letters being then drawne out, the third day after (whiche was the 11. day of Aprill) were read in the foresayd congregation house and there sealed.

Wherupon the next day after (the 12. of the sayd month) the foresayd Doctors, with the ful grace of that vniuersity, set forward to Oxford:*, and comming thither the next day after (being friday, the 13. of Aprill) were lodged all at the Crosse Inne, with one Wakecline, being sometime seruant to Byshop Boner.

Anon after their comming, Doct. Crooke presented thē with wine for theyr welcome:, and shortly after, two of the Bedles came from the Uicechauncellor of Oxford, and pre|sented the Uicechauncellour of Cambridge with a dishe of Apples, and a gallen of wine. After whome, next came M. Pye and Fecknam to welcome them. Then after consultation concerning the deliery of theyr letters and instrument of grace (which was in Doctor Seton and Watsons keeping) they went all to Lincolne Colledge to Doct, Weston the Prolocutor, and to the Uicechauncellour D. Tresham: and there they deliuered theyr letters, and declared what they had done touching the articles, letters, and graces. Half houre after 8. they returned to theyr Inne again: but first they concluded of a Procession, Sermon, & conuocation to be had the morowe folowing, and that the Doctors of Cambridge should be incorporate in the Uniuersity of Oxford, & likewise that the Doctors of Oxford should be incorporate in the Uniuersity of Cambridge. The same day the forenamed prisoners were disseuered, as was sayd afore: Doctor Ridley to Alderman Iryshes house M. Latimer to an other, and Doctor Cranmer remayned still in Bocardo.*

On Saturday (being the 14. of Aprill) at eighthe of the clocke, the foresayd Uicechauncellour of Cambridge wyth the other Doctours of the same Uniuersitye: repayred to Lincolne Colledge agayne, and found the Prolocutour aboue in a Chappell, with the company of the house singing Requiem Masse,* and taryed there vntill the end. Then they consulting altogether in the Maysters lodging, about 9. of the clocke came all to the Uniuersity church called S. Maries, and there, after short consultation in a Chappell, the Uicechauncellor the Prolocutor.* &c. of Oxford, caused the Uicechauncellor of Cambridge & the rest of the Doctours of that Uniuersity, to send for theyr skarlet robes, brought from Cambridge, saue that Doct. Seton and Watson borrowed of the Oxford men. And in this time, the Regentes in the congregation house, had graūted all the Cambridge Doctors theyr graces, to be incorporate there, and so they went vp and were admitted immediately, D. Oglethorpe presenting them, and the Proctour reading the statute, and geuing them theyr othes.

That done, they came all into the Quier, and there held the conuocation of the Uniuersity. They had Masse of the holy Ghost solemnly song in pricksong,* by the Quier men of Christes Church. But first the cause of the Conuocatiō was opened in English, partly by the Uicechauncellour, and partlye by the Prolocutour, declaring that they were sent by the Queene, and wherfore they were sent: and caused Mayster Say the Register, openly to read the Cōmission. That done, the Uicechauncellor read Cambridge letters openly, and then concluded that 3. Notaries, Maister Say for the Conuocation,* a Bedle of Cambridge for that vniuersity, and one Maister White for Oxford, shoulde testifie of theyr doing: and then willed the sayd Notaryes to prouide parchment, that the whole assemblye mighte subscribe to the Articles, saue those that had subscribed before in the conuocation house at London and Cambridge, and so the Uicechauncellour began first: after him the rest of the Oxford men, as many as could in the Masse time.

The Masse being done, they went in procession:* First the Quier in theyr surplices followed the Crosse: then the first yeare Regentes and Proctours: then the Doctors of law, and theyr Bedle before them: then the Doctors of diuinity of both Uniuersities intermingled, the Diuinitye & arte Bedles going before them, the Uicechauncellour and the Prolocutour going together. After them Bachelers of Diuinity, Regentes, & non Regentes, in theyr aray: and last of all, the Bachelers of Law and Art. After whom folowed a great company of scholers and students not graduate. And thus they proceeded through y^e street to Christs church, and there the quier sang a Psalme, and after that a collect was read. This done, departed the Cōmissioners, doctours, and many other to Lincolne Colledge, where they dyned with the Maior of the towne, one Alderman, foure Bedles, Mayster Say, and the Cambridge Notary. After diner they went all agayne to S. Maries Church: & there after a short consultation in a Chappell, all the Commissioners came into the quier, and sate all on seates before the Aulter, to the number of 33. persons: And first they sent to the Maior, that he should bring in Doct. Cranmer, whiche within a while was brought to them with a great nūber of rusty bilmen.

Thus the reuerend Archb. when he was brought before the Cōmissioners, reuerenced them with much humility, and stode with his staffe in his hande: who notwithstanding hauing a stoole offred him, refused to sit. Then the Prolocutor sitting in the midst in a skarlet gowne, began with a short Preface or Oratiō, in praise of vnity, and especially in the church of Christ: declaring with all his bringing vp, and taking degrees in Cābridge, and also how hee was promoted by king Henry, and had bene his couंसellor and a Catholicke man, one of the same vnity, and a mēber therof in times past: but of late yeares did separate and cut of himselfe from it, by teaching & setting forth of erroneious doctrine, making euery yeare a new fayth: and therefore it pleased the Queenes grace, to send them of the Conuocation & other learned men to bring him to this vnity again, if it might be. Then shewed he him how they of the Conuocation house, had agreed vpon certayne articles, wherevnto they willed him to subscribe.

The Archb. aunswered to the preface very wittily, modestly, and learnedly, shewing that he was very glad of an vnity, forasmuch as it was Cōseruatrix omnium rerum publicarum, tam Ethnicorum quam Christianorum. i. the preseruer of all common wealthes, as well of the Heathen, as of the Christians: and so he dilated the matter with one or two storyes of the Romaynes Common wealth. Whiche thing when he had done, he sayde, that he was verye gladde to come to an vnity, so that it were in Christ, and agreeable to his holy word.

When he had thus spoken his full mind, the Prolocutor caused the articles to be read vnto him, and asked if he would graunt and subscribe vnto them. Then the Bishop of Canterbury did reade them ouer three or foure times & touching the first article he asked what they ment by these termes verū & naturale. i. true & natural. Doe you not meane sayth he, Corpus organicum. i. a sensible body? Some aunswered, Idem quod natus est ex virgine. i. the same that was borne of the Virgine: and so confusedly, some said one thing, some an other. Then the Bishop of Canterbury denied it vtterly, and when he had looked vpon the other two, he sayde they were all false and agaynst Gods holy word: And therefore would not agree he sayd, in that vnity with them. Which done, the Prolocutor first willing him to write his mynde of them that night, sayd moreouer that he should dispute in them, and caused a copy of the articles to be deliuered him, assigning him to answere thereunto on Monday next, and so charged the Maior with him again, to be had to Bocardo where he was kept before: offring moreouer vnto him, to name what books he would occupy, and he should haue them brought vnto him. The Archbishop was greatly cōmended of euery body for his modesty: In so much, that some Maisters of Arte were seene to weep for him, which in iudgement were contrary to him.

Then was Doctor Ridley brought in, who hearing y^e articles read vnto him, answered, without any delay, saying: they were all false, and sayd further, that they sprange out of a bitter and sower roote. His aunsweres were sharp witty and very learned. Then did they lay to his charge a sermon that he made when he was Bishop of Rochester, wherein (they sayd) he spake with transubstantiation. He denied it vtterly, and asked whether they could bring out any that heard him, which would say and affirme with thē the same. They could bring no prooffe of it at all. After that he was asked of one whether he desired not my lord Chancellor that now is, to sticke to the masse, and other things? Page 1430 He sayd, that my Lord would say no such things or words of him: for if he did, he reported not the truth of him.

Then he was asked whether he would dispute or no? He answered:  that as long as god gaue him life, he should not onely haue his hart, but also his mouth & penne to defend his truth: but he required time and bookes. They sayd he could not, and that he should dispute on Thursday, and till that time he shoulde haue bookes.  He sayde it was not reason that he might not haue his owne bookes, and time also to looke for his disputations. Then gaue they him the articles, & •ad him write his mind of them that night, & so did they commaunde the Maior to haue him from whence he came.

Last of all came in M. Latimer in like sort, with a kerchiefe,  & 2. or 3. cappes on his head, his spectacles hanging by a stringe at his brest, and a staffe in his hande, and was set in a chayre: for so was he suffered by the Prolocutour. And after this deniall of the articles, when he had wednesday appoynted for disputation, he alledged age, sicknesse, disuse & lack of bookes,  saying that he was almost as meet to dispute as to be a captayne of Calice: but he would (he sayd) declare his minde either by writing or by word, and would stand to all that they coule lay vpon his backe: cōplayning moreouer that he was permitted to haue neither pen, nor incke, nor yet any booke, but onely the new testament there in his hand,  which he sayd, he had read ouer 7. times deliberately, & yet could not find the masse in it, neither the marowbones nor sinewes of the same. At whyche words the Commissioners were not a litle offended, & D. Weston sayd, that he would make him graunt, that it had both marowbones & sinewes in the new Testament. To whom M. Latimer sayd agayne: that you will neuer doe M. Doct. and so forthwith they put him to scilence, so that where he was desirous to tell what he ment by those termes, he could not be suffred: there was a very great prease and throng of people: and one of the Bedles swounded by reason therof, and was caryed into the Uestry. After this, bringing home the Prolocutor first, the Cambridge men, videlicet: •. Yong Uicechauncellour, Seton, Glin, Atkinson, Scotte, Watson, Sedgewicke, went to the Crosse Inne to supper. And this was on Saterday being the 14. day of Aprill.

On Sunday after, M. Harpsfielde preached at Saynt Maries the Uniuersity Church, at 9. of the clocke, where were diuers of the Doctors of the Uniuersity in theyr robes and placed accordingly. After the Sermō they went all to dinner to Magdalen Colledge, & there had a great dinner. They supped at Lincolne Colledge with the Prolocutor: whether Doct. Cranmer sent answere of his mynde vpon the Articles, * in writing.

On Monday (being the 16. of Aprill) Mayster Say, & M. Whit• Notaryes,  wente aboute in the morning to the Colledges, to gette subscriptions to the Articles. And about viij. of the clocke the Prolocutour wyth all the Doctours and the Uicechauncellour mette together at Exeter Colledge,  and so they went into the schooles: and when the Uicechauncellour, the Prolocutour, and Doctours were placed, and foure appoynted to be Exceptores Argumentorum, set a table in the midst, and foure Notaryes sitting with them, * D. Cranmer came to the Answerers place, the Maior and Aldermen sitting by him, and so the disputation began to be set a worke by the Prolocutor with a short Praeludium. Doctor Chedsey began to argue first: and ere he left, the Prolocutour diuers times, Doctor Tresham, Oglethorpe, Marshal Uicechauncellor, Pye, Cole, & Harpsfield did interrupt and presse him with theyr Argumentes, so that euery manne sayde somewhat, as the Prolocutour woulde suffer disorderly, sometime in Latine, sometime in Englishe, so that three houres of the time was spent, ere the Uicechancellour of Cambridge began: who also was interrupted as before. He beganne with three or foure questions subtly. Here the Bedles had prouided drinke, and offered the Aunswerer: * but he refused with thanks. The Prolocutor offered him, if he would make water or otherwise ease himselfe, he should. Thus the disputation continued vntill almost two of the clocke, with this applausion Audientium: *vicit veritas. Then were all the Argumentes (written by the foure appointed) deliuered into the hand of Mayster Say, Register. And as for the prisoner, he was had away by the Maior: And the Doctors dyned together at the Uniuersity Colledge.

And thus much concerning the generall order and maner of these disputations, with such circūstaunces as there happened, and thinges there done, as well before the disputations, and in the preparation therof, as also in y^e tyme of theyr disputing. Now foloweth to inferre and declare y^e Orations, Arguments, and aunsweres, vsed and brought forth in the sayd disputations on both partes.

The Argumentes, reasons, and allegations vsed in this disputation.

ON Monday D. Weston, * withall the residue of the Uisitours, Censors, and Opponētes: repaying to y^e Diuinity schole, eche one enstalled themselues in theyr places. D. Cranmer with a route of rusty bills was brought thyther, and set in the aunsweres place, with the Maior & Aldermen sitting by him. Where D. Weston Prolocutor, apparelled in a skarlet gowne (after the custome of the Uniuersity) began the disputatiō, with this Oratiō. His wordes in latin as he spake them were these.

Conuenistis hodie fratres profligaturi detestandam illam haeresin de veritate corporis Christi in Sacramento. &c. that is: * Ye are assembled hither (brethrē) this day, to confound the detestable heresy of the verity of the body of Christ in the sacrament. &c. At which wordes thus pronounced of y^e Prolocutor vnwares, diuers of the learned men there present, considering and well weying the wordes by him vttered, burst out into a great laughter as though euen in the entraunce of the disputations, he had bewrayed himselfe and his Religion, that termed the opinion of the verity of christes body in the Sacrament a detestable heresye. The rest of his Oration tended all to this effect, that it was not lawfull by Gods word to call these questions into cōtrouersy: for such as doubted of the wordes of Christ, myghte well be thought to doubte both of the trueth and power of God. Whereunto Doctor Cranmer desiring licence, aunswered in this wise.

We are assembled (sayth he) to discusse these doubtfull controuersies, * and to lay them open before the eyes of the world: whereof ye thinke it vnlawfull to dispute. It is in deed no reason (saith he) that we should dispute of y^t which is determined vpon, before the trueth be tryed. But if these questions be not called in controuersy, surely mine answer then is looked for in vayne. This was the summe and effect of his answere: and this done, he prepared himselfe to disputations.

Then Chedsey the first Opponent began in this wyse to dispute.*

Reuerend M. Doctor, these 3. conclusions are put forth vnto vs at this present to dispute vpon.

1 In the Sacrament of the aultar is the naturall body of Christe,*conceiued of the Virgine Mary, and also his bloud present really vnder the formes of bread & wine, by vertue of Gods word pronounced by the priest.

2 There remayneth no substaunce of breade and wyne after the consecration, nor any other substaunc, but the substaunce of God and man.

3 The liuely sacrifice of the Church is in the Masse, propitiatory as well for the quicke as the dead.

These be the conclusions propounded, wherupon this our present controuersye doth rest. Nowe to the ende wee might not doubt how you take the same, you haue already geuen vp vnto vs your opinion therof. I terme it your opinion, in that it disagreeeth from the catholicke. Wherefore thus I argue.

Ched.

Your opinion differeth from the scripture.

Ergo, you are deceiued.*

Cranmer.

I deny the antecedent.

Ched.

Christ when he instituted his last supper, spake to his Disciples: Take, eate, this is my body, which shall be geuen for you.

But his true body was geuen for vs:

Ergo, his true body is in the sacrament.

☞The right forme of this Argument is thus to be framed.

Da- The same which was geuē for vs, is in y^e sacrament.*

ri- But his true body was geuen for vs:

j. Ergo, his true body is in the sacrament.

Cran.

His true body is truely present to them that truely receiue him: but spiritually.* And so is it taken after a spirituall sort. For when he sayd: This is my body, it is all one as if he had sayde, this is the breaking of my body, this is the shedding of my bloud. As oft as you shal do this, it shal put you in remembraunce of the breaking of my body, and the shedding of my bloud: that as truely as you receiue this sacrament, so truly shal you receiue the benefite promised by receiuing the same worthely.

Ched.

Your opinion differeth from the church, which saith that the true body is in the sacrament.*

Ergo your opinion therin is false.

Cran.

I say and agree with the Church, that the bodye of Christ is in the sacrament effectually, because the Passion of Christ is effectually.*

Ched.

Christ, when he spake these woordes: This is my body, spake of the substaunce, but not of the effect.

Cran.

I graunt he spake of the substaunce, and not of the effect after a sorte: and yet it is most true that the bodye of Christ is effectually in the sacrament. But I denye that he is there truly presēt in bread,* or that vnder the bread in his organically body. And because it should be too tedious (hee sayd) to make discourse of the whole, he deliuered vp there his opinion therof to D. Weston writtē at large, with answeres to euery one of theyr 3. propositions: which he desired D. Weston,* sitting there on high, to read openly to the people: which he promised to doe. But it was not the first promise that such Papistes haue broken.

The cōpye of this writing although it were not there read, yet the contentes therof here we haue drawne out as foloweth.

¶An explication of Cranmer vpon the foresayd Conclusions exhibited in writing.

CRan.

*In the assertions of the Church and of religion, trifling and new fangled nouelties of wordes, so much as may be, are to be eschewed, whereof riseth nothing but contention and brawling about wordes and we must follow so much as we may, the maner of speaking of the scripture.

*In the first conclusion if ye vnderstand by thys worde [really] reipsa. i. in very deede and effectuallye, so Christe by the grace and efficacy of his Passion is in deed and truely present to all his true and holy members.

But if ye vnderstand by this word [really] Corporaliter. i. Corporally,* so that by the body of Christ is vnderstanded a natural body and organicall: so the first proposition doth vary, not onely from vsuall speach and the phrase of scripture, but also is cleane contrary to the holy word of God & christian profession: when as both the scripture doth testify by these wordes, and also the Catholicke church hath professed from the beginning. Christ to haue left the world and to sit at the right hand of the father till he come vnto iudgement.

And likewise I aunswere to the second questiō: that is that it swerueth from the accustomed maner and speach of Scripture.*

The thyrd conclusion, as it is intricate and wrapped in all doubtful and ambiguous wordes,* & diffing also much from the true speach of y^e Scripture, so as the wordes therof seeme to import in open sense: it is most contumelious agaynst our onely Lord and Sauour Christ Iesus, and a violating of his precious bloud, which vpon the aultar of the Crosse is the onely sacrifice and oblation for the sinnes of all mankinde.

Ched.

By this your interpretation which you haue made vpon the first conclusion, this I vnderstand, the bodye of Christ to be in the Sacramente onely by the way of participation: in so much as we communicating therof: do participate the grace of Christ: so that you meane hereby only the effect therof. But our conclusiō standeth vpon the substance, and not the efficacye onely, which shall appeare by the testimony both of Scriptures, and of all the fathers a thousand yeare after Christ.

And first to begin with the Scripture, let vs consider what is written in Math. 26. Mark. 14. Luke 22. fyrste to the Corinthis. 11. Mathew sayth:As they sat at supper Iesus tooke bread. &c. In Marke there is the same sense although not the same wordes: who also for one part of the Sacrament speaketh more playnely, Iesus taking breade. &c. After the same sense also writeth Luke. 22.*And when Iesus had taken bread. &c. In the mouth of two or three witnesses sayth the Scripture, standeth all truth. Here we haue three wytnesses together, that Christ sayd that to be his body which was geuē for many: and that to be his bloud which should be shed for many: wherby is declared the substance and not onely the efficacy alone therof.

Ergo it is not true that you say there to be, not the substance of his body, but the efficacy alone therof.

Cran.

*Thus you gather vpon mine aunswere, as though I did meane of the efficacy, and not of the substance of the body: but I meane of them both, as well of the efficacye as the substance. And for so much as all things come not readily to memory, to a man that shall speake ex tempore, therfore for the more ample and fuller aunswere in the matter, this writing here I do exhibite.

¶An explication exhibited by Cranmer.

OUr Lord and Sauior Iesus Christ, at the time of his Maundy, preparing himselfe to die for our cause, that he might redeeme vs from eternall death, to forgeue vs all our sinnes, and to cancell out the handwriting that was agaynst vs: y^t we through ingratefull obliuion should not forget his death: therfore he at y^e time of his holy supper did institute a perpetuall memory of this his death, to be celebrated amōg christians in bread & wine,* according as it is sayd: Do this in remembraunce of me. And so often as you shall eat this bread & drinke this cup, you shall shew forth the Lordes death till he come. And this remembraunce or sacrament of his holy passion, that is, of his body slayne & bloud shed, he would all christians to frequent & celebrate in bread and wine, according as he sayd: Take eate: and drink ye all of this. Therfore, whosoeuer for mans tradition denyeth the cup of Christes bloud to lay men, they manifestly repugne agaynst Christ, forbidding that which Christ commaundeth to be done, and be like to those Scribes and Phariseis of whom the Lord spake: Ye hipocrites, ye haue reiected the cōmaundementes of God for your traditions.*Well did Esaye prophecy of you, saying: This people honoureth me with theyr lips, but theyr hart is farre from me.*Without cause do they worship me, teaching the doctrines and preceptes of men.

The sacrament and misticall bread, being broken and distributed after the institution of Christ, and the mysticall wine likewise being taken and receiued be not onely sacra^lmentes of the fleshe of Christ wounded for vs, and of hys bloudshedding but also be most certaine sacraments to vs and (as a manne would say) seales of Gods promises and giftes,* and also of that holy felowship which we haue with Christ and all his members. Moreouer they be to vs memorials of that heauenly food and nourishment wherwith we are nourished vnto eternall life, and the thyrste of our boyling conscience quenched, and finally wherby the harts of the faythfull be replenished with vnspeakeable ioy, and be corroborated and strengthened vnto all workes of godlines. We are many (sayth S. Paule) one bread and one body, all we which doe participate of one breade,and one cuppe▪ And Christ sayth, Eate ye, this is my body. And drinke ye this is my bloud. And I am the liuing breade which came downe from heauen. He that eateth me, shall also liue for me.*Not as your fathers did eate Manna in the desert and are dead: He that eateth me, shall also liue for me.

Thus therefore true bread and true wine remaynfull in the Eucharist vntill they be consumed of the faythfull to be signes & as seales vnto vs annexed vnto Gods promises making vs certayne of Gods gifts towardes vs.* Also Christ remaineth in them, & they in Christ, which eate his flesh, & drinke his bloud, as Christ himselfe hath promised. They that eat my flesh & drinke my bloud abide in me, & I in them. Moreouer he abideth also in them which worthely receiueth the outward sacrament, neither doth he depart so soone as the sacramentes is consumed, but continually a^lbideth, feeding and nourishing vs so long as we remayne bodies of that head, & mēbers of the same. I acknowledge not here the naturall body of Christ, which is only spirituall, intelligible, and vnsensible, hauing no distinctiō of mēbers & partes in it: but that body onely I acknowledge, & worship, which was borne of the virgin, which suffred for vs, which is visible, palpable, & hath all the forme & shape and partes of the true naturall body of man.

Christ spake not these wordes of any vncertayne substance, but of the certayne substance of bread, which he then held in his hands & shewed his disciples whē he sayd: * Eat ye, this is my body: and likewise of the cup: when he sayd: Drinke ye, this is my bloud: meaning verely of that bread which by nature is vsuall and common with vs, which is taken of the fruit of the ground, compacted by the vniting of many graynes together made by man, & by mans hand brought to that visible shape being of a round compasse & without all sense or life, whiche nourisheth the bodye, and strengtheneth the hart of man: Of this same bread (I say) and not of any vncertaine and wandring substance the old fathers say that Christ spake these wordes: Eate ye, this is my body. * And likewise also of the wine which is the creature and fruite of the vine pressed out of many clusters of grapes, & maketh mens hart mery, of the very same wine (I say) Christ spake, drinke ye, this is my bloud. And so the olde Doctors doe call this speaking of Christ, tropicall, figuratiue, anagogicall, allegoricall, which they do interpret after this sort, that although the substance of bread & wyne doe remayne and be receiued of the faythfull, yet notwithstanding Christ chaunged the appellation thereof, & called the bread by the name of his flesh, & the wine by the name of his bloud, non rei veritate, sed significāte misterio. i. not that it is so in verye deede, but signified in a misterye. So that wee shoulde consider, not what they bee in theyr owne nature. But what they import to vs and signify, and should vnderstand the Sacrament not carnally, but spiritually, and shoulde, attend not to the visible nature of the Sacraments, neither haue respect onely to the outward bread. & Page 1432 cup, thinkyng to see there with our eye, no other thinges but onely bread and wyne, but that lifyng vp our mynds we should looke vp to the bloud of Christ with our fayth, * should touche hym with our mynde, and receiue him with our inward man, and that beyng lyke Egles in this lyfe, we should flye vp into heauen in our heartes, where that Lambe is resident at the right hand of hys father, * which taketh away the sinnes of the world, by whose stripes we are made whole, by whose passion we are filled at hys table, and whose bloud we receiuyng out of his holy side, do lyue for euer beyng made the ghests of Christ, hauing him dwellyng in vs through the grace of his true nature, and through the vertue and efficacie of his whole passion, beyng no lesse assured and certified, that we are fed spiritually vnto eternall lyfe by Christes flesh crucified, and by hys bloudshed, the true food of our myndes, then that our bodies be fed with meat and drinke in this lyfe: and hereof this sayd mysticall bread on the table of Christ, & the mysticall wyne, beyng administred and receyued after the institution of Christ, be to vs a memoriall, a pledge, a token, a sacrament, * and a seale.

And thereof is it that Christ sayth not thus: This is my body, eate ye: but after he had biddē them eate, then he said: This is my body which shalbe geuē for you. Which is to mean, as though he should say: In eating of this bread, consider you that this bread is no common thyng, but a mysticall matter, neither do you attend that which is set before our bodily eyes, but what feedeth you within. Consider & behold my body crucified for you, that eate and digest in your myndes. Chaw you vpon my passion, be fed w^t my death. This is the true meat, this is the drinke that moysteneth, wherwith you beyng truly fed, and inebriate, shall liue for euer. The bread and the wyne which be set before our eies are onely declarations of me, * but I my selfe am the eternall food. Wherefore whensoever at this my table you shall behold the sacraments, haue not regard so much to them, as consider ye what I promise to you by them, which is my selfe to be meat for you of eternall lyfe.

The onely oblation of Christ (wherewith he offered himselfe to God the father once to death vpon the aultar of the crosse for our redemption) was of such efficacy, y^t there is no more need of any sacrifice for the redemption of the whole world,* but all y^e sacrifice of y^e old law he tooke away, performyng that in very deede, which they did signify and promise. Whosoeuer therfore shal fixe the hope of his salua^tiō in any other sacrifice, he falleth frō the grace of Christ, and is contumelious against the blood of Christ. (For) he was wounded for our transgressions, and was broken for our iniquities.* All we lyke sheepe haue wandered astray. Euery man hath turned after his owne way, and the Lord hath layd all our iniquities vpon him. (For he) hath entered once for all into the holy place by the blood, not of Goates or Calues, but by his own blood,*finding eternall redemption: (And) hath entered into heauen, to appeare now in the sight of God for vs, not to offer hymselfe oftentimes (for so should he haue suffred many times) but now hath he appeared once to put away sinne, through hys owne oblation. And as it is appoynted to all men once to dye, so also Christ once was offered.Who offering vp one oblation for sinnes, sitteth now for euer on the right hand of God. For by one oblation hath he made perfect for euer those that be sanctified. (For) where is remission of sinnes, there is now no more oblation for sinne (but this only sacrifice of Christ) whosoeuer shall seeke any other sacrifice propitiatory for sinne, maketh the sacrifice of Christ of no validitie, force, or efficacie. For if it be sufficient to remit sinnes, what neede is there of any other? For the necessitie of another, argueth and declareth this to be insufficient. Almighty God graunt that we may truly leaue to one sacrifice of Christ, and that wee to hym agayne may repay our sacrifices of thanksgeuing, of prayse, of confessing hys name, of true amendment, of repentaunce, of mercifulnes towards our neighbors, and of all other good workes of charitie.* For by such sacrifices we shall declare our selues neither ingratefull to God, nor altogether vnworthy of this holy sacrifice of Christ. And thus you haue out of the testimonies of holy scripture, and of the ancient Doctors of the Church, the true and sincere vse of the Lordes holy supper, and the fruite of the true sacrifice of Christ. Which whosoeuer thorough captious or wrested interpretations, or by mens traditions, shal go about otherwise then Christ ordeined them, to alter or trāsubstantiate, he shall aunswere to Christ in the latter day, when he shal vnderstand (but then to late) that he hath no participation with the body and blood of Christ, but that out of the supper of eternal lyfe he hath eaten and dronken eternall damnation to hymselfe.

West.

Because we will not consume and spend the tyme in waste, this your writyng which you exhibite, hereafter shall be read in hys place. In the meane season let vs now fall to the Arguments.

Ched.

The Scriptures in many places doe affirme,* that Christ gaue hys natural body. Mat. 26. Mark. 14. Luk. 22 Ergo,* I doe conclude that the naturall body is in the Sacrament.

Cran.

To your argument I aunswer: If you vnderstand by the body natural (organicum) that is, hauyng such proportion and members as he had liuyng here, then I aunswer negatiuely.

Furthermore, concernyng the Euangelists, thus I say and graunt, that Christ tooke bread and called it hys body.

Ched.

The text of the Scripture maketh agaynst you: for the circumstaunce thereto annexed doth teach vs, not only there to be the body, but also teacheth vs what manner of body it is, and sayth: The same body which shall be geuen.

Ba- That thyng is here conteyned, that is geuen for vs.*

ro- But the substance of bread is not geuen for vs.

co. Ergo, the substance of bread is not here conteyned.*

Cran.

I vnderstand not yet what you meane by this word [conteined]: If ye meane really, then I deny your Maior.

Ched.

The Maior is the text of scripture. He that denyeth the Maior, denyeth the scripture. For the Scripture sayth: This is my body which shall be geuen for you.

Cran.

I graunt he sayd it was his body that should be geuen,* but he sayd it was not his body which is here conteyned: but the body (sayth he) that shall be geuen for you. As though he should say: This bread is the breaking of my body, and this cup is the sheading of my bloud. What wyll ye saye then? is the bread the breakyng, and the cup the sheddyng of the bloud really? If you so say, I deny it.

Ched▪

If you aske what is the thyng therein conteined, because his apostles should not dout what body it was that should be geuen, he sayth: This is my body which shall be geuen for you, and my bloud which shall be shed for many. Ergo, here is the same substance of the body, which the day after was geuen, and the same bloud which was shed. And here I vrge the scripture, which teacheth that it was no fantastical, no fayned, no spirituall body, nor body in fayth, but the substance of the body.

Cran.

You must prooue that it is containd: but Christ said not which is contained. He gaue bread, and called that his body. I sticke not in the wordes of the Scripture, but in your word which is fayned and imagined of your selfe.

Ched.

When Christ tooke bread and brake it, what gaue he?

Cran.

He gaue bread. The bread sacramentally & his body spiritually, and the bread there he called hys body.

Ched.

This answer is agaynst the Scripture, which sayth that he gaue his body.

Cran.

It did signify that which he did eate.

Ched▪

They did not eate the body as the Capernaïtes dyd vnderstand it, but the self same body which was geuen for the sinnes of the world. Ergo, it was his body which shold be geuen, and hys bloud which should be shed.

¶In some other copies I finde this Argument to be made by Chedsey.

- Ba- The same body is in the sacrament, which was geuē for vs on the crosse.*
- ro- But bread was not geuen on the crosse for vs:
- co. Ergo, bread is not geuen in the sacrament.*

Cran.

I deny the Maior, which is, that the same naturall body is geuen in the sacrament, which was geuen on the crosse, except you vnderstand it spiritually. And after he• denied also the argument as vtterly naught, as he myght wel do, the Maior in y^e second figure beyng not vniuersal.

When M. Chedsey had put forth his Argument, and prosecuted the same, and Doct. Cranmer answered as before is shewed, Doctor Oglethorpe, one of those Doctors which the Prolocutor called Censores (belike to be Arbiters to order the disputations) sayd on this wyse.*

D. Ogle.

You come in stil with one euasion or starting hole to flee too. He vrgeth the scriptures, sayeng y^e Christ gaue his very bodye. You say that he gaue his body in bread. Quo modo praedicatur corpus? qualis est corpus? qualis est praedicatio, paⁿis est corpus.

Cranmer.

You should say, Quale corpus. I aunswer to the question: It is the same body which was borne of the virgin, was crucified, ascended: but tropically, & by a figure. And so I say, Panis est corpus, is a figuratiue speache, speaking sacramentally, for it is a sacrament of his body.

Oglethorpe.

This word body beyng praedicatum. doth signifie Page 1433 substance.*

But substantia is not predicated denominatiuely:

Ergo, it is an essentiall predication, and so it is his true body, and not the figure of his body.

Cran.

Substantia may be predicated denominatiuely in an allegory or in a metaphore, or in a figuratiue locution.

Ogle.

It is not a likely thing that Christ hath lesse care for his spouse the church, then a wise housholder hath for hys family in makyng hys will or testament.

Cran.

Your reason is drawne out of the affaires of men, and not taken out of the holy scriptures.

Ogle.

But no householder maketh hys Testament after that sort.

Cran.

Yes, there are many that so do. For what matter is it so it be vnderstood and perceiued? I say Christ did vse figuratiue speach in no place more, then in his sacraments, and specially in this his supper.

Ogle.

No man of purpose doth vse tropes in his testamēt, for if he doe, he deceyueth them that he comprehendeth in his testament: therfore Christ vseth none here.

Cran.

Yes, he may vse them well enough. You know not what tropes are.

Ogle.

The good man of the house hath a respect that hys heyres after his departure, may lyue in quiet and without brablyng.

But they cannot be in quiet if he do vse tropes:

Therfore (I say) he vseth no tropes.

Cran.

I deny your Minor.

West.

Augustine in his booke entituled, De vnitate Ecclesiae, the x. chap. hath these wordes followyng.*

Quid hoc est rogo▪ cum verba nouissima hominis morientis audiantur itur ad inferos, nemo eum dicit esse mentitum, & illius non iudicatur haeres qui fortè ea contempserat. Quomodo ergo effugiemus iram dei, si vel non credentes, vel contemnètes, expulerimus verba nouissima & vnici filij Dei & domini nostri saluatoris, & ituri in coelum & inde prospecturi quis ea negligat, quis non obseruet,*& inde venturi vt de omnibus iudicet?

That is to say.

What a thing is this I pray you? when the last words of one lying on hys death bed are heard: which is ready to go to his graue, no man sayth that he hath made a lye: and he is not accompted hys heyre, which regardeth not those words. How shal we then escape gods wrath, if either not beleuing or not regardyng, we shall reiect the last wordes both of the only sonne of God, and also of our lord and sauior, both ascending into heauen, & beholding from thence who despiseth, and who obserueth them not, & so shal come from thence to iudge all men?

The argument is thus formed.

Ba- Whosoeuer sayth that the Testator lyed, is a wicked heyre.*

ba- But whosoeuer sayeth that Christ spake by figures, sayth that he did lye:

ra. Ergo, whosoeuer sayeth that Christ here spake by figures, is a wicked heyre.

Cran.

I deny the Minor. As who say it is necessary that he which vseth to speake by tropes and figures,* should lie in so doying.

Ogle.

Your iudgement is disagreeyng with all churches.

Cran.

Nay, I disagree with the papisticall church.

Ogle.

This you do through the ignorance of Logike.

Cran.

Nay, this you say through the ignorance of the Doctours.

Weston.

I will go playnly to worke by Scriptures. What tooke he?

Cran.

Bread,

West.

What gaue he?

Cran.

Bread.

West.

What brake he?

Cran.

Bread.

West.

What did they eate?

Cran.

Bread.

West.

He gaue bread, therefore he gaue not his body.

*He gaue not his body, therefore it is not his body verily in deed and in truth.

Cran.

I deny the argument.

Cole.

This argument holdeth a disparatis. It is bread: Ergo, * it is not the body, and it is such an argument or reason, as cannot be dissolued.

Cran.

The lyke argument may be made. He is a rocke: Ergo, he is not Christ.

Cole.

It is not lyke.

West.

He gaue not his body in deede: Ergo, it was not his body in deed.

Cran.

He gaue his death, his passion, and the sacrament of his passion. And in uery deede setting the figure aside, formally it is not his body.

West.

Why? then the scripture is false. *

Cran.

Nay, the scripture is most true.

West.

This sayth Chrisostome Homil. 61. ad populum Antiochenum▪ Necessarium est dilectissimi, mysteriorum dicere miraculum quid tandem sit, & quare sit datum, & quae rei vtilitas, &c.

That is to say.

Needfull it is (deare frends) to tel you what the miracle of the mysteries is, and wherfore it is geuen,* and what profite there is of the thing. We are one body and members of his flesh, and of hys bones. We that be in the mysterie, let vs follow that thyng which was spoken. Wherfore that we may become this thyng, not only by loue, but also that we may become one with that flesh in deede, that is brought to passe by this foode which hee gaue vnto vs, mynding to shew his great good will that he hath toward vs: and therefore he mixed hymselfe with vs, and vnited his own body with vs, that we should be made all as one thyng together, as a body ioyned and annexed to the head, for this is a token of most ardent and perfect loue. And the same thyng Iob also insinuatyng, sayd of hys seruaunts, of whom he was desired aboue measure, in so much that they, shewyng their great desire toward him, sayde: who shall geue vnto vs to be filled with his fleshe? Therefore also Christ dyd the same, who, to induce vs into a greater loue toward hym, and to declare hys desire toward vs, dyd not onely geue hymselfe to be seene of them y^t would, but also to be handled and eaten, and suffered vs to fasten our teeth in hys flesh, and to be vnited together, and so to fill all our desire. Lyke Lyons therfore, as breathyng fire, let vs go from that table, beyng made terrible to the deuil, remembryng our head in our mynde, & his charitie which he shewed vnto vs. For parents many tymes geue they• children to other to be fed, but I doe not so (sayth he) but feed you with myne owne fleshe, and set my selfe before you, desiryng to make you all iolly people, and pretending to you great hope and expectation to looke for thynges to come, who here geue my selfe to you, but much more in the world to come. I am become your brother, I tooke flesh & bloud for you. Agayne my flesh and bloud by the which I am made your kinsman, I deliuer vnto you.

Thus much out of Chrysostome. Out of which words I make this argument.

The same flesh whereby Christ is made our brother & kinsman, is geuen of Christ to vs to be eaten.*

Christ is made our brother and kinsman, by hys true, naturall, and organicall flesh:

Ergo, his true, naturall, and organicall flesh, is geuen to vs to be eaten.

Cran.

I graunt the consequence, and the consequent.*

West.

Therefore we eate it with our mouth.

Cran.

I deny it. We eate it through fayth.

West.

He gaue vs the same flesh to eate, wherby he became our brother and kinsman.

But he became our brother and kinsman by his true, naturall and organical flesh:

Therefore he gaue his true, natural, and organical flesh to be eaten.

Cran.

I graunt he tooke and gaue the same true, naturall, and organical flesh wherin he suffered, and yet he feedeth spiritually, and that flesh is receyued spiritually.

Weston.

He gaue vs the same fleshe which he tooke of the Uirgin:*

But he tooke not the true flesh of the Uirgine spiritually, or in a figure:

Ergo, he gaue his true naturall flesh not spiritually.

Cran.

Christ gaue to vs his owne naturall fleshe, the same wherin he suffred, but feedeth vs spiritually.*

West.

Chrysostome is against you. Homil. 83. in 26. cap. Mat. where he sayth: *Veniat tibi in mentem quo sis honore honoratus, qua mensa fruaris. Ea nam {que} re nos alimur, quā angeli▪ &c.

That is to say.

Let it come into thy remembrance with what honour thou art honored, and what table thou sittest at: for wyth the same thyng we are nourished, which the angels do behold and tremble at: neither are they able to behold it w^tout great feare, for the brightnesse which commeth therof: and we be brought and compact into one heape or masse with hym. Being together one bodye of Christ, and one flesh w^t him. Who shal speake the powers of the Lord, and shall declare forth all his prayes? What Pastor hath euer nourished hys sheepe wyth hys owne members? Manye mothers haue put foorth their Infantes after their byrth, to other Nurses: which he would not do, but feedeth vs w^t hys owne body, & conioyneth and vniteth vs to himselfe.

Wherupon I gather this argument.

But mothers do not nourish their Infants spiritually with their mylke: *

Therefore Christ doth not nourish those that bee hys, spiritually with hys bloud.

Cran.

He gaue vs the wyne for his bloud.

West.

If he gaue the wyne for his bloud (as you say) then he gaue lesse then mothers do geue.

But Chrysostome affirmeth that hee gaue more then mothers geue.

Therefore he gaue not the wyne for his bloud.

Cran.

* You peruert myne aunswer. He gaue wyne, yet the bloud is considered therein. As for example. Whē he geueth Baptisme, we consider not the water, but the holy Ghost, and remission of sinnes. We receiue with the mouth y^e Sacrament: but the thyng and the matter of the Sacrament we receiue by fayth.

West.

When Christ sayd, eate ye, whether ment hee by the mouth or by fayth?

Cran.

He ment that we should receiue the body by fayth, the bread by the mouth.

West.

* Nay, the body by the mouth.

Cran.

That I deny.

West.

I prooue it out of Chrysostome, writyng vpon the fifty Psalme.

*Erubescit fieri nutrix, quae facta est mater. Christus autem nō ita ipse nutritor est noster: ideo pro cibo carne propria nos pascit, & pro potu suum sanguinem nobis propinauit. Item in 26. Mathaei, Homil. 83. Non enim sufficit ipsi hominem fieri, flagellis interim caedi: *sed nos secum in vnam vt ita dicam, massam reducit, neque id fide solum, sed reipsa nos corpus suum efficit?

That is to say.

She that is a mother, shameth sometyme to play the Nurse. But Christ our Nurse doth not so play with vs. Therefore in stead of meate he feedeth vs with his owne flesh, and in stead of drinke he feedeth vs with hys owne bloud. Likewise, vpon the 26. chap. of Mathew, the 83. homily, he saith: For it shal not be enough for him to become man, and in the meane whyle to be whipped: but he doth bring vs into one masse or lumpe with himself (as I may so call it) and maketh vs his body not by faith alone, but also in very deed.

Cran.

I graunt: We make one nature with Christ. But that to be done with mouth we deny.

West.

*Chrysost. 2. Cor. cap. 13. Homil. 29. hath these wordes: Non vulgarem honorem consequutum est os nostrum, accipiens corpus dominicū. i. No little honor is geuen to our mouth, receiuing the body of the Lord.

Cran.

This I say, that Christ entreth into vs both by our eares & by our eyes. With our mouth we receiue the body of Christ, and teare it with our teeth, that is to say, the Sacrament of the body of Christ. Wherefore I say and affirme that the vertue of the sacrament is much: & therefore Chrysostom many tymes speaketh of sacramēts no otherwyse, * then of Christ hymselfe, as I could prooue, if I might haue liberty to speake, by many places of Chrysostom, where he speaketh of the sacrament of the body of Christ.

*With the which worde of the sacrament of the body, &c. D. Cole beyng highly offended, denied it to be the Sacrament of the body of Christ, saue onely of the mysticall body which is the Church.

Cran.

And why should we doubt to call it the Sacrament of the body of Christ offered vpon the Crosse, seeyng both Christ and the auncient Fathers do so call it?

Cole.

How gather you that of Chrysostome?

Cran.

Chrysostome declareth hymselfe. Lib. 3. De Sacerdotio, cap. 3. O miraculum, O Dei in nos beneuolentia, qui sursum sedet ad dextram patris, sacrificij tamen tempore hominum manibus continetur, traditur{que} lambere cupientibus eum. Fit autem id nullis praestigijs, sed apertis & circumspiciētibus circumstantium omnium oculis.

That is to say.

O myracle, O the good wil of God towards vs, which sitteth aboue at the right hand of the father, and is holdē in mens hands at the sacrifice tyme, & is geuen to feed vpon, to them that are desirous of him. And that is brought to passe by no subtiltie or craft, but with the open and beholding eyes of all the standers by.

Thus ye heare Christ is seene here in earth euery day, is touched, is torne with the teeth, y^t our tong is red wyth his bloud: which no man hauing any iudgement will say or thinke to be spoken without trope or figure,

West.

What miracle is it if it be not his body: & if he speake only of the sacrament, as though it were his body?

But harken what Chrysostome sayth: *Homil. 34. Quod summo honore dignum est, id tibi in terra ostendo. Nam quemadmodum in regijs non parietes, non lectus aureus, sed regium corpus in throno sedens omnium praestantissimum est: ita quoque in coelis regium corpus, quod nunc in terra proponitur. Non Angelos, non Archangelos, non coelos coelorum, *sed ipsum horum omnium Dominum tibi ostendo. Animaduertis quonam pacto quod omnium maximum est atque praecipuum in terra, non conspicaris tantum sed tangis, neque solum tangis, sed comedis, atque eo accepto domum redis. Absterge igitur ab omni sorde animam tuam.

That is to say.

I shew foorth that thing on the earth vnto thee, which is woorthy the greatest honor. For lyke as in the pallace of kyngs, neither the walles, nor the sumptuous bed, but the body of Kings sitting vnder the cloth of estate, and royall seat of Maiestie, is of all things els the most excellent: so is in lyke maner, the kings body in heauen, which is now set before vs on earth. I shew thee neither Angels nor archangels, nor the heauen of heauens, but the very Lord & maister of all these things. Thou perceiuest after what sort thou doest not onely behold, but touchest, and not onely touchest, but eatest that which on the earth is the greatest and chieftest thyng of all other, and when thou hast receued the same, thou goest home: Wherefore clense thy soule from all vncleannesse.

Upon this, I conclude that the body of Christ is shewed vs vpon the earth.

Cran.

What? vpon the earth? no man seeth Christ vpon the earth? He is seene with the eyes of our mynde,* wyth fayth and spirit.

West.

I pray you what is it that seemeth worthy hyghest honour on the earth? It is the Sacrament or els the body of Christ.

Cran.

Chrysostome speaketh of the sacrament, and the body of Christ is shewed forth in the Sacrament.

Weston.

Ergo, then the Sacrament is woorthy greatest honour.

Cran.

I deny the Argument.

West.

That thyng is shewed forth, and is now in the earth [ostenditur &*est] which is worthy highest honor.

But, only the body of Christ is worthy highest honor?

Ergo, the body of Christ is now on the earth.

Cran.

I aunswer, the body of Christ to be on the earth, but so as in a Sacrament, and as the holy Ghost is in the water of Baptisme.

West.

Chrysostome sayth [ostendo [I shew forth which noteth a substance to be present.

Cran.

That is to be vnderstood Sacramentally.

West.

He sayth [ostendo in terra] I shew forth on the earth,* declaryng also the place where.

Cran.

That is to be vnderstood figuratiuely.

Weston.

He is shewed foorth, and is now on the earth, &c. as before.

Cran.

Your Maior and conclusion are all one.

Weston.

But the Maior is true: Ergo, the conclusion also is true.

That thing is on the earth, which is worthy of most high honour.

But no figure is worthy of highest honour:

Ergo, that which is on the earth is no figure.

Cran.

I aunswer, that is true Sacramentally.

¶Here Weston crieth to hym that he should answer to one part, bidding him repeat his wordes. Which when he went about to doe, such was the noyse and crying out in the schoole, that his mylde voyce could not bee heard.* For when he went about to declare to the people how y^e Prolocutor did not well english the words of Chrysostome, vsing for ostenditur in terra, he is shewed foorth on the earth, est in terra, he is on the earth, where as Chrysostome hath not [est] nor any such word of beyng on the earth, but only of shewyng, as the grace of the holy Ghost, in baptismo ostenditur, i. is shewed forth in Baptisme: and oftentimes did inculcate this word ostēditur. Then y^e Prolocutor stretching foorth his hand, set on the rude people to cry out at him, filling all the schoole with hissing, clappynge of hands,* and noyse, calling him indoctum, imperitum, impudentem, i. vnlearned, vnskilful, impudent. Which impudent and reprochfull wordes, this reuerend man most patiently and meekely did abyde, as one that had bene inured wyth the suffryng of such lyke reproches. And when the Prolocutor not yet satisfied with this rude and vnseemely demeanor, did vrge and call vpon him to answer the argument. Thē he bade the Notary repeat his words agayne.

Notary.

That which is worthy most high honour, here I Page 1435 shew forth to thee in earth.

The body of Christ is worthy highest honor.

Ergo, he sheweth forth the body of Christ here in earth.

Cran.

That is shewed forth here on the earth which may be seene,* which may be touched, and which may be eaten, but these things be not true of the body.

Cole.

Why should not these thyngs be true of the bodye of Christ.

Cran.

The Maior out of Chrysostome is true, meaning of the Sacrament. For in the Sacrament the true body of Christ, and not the figuratiue body is set forth.

Weston.

Shewe me somewhat in earth woorthy greatest honour.

Cran.

I cannot, but in the sacrament onely.

West.

Ergo, the Sacrament is worthy greatest honor.

Cran.

So it is.

Iudges.

Let it be written.

Cran.

I pray you let my aunswer be written likewyse: I affirme that the body of Christ is shewed forth vnto vs. It is our fayth that seeth Christ.

West.

Ostendo tibi. i. I shew it to thee, sayth Chrysostome, not to thy fayth.

Cran.

He speaketh sacramentally.

West.

Ergo, Chrysostome lyeth. For he speaking of shewyng, saith: Ego Chrysostomus ostendo. i. I Chrysostome doe shew. But he can shew nothing sacramentally.

Ched.

By force of argument we are brought to this poynt that the body of Christ is prooued to be on earth, not onely sacramentally, but in very deed also, by this reason, that it is worthy highest honour. The reason is indissoluble.

Cran.

I neuer heard a more vayne argument, & it is most vayne: also it hath myne answer vnto it.

Ched.

Wil you affirme that it is absurd which Chrysostom sayth, that the body of Christ is touched?

I touch the body of Christ in the Sacrament, as Thomas touched Christ.*

Thomas touched Christ, and said Dominus meus, Deus meus, my Lord, my God:

Ergo, that which he touched, was the Lord God.

¶ This Argument as I receyued it out of the Notaries booke, is not formall: but rather he should conclude in the third figure thus:

Da- As Thomas touched the body of Christ, so we touch it in the sacrament.

ti- Thomas touched the body of Christ corporally:

si. Ergo, we touch the body of Christ corporally in the sacrament.

Cran.

*I deny your Argument. He touched not God, but him which was God. Neither is it sound doctrine to affirme that God is touched.

Ched.

This is because of the vnion: so that God is sayd to be touched, when Christ which is both God and man, is touched.

*Tertullian De carnis resurrectione, sayth: Videamus de propria Christiani hominis forma, quanta huic substantiae friuolae & sordidae apud deum praerogatiua sit. Etsi sufficeret illi quod nulla omnino anima salutem posset adipisci nisi dum est in carne, crediderit: adeò caro salutis cardo est, de qua cum anima deo alligatur, ipsa est quae efficit, vt anima alligari possit: sed & caro abluatur, *vt anima emaculetur: caro inungitur, vt anima consecratur: signatur, vt anima muniatur: caro manus impositione adumbratur, vt anima spiritu illuminetur, caro corpore & sanguine Christi vescitur, vt anima de deo saginetur.

That is to say.

Let vs consider as concerning the proper forme of the christian man, what great prerogatiue this vaine & foule substaunce of ours hath with God. Although it were sufficient to it, that no soule could euer get saluation, vnlesse it beleeeue while it is in the flesh: so much the flesh auayleth to saluation, by the which flesh it commeth, that where as the soule so is linked vnto god, it is the sayd flesh that causeth the soule to be linked: yet the flesh moreouer is wasshed, that the soule may be cleansed: the flesh is annoynted that the soule may be consecrated, the flesh is signed that the soule may be defended, the fleshe is shadowed by the imposition of hands, that the soule may be illuminated with the spirit: the flesh doth eate the body and bloud of Christ, that the soule may be fed of God. Wherupon I gather this argument.

The flesh eateth the body of Christ.

Ergo, the body of Christ is eaten with the mouth.

Item Phocëus 1. ad Cor. cap. 11. vpon these words: Reus erit corporis & sanguinis, *&c.

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. i. Quod ait, reus corporis & sanguinis, istud declarat quod sicuti Iudas ipsum quidem tradidit, Iudaei contumeliosè in ipsum insaniebant: sic ipsum inhonorant qui sanctissimum ipsius corpus impuris manibus suscipiunt, tanquam Iudaei ipsi tenent & execrabili ore recipiunt. Quòd crebro mentionem facit corporis & sanguinis Domini, manifestat quòd non sit simplex homo qui sacrificatur, sed ipse Dominus omnium factor, tanquam per haec quidem ipsos perterrefaciens.

That is to say.

Where as he sayth: Is guilty of the body and bloud: this he declareth, that like as Iudas betraied him, & the Iews were fierce and spitefull agaynst hym: so do they dishonor him which receiue his holy body with their impure hands and as the Iewes did hold him then, do now receyue hym with vnpure mouthes. And where as hee often maketh mention of the body & bloud of the Lord, he declareth that it is not simply man that is sacrificed, but euen the Lord hymself, being the maker of all things, hereby (as it were) makyng them afrayd.

Ergo, (as it is hereby gathered) the body of Christ is touched with the hands.

Cranmer.

You vouche two authors agaynst me vpon sundry thyngs. First I must aunswer Tertullian, and then the other.

Ched.

They tend both to one meanyng.

Cran.

Unto Tertullian I answer (because our disputatiō is wandring and vncertayne) that he calleth that the flesh which is the Sacrament.* For although God worke all thyngs in vs inuisibly beyond mans reach: yet they are so manifest, that they may be seene, and perceyued of euery sense. Therefore he setteth forth Baptisme, vnction, and last of all the supper of the Lord vnto vs, which he gaue to signify his operation in vs. The flesh liueth by the bread, but the soule is inwardly fed by Christ.

Weston.

Sticke to those wordes of Tertullian: Corpus vescitur vt anima saginetur, id est,* The body eateth that the soul may be fed.

Ched.

The fleshe eateth the body of Christ, that the soule may be fed therewith.

West.

Here you see two kyndes of foode: of the soule and of the body.

Ched.

He sayeth, that not onely the soule, but the fleshe is also fed.

Cran.

The soule is fed with the body of Christ, the bodye with the sacrament.

Ched.

Is the soule fed with the body of Christ, & not with the sacrament?

Cran.

Read that which followeth, and you shall perceyue that by thyngs externall,* an operation internall is vnderstood. Inwardly we eat Christes body, and outwardly we eat the sacrament. So one thing is done outwardly, an other inwardly. Like as in Baptisme the external element wherby the body is washed, is one: so the internal thyng wherby the soule is clensed, is another.

Ched.

The soule is fed by that which the body eateth.

But the soule is fed by the flesh of Christ:

Ergo. the body eateth the flesh of Christ.

Cran.

We eat not one thing outwardly and inwardly. Inwardly we eate Christes bodye: Outwardly we eate the Sacrament.

Ched.

I will repeate the Argument.

*The flesh eateth Christes body, that the soule may be fed therewith.

The soule is not fedde with the Sacrament, but with Christes body.

Ergo, the flesh eateth the body of Christ.

Cran.

The Sacrament is one thing, the matter of the Sacrament is another. Outwardly we receyue the Sacrament: Inwardly we eate the body of Christ.

Ched.

I prooue that we receyue that outwardly wherwith the soule is fed.

The soule is fed with the body of Christ.*

Ergo, we eate the body of Christ outwardly.

The flesh eateth Christ his body,*

Ergo, the soule is fed therewith.

Cranmer.

The flesh (I say) eateth the Sacrament. It eateth not Christes body.* For Tertullian speaketh of the Sacrament: and the place hath not [inde] thereof, but [de deo] of God.

Ched.

What say ye to Phoceus saying: They which receyue the body with impure hands, are guilty of the Lordes bloude, as Iudas was.

West.

That which foloweth in Tertullian doth take away your shift, where as he sayeth: Non possunt ergo separari in mercede, quos opera coniungit. i. They cannot be separated in reward, whom one worke ioyneth together.

But manducation is the worke or labour, Ergo, &c.

¶The forme of this Argument may be thus collected.

- Di- One worke or labour ioyneth body & soule together.
- i- Manducation is a worke or labour:
- j. Ergo, one manducation ioyneth together both bodye and soule.

*To the Maier of which Argument, thus it may be answered: expounding the saying of Tertullian, vna opera coniungit, sed non idem operandi modus. Agayne, opera here in Tertullian, may be taken for temptations and afflictions.

*Cran.

Your authoritie (I suppose) is taken out of the booke, De resurrectione carnis. i. of the resurrection of the flesh: & the meaning therof is this. Tertullia goeth about there to prooue that the flesh shall ryse agayne, because it is ioyned together in one worke with the soule. Thorough Baptisme in this world, the body is washed, and the soule is washed: the body outwardly, the soule inwardly, the worke is one. In this worke they are ioyned. And he speketh of signes.

West

He speaketh of eatyng in a signe.

Ergo, the reward is in a signe.

Cran.

They are coupled in one worke, namely, in the Sacrament.

West.

There are two workes:

Ergo, there are two rewards.

I• the worke be in a figure.

Ergo, the reward is in a figure.

Cran.

He speaketh not of two workes. Two workes are but one worke. And yet he saith not, quos vna opera coniungit. i. Whome one worke ioyneth together, but opera. i. A worke: as in Baptisme the soule and the body are ioyned in vnderstandyng.

West.

The flesh and soule shall haue one and the selfe same reward, because they haue one worke.

Cran.

Because they be ioyned together in one worke.

Tres.

For as much as the reuerend Doctors here haue impugned,* and ouerthrown your assertion & your aunswers sufficiently: I will fall to an other matter, not altogether impertinent to the purpose, and that in fewe woordes, agaynst a certayne sequele of your opinion. The sequele is this: that betwene vs and Christ there is no further coniunction, whiles we receiue the Eucharist, then a coniunction of the mynd, or a spirituall coniunction, whereby we are vnited & knit vnto Christ thorough faith & loue. As for the presence of Christ concerning the substaunce that you vtterly deny. Wherupon in very deed you leaue but a spiritual vnion and ioyning together of mind. Howbeit you would seeme to think otherwise by your subtile answers. But I will declare by manifest testimonies of the fathers, y^t this your sequele which you accompt so sure, is far wide from the truth. And I will beginne with S. Hillary, who is both an ancient and a learned author. For disputyng agaynst the Arrians, octauo de Trinitate, he sayeth that this was their opinion: that the father and the sonne are conioyned only through vnity of wil. Whereupon Arrius him selfe, when scripture was alledged agaynst hym, dyd (as you do now) elude the right meaning of it by his false interpretations. But the catholike church hath alwayes beleued and euer maintayned, that Christ is one with the father in nature, and not by consent of wil only. To y^e prooffe whereof, when the Catholikes vouched this testimony of Iohn, Pater & ego vnum sumus. i. The father and I are one. The Arrians aunswered, that [vnum sumus] was to bee vnderstand by the assent of their wyls, and agreement of their mynds, not by vnity of their natures. Thus it happeneth now a dais, where men do doubt of the sacrament. But Hillary goyng on, and proouing the natural coniunctiō betwene the father and the sonne a fortiori,* questioneth with his aduersaries after this maner, I demand of them now which will needes haue the vnitie of will onely, betwene the father and the sonne, whether Christ be now in vs truly by nature, or onely by the agreement of wyls? If (sayth he) the worde be incarnate in very deed, and we receiue at the Lordes table the word made flesh, how then is he to be thought not to dwell in vs naturally, who beyng borne man, hath both taken the nature of our flesh vpon him that is now inseparable, and hath also myngled y^e nature of his owne flesh, vnto the nature of eternitie vnder the Sacrament of hys flesh, to be communicated vnto vs.* Thus much hath Hillary. Whereupon I aske of you this question. How Christ dwelleth now in vs? accordyng to fayth, or according to nature?

Cran.

I say that Christ dwelleth derely in vs carnally and naturally,* for that he hath taken of the Uirgin our flesh vpon him, and because he hath communicated hys nature vnto vs.

Tres.

Bucer contra Abrincensem,* referreth these words onely to the Eucharist, saying: Christ doth exhibite all this vnto vs in his holy supper, & according to the holy fathers (saith he) Christ liueth therby in vs, not only by fayth and loue, as absent, but naturally, corporally, and carnally. Wherefore he is not absent, neither are we ioyned to Christ onely by a spirituall vnion, (as you suppose) but also by a corporall and carnall vnion.

Cran.

I knowe that M. Bucer was a learned man. But your fayth is in good case, which leaneth vpon Bucer.

Tres.

I do not bring Bucer as a Patron of our fayth, but because he is a man of your sort, & yet bringeth this place of Hillary for that vnion which we haue by the sacrament, and confesseth that by it we are carnally vnited to Christ, where as you thinke that we are ioined by it, only through faith and loue.

Cran.

I say that Christ was communicated vnto vs,* not onely by fayth, but in very deed also when he was borne of the virgin. We haue fellowship with Christ, when we are vnited in the vnity of the church, when we are made fleshe of hys flesh, & bones of his bones: and so we are vnited in the communion, in baptisme, and in fayth.

Tres.

I pray you what fellowship haue we with Christ, in that he is made man? Are not the Turkes & Iewes therein ioyned with hym? For they are men as we are, and are ioyned with him in mans nature, in that he was born of a woman, I speake now of a more nere vnitie. We are made one with Christ by the communion in a perfect vnitie.

Cran.

*We are made so, I graunt: but we are made so also by baptisme: and the vnity in baptisme is perfect.

Tres.

We are not made one by baptisme in a perfect vnity, as Hillary there speaketh, but by the communiō, by which we are carnally made one, but not likewyse by Baptisme: wherefore you vnderstand not Hillary. You shal heare his words, which are these.*He had now declared afore the Sacrament of his perfect vnion, saying: As the liuing father sent me, so do I also liue by the father. And he that eateth my flesh, shall also lyue through me. And a little after that he writeth thus: This truly is the cause of our life, that we haue Christ dwellyng by his flesh in vs that are fleshly, which also by him shal liue in such sort as he liueth by his father. Wherefore, of these words it is manifest, that we obtaine this perfect vnity by meanes of the sacrament, & that Christ by it is carnally vnited vnto vs.

Cran.

Nay Hillary in that same place doth teach,* that it is done by baptisme: and that doctrine is not to be suffred in the Church, which teacheth, y^t we are not ioyned to Christ by Baptisme.

West.

Repeat the Argument.

Cran.

You must first make an Argument.

Tres.

It is made already,* but it shall be made agayne in this forme.

Da- As Christ liueth by his father, so they that eate Christes flesh, liue by the same flesh.

ti- But Christ liueth by the father, not only by fayth and loue, but naturally:

si. Ergo, we lyue not through the eating of Christes flesh by faith and loue onely, but naturally.

Cran.

We liue by Christ, not only by faith and loue, but eternally in deed.

Tresh.

Nay * naturally. I prooue it thus.

As Christ liueth by the Father▪ so lyue we by hys flesh eaten of vs:

But Christ liueth not by hys father onely by faith and loue, but naturally:

Therefore we do not lyue by eating of Christs flesh only by faith and loue (as you suppose) but naturally.

Cran.

The Minor is not true.

Tres.

This is the opinion of Arrius, that Christ is vnited to his father by coniunction of mynd, and not naturally.

Cran.

I say not so yet, neither do I thinke so. But I wil tel you what I like not in your Minor. You say that Christ doth not liue by his father, only by faith and loue: but I say that Christ liueth not at all by his faith.

West.

Marke and consider well this word [by faith] least any occasion of cauilling be geuen.

Tres.

Let that worde [by faith] be omitted. Neither dyd I meane that Christ liueth by his father thorough faith. Yet the strength of the Argument remaineth in force.* For els Hillary doth not con•ute y^e Arrians, except there be a greter coniunction betwene vs & Christ, when he is eaten of vs, then only a spiritual coniunction. You do only graunt a vnion. As for a carnall or naturall vnion of the substance of flesh, by which we are ioyned more then spiritually, you do not grant. But our lord Iesus geue you a better mind, and shew you the light of his truth, that you may returne into the way of righteousness.

West.

We came hether to dispute, and not to pray.

Tres.

Is it not lawfull to pray for them that erre?

West.

It is not lawfull yet. But proceed.

Tres.

Agayne, I reason thus: As Christ liueth by hys father, after the same maner do we lyue by the eating of hys flesh.

But Christ liueth not by his father onely in vntie of will,* but naturally:

Ergo, we do not lyue when we eate the flesh of Christ, only by fayth and vntie of will, but naturally.

Cran.

This is my faith, and it agreeth with the scripture: Christ liueth by his father naturally,* & maketh vs to lyue by himselfe in deede: naturally, and that not onely in the sacrament of the Eucharist, but also in Baptisme. For Infants, when they are baptised, do eate the flesh of Christ.

Weston.

Aunswer eyther to the whole argument, or to the partes therof. For this argument is strong and cannot be dissolved.

Cran.

This is the argument.

As Christ liueth by his father, after the same maner do we lyue by his flesh,* beyng eaten of vs:

But Christ liueth not by his father onely in vnitie of will, but naturally:

Ergo, we eating his flesh, do not lyue only by faith and loue, but naturally.

But the Maior is false: namely, that by the same maner we liue by Christ, as he liueth by his father.

West.

*Hillary sayth: after the same manner, vpon these words: he that eateth my flesh shal lyue by me. Ergo, Christ liueth by his father, and as he liueth by his father, after the same maner we shall lyue by his fleshe. Here you see, that Hillary saith, after the same maner.

Cran.

After the same manner, doth not signifie lyke in all things, but in deed and eternally: for so do we liue by Christ, and Christ liueth by his father. For in other respects Christ liueth otherwise by his father, then wee lyue by Christ.

West.

He liueth by his father naturally and eternally:

Ergo, we liue by Christ naturally, and eternally.

Cran.

We do not liue naturally, but by grace if you take naturally for the manner of nature. As Christ hath eternall lyfe of hys Father, so haue we of hym.

West.

I sticke to this word naturally.

Cran.

I meane it touching the truth of nature. For Christ liueth otherwise by his Father, then we lyue by Christ.

West.

Hillary in the 8. booke De Trinitate, denieth it when he sayth: he liueth therfore by his father, and as he liueth by his Father,* after the same manner we shall lyue by his flesh.

Cran.

We shall lyue after the same maner, as concerning the nature of the flesh of Christ: for as he hath of his father the nature of eternitie, so shall we haue of him.

West.

Answer vnto the partes of the Argument.

As Christ liueth by his father, after the same manner shall we lyue by his flesh:*

But Christ doth not lyue by his father onely in vnitie of will, but naturally:

Ergo, we eating his flesh do not liue onely by faith and loue, but naturally.

Cran.

I graunt (as I said) we liue by Christ naturally: but I neuer heard that Christ liueth with his Father in vnitie of will onely.

West.

Because it semeth a meruaile vnto you, heare what Hillary sayth: These things are recited of vs to this ende: because the heretikes fayning an vnitie of wyll onely betweene the father and the sonne, did vse the example of our vnity with god• as though that we beyng vnited to the sonne, and by the sonne to the father onely by obedience and wyll of religion, had no proprietie of the naturall communion by the sacrament of the body and bloud.

But answer to the argument. Christ lyueth by his father naturally and eternally: therefore do we liue by Christ naturally and eternally.

Cran.

Cyrrill and Hillary do say, that Christ is vnited to vs not onely by will, but also by nature: he doth communicate to vs hys owne nature,* and so is Christ made one with vs carnally and corporally, because he tooke our nature of the Uirgine Mary. And Hillary doth not onely say that Christ is naturally in vs, but that we also are naturally in him, and in the father: that is, that we are partakers of their nature, which is eternitie or euerlastingnes. For as the worde receiuing our nature, did ioine it vnto himselfe in vnitie of person, and did cōmunicate vnto that our nature, the nature of his eternitie,* that like as he being the euerlasting word of the Father, had euerlasting life of the Father: euen so he gaue the same nature to hys flesh. Likewise also did he communicate with vs the same nature of eternitie, which he and the father haue, and that we should be one with them, not onely in wil & loue, but that we should be also partakers of y^e nature of euerlasting life.

West.

Hilary where he saith: Christ cōmunicated to vs his nature, he meaneth y^t, not by his natiuity, but by y^e sacrament.

Cranmer.

He hath communicated to vs his flesh by hys natiuitie.

West.

We haue communicated to him * our flesh when he was borne.

Cran.

Nay, he communicated to vs his flesh whē he was borne, and that I will shew you out of Cyrill vppon this place: Et homo factus est.

West.

Ergo, Christ being borne gaue vs his flesh.

Cran.

In his natiuity he made vs * partakers of his flesh.

West.

Write Sirs.

Cran.

Yea write.

Ched.

This place of Hilary is so dark, that you were compelled to falsifie it in your booke, because you could not draw it to confirme your purpose.

If Christ haue taken verily the flesh of our body, and the man that was verely borne of the Virgin Mary is Christ, and also wee receaue vnder the true mistery the fleshe of his body, by meanes wherof we shalbe one (for the father is in Christ, and Christ in vs) how shall that be called the vnitie of will, when the naturall propertie brought to passe by the Sacrament, is the Sacrament of vnitie? we must not speake in the sence of man, or of the worlde in matters concerning God: neither must wee peruersly wrast anye straunge or wicked sence out of the wholesome meaning of the holy scripture, through impudent and vile contentiō. Let vs read those thinges that are written, and let vs vnderstand those thinges that wee read, and then wee shall performe the duetie of perfect fayth. For as touching that naturall and true being of Christ in vs except wee learne of him, wee speake foolishly and vngodly that thing that we doe speake: For he sayth: My flesh is meate in deede, and my bloud is drinke in deede: He that eateth my fleshe, and drinketh my bloud, abideth in me and I in him. As touching the veritie of his fleshe and bloud, there is left no place of doubt: for now, both by the testimonie of the Lord, and also by our fayth, it is verily flesh, and verily bloud.

Here you haue falsified Hillary,* for you haue set verò sub mysterio, for verè sub mysterio, we receiue truly vnder a mystery. Hillary thrise reporteth verè sub mysterio, and you interprete it twice verè sub mysterio, but the third tyme you haue verò for verè.

Cran.

Assuredly, I am not guilty of any deceite herein. It may be that the copy which I followed, had Sub vero mysterio, i. vnder a true mysterye: although touching y^e sense it differeth little. God I call to witnesse, I haue alway hated falsifieng, and if you had laisure and lust to heare false citations, I could recite vnto you vj. hundred.

West.

Here shall be shewed you two copies of Hilary, the one printed at Basill, the other at Paris.

Cran.

I suppose that D. Smiths bookes hath vero.

Weston.

Here is Doctour Smith: let him aunswere for hymselfe.

M. Smith, M. Doctor: what say you for your selfe? speake if you know it.

¶Here Doctor Smith, eyther for the truth in hys booke alledged, or els astonied with Doctor Westons hasty calling, stayd to answer. For he onely put of his cappe, and kept silence.

West.

But your owne booke printed by Wolfe your owne Printer, hath vero.

Cran.

That Booke is taken from me, which easily myght Page 1438 haue ended this controuersie. I am sure the booke of Decrees hath vero.

Cole.

Now you admit the booke of Decrees, when it maketh for you.*

Cran.

Touching the sence of the matter, there is little difference. The chaunge of one letter for an other, is but a small matter.

West.

No•s? Pastor (as you know) signifieth a Byshop, and Pistor signifieth a Baker, But Pastor shalbe Pistor, a Bishop shall be a Baker by this your chaunge of one letter. If verè and vero doe nothing chaunge the sence.

Cran.

Let it be so that in Pistor and Pastor one letter maketh some difference: Yet let Pistor be either a Baker or maker of bread, ye see here the change of a letter, and yet no great difference to be in the sence.

Young.

This disputation is taken in hand, that the truth myght appeare. I perceiue that I must goe an other way to worke then I had thought.* It is a common saying: againste hym that denyeth principles, we must not dispute. Therefore that we may agree of the principles, I demaund whether there be any other body of Christ then his instrumentall body.

Cran.

There is no naturall body of Christe, but his organicall body.

Young.

Againe I demande whether sence & reason ought to geue place to faith.

Cran.

They ought.

Yong.

Thirdly, whether Christ be true, in all his wordes?

Cran.

Yea, he is most true, and trueth it selfe.

Yong.

Fourthly, whether Christ at his supper mineded to doe that which he spake or no?

Cran.

Dicendo dixit, non fecit dicendo: sed fecit Discipulis Sacramentum. That is: In saying he spake, but in sayinge hee made not, but made the sacrament to his disciples.

Yong.

Answer according to the truthe: whether did Christ that as God and man,*_ whych he spake, when he sayde: This is my body.

Cran.

This is a sophistical caullation: go plainly to work. There is some deceite in these questions. You seeke subtlenesse, leaue your craftie fetches.

Young.

I demaunde whether Christe by these woordes wrought any thing or no?

Cran.

He did institute the Sacrament.

Yong.

But answere, whether did he worke any thing?

Cran.

He did worke in instituting the Sacrament.

Yong.

Now I haue you: for before you said it was a figuratiue speache.

*_But a figure worketh nothing.

Ergo, it is not a figuratiue speech. A lyar ought to haue a good memorie.

Cran.

I vnderstoode your Sophistrie before. You by working vnderstande conuerting into the body of Christe: but Christ wrought the Sacrament, not in conuerting, but in instituting.

Young.

Woe be to them that make Christ a deceiuer. Did hee worke any other thyng then hee spake, or the selfe same thing?

Cran.

He wrought the sacrament, and by these wordes he signified the effect.

Fes- Yong.

A figuratiue speach is no working thing.

ti- But the speach of Christ is working:

no. Ergo, it is not figuratiue.

Cran.

It worketh by instituting, not by conuerting.

Young.

The thing signified in the sacramēt, is it not in that Sacrament?

Cran.

*It is. For the thing is ministred in a signe. He followeth the letter that taketh the thing for the signe. Augustine separateth the Sacrament from the thing. The Sacrament (sayeth he) is one, and the thing of the Sacrament an other.

Weston.

Sticke to thys Argument.

It is a figuratiue speach.

Ergo, it worketh nothing.

Young.

But the speach of Christ is a working thing.

Ergo, it is not figuratiue.

Cran.

O howe many craftes are in this Argument? they are meere fallacies: I sayd not that the words of Christ do worke, but Christ himselfe: and he worketh by a figuratiue speache.

Weston.

If a figure worke, it maketh of bread the bodye of Christ.

Cran.

A figuratiue speach worketh not.

West.

A figuratiue speach by your owne cōfession, worketh nothing.

But the speach of Christ in the supper (as you graunt) wrought somewhat:

Ergo.

The speach of Christe in the Supper was not figuratiue.

Cran.

I answer these are meere sophismes: the speach doth not worke, but Christ by the speache doth worke the sacrament.

I looke for Scriptures at your handes: for they are the foundation of disputations.

Young.

Are not these wordes of scripture: This is my body, The word of Christ is of strength: and by the Lordes wordes the heauens were made. He sayd: This is my body. Ergo, he made it.

Cranmer.

He made the Sacrament: and I deny your Argument.

Young.

If he wrought nothing, nothing is left there. Hee sayde: This is my body. You say contrary to the Scriptures, it is not the body of Christ, and fall from the faith.

Cran.

You interprete the scriptures contrary to all the old wryters, and faine a straunge sense.

Yong.

Ambrose. De ijs qui initiantur sacris, cap. 9. sayeth: De totius mundi• operibus legisti, quia ipse dixit. & facta sunt, *ipse mandauit & creata sunt. Sermo Christi qui potuit ex nihilo facere quod non erat, non potest ea quae sunt in id mutare quae non erant <◇> enim minus est nouas res dare, quam mutare naturas: Sed quid argumentis vtimur? suis vtamur exemplis, incarnationis{que} exemplo astruamus mysterij veritatem. Nunquid naturae vsus praecessit cum Dominus Iesus ex Maria nasceretur? Si ordinem quaerimus, viro mixta foemina generare consuevit, Liquet igitur quod praeter naturae ordinem virgo generauit: & hoc quod conficimus corpus ex virgine est. Quid hic quaeris naturae ordinem in Christi corpore, cum praeter naturam sit ipse Dominus Iesus partus ex virgine? Vera vtique caro Christi quae Crucifixa est, quae sepulta est: verè ergò illius Sacramentum est. Clamat Dominus Iesus: Hoc est corpus meum. Ante benedictionem verborum coelestium alia species nominatur, post consecrationem corpus significatur. Ipse dicit sanguinem suum. Ante consecrationem aliud dicitur: post consecrationem sanguis nuncupatur. Et tu dicis, Amen: hoc est▪ verum est. Quod os loquitur, mens interna fateatur: quod sermo sonat, affectus sentiat.

That is.

Thou hast read of the workes of all the worlde, that he spake the word and they were made: he commaunded and they were created. Can not the word of Christ which made of nothing that which was not, chaunge those things that are, into that they were not? For it is no les matter to geue newe things, then to chaunge natures. But what vse wee Argumentes? let vs vse hys owne examples, and lette vs confirme the veritie of the mysterie by example of hys incarnation. Did the vse of nature goe before, when the Lord Iesus was borne of Marye? If you seeke the order of nature, cōception is wont to be made by a woman ioyned to a man. It is manifest therfore, that contrary to the *order of nature, a virgin did conceiue: and this that we make, is the body of the virgin. What seekest thou heere the order of nature in y^e body of Christe, when against the order of nature the Lorde Iesus was conceiued of a Uirgine? It was the true flesh of Christe whiche was crucified, and which was buried: therefore it is truely the sacrament of him. The lord Iesus himselfe crieth: This is my body. Before the blessing of the heauenly wordes, it is named another kinde: but after the consecration the body of Christ is signified. He calleth it his bloud. Before consecration, it is called an other thing: after consecration it is called bloud, and thou sayest Amen: that is, it is true, That the mouth speaketh, let the inward mind confesse: that the word soūdeth, let the hart perceiue.

The same Ambrose in his 4. booke of sacraments the 4. chap. sayth thus: Panis iste, *panis est ante verba Sacramētorum vbi accesserit consecratio, de pane fit caro Christi. Hoc igitur astruamus: quomodo potest, qui panis est, corpus esse Christi consecratione? consecratio igitur quibus verbis est, & cuius sermonibus? Domini Iesu. Nam ad reliqua omnia quae dicūtur, laus Deo defertur, oratione petitur pro populo, pro regibus, pro caeteris, vbi venit vt conficiatur venerabile Sacramentum, iam non suis sermonibus Sacerdos vtitur, sed sermonibus Christi. Ergò sermo Christi hoc conficit Sacramentum. Quis sermo nempe is quo facta sunt omnia. Iussit Dominus & factum est coelum: iussit Dominus & facta est terra: iussit Dominus & facta sunt Maria. &c. Vides ergo quam operatorius sit sermo Christi. Si ergo tanta vis est in sermone Domini, vt inciperent esse quae non erant, quanto magis operatorius est, vt sint quae erant & in aliud commutentur.

That is to say.

This bread is breade before the wordes of the Sacraments, when the consecration commeth to it,* of bread it is made the flesh of Christ. Let vs cōfirme this therfore: how can that whyche is breade, by consecration be the bodye of Christ? by what words then is the consecration made, and by whose wordes? by the wordes of our Lorde Iesus. For touching all other things that are sayde, praise is geuen to God, prayer is made for the people, for kinges, and for the Page 1439 rest. When it commeth, that the reuerent Sacrament must be made, then the Priest vseth not his own words, but the wordes of Christ: therfore the word of Christe maketh this Sacrament. What word? That word, by which all things were made, The Lorde * commaunded, and heauen was made: the Lord commaunded and the earth was made: the Lord commanded, and the seas were made. the Lord commaunded, and all creatures were made. Doest thou not see then how strong in working the woorde of Christe is? If therfore, so great strength be in the Lords word, that those things shuld begin to be which were not before, how much the rather is it of strength to worke, y^t these thinges which were, shoulde be chaunged into an other thing? Ambrose sayth that the wordes are of strength to worke.

Weston.

You omit those wordes which follow, whych maketh the sence of Ambrose plaine. Read them.

Young.

Coelum non erat, mare non erat, terra non erat. Sed audi dicentem:*ipse dixit & facta sunt, ipse mandauit & creata sunt. Ergo tibi vt respondeam, non erat corpus Christi ante consecrationem, sed post consecrationem dico tibi quòd iam*corpus Christi est. That is. Heauen was not, the sea was not, the earth was not, but heare him that said: he spake the worde and they were made: he commaunded, and they were created. Therfore to answer thee, it was not the body of Christ before consecration, but after the cōsecration I say to thee, that now it is the body of Christ.

Cran.

All these thinges are common. I say that God doth chiefly worke in the Sacraments.

Yong.

How doth he worke?

Cran.

By his power as he doth in Baptisme.

Yong.

Nay, by the worde he chaungeth the bread into hys body, This is the truth, acknowledge the truth, geue place to the trueth.

Cran.

O glorious wordes, you are too full of wordes.

Yong.

Nay O glorious trueth, you make no change at all.

Cran.

Not so, but I make a great chaunge, as in them that are baptised, is there not a great chaunge when the child of the bondsclaue of the deuil, is made the sonne of God? So it is also in the sacrament of the supper when he receyueth vs into his protection and fauour.

Yong.

If he worke in the sacraments, he worketh in thys sacrament.

Cran.

God woorketh in his Faithfull, not in the Sacraments.

West.

In the supper the words are directed to the breade: in baptisme to the spirite. He sayd not, the water is the spirite, but of the bread he sayd: This is my body.

Cran.

He called the spirit a Doue: when the spirit descended in likenesse of a Doue.*

West.

He doth not call the spirit a Doue: but he sayth, that he descended as a Doue. He was seene in the likenesse of a Doue. As in Baptisme, the words are directed to him that is baptized, so in the supper the woordes are directed vnto the bread.

Cran.

Nay it is wrytten: Vpon whomesoeuer thou shalt see the spirite descending.* Hee calleth that which descended, the holy spirit. And Augustine calleth the doue the spirit. Heare what Augustine sayth in 1. Iohn.*Quid voluit per columbam, id est, per spiritum sanctū, docere, qui miserat eum. That is: What meant he by the Doue, that is, by the holy Ghost? forsoothe to teach who sent him.

Yong.

He vnderstandeth of the spirit descending as a doue: the spirit is inuisible.* If you minde to haue the truth heard let vs proceede. Heare what Ambrose saith: Vides quam operatorius sit sermo Christi. Si ergo tanta vis in sermone domini. &c. vt supra. That is: You see what a working power the word of Christe hath. Therefore if there be so great power in the Lordes woordes, that those thinges whiche were not, begin to be, howe much more of strength is it to worke that those things that were, should be chaunged into an other thing?

And in the 5. chap. Antequam consecratur, panis est: vbi autem verba Christi accesserint,*corpus est Christi. i. Before it is consecrated, it is bread: but when the words of Christ come to it, it is the body of Christ.

But hear what he sayth more: Accipite, edite, hoc est corpus meum: Take yee, eate yee, this is my bodye. Ante verba Christi calix est vini & aquae plenus: vbi verba Christi operata fuerint, ibi sanguis efficitur, qui redemit plebem. That is.

Before the wordes of Christe, the cuppe is full of wine and water, when the words of Christ haue wrought, there is made the bloude of Christe, which redeemed the people. What can be more plaine?

Cran.

*Nay, what can be lesse to the purpose? The wordes are of strength to worke in this Sacrament, as they are in Baptisme.

Pie.

The wordes of Christ (as Amb. sayth) are of strength to worke. What do they worke? Ambrose sayeth, they make the bloud which redeemed the people.

Ergo, the naturall bloud is made.

Cran.

The Sacrament of his bloud is made. The wordes make the bloude to them that receiue it: not that the bloude is in the cuppe, but in the receiuer.

Pie.

There is made the bloud which redeemed the people.

Cran.

The bloude is made: that is, the Sacrament of the bloude, by which he redeemed the people. [Fit] it is made: that is to say [ostenditur] it is shewed forth there. And Ambrose sayth: we receiue in a similitude. As thou hast receiued the similitude of his death, so also thou drinkest the similitude of his precious bloud.

West.

He sayth in a similitude,* because it is ministred vnder another likenesse. And this is the argument.

*There is made the bloud which redeemed the people.

But the naturall bloud redeemed the people.

Ergo, There is the naturall bloud of Christ.

You aunswer, that wordes make it bloud to them that receiue it: not that bloude is in the cuppe, but because it is made bloud to them that receiue it. That all men maye see how falsely you would auoid the fathers, heare what Ambrose sayth in the 6. booke and 1. chap.

Forte dicas, quomodo vera? qui similitudinem video, nō video sanguinis veritatem. Primum omnium dixi tibi de sermone Christi qui operatur, vt possit mutare & conuertere genera instituta naturae. Deinde vbi non tulerunt sermonem discipuli eius, sed audientes, quod carnem suam dedit manducari, & sanguinem suum dedit bibendum, recedebant. Solus tamen Petrus dixit: Verba vitae aeternae habes. & ego a te quò recedam? Ne igitur plures hoc dicerent, veluti quidam esset horror cruoris, sed maneret gratia redemptionis, ideò in similitudinem quidem accipis sacramentū, sed verè naturae gratiam virtutemque consequeris.

That is to say.

Peraduenture thou wilt say, how be they true? I which see the similitude, do not see the trueth of the bloud. First of all I told thee of y^e word of Christ, which so worketh, that it can chaunge & turne kindes ordained of nature. Afterward, when the Disciples coulde not abide the woordes of Christe, but hearing that he gaue hys flesh to eate, and hys bloud to drinke, they departed: Only Peter sayd, thou hast the wordes of eternal life: whether should I go from thee? Least therefore moe should say this thing, as though there should be a certain horror of bloud, and yet the grace of redemption should remaine: therefore in a similitude thou receiuest the sacrament: but in deede thou obtainest the grace and power of his nature.

Cranmer.

These wordes of themselues are plaine enough. (And he read this place againe: *Thou receiuest the Sacrament for a similitude) But what is that he sayth: Thou receiuest for a similitude.) I thinke he vnderstandeth the sacrament to be the similitude of his bloud.

Ched.

That you may vnderstand that trueth discenteth not from trueth, to ouerthrow that which you say of that similitude, heare what Ambrose sayth lib. 4. De sacrament.

Si operatus est sermo coelestis in alijs rebus, non operatur in sacramentis coelestibus? *Ergo didicisti quod e pane corpus fiat Christi, & quod vinum & aqua in calicem mittitur. sed fit sanguis consecratione verbi coelestis. Sed forte dices, speciem sanguinis non videri. Sed habet similitudinem. Sicut enim mortis similitudinem sumpsisti, ita etiam similitudinem preciosi sanguinis bibis, vt nullus horror cruoris sit, & pretium tamen operetur redemptionis. Didicisti ergo, quia quod accipis corpus est Christ•.

That is to say.

If the heauenly word did worke in other things, doth it not worke in the heauenly sacramentes? Therefore thou hast learned, that of bread is made the body of Christe, and that wine and water is put into that cuppe: but by consecration of the heauenly worde, it is made bloude. But thou wilt say peraduētūre, that the likenes of bloud is not sent. But it hath a similitude.

For as thou hast receiued the similitude of hys death, so also thou drinkest the similitude of his precious bloud, *so y^t there is no horror of bloud, & yet it worketh the price of redemptiō. Therefore thou hast learned, that that which thou receiuest, is the body of Christ.

Cran.

He speaketh of sacraments sacramentally. He calleth the sacraments by the names of the things: for he vseth the signes for the things signified: and therefore y^e bread is not called bread, but his body, for the excellencie and dignitie of the thyng signified by it. So doth Ambrose interpret hym selfe when hee sayeth: In cuius typum nos calicem mysticum sanguinis ad tuitionem corporis & animae nostrae percepimus. 1. Cor. 11.

That is.

For a type or figure wherof we receiue the mystical cup of his bloud, for the safegard of our bodies and soules.

Ched.

A type? hee calleth not the bloud of Christe a type or signe: but the bloude of Bulls and Goates in that respect was a type or signe.

Cran.

This is new learning: you shall neuer read this among the fathers.

Ched.

But Ambrose sayeth so.

Cran.

He calleth the bread and the cup a type or signe of the bloud of Christ, and of his benefite.

West.

Ambrose vnderstandeth for a type of his benefit, that is, of redemption: not of the bloud of Christ, but of his passion. The cuppe is the type or signe of his death, seeing it is hys bloud.

Cran.

He sayeth most plainely, that the cuppe is the type of Christes bloud.*

Da- Ched. As Christe is truely and really incarnate, so is he truely and really in the Sacrament.

ri- But Christ is really and truely incarnate.

j. Ergo, the body of Christ is truely and really in the sacrament.

Cran.

*I deny the Maior.

Ched.

*I prooue the Maior out of Iustine in hys 2. Apologie: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

Cran.

*This place hath ben falsified by Marcus Constantius. Iustine meant nothing els, but that the bread which nourisheth vs, is called the body of Christ.

Ched.

To the Argument. As Christ is truely and naturally incarnate. &c. vt supra.

Cran.

I deny your Maior.

Ched.

The woordes of Iustine are thus to bee interpreted woord for woord.

Quemadmodum per verbum Dei caro factus Iesus Christus Saluator noster, *carnem habuit & sanguinem pro salute nostra: sic & cibum illum consecratum per sermonem precationis ab ipso institutae, quo sanguis carnesque nostrae per communionem nutriuntur, eiusdem Iesu qui caro factus est, carnem & sanguinem esse accepimus. That is to say.

As by the worde of God Iesus Christ our sauour, being made flesh, had both flesh and bloud for our saluation: so we are taught that the meat * consecrated by the word of prayer, instituted of him, whereby our bloude and flesh are nourished by * cōmunion, is the flesh and bloud of the same Iesus, which was made flesh.

Cran.

You haue translated it wel: But I deny your Maior. Thys is the sence of Iustine: * that that breade is called the body of Christ, and yet of that sanctified meate our bodyes are nourished.

Ched.

Nay, he sayeth of that sanctified meate, bothe oure bodies and soules are nourished.

Cran.

He sayth not so: but he sayth that it nourisheth our flesh and bloud: and howe can that nourish the soule, that nourisheth the flesh and bloud? *

Cole.

It feedeth the body by the soule.

Cran.

Speake vprightly. Can that which is receiued by the soule and the spirite, be called the meat of the body?

West.

Heare then what Irenaeus sayeth: Eum calicem qui est creatura, *suum corpus confirmauit, ex quo nostra auget corpora. Quando & mixtus c•lix. & Fractus panis percipit verbum Dei, fit Eucharistia sanguinis & corporis Christi, ex quibus augetur, & cōsistit carnis nostrae substantia This is y^e same cup which is a creature, hee confirmed to be hys body, by which hee increaseth oure bodies. When both the cuppe mixed, and the breade broken, hathe ioyned to it the woorde of God, it is made the Sacrament of the body and bloude of Christe, of whych the substaunce of our fleshe is increased, and consisteth.

The substance of our flesh is increased by the body and bloud of Christ:*

Ergo, our body is nourished by the body and bloude of Christ.

Cran.

I deny your Argument. He calleth it the fleshe and bloud: for the Sacrament of the body and bloud, as Tertullian also sayth: *Nutritur corpus pane Symbolico, anima corpore Christi. That is, Our flesh is nourished wyth Symbolicall or sacramentall bread, but our soule is nourished wyth the body of Christ.

West.

Looke what he sayeth more. Quomodo carnem negant capacem esse donationis Dei quae est vita aeterna, quae sanguine & corpore Christi nutritur. li. 5. post duo folia a principio. * That is: How doe they say, that the flesh can not receiue the gift of God that is eternall life, which is nourished wyth the bloud and body of Christe? That is in the 5. booke 2. leaues from the beginning.

Cran.

The body is nourished both with the sacramēt, and with the body of Christ, with the sacrament to a temporall life: with the body of Christ to eternall life.

Ched.

I cannot but be sorie when I see such a manifest lie in your wrytings. For where you translate Iustine on this fashion: that the bread, water and wine, are not so to be taken in this sacrament, as common meates and drinks are wont to be takē of vs: but are meates chosen out peculiarly for this, namely for the geuing of thanks, * and therefore be called of the Greekes Eucharistia, that is, Thanks geuinge, they are called moreouer the bloude and bodye of Christe (so haue you translated it): the wordes of Iustine are thus: Wee are taughte that the meate consecrated by the worde of prayer, by the which our flesh and bloud is nourished by Communion, is the body & bloud of the same Iesus which was made fleshe.

Cran.

I did not translate it worde for worde, but onely I gaue the meaning: and I goe nothing from his meaning. *

Harps.

You remember, touching Iustine, to whom this Apologie was wrytten, namelye to an Heathen man. The Heathen thought that the Christians came to the Church to worship breade. Iustine aunswareth, that we come not to common bread, but as to. &c. as is sayd afore. Weigh the place wel, it is right worthy to be noted: Our flesh is nourished: according to mutation.

Cran.

We ought not to consider the bare bread: * but whosoeuer commeth to the Sacrament, eateth the true body of Christe.

West.

You haue corrupted Emissenus, for in stead of cibis satiandus, that is, to be filled with meat: you haue set cibis satiandus spiritualibus: that is, to be filled with spirituall meates.

Cran.

I haue not corrupted it, for it is so in the Decrees.

West.

You haue corrupted an other place of Emissenus. For you haue omitted these woordes: Mirare cum reuerendum altare cibis spiritualibus satiandus ascendis: *sacrum Dei tui corpus & sanguinem fide respice, honorem mirare, merito contingere. &c. That is: Maruell thou when thou comest vp to the reuerend altar to be filled with spiritual meates: looke in faith to the holy body and blood of thy God: maruell at his honour: worthely touch him.

Cran.

Thys booke hath not that

West.

Also you haue falsified this place by euill translating Honora corpus Dei tui. i. Honour the bodye of thy God. * You haue translated it: Honora eum qui est Deus tuus. i. Honoure him which is thy God. Whereas Emissenus hath not [honor him] but [honor the body of thy God.]

Cran.

I haue so translated him, and yet no les truly, then not without a weighty cause, * for els it shoulde not haue bene wythout daunger, if I had translated it thus: Honour the body of thy God: because of certain, that according to the error of the Anthropomorphites, dreamed that God had a body.

West.

Nay you most of all, haue brought the people into y^e errour, whyche so longe haue taught that he sitteth at the right hande of God the father: and counted me for an hereticke because I preached y^e God had no right hande. Then I will appose you in the very Articles of your faith.

Christ sitteth at the right hand of God the Father.*

But God the Father hath no right hand:

Ergo, Where is Christ now?

Cran.

I am not so ignoraunt a nouice in the articles of my faith, but that I vnderstand,* that to sit at the right hand of God, doth signifie to be equall in the glory of the Father.

West.

Now then take this Argument.

Whersoeuer Gods authority is, there is Christes body,

But Gods authoritie is in euery place:

Ergo, what letteth the body of Christ to be in euery place?

Moreouer you haue also corrupted Duns.*

Cran.

That is a great offence, I promise you.

West.

For you haue omitted secundum apparentiam. i. as it appeareth. Where his wordes are these: Et si quaeras quare voluit Ecclesia eligere istum intellectum ita difficilem huius articuli, cum verba Scriptura possint saluari secundum intellectum facilem & veriore, secundum apparentiam, de hoc articulo. &c. That is: And if you demaunde why the Church did chuse thys so harde an vnderstanding of thys Article, where as the woordes of scripture may be salued after an easie & true vnderstanding (as appeareth) of thys article, &c.

Cran.

It is not so.

West.

Also you haue set foorth a Catechisme in the name of the Synode of London, and yet there be 50,* which witnessing that they were of the number of the Conuocation, neuer heard one worde of this Catechisme.

Cran.

I was ignorant of the setting too of that title: and as soone as I had knowledge therof, I did not like it. Therefore when I complained therof to the Councel, it was answered me by them, that the booke was so entituled, because it was set forth in the time of the Conuocation.

West.

Moreouer, you haue in Duns translated in Romana Ecclesia, pro Ecclesia Catholica. i. In the Church of Rome, for the Catholicke Church.

Moreouer you haue deprauid S. Thomas, namely where he hath these wordes: *In quantum vero est sacrificium, habet vim satisfactiuam: Sed in satisfactione attenditur magis affectio offerentis, quàm quantitas oblationis. Vnde Dominus dicit apud Lucam de vidua quae obtulit duo aera, quòd plus omnibus misit. Quamuis ergo haec oblatio ex sui quantitate sufficiet ad satisfaciendum pro omni poena: tamen fit satisfactoria illis pro quibus offertur, vel etiam offerentibus secundum quantitatem suae deuotionis, & non pro tota poena. That is: In as muche as it is a sacrifice, it hath the power of satisfaction: But in satisfaction the affection of the offerer is more to be waied then the quantity of the oblation. Wherefore the lord sayde in Lukes Gospell, of the widowe which offered two mites, that she cast in more thē they al. Therefore, although this oblation of the quantitie of it selfe wil suffice to satisfie for all paine, yet it is made satisfactorie to them, for whom it is offered, or to the offerers, according to the quantitie of their deuotion, and not for all the paine.

You haue thus turned it: Quod sacrificium Sacerdotis habet vim satisfactiuam. &c. That is, That the Sacrifice of the priest hath power of satisfaction. &c. And therefore in thys place you haue chopped in this word [Sacerdotis] of y^e priest, wheras in the translation of all the newe Testament, you haue not set it, but where Christ was put to death. And again, where s. Thomas hath [pro omni poena] for all paine, your booke omitteth many things there.

Thus you see brethren the truth stedfast and inuincible, you see also the craft and deceit of hereticks,* the truth may be pressed, but it cannot be oppressed: therefore crye altogether, Vincit veritas. i. The truth ouercommeth.

This disordered disputation sometime in latine, sometime in English, continued almost till 2. of the clock. Which being finished, and the arguments wrytten and deliuered to the handes of M. Say, the prisonner was had away by the Mayor, and the Doctors dined together at the vniuersitie Colledge.

Disputation at Oxford betweene D. Smith, with his other Colleagues and Doctors, and Bishop Ridley. Aprill. 17.

The next day folowing which was the 17. of April, was brought forth D. Ridley to dispute, against whom was set D. Smith to be principall opponent. Touching whych D. Smith, for so much as mention heere happeneth of hys name, first the reader is to be aduertised what is to be attributed to his iudgement in religion, which so oftentimes before hath turned and returned to and froe, grounded (as it seemeth) vpon no firme conscience of doctrine, as both by hys articles by him recanted may appeare, and also by hys owne letter sent a little before in king Edwardes dayes to the Archbishop of Caunterbury from Scotlande. Which letter I thought heere to exhibite as a certaine Preface before his own arguments, or rather as a testimonie against him selfe, whereby y^e reader may vnderstand how deuoutly he magnified them, and their doctrine a little before, agaynst whome he nowe disputeth so busely. Reade (I beseeche thee, his Epistle, and iudge.

The true copie of a certaine Epistle of Doctor Rich. Smith, declaring his affection to the setting forth of Gods sincere woorde.

MOst honorable, I commend me vnto your Lordship, doing the same to vnderstand,* that I wrote letters to your grace in Ianuarye last, and the 10. day of Februarie, declaring the causes of my sodaine & vnadvised departyng from your grace ouer the sea, and desiring your good lordship of your charitye towarde them that repent of theyr ill Acts, to forgeue me your selfe all that wrōg I did towards your grace, and to obtaine in wryting the kings maiesties pardon for me in all poyntes concerning his lawes:* vpon the receit wherof I would returne againe home, & wythin halfe a yeare (at the vttermost) afterwarde wryte, de Sacerdotum connubijs. &c. a Latine booke that should be a iust satisfaction for any thing that I haue wrytten agaynste the same. Reliqua quē omnia dogmata vestra, tum demum libenter amplexurum, vbi Deus mentem meam, vt ea citra cōscientiae laesionem agnoscam, doceamquē. I wrote not this that I want any good liuing heere, but because mine absence oute of the realme, is dishonour to the Kings highnes and Realme, and because I must needes (if I tarie heere a quarter of a yeare longer) wryte an aunsweare to your Graces booke of the Sacramente, and also a Booke of common places against all the doctrine sette foorth by the kinges Maiestie, which I cannot do wyth good conscience. Wherefore I beseeche your Grace helpe me home, assoone as yee may conueniently for Gods sake, and ye shal neuer I trust in God repent that facte.

Ex vrbe diui Andreae 14. Feb.

Richardus Smithaeus.

And thus much touching the forenamed Doctor Rich. Smith, being set heere (as is sayde) to dispute against Byshop Ridly,* who was brought now y^e next day after to the Archb. to aunswer in the diuinitie schoole. Against whome also besides D. Smith disputed, D. Weston, D. Tresham, D. Oglethorpe, D. Glin, D. Seton, D. Cole, M. Warde, M. Harpsfielde, D. Watson, M. Pye, M. Hardinge, M. Curtop, M. Fecknam. To all them hee aunswere very learnedly. Hee made a preface to these questions, but they woulde not let him goe forth in it, but caused him to make an end of the same, and sayde it was blasphemie, and some saide he droue of the time in ambiguous things, nothing to the purpose, & so they wold not suffer him to say his mind. D. Smith coulde get nothing at his hand: in so much that other did take his argumēts and prosecuted them. He shewed himselfe to be learned, & a great clearke. They coulde bring nothing, but he knew it as well as they.

The disputation beginneth.

West. Prolocutor.

Good Christen people and brethren, we haue begon this day our schoole, by Gods good speede I trust, and are entring into a controuersie, whereof no question ought to be mooued, concerning the veritie of the body of our Lord Iesu Christ in the Eucharist. Christ is true, which sayde the wordes. The wordes are true whyche he spake, yea truth it selfe that cannot faile. Lette vs therefore pray vnto God to sende downe vnto vs his holye spirite, which is the true interpreter of his woorde: whiche maye purge away errorrs, and geue light that veritye may appeare. Let vs also aske leaue and libertie of the Church to permit the truth receiued, to be called this day in question, wythout any preiudice to the same. Your partes therefore shalbe to implore the assistaunce of almighty God, to pray for the prosperitie of the Queenes maiestie, and to geue vs quiet and attentie eares. Now go to your questions.

Doct Smith.

This day (right learned M. Doctor) 3. questions are propounded, whereof no controuersy among christians ought to be mooued, to wit:

1. Whether the naturall bodye of Christ our Sauour, conceiued of the Virgine Marie,* and offred for mans redemption vpon the crosse, is verilye and really in the sacrament by vertue of Gods worde spoken by the Priest. &c.
2. Whether in the sacrament after the words of consecration, be any other substance. &c.
3. Whether in the Masse be a sacrifice propiciatorie. &c.

Touching the which questiōs, although you haue publikely and partly professed your iudgemēt and opinion on Saterday last: yet being not satisfied with that your aunswere, I wil assay againe to demanda your sentence in the first question: Whether the true body of Christe, after the woords pronounced, be really in the Eucharist, or els only the figure. In which matter I stande heere nowe to heare your aunswere.

The Preface or protestation of D. Ridley, before his disputation.

I Receiued of you the other day right worshipful M. prolocutor, and yee my reuerend Maisters,* Commissioners from the Queenes maiestie, and her honorable Counsell, three propositions: whereunto ye commaunded me to prepare against this day, what I thought good to aunswere concerning the same.

Now whilst I weied w^t my selfe, how great a charge of the Lords flocke was of late committed vnto me, for the which I am certaine I must once render an accompte to my Lord God (and that howe soone, he knoweth) and that moreouer by the commaundement of the Apostle Peter, I ought to be redy alway to geue a reason of the hope y^t is in me with mekenes and reuerence, vnto euery one that shall demaund the same: besides this, cōsidering my duty to the Church of Christ,* and to your worships being commissioners by publicke authority: I determined with my selfe to obey your commaundement, and so opēly to declare vnto you my minde touching the foresayd propositions. And albeit plainely to confesse vnto you the trueth in these things which ye now demaund of me, I haue thought otherwyse in times past then I now do, yet (God I call to record vnto my soule, I lie not) I haue not altered my iudgemēt, as now it is, either by constraint of any man, or lawes, either Page 1442 for the dread of any daungers of thys world, either for any hope of commodity: but onely for the loue of the trueth, reuealed vnto me by the grace of God (as I am vndoubtedly perswaded) in his holy woorde, and in the reading of the auncient Fathers.

These things I do the rather recite at this present, because it may happen to some of you hereafter, as in times past it hath done to me: I meane, if ye thinke otherwyse of the matters propoūded in these propositions, then I now doe, God may open vnto you in time to come.

But how so euer it shall be, I will in fewe woordes do that which I thinke yee all looke I shoulde doe: that is, as plainely as I can, I will declare my iudgement heerein. Howbeit of this I would yee were not ignoraunt, that I will not in deede wittingly and willingly speake in any poynt against Gods worde,* or dissent in any one iote from the same, or from the rules of faith, and Christian religion: which rules that same most sacred word of god prescribeth to the Church of Christe, whereunto I nowe and for euer submit my selfe, and all my doinges. And because the matter I haue now taken in hand is waightie, and yee all wel know how vnready I am to handle it accordingly, aswell for lacke of time, as also lacke of bookes: therefore heere I protest that I will publickly this daye require of you, that it may be lawfull for me concerning all mine aunswares, explications, and confirmations, to adde or diminish what soeuer shall seeme hereafter more conuenient and mete for the purpose, through more sound iudgement, better deliberation, and more exact triall of euery particular thing. Hauing nowe by the way of Preface and protestation, spoken these fewe woordes, I will come to the answearinge of the propositions propounded vnto me, and so to the most brief explication and confirmation of mine answeres.

West.

Reuerend maister Doctour, concerning the lacke of bookes, there is no cause why you should complaine. What bookes soeuer you will name,* ye shall haue them, & as concerning the iudgement of your answeres to be had of your selfe wyth farther deliberation: it shall (I say) be lawfull for you vntill Sonday next to adde vnto them what you shall thinke good your selfe. My minde is that we shoulde vse short arguments, least we shuld make an infinite processe of the thing.

Rid.

There is an other thyng besides, whyche I woulde gladly obtaine at your handes. I perceiue that you haue wryters and Notaries here present. By all likelihoode our disputations shalbe published, I beseech you for gods sake let me haue libertie to speake my minde freely, & wythout interruption, not because I haue determined to protract y^e time with a solemne Preface, but least it maye appeare that some be not satisfied. God wotte I am no Oratour, nor I haue not learned Rhetoricke to set colours on the matter.

West.

*Among this whole company, it shall be permitted you to take two for your part.

Rid.

I would chuse two, if there were any here w^t whome I were acquainted.

West.

Here are two whych M. Cranmer had yesterdaye. Take them if it please you.

Rid.

I am contente wyth them: I truste they are honest men.

The first proposition.

In the Sacrament of the aultare, by the vertue of Gods word spoken of the Priest, the naturall body of Christ borne of the virgine Marie,* and his naturall bloude is really present vnder the formes of bread and wine.

The aunswere of N. Ridley.

In matters appertaining to God, we may not speake according to the sence of man:* nor of the worlde: Therefore this proposition or cōclusion is framed after an other maner of phrase or kinde of speeche, then the Scripture vseth. Againe, it is very obscure and darke, by meanes of sundry wordes of doubtfull signification. And being taken in the sence whych the Schoolemen teache,* and at thys time the church of Rome doth defend, it is false and erroneous, and plaine contrary to the doctrine which is according to godlinesse.

The explication.

How farre the diuersitie and newnes of the phrase in all this first proposition, is from the phrase of the holy Scripture, and that in euery part almost, it is so plaine & euident to any that is but meanelly exercised in holy wryte, that I neede not now (especially in this company of learned men) to spend any time therein, except the same shalbe required of me hereafter.

First,* there is a doubtfull sense in these woordes [by the vertue of Gods word.] For it is doubtful what word of God this is: whether it be that which is red in the Euangelists, or in Paul, or any other. And if it be that which is in the Euangelists or in S. Paule, what that is. If it be in none of them, then how it may be knowen to be Gods worde, & of such vertue, y^t it should be able to worke so great a matter.

Againe, there is a doubte in these woordes [of the Priest] whether no man may be called a Priest,* but he whych hath authoritie to make propitiatorie sacrifice for the quicke and the deade: and howe it may be prooued that thys authoritie was committed of God to any man, but to Christ alone.

It is likewise doubted,* after what order the sacrificing Priest shall be, whether after the order of Aaron, or els after the order of Melchisedech. For as farre as I know, the holy scripture doth allow no moe.

West.

Let thys be sufficient.*

Rid.

If we lacke time at this present, there is time enough heereafter.

West.

These are but euasions or starting holes, You consume the time in vaine.

Rid.

I can not start farre from you, I am captiue & bound.

West.

Fall to it my maisters.

Smith.

That whych you haue spoken, may suffice at thys present.

Rid.

Let me alone I pray you, for I haue not much to say behinde.

West.

Goe forwarde.

Rid.

Moreouer, there is ambiguitie in thys word, really, whether it be to be taken as the Logicians terme it, *transcender, that is, most generally (and so it may signifie any manner of thing which belongeth to the body of Christ, by any meanes: after which sort we also graunt Christes body to be really in the sacramente of the Lordes Supper, as in disputation, if occasion be geuen shall be declared) or whether it be taken to signifie the very same thing, hauing body, life and soule, which was assumed & taken of the worde of God, into the vnitie of persone. In which sence, sith the body of Christ is really in heauen, because of the true manner of his body, it may not be sayde to be here in the earth. There is yet a further doubtfulnesse in these words, *vnder the formes of breade and wine, whether the formes be there taken to signifie the onely accidental and outward shewes of bread and wine: or there withall the substantial natures therof, which are to be seene by their qualities, and perceiued by exterior sences.

Now the error and falsenes of the proposition, * after the sense of the Romish church and scholemen, may hereby appeare, in that they affirm the bread to be transubstantiated and chāged into the flesh, assumed of the word of God, and that (as they say) by the vertue of the woorde, whych they haue deuised by a certaine number of woordes, and cannot be founde in any of the Euangelistes, or in Paule, and so they gather that Christes bodye is reallye contained in the sacrament of the aultar. Which position is grounded vpon the foundation of transubstantiation: * which foundation is monstrous against reason, and destroieth the Analogie or proportion of the sacraments, and therefore this proposition also, which is builded vpon thys rotten foundation, is false erroneous, and to be counted as a detestable heresy of the Sacramentaries.

West.

We lose time.

Rid.

You shall haue time inough.

West.

Fall to reasoning. You shall haue some other day for this matter.

Rid.

I haue no more to say concerning my explication. If you will geue me leaue and let me alone, I wil but speake a woord or two for my confirmation.

West.

Go to: say on.

The confirmation of the foresaid answer.

Fes- There oughte no Doctrine to bee established in the church of God,* which discenteth from the word of God, from the rule of faith, and draweth with it many absurdities, that cannot be auoided.

ti- But this doctrine of the first proposition is such.

no. Ergo,* it ought not to be established and maintained in the Church of God.

The Maior or first part of my argument is plaine, and the Minor or second part is prooued thus.

This doctrine maintaineth a real, corporal, and carnal presence of Christes flesh, assumed and taken of the woorde to be in the Sacrament of the Lordes Supper, & that not by vertue & grace onely, but also by the whole essence and substance of the body and flesh of Christ.*

But such a presence disagreeeth from Gods word, from the rule of faith, and cannot but drawe wyth it manye absurdities.

The first part of thys argument is manifest, and the second may yet further be confirmed thus.

West.

Thus you consume time, which might be better bestowed on other matters.* Maister Opponent, I pray you to your arguments.

Smith.

I will heere reason with you vppon transubstantiation, which you say is contrary to the rule and Analogy of faith. The contrary whereof I proue by the Scriptures and the doctors. But before I enter argumentation wyth you, I demaund first whether in the 6. chap. of Iohn, there be any mention made of the sacrament, or of the reall presence of Christ in the sacrament.

Rid.

It is againste reason that I shoulde bee impeached to prosecute that which I haue to speake in this assembly, being not so long, but that it may be comprehended in few woordes.

West.

Let him reade on.

Rid.

First of all, this presence is contrary to many places of the holy Scripture.

*Secondly, it varieth from the articles of the faith.

Thirdly, it destroyeth and taketh away the institution of the Lordes supper.

Fourthly, it maketh precious thinges common to prophane and vngodly persones: for it casteth that whyche is holy vnto dogs, and pearles vnto swine.

Fiftly, it forceth men to maintaine many mōstruous miracles without necessitie and authoritie of Gods worde.

Sixtly, it geueth occasion to the heretickes which erred concerning the two natures in Christe, to defend their heresies thereby.

Seuenthy, it falsifieth the sayings of the godly fathers: it falsifieth also the Catholike Faith of the Church, whyche the Apostles taught, the martyrs confirmed, and the faithfull (as one of the Fathers sayeth) doe retaine and keepe vntill this day. Wherefore the second parte of mine argument is true.

The probation of the antecedent or former part of this argument by the partes thereof.

THIS carnall presence is contrary to the worde of God, as appeareth, * Iohn. 16. I tell you the trueth. It is profitable to you that I goe away, for if I goe not away, the comfortour shall not come vnto you. Actes 3. Whome the heauens must receaue vntill the time of restoring of all thinges which God hath-spoken. * Math. 9. The children of the Bridegrom cannot mourne so long as the Bridegrome is with them: But now is the time of mourning. Iohn 16. But I will see you againe, and your heartes shall reioyce. * Iohn 14. I will come againe and take you to my selfe. Math. 24. If they shall say vnto you, behold, here is Christ, or there is Christe, beleue them not: for wheresoeuer the deade carcase is, thither the Eagles will resort.

*It varyeth from the articles of the faith: He ascended into heauen, and sitteth on the right hande of God the Father. From whence (and not from any other place, sayeth S. Augustine) he shall come to iudge both the quicke and the deade.

*It destroyeth and taketh away the institution of the Lordes supper, which was commaunded onely to be vsed and continued vntill the Lorde himselfe shoulde come. If therefore he be now really present in the body of his flesh, then must the supper cease: For a remembraunce is not of a thing present, but of a thing past and absent. And there is a difference betwene remembraunce and presence, and (as one of the Fathers sayeth) A figure is in vaine where the thing figured is present.

It maketh precious things common to prophane and vngodly persons, & constraineth men to confesse many absurdities.* For it affirmeth that whoremongers and murtherers, yea and (as some of them hold opinion) the wicked and faithles, mise, rattes, & dogs also may receiue the verye real and corporal body of the Lord, wherein the fulnes of the spirite of light and grace dwelleth: contrary to the manifest wordes of Christ in sixe places & sentences of the sixt chap. of S. Iohn.

It confirmeth also and maintaineth that beastly kinde of crueltie of the Anthropophagi, that is, the deuourers of mans flesh: for it is a more cruel thing to deuoure a quicke man,* then to slay him.

Pie.

He requireth time to speake blasphemies. Leaue your blasphemies.

Rid.

I had little thought to haue hadde such reprochefull woordes at your handes.

West.

All is quiet. Goe to the arguments M. Doctor.

Rid.

I haue not many moe things to say.

West.

You vtter blasphemies with a most impudent face: leaue off (I say) and get you to the argument.

Rid.

It forceth men to maintaine many monstrous myracles, wythout all necessitie and authoritie of Gods worde.* For at the comming of thys presence of the body and flesh of Christ, they thrust away the substaunce of breade, and affirme that the accidents remayne without any subiect, and in the stead thereof, they place Christes body wythout hys qualities and the true maner of a bodye. And if the Sacrament be reserued so long vntill it mould, & wormes breede some say that the substance of bread miraculously returneth againe, and some deny it.* Other some affirme y^t the real body of Christ goeth downe into y^e stomacke of the receiuers, & doth there abide so long only as they shall continue to be good, but another sort hold that the body of Christ is caried into heauē, so soone as the formes of bread be brused wyth the teeth. O works of miracles: Truly & most truly I see that fulfilled in these men, whereof S. Paule prophecied. 2. Thess. 2. Because they haue not receiued the loue of the trueth, that they might be saued, God shall sende them strong delusions, that they shoulde beleue lies, and be all damned which haue not beleued the truth. This grosse presence hath brought foorth that fonde phantasie of concomitaunce, whereby is broken at this day and abrogated the commandement of the Lord for the distributing of the Lordes cuppe to the laitie.

It geueth occasion to heretickes to maintaine and defend their errorrs: as to Martion, which sayd that Christ had but a phantasticall bodye: and to Eutiches which wickedly confounded the two natures in Christ.

Finally, it falsifieth the sayings of the godly fathers and the Catholicke faith of the church, which Vigilus a Martyr, and graue wryter sayeth was taught of the Apostles, confirmed wyth the bloude of Martyrs, and was continually maintained by the faithful, vntil his tyme. By the sayings of the fathers, I meane of Iustine, Irenee, Tertullian, Origene, Eusebius, Emisene, Athanasius, Cyrill, Epyphanus, Hierome, Chrysostome, Augustine, Vigilus, Fulgentius, Bertram, and others most auncient fathers. All those places, as I am sure I haue read, making for my purpose, so am I well assumed that I coulde shewe the same, if I myght haue the vse of mine owne bookes, whiche I will take on me to doe, euen vpon the pearill of my life, and the losse of all that I maye lose in thys world.

But now (my brethren) thinke not, because I disalow that presence which this first proposition maintaineth (as a presence which I take to be forged, phantasticall, and besides the authoritie of Gods worde, perniciously broughte into the Church by the Romanistes) that I therefore go about to take away the true presence of Christes body in his Supper rightly and duely ministred,* whyche is grounded vpon the word of God, and made more plaine by the commentaries of y^e faithfull fathers: They that thinke so of me, the Lord knoweth how far they are deceiued. And to make the same euident vnto you. I will in fewe woords declare what true presence of Christes body in the sacramēt of the Lordes supper I hold and affirme with the worde of God and the auncient fathers.

I say and confesse with the Euangelist Luke,* and wyth the Apostle Paule, that the bread on the which thanks are geuen, is the body of Christe in the remembraunce of hym and of his death, to be set foorth perpetually of the faithfull vntill his comming.

I say and confesse the bread which we breake to be the Communion and partaking of Christes bodye, wyth the auncient and the faithfull fathers.

I say and beleeeue that there is not onely a signification of Christes body sette foorth by the sacrament,* but also that therewith is geuen to the godly and faithfull, the grace of Christes body, that is, the foode of life & immortalitye. And this I holde wyth Cyprian.

I say also with S. Augustine, that wee eate life, and wee drinke life: with Emisene, that we feele the Lorde to be present in grace: wyth Athanasius, that wee receiue Celestiall foode, which commeth from aboue: the propertie of natural Communion, wyth Hyllarius: the nature of flesh and benediction whych geueth life in breade and wine, wyth Cyrill: and wyth the same Cyrill, the vertue of the very flesh of Christ, life and grace of his body, the propertie of the onely begotten, that is to say, life, as he himselfe in plaine words expoundeth it.

I confesse also with Basil, that we receiue the mysticall Aduent and comming of Christ, grace, & the vertue of hys very nature: the sacrament of his very flesh, with Ambrose: the body by grace, with Epiphanius: spirituall flesh, but not that which was crucified, with Hierome: Grace flowing into a sacrifice, and the grace of the spirite, with Chrysostome: grace and inuisible veritie, grace and societie of the members of Christes body, with Augustine.

Finally, with Bertram (which was the last of all these) I confesse that Christes body is in the Sacrament in thys Page 1444 respect: * namely (as he writeth) because there is in it the spirite of Christ, that is, the power of the worde of God, which not onely feedeth the soule, but also clenseth it. Out of these I suppose it may clearely appeare vnto al mē, how farre we are frō that opinion, wherof some go about falsly to slaunder vs to the world, saying we teach that the godly and faithfull shoulde receiue nothing else at the Lordes table, but a figure of the body of Christ.

¶The second proposition.

After the consecration there remayneth no substaunce of bread and wine, neyther any other substaunce, then the substaunce of God and man.

The Aunswere.

*THE seconde conclusion is manifestly false, directly against the word of God, the nature of the Sacramente, and the most eident testimonies of the godly Fathers: and it is the rotten foundation of the other two conclusions propounded by you, * both of the first, and of the third. I will not therefore now tary vpon any further explication of this aunswere, being contented with that which is already added afore to the answer of the first proposition.

¶The first argument for the confirmation of this aunswere.

IT is very playne by the worde of God, that Christ did geue bread vnto his Disciples, and called it his body.

But the substance of bread is another maner of substāce, then is the substance of Christes body God and man: *

Therefore the conclusion is false.

The second part of mine argument is playne, and the first $\langle \diamond \rangle$ proued thus:

¶The second argument.

Da- That which Christ dyd take, on the which he gaue than••s, and the which he brake, he gaue to his Disciples, and called it his body:

ri- But he toke bread, gaue thāks on bread, & brake bread:

si. Ergo, the first part is true. And it is confirmed with the authorities of the Fathers, Irene, Tertullian, Origene, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Hierome, Augustine, Theodoret, Cirill, Rabanus, and Be••. Whose places I will take vpon me to shew most manifest in this behalfe, if I may be suffered to haue my bookes, as my request is.

Bread is the body of Christ:

Ergo, it is bread.

*A tertio adiacente ad secundum adiacens cum verbi substantiui pura copula.

¶The third Argument.

Ba- As the bread of the Lordes table is Christes naturall body, so is it his mysticall body.

ro- But it is not Christes mysticall body by transubstantiation.

co. Ergo, it is not his naturall body by transubstantiatio.

The second part of my argument is plaine, and the first is proued thus: As Christ who is the veritie, spake of the bread: This is my body which shall be betrayed for you, speaking there of his naturall body: euen so Paul moued with y^e same spirit of truth, * said: We though we be many, yet are we all one bread, and one body, which be partakers of one bread.

*¶The fourth Argument.

We may no more beleue bread to be transubstantiate into the body of Christ, * then the wine into his bloud.

But the wine is not transubstantiate into his bloud:

Ergo, neyther is that bread therefore transubstantiate into his body.

¶The first part of this argument is manifest, & the second part is proued out of the authoritie of Gods word in Mathew & Marke: I will not drinke of the fruite of the vine, &c. Now the fruite of the vine was wine, which Christ dranke and gaue to his disciplis to drinke. With this sentence agreeth playnely the place of Chrysostome on the xx. Chapter of Mathew. * As Ciprian doth also, affirming that there is no bloud, if wine be not in the cup.

*¶The fift Argument.

Ba- The words of Christ spoken vpon the cup and vpon the bread, haue like effect and working.

ro- But the wordes spoken vpon the cup haue not vertue to transubstantiate:

co. Ergo, it followeth that the wordes spoken vpon the bread, haue no such vertue.

The second part of the argument is proued because they shuld then transubstantiate the cup, or that which is in the cup into the new Testament: but neither of these thinges can be done, and very absurde it is to confesse the same.

¶The sixt argument.

Da- The circumstances of the scripture, the Analogie and proportion of the sacraments, and the testimony of the faithfull Fathers ought to rule vs in taking the meaning of the holy scripture touching the sacrament.

ti- But the wordes of the Lords supper, y^e circumstances of the scripture, the Analogie of the sacramentes, & the saying of y^e fathers do most effectually & plainly proue a figuratiue speach in the words of the Lordes supper.

si. Ergo, a figuratiue sense and meaning is specially to be receaued in these wordes: This is my body.

The circumstances of the scripture: *Do this in the remēbraunce of me. As oft as ye shall eate of this bread and drynke of this cup, ye shall shewe foorth the Lordes death. Let a man proue himselfe, and so eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup. They came together to breake bread: and they continued in breaking of bread. The bread which we break &c. For we being many, are all one bread, and one body. &c.

The Analogie of the sacramentes is necessary: * For if the sacramentes had not some similitude or likenes of the things wherof they be sacramentes, they could in no wise be sacraments. And this similitude in the sacrament of the Lords supper, is taken three maner of wayes.

1. The first consisteth in nourishing: as ye shall reade in Rabana, Cyprian, Augustine, Irenee, * and most plainly in Isodore out of Bertram.

2. The second, in the vniting and ioyning of many into one, as Cyprian teacheth.

3. The third is a similitude of vnlike thinges, where, lyke as the bread is turned into one body: so wee, by the right vse of this sacrament, are turned through fayth into the body of Christ.

The sayinges of the Fathers declare it to be a figuratiue speache, as it appeareth in Origen, Tertullian, * Chrysostome in opere imperfecto, Augustine, Ambrose, Basill, Gregory, Nazianzene, Hilary, and most plainly of all, in Bertram. Moreouer, the sayinges and places of all y^e Fathers, whose names I haue before recited against the assertion of the first propositiō, do quite ouerthrow transubstantiation. But of all other, most evidently and playnly, Irenee, Origen, Cyprian, Chrisostome to Cesarius the Monke, Augustine against Adamantus, Gelasius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Chrisostome agayne on the xx. of Mathew, Rabane, Damasene and Bertram.

Here right worshipfull maister Prolocutor, and ye the rest of the Commissioners, it may please you to vnderstād, that I do not leaue to these thinges onely, * whiche I haue written in my former answeres and confirmations, but y^t I haue also for the prooue of y^t I haue spoken, whatsoeuer

Bertram a man learned, of sound and vpright iudgement, and euer counted a Catholicke for these seuen hundreth yeares vntill this our age, hath written. His treatise whosoeuer shall read and wey, considering the time of the writer, his learning, godlines of life, the allegations of y^e ancient fathers, and his manifolde and most grounded argumentes, I cannot (doubtles) but much marueile, if he haue any feare of God at all,* howe he can with good conscience speake against him in this matter of the Sacrament. This Bertram was the first that pulled me by the eare, and that first brought me from the common errour of the Romishe Church, and caused me to searche more diligently and exactly, both the scriptures and the writings of the olde ecclesiasticall Fathers in this matter. And this I protest before the face of God, who knoweth I lye not in the things I now speake.

¶The third proposition.

In the Masse is the liuely sacrifice of the Churche, propitiable and auailable for the sinnes, as well of the quicke as of the dead.*

¶The aunswere to this proposition.

I answere to this third proposition, as I did to y^e first. And moreouer I say, that being taken in such sense as the wordes seeme to import, it is not onely erroneous,* but w^t all so much to the derogation and defacing of the death and passion of christ: that I iudge it may and ought most worthely to be counted wicked and blasphemous against the most precious bloud of our Sauour Christ.

¶The explication.

Concerning the Romish Masse whiche is vsed at this day, or the liuely sacrifice therof, propitiatory and auaylable for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead,* the holy scripture hath not so much as one sillable.

There is ambiguitie also in the name of Masse: what it Page 1445 signifieth,* and whether at this day there be any such in deed as the auncient fathers vsed: seeing that now there be neither Catechistes nor penitentes to be sent away.*

Againe touching these wordes (The liuely sacrifice of the Church) There is doubt whether they are to be vnderstand figuratiuely and sacramentally, for the sacrament of the liuely sacrifice (after which sort we deny it not to be in the Lords supper) or properly and without any figure: of the which maner there was but one only sacrifice, and that once offered, namely vpon the aultar of the crosse.

Moreouer, in these wordes [as well as] it may be doubted whether they be spoken in mockage, as men are wont to say in sport of a foolish and ignoraunt person, that he is apt as well in conditions as in knowledge: being apt in deede in neither of them both.

*There is also a doubt in the world [Propitiable] whether it signifie heere, that which taketh away sinne, or that which may be made auayleable for the taking away of sin: that is to say, whether it is to be taken in the actiue or in the passiue signification.

Now the falsenes of the proposition, after the meaning of the Schoolemen and the Romishe Church, & impiety in that sense which the wordes seeme to import, is thys: that they leaning to the foundation and their fond trāsubstantiation, would make the quick and liuely body of Christes flesh (vnited and knit to the diuinitie) to lye hid vnder the accidents,* and outward shewes of bread and wine. Which is very false, as I haue said afore, and they building vpon this foundation, do hold that the same body is offered vnto God by the Priest in his daily massings to put away the sinnes of the quicke and the dead,* Whereas by the Apostle to the Hebrewes it is euident, that there is but one oblation, and one true and liuely sacrifice of the Church offered vpon the aultar of the crosse, which was, is, and shall be for euer the propitiation for the sinnes of the whole world: and where there is remission of the same, there is (sayth the Apostle) no more offering for sinne.

¶Arguments confirming his aunswere.

- Ce- No sacrifice ought to be done but where the Priest is meete to offer the same.*
- la- All other Priests be vnmeete to offer sacrifice propitiatory for sinne, saue only Christ:
- rent. Ergo, no other Priests ought to sacrifice for sinne, but Christ alone.

The second part of my argument is thus proued.

- Fe- No honour in Gods Church ought to be takē whervnto a man is not called, as Aaron.
- ri- It is a great honor in Gods Church to sacrifice for sin:
- *son. Ergo, No man ought to sacrifice for sinne but onely they which are called.
- But onely Christ is called to that honour:
- Ergo, no other priest but Christ ought to sacrifice for sin. That no man is called to this degree of honour but Christ alone,* it is euident: For there are but two onely orders of Priesthood allowed in the word of God: namely, the order of Aaron, and the order of Melchisedech. But now the order of Aaron is come to an ende, by reason that it was vnprofitable, and weake, and of the order of Melchisedech there is but one Priest alone, euen Christ the Lord, which hath a priesthoode that can not passe to any other.

Another Argument.

- Ba- That thing is in vaine and to no effect, where no necessitie is wherefore it is done.
- ro- To offer vp any more sacrifice propitiatory for the quicke and the dead, there is no necessitie: for Christ our sauour did that fully and perfectly once for all:
- co. Ergo, to do the same in the Masse, it is in vayne.

Heb. 9. Another Argument.

- Fe- After that eternall redemption is found and obtained, there needeth no more dayly offering for the same:*
- ri- But Christ comming an high Bishop, &c. found and obtained for vs eternall redemption.
- o. Ergo, there needeth now no more daily oblation for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead.

Another Argument.

- Ca- All remission of sinnes commeth only by shedding of blood.
- mes- In the Masse there is no shedding of blood:
- tres. Ergo, in the Masse there is no remission of sinnes: and so it foloweth also that ther is no propitiatory sacrifice.

Another Argument.

- In the Masse, the passion of Christ is not in verity, but in a mistery representing the same: yea euen there where the Lords supper is duly ministred.
- But where Christ suffereth not, there is he not offered in verity: * for the Apostle sayeth: Not that he might offer vp himselfe often times (for then must he haue suffered often times sith the beginning of the world) now where Christ is not offered, there is no propitiatory sacrifice:
- Ergo, in the Masse there is no propitiatory sacrifice: For Christ appeared once in the latter end of the world, to put sin to flight by the offering vp of himselfe. And as it is appoynted to all men that they shall once dye, and then commeth the iudgement: euen so Christ was once offered to take away the sinnes of many. And vnto them that looke for him, shall he appeare agayne without sinne, vnto saluation.

Another Argument.

- Da- Where there is any sacrifice that can make the com¹mers thereunto perfect, there ought men to cease from offering any mo expiatory and propitiatory sacrifices.
- ri- But in the new testament there is one onely sacrifice now already long since offered, which is able to make the commers thereto perfect for euer.
- j. Ergo, in the new testament they ought to cease from offering any more propitiatory sacrifice.

Sentences of the Scripture tending to the same ende and purpose, out of which also may be gathered other manifest arguments, for more confirmation thereof.

BY the which will (sayth the Apostle) we are sanctified by the offering vp of the body of Iesus Christ once for all. * And in the same place: But this man after that he had offered one sacrifice for sinne, sitteth for euer at the right hand of God, &c. For with one offering hath he made perfect for euer them that are sanctified, and by himselfe hath he purged our sinnes. * I beseech you to marke these wordes [by himselfe] the whiche well wayed, will without doubt cease all controuersie.

The Apostle playnely denieth any other sacrifice to re¹maine for him that treadeth vnder his feete the blood of [•]e testament by the which he was made holy. Christ wil not be crucified againe, he will not his death to be ^{<◇>} derision.

He hath reconcyled vs in the body of his flesh. * Make I beseech you, he sayth not, in the mistery of his body: But in the body of his flesh.

If any man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father, * Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitia[•]ion for our sinnes, not for ours only, but for the sinnes of the ^{••}ole world.

I know that all these places of the Scripture are auoyded by two maner of subtile shiftes: the one is by the distinction of the bloody and vnbloudy sacrifice, as though our vnbloudy sacrifice of the Church were any other then the sacrifice of praise and thankesgeuing, then a commemoration, a shewing foorth, and a sacramētall representation of that one only bloody sacrifice offred vp once for all.

The other is by deprauing and wrasting the sayings of the auncient Fathers vnto such a straunge kinde of sense, as the Fathers themselues in deede neuer ment. For what the meaning of the Fathers was, it is euidente by that which S. Augustine writeth in his Epistle to Boniface, & in the 83. chapter of his 9. booke against Faustus, the Manichee, besides many other places, likewise by Eusebius, Emisene, Cyprian, Chrysostome, Fulgentius, Bertram, and others, which do wholly concord and agree together in this vnity in the Lord, that the redemption once made in verity for the saluation of man, continueth in full effect for euer, and worketh without ceassing vnto the end of the world, that the sacrifice once offered can not be consumed: that the Lords death and passion is as effectuall, the vertue of that blood, once shead, as freshe at this day for the washing away of sinnes, as it was euen the same day that it flowed out of the blessed side of our sauour: and finally, that the whole substance of our sacrifice which is frequented of the Church, in the Lords Supper, consisteth in praiers, praise, and geuing of thanks, and in remembring and shewing foorth of that sacrifice once offered vpon the altar of the crosse: that the same might continually be had in reuerence by mystery, which once onely, and no more, was offered for the price of our redemption.

These are the things (right worshipfull M. Prolocutor, and ye the rest of the Commissioners) which I could presently prepare to the aunswering of your three foresayde propositions: being destitute of all helpe in this shortnes of time, sodaine warning, and want of bookes. Wherefore I appeale to my first protestation, most humbly desiring the helpe of the same (as much as may be) to be graunted vnto me. And because ye haue lately giuen most vniust and cruell sentence against me, I do heere appeale (so farfoorth as I may) to a more indifferent & iust censure & iudgemēt of some other superiour, competent, & lawful iudge, & that according to the approued state of the church of England. Howbeit, I confesse that I am ignoraunt what that is at this present, through the trouble and alteration of the state of the Realme. But if this appeale may not be graunted to me vpon earth, then do I flye (euen as to my onely refuge and alone hauen of health) to the sentence of the eternall iudge, that is, of y^e almighty God, to whose most merciful iustice towards his & most iust mercifulnes, I doe wholly commit my selfe and all my cause, nothing at all despayring of the defence of mine Aduocate and alone Sauour, Iesus Christ, to whome, with the euerlasting Father, and the holy Spirit, the sanctifier of vs all, be now, and for euer, all honour and glory, Amen.

Albeit this learned Byshop was not suffered to reade all that is aboue prefixed before the Disputations, yet because he had it then ready, and offered it vp to the Prolocutour after the Disputations & sentence pronounced: I thought heere the place not vnmeete to annexe the same together with the rest. Now let vs heare the Arguments and aunsweres betweene Doctour Smith and him.

¶D. Smith beginneth to oppose.

SMith.

You haue occasioned me to go otherwise to worke with you, then I had thought to haue done. Me seemed you did in your supposition abuse the testimonies of scripture concerning the Ascension of Christ, to take away hys presence in the Sacrament, as though this were a strong Argument to inforce your matter withall:

*Christ did ascend vnto heauen.

Ergo, he is not in the Sacrament.

Now therefore I will go about to disproue this reason of yours.

Christes Ascension is no let to his reall presence in the Sacrament.

Ergo, you are deceiued, whereas you do grounde youre selfe vpon those places.

Rid.

You import as though I had made a strong Argument by Christes going vp into heauen. But howsoeuer mine Argument is made, * you collect it not rightly. For it doth not only stay vpon his Ascension, but both vpon hys Ascension, and his * abiding there also.

Smith.

Christes going vp to heauen, and his abiding there, hinder not his reall presence in the Sacrament.

Ergo, you are deceiued.

Rid.

Of Christes reall presence there may be a double vnderstanding, if you take the reall presence of Christ according to the reall and corporal substance which he tooke of the virgine: that presence being in heauen, cā not be on the earth also. But if you meane a reall presence, secūdum rem aliquam quae ad corpus Christi pertinet. i. according to some thing that appertaineth to Christes body, certes the Ascension and abiding in heauen are no let at all to that presence. Wherefore Christes body after that sort is heere present to vs in the Lords supper: by grace I say as Epiphanius speaketh it.

West.

I will cut off from hencefoorth all equiuocation and doubt. For whensoeuer we speake of Christes body, wee meane that which he tooke of the Uirgin.

Rid.

Christes Ascension and abiding in heauen can not stand with this presence.

Smith.

Christ appeared corporally and really on the earth for all his Ascension and continuall abode in heauen vnto the day of Dome.*

Ergo, his Ascension and abiding in heauen, is no let to his reall presence in the Sacrament.

Rid.

*Maister Doctour, this Argument is nothing worth I do not so straightly tye Christ vp in heauen, that he may not come into the earth at his pleasure. For when he will, he may come downe from heauen, and be on the earth, as it liketh himselfe. Howbeit I do affirme that it is not possible for him to be both in heauen and earth at one tyme.

Smith.

Marke I pray you my Maisters, diligently that be here, what he aunswereth. First he saith, that the sitting of Christ at the right hande of his father, is a let to the reall presence of his body in the Sacrament: and then afterward he flyeth from it agayne.

Rid.

I woulde not haue you thinke that I do imagine or dreame vpon any such maner of sitting, as these men heere sit in the Schoole.

Smith.

Ergo, it is lawfull for Christ then to be heere present on the earth, when he will himselfe.

Rid.

Yea when he will, it is lawfull indeede.

Smith.

Ergo, his ascending into heauen, doth not restrayne his reall presence in the Sacrament.

Rid.

I do not gaynesay, but that it is lawfull sor hym to appeare on the earth, when he wil: but proue you y^t he wil.*

Smith.

Then your aunswere dependeth vppon the will of Christ, I perceiue, Therefore I will ioyn agayn with you in this short argument.

Christ, albeit hee doth alway abide in heauen after hys ascension, was seene really and corporally on the earth. Ergo, notwithstanding his Ascension and continuall sitting at the right hand of the father, hee may be really and corporally in the sacrament.

Ryd.

If the Notaries should so recorde your Argument, as you haue framed it, you peradventure woulde be ashamed thereof hereafter.

Smith.

Christ after his Ascension was seen really and corporally vpon the earth.

Ergo, notwithstanding his Ascension and abiding with his father, he may be corporally in the Sacrament.

Ryd.

I graunt the antecedent: but I deny the consequent.

Smith.

Do you graunt the antecedent?

Rid

Yea I graunt the antecedent. I am content to let you haue so much. Because I knowe that there be certayne auncient fathers of that opinion. I am well content to let you vse that proposition as true. And I will frame the argument for you.

He was seene on earth after his Ascension, Ergo &c.

Smith.

Nay, nay, I will frame it my selfe.

Christ after his Ascension was seene really and corporally on earth, albeit he do abide in heauen continually:

Ergo, notwithstanding his Ascension and continuall abyding at the right hand of the father, he may be really and corporally on the earth.

Rid.

Let vs first agree about the continuall sitting at the right hand of the father.*

Smith.

Doth he so sit at the right hand of his father, that he doth neuer forsake the same?

Rid.

Nay I do not binde Christ in heauen so straitly. I see you go about to beguile me w^t your equiuocations. Such equinocatiōs are to be distincted. If you meane by his sitting in heauen, to reigne with his father, hee may be both in heauen and also in earth. But if ye vnderstande his sitting to be after a corporall manner of sitting, so is hee alwayes permanent in heauen.* For Christ to be corporally here on earth, when corporally he is resident in heauen, is cleane contrary to the holy scriptures, as Augustine saith: Corpus Christi est in coelo, sed veritas eius vbi{que} diffusa est. i. The body of Christ is in heauen: but his truth is dispersed in euery place.

Now if continually he abide in heauen after the maner of his corporall presence, then his perpetual abiding there, stoppeth or letteth that the same corporall presence of hym cannot be in the sacrament.

Smith.

Act. 3. We read that Christ shal sit perpetually at the right hand of God, vnto the consummacion of the worlde.

West.

I perceauē you are come here to this issue, whether the bodye of Christ may be together both in earth and in heauen. I will tell you, that Christ in very deede, is both in earth and in heauen together and at one time, both one & the same naturall Christ after the veritie and substaunce of his very body, Ergo, &c.

Rid.

I deny the Antecedent.

West.

I proue it by 2. witnesses. First by Chrisost. hom. 17. ad Hebraeos. Nōnē per singulos dies offerim{us}? Offerimus quidē,*sed recordationē facientes mortis eius. Et vna est haec hostia, nō multae. Et quomodo vna, & non multae quae semel oblata est in sancto sanctorum: Hoc autem sacrificium exemplar est illius: id ipsum semper offerimus, nec nunc quidem alium agnum, crastina alium, sed semper eundem ipsum. Proinde vnum est hoc sacrificium: alioqui hac ratione, quoniam in multis locis offertur, multi Christi sunt. Nequaquam, sed vnus vbi{que} est Christus: & hic plenus existens, & illic plenus, vnum Corpus, i. Do we not offer euery day? We do so in deede: but doing it for the remembraunce of his death. And this offering is one and not many.

And howe is it one, and not many whiche was offred in the holy place? This sacrifice is a paterne of that: The self same we alwaies offer: Not now as offering one Lambe to day, and an other to morowe, but alwaies one & the same Lambe. Wherefore here is but one sacrifice: for els by this meanes, seeing there be many sacrifices in many places be there many Christes? not so, but one Christ in al places, both perfect here and perfect there, one onely body. Now thus I argue.

We offer one thing at all times.*

There is one Christ in all places, both here compleet, and there complete:

Ergo, by Chrisostome there is one body both in heauen and earth.

Rid.

I remember the place well. These thinges make nothing against me.*

West.

One Christ is in all places, here full and there full.

Page 1447

Rid.

*One Christ is in all places, but not one bodye in all places.

West.

One body sayth Chrysostome.

Rid.

But not after the maner of bodely substance he is in all places, nor by circumscription of place. For [hic] & [illic] heere and there,* in Chrysostome do assigne no place, as Augustine sayth: Sursum est dominus, sed vbi{que} est veritas domini: The Lord is aboue: But the truth of the Lord is in all places.

Weston.

You can not so escape. He sayeth not the veritie of Christ is one: but one Christ is in all places, both heere and there.

Rid.

One sacrifice is in all places, because of the vnitie of him whome the sacrifice doth signifie: not that the sacrifices be all one and the same.*

West.

Ergo, by your saying it is not Christ, but the sacrifice of Christ.

But Chrysostome sayeth, one body & one Christ is there, and not one sacrifice.

Rid.

I saye that both Christ and the sacrifice of Christ is there: Christ by spirit, grace, and veritie: the sacrifice by signification. * Thus I graunt with Chrysostome, that there is one Host or Sacrifice, and not many: and this our Host is called one by reason of the vnitie of that one, which one onely all our Hostes do represent. That only host was neuer other,* but that which was once offered on the aultar of the crosse, of which host all our hostes are but sacramentall examples.

And where you alledge out of Chrysostome, that Christ is offered in many places at once,* both here ful Christ, and there full Christ: I graunt it to be true, that is: that Christ is offered in many places at once, in a mystery and sacramentally, and that he is full Christ in all those places, but not after the corporall substance of our flesh which he toke, but after the benediction which geueth life: and he is geuen to the godly receiuers in bread and wine as Cyrill speaketh. Concerning the oblation of Christ, whereof Chrysostome heere speaketh, he himselfe doth clearly shew what he meaneth thereby, in saying by the way of correction: We alwayes do the selfesame: howbeit by the recordation or remembrance of his sacrifice.

West.

The second witnes is Bernard in a Sermon that he made of the Supper of the Lord, who sayth:

Vnde hoc nobis pijssime Iesu, vt nos vermiculi, reptantes super faciem terrae nos inquam qui puluis & cinis sumus,*te praesentem habere mereamur prae manibus, prae oculis, qui totus & integer sedes ad dextram patris, qui etiam vnus horae momento, ab ortu solis vsque ad occasum, ab Aquilone vsque ad Austrum, praesto es, vnus in multis, idem in diuersis locis? That is to say:

How commeth this to vs, most gentle Iesu, that wee seely woormes, creeping on the face of the earth, that we (I say) which are but dust and ashes, may deserue to haue thee present in our hands, and before our eyes, who both together full and whole doest sit at the right hand of the father, and who also in the moment of one houre, from the rising of the Sunne, to the going downe of the same, art present one, and the selfesame in many and diuers places.

Rid.

These wordes of Bernarde make for you nothing at all. But I know that Bernard was in such a time, that in this matter he may worthely be suspected.* He hath many good and fruitfull sayings: as also in that same foresayde place by you alledged. But yet he followed in such an age, when as the doctrine of the holy supper was sore peruered. Notwithstanding yet I will so expounde him, rather then reiect him, that he shall make nothing for you at all. He sayth that we haue Christ in mysterie,* in a sacrament, vnder a veyle or couer, but hereafter shall haue him without all veyle or couer. In the meane time, heere nowe hee sayth, that the verity of Christ is euery where. The verity of Christ is both heere and there, and in all places.

West.

What do you call verity? He sayeth not the verity of Christ, but the verity of the body of Christ.

Rid.

The verity of the body of Christ is the true faith of the body of Christ: * after that verity he is with them whiche truly beleue vpon him.

West.

Christ is one and the same in diuers places. I vrge these words [in diuersis locis] in diuers places, and yet I am not satisfied.

Smyth.

Christ was seene really and corporally on the earth after his ascension, and continually sitting at the right hand of the Father.

Ergo, the ascension and perpetual sitting in heauen, hinder nothing, but that he may be really and corporally in the Sacrament. *

Rid.

If by perpetuall sitting, you meane the residence of his body in heauen, your reason containeth manifest contradiction.

Smith.

These two haue no contradiction in them at all, both to sit continually at his Fathers right hand, and also to be sene here really in earth after his ascension. First, you wil geue me that Christ sitteth in heauen at y^e right hand of his father. For so it is written. Act. 5. Heauen must needes receyue hym vnto the tyme of the restoring of all, &c. Secondly, he was also seene of Paule heere corporally on earth: Wherefore these two do import, as ye see, no contradiction.

Rid.

What setteth, but that Christ, if it please him, and when it pleaseth him, may be in heauen and in earth, and appeare to whome he will? and yet notwithstanding you haue not yet proued, that he will so do. And though Christ continually shall be resident in heauen vnto the iudgement, yet there may be some intermission, that notwithstanding. * But this controuersie (as I sayd) is amongst all the auncient Doctours and Writers. And that Christ hath bene heere seene, that they graunt all: but whether then he being in earth or in heauen, that is doubtfull.

Smith.

I will proue, that he would appeare in earth.

He so would, and also did appeare heere in earth after his ascension. Ergo, &c.

Rid.

He appeared, I graunt: but how he appeared,* whether then being in heauen or in earth, that is vncertayne. So he appeared to Steuen, being then corporally sitting in heauen. For speaking after the true maner of mans body, when he is in heauen, he is not the same time in earth: and when he is in earth, he is not the same time corporally in heauen.

Smith.

Christ hath bene both in heauen and in earth all at one time.

Ergo, you are deceiued in denying that.

Rid.

I do not vtterly deny Christ heere to haue bene seene in earth. Of vncertayne things I speake vncertaynely.

Smith.

He was seene of Paule, as being borne before hys time, after his ascending vp to heauen. 1. Cor. 15.*

But his vision was a corporall vision:

Ergo, he was seene corporally vpon the earth after hys ascending into heauen.

Rid.

He was seene really and corporally in deede: but whether being in heauen or earth, it is a doubt. And of doubtfull things we must iudge doubtfully. Howbeit you must proue that he was in heauen in the same time, whē he was corporally on earth.

Smith.

I would know of you, whether this vision may inforce the resurrection of Christ?

Rid.

I accompt this a sound and firme Argument to proue the resurrection. But whether they saw him in heauen or in earth, I am in doubt: and to say the truth,* it maketh no greate matter. Both wayes the Argumente is of lyke strength. For whether he were seene in heauen, or whether he were seene on earth, either of both maketh sufficiently for the matter. Certaine it is, he rose againe: for he coule not haue bene seene, vnlesse he had risen againe.

Smith.

Paule sawe hym as he was heere conuersaunt on earth, and not out of heauen as you affirme.

Rid.

You runne to the beginning agayne: that you take for graunted, which you should haue proued.

Smith.

You make delays for the nonce.

Rid.

Say not so, I pray you. Those that heare vs, be learned: they can tell both what you oppose, and what I aunswere well enough, I warrant you.

Tresh.

He was seene after such sort, as y^t he might be heard.

Ergo, he was corporally on the earth, or else how could he be heard?*

Rid.

He that found the meanes for Steuen to beholde him in heauen, euen hee could bring to passe well enough,* that Paule might heare him out of heauen.

Da- Smith. As other saw him, so Paule saw him.

ti- Other did see him visibly and corporally on earth:

si. Ergo, Paule saw him visibly and corporally on earth.*

Rid.

I graunt he was sene visibly and corporally: but yet haue you not proued that he was seene in earth.*

Smith.

He was seene so of him, as of other.

But he was seene of other being on earth, and appeared visibly to them on earth:

Ergo, he was seene of Paule on earth:

Rid.

Your controuersie is about [existens in terra] that is, being on earth: if Existere, to be, be referred as vnto y^e place, I deny that Christ after that sort was on the earth. But if it be referred as to the veritie of the body, then I graunt it. Moreouer, I say that Christ was seene of men in earth after his ascension, it is certayne. For he was sene of Steuen: he was seene also of Paule. But whether he descended vnto the earth, or whether he being in heauen, did reuele or manifest himselfe to Paule, when Paule was rapt into the third heauen, I know that some contend about it: & the Scripture, as far as I haue read or heard, doth not determine it. Wherefore we cannot but iudge vncertainly of Page 1448 those things which be vncertayne.

Smith.

Wee haue Egesippus and Linus agaynste you, whiche testifie that Christe appeared corporally on the earth to Peter after hys Ascension. Lib. 3. cap. 3. Peter ouercome with the requestes and mournings of the people, whiche desired him to ge^e hym out of the Citie because of Nero his lying in waite for him, began without company to conuey hymselfe away from thence: and when he was 〈◇〉 to the gate, he seeth Christ come to meete him, and worshipping him, he sayd: Maister, whether walke you? Chrst aunswered, I am come againe to be crucified. Linus writing of the passion of Peter, hath the selfesame story. Saint Ambrose hath the same likewise, and also Abdias,* scholer to the Apostles, which saw Christ before his ascending into heauen. With what face therefore dare you affirme it to be a thing vncertaine, which these men do manifestly witnes to haue bene done?

Rid.

I sayd before that y^e Doctors in that matter did vary.

Smith.

Do you thynke thys story is not certayne, beeyng approued by so auncient and probable authoritie?

Rid.

I do so thinke, because I take and esteeme not theyr words, for the wordes of Scripture. And though I dyd graunt you that story to be certayne, yet it maketh not against me.

Smith.

Such things as be certayne, and approued of them, you do reiect as things vncertayne.

Rid.

The story of Linus is not of so greate authoritie: although I am not ignorant that * Eusebius so writeth also in the story of the Church. And yet I accompt not these mens reports so sure as the Canonically scriptures.* Albeit if at any time he had to any man appeared heere on the earth after his Ascension, that doth not disprooue my saying. For I goe not about to tye Christ vp in fetters (as some do vntruly report of vs) but that he may be sene vpō the earth according to his Diuine pleasure, whensoever it liketh him. But we affirme that it is contrary to the nature of his manhoode and the true maner of his body, that he should be together and at one instant both in heauen and earth, according to his corporall substaunce. And the perpetuall sitting at the right hand of the father, may (I graunt) be taken for the stabilitie of Christes kingdome, and his continuall or euerlasting equalitie with his father in the glory of heauen.

Smith.

Now where as you boast that your faith is the very fayth of the auncient Church: I will shew heere that is not so, but that it doth directly striue against the fayth of the old Fathers. I will bring in Chrysostome for this poynt. Hom. 2. ad populum Antiochenum. Tanquam maximam haereditatem,*Elisaeus melotem suscepit. Etenim verè maxima fuit haereditas, omni auro praetiosior: & erat duplex Helias ille: & erat sursum Helias, & deorsum Helias. Noui quòd iustum illum beatum putatis, & velletis quisque esse vt ille. Quid igitur, si vobis demonstraui quid aliud, quod illo multo maius omnes sacris m•sterijs imbuti recipimus. Helias quidem melotem discipulo reliquit: Filius autem dei ascendens suam nobis carnem dimisit. Sed Helias quidem exutus: Christus autem & nobis reliquit, & ipsam habens ascendit. That is: Eliseus receiued the mantell, as a right great inheritaunce. For it was in deede a right excellent inheritaunce, and more precious then any gold beside. And the same Helias was a double Helias: He was both Helias aboue, and Helias beneath. I know well you thinke that iust man to be happy, and you would gladly be euery one of you as he is, what will you then say if I shall declare to you a certayne other thing, whych all we that are indued with these holy mysteries, do receiue much more then that? Helias in deede left his mantell to his scholer. But the sonne of God ascending, dyd leaue heere his flesh vnto vs. Helias left it putting off the same. But Christ both left it to vs, and ascended also to heauen hauing it with him.

Rid.

*I graunt that Christ did both: that is, both tooke vp his fleshe wyth hym, ascending vp, and also did leaue the same behynde him with vs, but after a diuers manner and respect. For he tooke his flesh with him, after the true and corporall substance of his body and flesh: againe, he left the same in myserie to the faithfull in the supper to be receiued after a spirituall communication and by grace. Neither is the same receiued in the Supper onely, but also at other times, by hearing the Gospell and by fayth. For, the [bread] which we breake, is the communication of the body of Christ: And generally: vnles ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye shall haue no life in you.

Smith.

*Chrysostome in his booke de dignitate Sacerdotij. lib. 3. cap. 3. sayth: O miraculum, O Dei beneuolentiam. Qui sursum sedet, tempore sacrificij, hominum manibus continetur. Or, as other haue translated it: O miraculum, O Dei benignitatem, qui cum patre sursum sedet, in illo ipso tēpore articulo, omniū manibus pertractatur, ac seipse tradit volentibus ipsum accipere & complecti That is: O miracle, O good will of God. He that sitteth aboue, at the sacrifice time, is conteyned in the handes of men. Or els as other haue translated, thus: Oh myracle, Oh the gentlenes of God. Hee that sitteth aboue with the father, is handled with the handes of all men at the very same moment of time, and doth himselfe deliuer hymselfe to them that are desirous to take him and embrace him.

Rid.

He that sitteth there, is here present in mistery and by grace, and is holden of the godly, suche as communicate him, not onely sacramentally with the hand of the bodye, but much more holesomely with the hand of the hart, and by inward drinking is receaued: but by the sacramentall signification he is holden of all men.

Seton▪

Where is then the miracle if hee be onely present thorough his grace and in mistery onely?

Rid.

Yes, there is a miracle, good sir,* Christ is not idle in his sacraments. Is not the miracle great (trow you) when bread, which is wont to susteine the body, becommeth food to the soule? He that vnderstandeth not that miracle, hee vnderstandeth not y^e force of that misterye. God graūt we may euery one of vs vnderstād his truth, & obey the same.

Smith.

Chrisostome calleth it a miracle, that Christ sitteth at the right hand of God in heauen, and at the same tyme is held in the handes of men: not that he is handled wyth the handes of men onely in a misterye, and is with them through grace. Therfore while you deny that, you are altogether deceiued, and stray far from the truth.

Harps.

The former place of Chrisostome is not to bee let slip. Let me before I begin, aske this one question of you. Is it not a great matter that Elias left his cloke or mantell, and the gift of his prophecy to his Scholer?

Rid.

Yes surely, it is a great matter.

Harps.

Did not Elias then leaue great grace?

Rid.

He did so.

Harps.

But Christ left a farre greater grace then Helias: for he could not both leaue his cloke and take it with hym: Christ doth both in his flesh.

Rid.

I am well content to graunt, that Christ lefte muche greater thinges to vs, then Helius to Eliseus,* albeit he be sayde to haue left his double spirite with him: for that the strength and grace of the body of Christ, whiche Christ ascending vp, here left with vs, is the onely saluation & lyfe of all men which shalbe saued: which life Christ hath here left vnto vs, to be receaued by fayth through the hearyng of y^e word, and the right administration of the sacraments. This vertue and grace Chrisostome, after the phrase and maner of Iohn the Euangelist, calleth Christes flesh.

Harps.

But Christ performed a greater matter.* He caryed vp and left behinde. You vnderstand not the comparison. The comparison is in this, that Elias left his mantel, and carryed it not with him, Christ left his flesh behind him & caryed it with him also.

Rid.

True it is, and I my selfe did affirme no lesse before. Now where you seeme to speake many thinges, in deede you bring no new thing at all. Let there be a comparison betweene grace and grace, & then Christ gaue the far grea^tter grace, when he did inserte or graffe vs into his fleshe.

Harps▪

If you wil geue me leaue, I will ask you this question. If Chrisostome would haue ment so, that Christ left his body in the Eucharist, what playner woordes thincke you, or more euident could he haue vsed then these?

Kid.

These things be not of so great force as they beare a great shewe outwardly. Hee might also haue vsed grosser wordes if he had listed to haue vttered his minde so grosely: for he was an eloquent man. Now he speaketh after y^e maner of other Doctors, which of misticall matters speake mystically, and of Sacramentes Sacramentally.

Harps.

The comparison lyeth in this: That which was impossible to Elias, is possible to Christ.

Rid.

I graunt. It was possible to Christ, which was to y^e other impossible. Helias left his cloke: Christ both left hys flesh and tooke it with him.

Harps.

Helias left behinde him, & could not take with him: Christ both left behinde him, and also tooke with hym. Except you wil say: the comparison here made to be nothing.

Rid.

He tooke vp his flesh with him to heauen, and lefte here the communion of his flesh in earth.*

West.

You vnderstand in the first place his flesh for verye true flesh: and in the second place for grace, & communion of his flesh: and why do you not vnderstand it in y^e second place also for his true fleshe? I will make it euident, howe blockish and grosse your answere is.

Rid.

These be tauntes and reproches, not beseeming (as I thinke) the modesty of this Schole.

West.

Elias left his cloke to his disciple:* but the sonne of God, going vp to heauen, left his fleshe. But Elias certainly left his cloke behinde, and Christ likewise his flesh, Page 1449 and yet ascending, he carryed the same with him to. By which words we make this reason.

Christ left his flesh to his Disciples, and yet for all that he tooke the same vp with him:

Ergo, he is present heere with vs.

Heere Doctour Weston crying to the people, sayd vnto them: Maister Doctour aunswereth it after this fashion:

*He caried his flesh into heauen, and he left here the communion of his flesh behinde. Assuredly the aunswere is to vnlearned.

Rid.

I am glad you speake in Englishe. Surely I wishe that all the whole world might vnderstand your reasons and my aunsweres. Reliquit nobis carnem suam. i. He left vs his flesh. This you vnderstande of his flesh, and I vnderstand the same of grace. He caried his fleshe into heauen, and left behind the communion of his flesh vnto vs.

West.

Ye Iudges, what thinke ye of this aunswere.

Iudges.

*It is ridiculous and a very fond aunswere.

Rid.

Well, I take your words paciētly for Christes cause.

West.

Weston heere citeth a place: Spargimur sanguine Christi: We are sprinkled with the bloud of Christ.

Rid.

M. Doctor, it is the same bloud, but yet spiritually receiued.* And in deede all the Prophetes were sprinkled with y^e same bloud, but yet spiritually I say, and by grace. And whatsoeuer they be that are not sprinckled with thys bloud, they can not be partakers of y^e euerlasting saluatiō.

West.

*Here I bring Bernard vnto you againe. Euen from the West vnto the East, from the North vnto the South, there is one and the selfesame Christ in many and diuers places.

Rid.

The aunswere is soone made, that one Christe is here and in diuers places. For God according to hys Maiestie, and according to his prouidence, as S. Austen sayeth, is euery where with the godly, according to his indiuisable and vnspeakeable grace.* Or else, if we should vnderstande Bernard according to the corporall presence, how monstrous or huge, & giantlike a body would you then make Christes body to be, which should reach euen from North to South, from West to East.

West.

Nay, nay, you make a monstrous aunswer and vnlearned.

Ward.

Before I come in with those reasons which I had purposed to bring against you,* I am minded to come again to M. Doctours argument, by which you being brought into the briers, seemed to doubt of Christes presence on the earth. To y^e prooffe of which matter I will bring nothyng else, then that which was agreed vpon in the Catechisme of the Synode of London, set out not long ago by you.

Rid.

Syr, I geue you to witte, before you goe any farther, that I did set out no Catechisme.

West.

*Yes, you made me subscribe to it when you were a Byshop in your ruffe.

Rid.

I compelled no man to subscribe.

Warde.

Yes by roode, you are the very author of that heresie.

Rid.

I put foorth no Catechisme.

Cole.

Did you neuer consent to the setting out of those things, which you allowed?

Rid.

*I graunt that I sawe the booke. But I deny that I wrote it. I perused it after it was made, and I noted many things for it. So I consented to the booke: I was not the author of it.

Iudges.

*The Catechisme is so set foorth, as though the whole conuocation house had agreed to it. Cranmer sayd yesterday that you made it.

Rid.

I thinke surely that he would not say so.

Ward.

The Catechisme hath this clause: Si visibiliter & in terra, &c. i. If visibly on the earth, &c.

Rid.

I aunswere that those articles were set out, I both witting and consenting to them. Myne owne hand will testifie the same, and M. Cranmer put hys hand to them likewise, and gaue them to other afterward. Now, as for the place which you alledge out of it, that may easely be expounded, and without any inconuenience.

Ward.

Christ is the power and vertue of his Father.

*Ergo, he was not of so little strength, that he coulde not bring to passe whatsoeuer he would himselfe.

Rid.

I graunt.

Ward.

Christ was the wisdom of the father.

Ergo, that he spake, he spake wisely, and so as euery man might vnderstand: neither was it hys mynde to speake one thing in steede of another.

Rid.

All this I graunt.

Ward.

Christ was likewise the very truth: Ergo, he made and perfourmed in deede,* that which he intended to make. And likely it is, that he doth neither deceiue, nor could be deceiued, nor yet would go about to deceiue other.

West.

Hilarius in Psalmum 118. hath these words. Vera omnia sunt, & neque ociosè, neque inutiliter constituta dei verba, sed extra omnem ambiguitatem superfluae inanitatis, ignita, & ignita vehementer, ne quid illic esse quod non perfectum ac proprium sit, existimetur. That is: All Gods wordes or sayings are true, and neither idly placed, nor vnprofitably, but fiery, and wonderfull fiery without all doubtfulness of superfluous vanitie, that ther may be nothing thought to be there, which is not absolute and proper.

Ward.

He is the truth of the father: Ergo, he can neyther deceiue, nor yet be deceyued, especially, I meane, when he spake at his latter end, and his testament.

Rid.

Christ is the very truth of the father: and I perceyue well to what scope you driue your reason.* This is but a farre set compasse of words. If that these words of Christ: This is my body, which you meane, be rightly vnderstoode, they are most true.

Ward.

He tooke, he brake, he gaue, &c. what tooke he?

Ridley.

Bread, his body.

Ward.

What brake he?

Ridley.

Bread.

Ward.

What gaue he?

Ridley.

Bread.

Ward.

Gaue he bread made of wheate, & materiall bread?

Rid.

I know not whether he gaue bread of wheate: but he gaue true and materiall bread.

Ward.

I will proue the contrary by Scriptures.

He deliuered to them that which he had them take.*

But he had not them take materiall bread, but his owne body.

Ergo, he gaue not materiall bread, but his owne body.

Rid.

I deny the Minor.* For he bad them take his body Sacramentally in materiall bread: and after that sort it was both bread, which he bad them take, because the substaunce was bread, and it was also▪ his body, because it was the Sacrament of his body, for the sanctifying and the comming to of the holy Ghost, which is alwayes assistentio those mysteries which were instituted of Christ, and lawfully administred.

Harps.

What is he that so sayeth: By the comming vnto of the holy spirite?

Rid.

I haue Theophilact for mine author for this maner of speaking. And heere I bring him,* that ye may vnderstand that phrase not to be mine, vpon Mathew. 26. Furthermore, the said Theophilact writing vpon these wordes: This is my body, sheweth, that the body of the Lord is bread, whih is sanctified on the aultar.

Ogle.

That place of Theophilact maketh openly agaynst you. For he sayth in that place, that Christ sayd not: This is a figure of my body, but my body. For sayeth he, by an vnspeakeable operation it is transformed, although it seeme to vs to be bread.

Rid.

It is not a figure,* that is to say non tantum est figura. i. it is not only a figure of his body.

West.

Where haue you that word [tantum] onely?

Rid.

It is not in that place, but he hath it in another & Augustine doth so speake many times, & other Doctours mo.

West.

Heere Weston repeating the words of Theophilact in English, sayd: He sayth it is not a figure, and you say it is a figure.

And the same Theophilact sayth moreouer: that the cōuersiō or turning of the bread is made into the Lords flesh.

* That which Christ gaue, we do geue.

But that which he gaue was not a figure of his body, but his body:

Ergo, we geue no figure, but his body.

☞ As concerning the authoritie of Theophilactus, what hee thought and might haue spoken of that Author, D. Ridley dyd not then speake, nor could conueniently (as he himselfe afterward declared, reporting and writing with his owne hande the disputations in the prison) because of the vproares and clamours which were so great, and he of so many called vpon, that he could not aunswere as he would, and what he thought touching the authoritie of Theophilactus, but answered simply to that, whych was brought out of that author, on this sort.

I graunt (quoth he) the bread to be conuerted and turned into the flesh of Christ, but not by transubstantiation,* but by a Sacramentall conuersion or turning. It is transformed saith Theophilactus, in the same place, by a mysticall benediction, and by the accession or comming of the holy Ghost vnto the flesh of Christ. He sayeth not: by expulsion or driuing away the substance of bread, and by substituting or putting in his place the corporall substaunce of Christes flesh. And where he sayth: It is not a figure of the body: we shoulde vnderstande that saying, as he himselfe doth elsewhere adde onely, that is: it is no naked or bare figure only. For Christ is present in his mysteries, neither at any time (as Cyprian sayeth) doth the diuine Maiestie absent himselfe from the diuine mysteries.

West.

You put in onely, and that is one lye. And I tell you Page 1450 farther, Peter Martyr was fayne to denye the Author, because the place was so playne agaynst him.* But marke his wordes, how he sayth: It is no figure, but his flesh.

Rid.

To take his wordes, and not his meaning, is to doe iniury to the author.

H•rd.

No other Doctour maketh more agaynst you. For the wordes in Greeke are 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ,* which is in Latine, transelementatur, y^t is, turned from one elemēt into an other. And shewing the cause why it is in forme of breade, he sayth: Quoniam infirmi sumus, & horremus crudas carnes cōmedere, maximè hominis carné: ideo panis quidem apparet, sed caro est. That is: Because wee are infirme, and abhorre to eate raw flesh, specially the flesh of man: therefore it appeareth bread, but it is flesh.

Rid.

That word hath not that strength which you seeme to geue it. You strayne it ouermuch, and yet it maketh not so much for your purpose.* For the same Author hath in an other place, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , That is, We are transelemented, or transformed and chaunged into the body of Christ: & so by that word, in such meaning as you speake of, I could proue as well that we are transformed in deed into the very body of Christ.

Ward.

Learned M. Doctour, thus you expound the place, Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body. i. a figure of my body.

Rid.

Although I know there be that so expound it, yet that exposition is not full to expresse the whole.

Da- Ward. My sheepe here my voyce, and folow me.

ti- But all the sheepe of Christ heare this voice:.*This is my body, without a figure:

si. Ergo, the voyce of Christ here hath no figure.

Rid.

The sheepe of Christ folow the voyce of Christ, vnles they be seduced and deceiued through ignorance.

Ward.

But the Fathers tooke this place for no figuratiue speech.

Rid.

Yet they do all number this place among figuratiue & tropicall speeches.

Ward.

Iustinus Martyr in his Seconde Apology hath thus: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .*

Ne{que} verò haec pro pane potuue communi sumimus: Imo quemadmodum verbo Dei Iesus Christus, Seruator noster in carnatus, habuit pro salute nostra carnem & sanguinem: ita per orationem illius verbi consecratum hoc alimentum, quo sanguis & carnes nostrae perimmutationem enutriuntur, eiusdem incarnati carnem & sanguinem esse sumus edocti.

This place Cramner hath corrupted. Thus it is Englished.

☞ For wee doe not take this for common breade and drinke, but like as Iesus Christ our Sauour, incarnate by the word of God, had flesh and bloud for our saluation: euen so we bee taught the foode wherewith our fleshe and bloud is nourished by alteration, when it is consecrated by the prayer of his word, to be the fleshe & bloud of the same Iesus incarnate.

*Doctor Cranmer hath thus translated it: Breade, water and wine, are not to be taken as other common meats and drinckes be, but they bee ordeined purposely to geue thanks to GOD, and therefore bee called Eucharistia, and be called the bodye and bloud of Christ: and that it is lawfull for none to eat and drinke of them but that professe Christ, and liue according to the same: and yet the same meat and drinke is chaunged into our flesh and bloud, and nourisheth our bodyes.

Rid.

O good Mayster Doctor, goe sincerely to worke: I know that place, and I know how it is vsed.

Ward.

Warde here repeated the place agayne out of Iustine: We are taught. &c. as aboue.

Rid.

O what vnright dealing is this? I haue the selfe same place of Iustine here copyed out. You know your selfe whiche are skilfull of Greeke,* howe the wordes here be remoued out of the right place, and that without any iust cause.

Ward.

I stand still vpon mine argument. What say you?

Rid.

If you will that I should aunswere to Iustine, then you must hears. I haue but one tongue, I can not aunswere at once to you all.

West.

* Christ gaue vs his very and true flesh to be eaten.

But he neuer gaue it to be eaten, but in his last supper, and in the sacrament of the aultar.

Ergo, there is the very true flesh of Christ.

Rid.

If you speake of the very true fleshe of Christ, after the substance of his flesh, taken in the Wombe of the Uirgine Mary, and not by grace and spirituallly, I then do deny the first part of your reason. But if you vnderstand it of the true flesh, after grace and spirituall communication, I then graunt the first part, and deny the second. For he geueth vnto vs truly his flesh, to be eaten of al that beleue in him. For he is the very & true meat of the soule, wherewith we are fed vnto euerlastinge life, according to this saying: My flesh is meat indeed. &c.

Ward.

Desiderio desiderauit hoc pascha manducare vobiscum. i.*I haue desired with my hartly desire to eat this Paschall with you. What Paschall I pray you desired he to eate? If you stand in doubt, you haue Tertullian. Lib. 4. Contra Martionem• Professus ita{que} se concupiscentia concupiscere edere pascha suum (indignum enim vt alienum concupisceret Deus) acceptum panem & distributum discipulis suum corpus illum fecit: Hoc est corpus meum, dicendo. &c. i. He therfore protesting a great desire to eat his Paschall, his owne Paschall I say (for it was not meete that he shoulde desire any other then his owne) taking bread and distributing it to his Disciples, made it his body, saying: This is my body.

What say you? did he vnderstand by this Paschall the Iudaicall Lambe, or by that whiche afterward he gaue in his Supper.

Rid.

I suppose that the first he vnderstoode of the Iudaicall Passeouer, and afterward of the Eucharist.
Ward.

Nay, then Tertullian is agaynst you, which sayth.

Ba- He desired to eate his Passeouer.

ro- But the Iudaical Passeouer was not his, but straūge from Christ.*

co. Ergo, he meant not of the Iudaicall Passeouer.

Rid.

The Iudaicall Passeouer was not straunge from Christ, but his owne: insomuch as hee is the Lord of all:* and as well the Lord of the Iudaicall Passeouer, as of his owne supper.

Ward.

What aunswere you then to Tertullian, the which sayth: He desired to eate his owne Passeouer, and not the Iuish Passeouer, which stood vpon wordes without flesh.*

Rid.

Tertullian may here dallye in sense Anagogicall. I know that Cyprian hath these wordes: Tunc instituit quidē Eucharistiam, sed vtrum{que} erat Christi. i. He began th• to institute the holy Eucharist, but both were Christes.

Ward.

Augustine the Psalme. 96. Writing vppon these wordes: Adorate scabellum pedum eius. i. Worshipp his footestoole. &c. Quaero inquit, quid sit scabellum pedum eius. Et dicit mihi Scriptura, Terra scabellum pedum meorum: Fluctuans conuerto me ad Christum, quia ipsum quaero hic,* & inuenio quomodo sine impietate adoretur scabellum pedum eius. Suscepit enim de terra terram, quia caro de terra est, & de carne Mariae carnem accepit▪ & quia in ipsa carne hic ambulauit, & ipsam carnem nobis manducandam ad salutem dedit: nemo autem illam carnē māducat nisi prius adorauerit. Inuentum est, quo modo tale scabellum pedum Domini adoretur, vt non solum non peccemus adorādo, sed peccemus non adorando ipsum. &c. i. I aske (sayth he) what is the footstoole of his feete,* and the Scripture telleth me: The earth is the footstoole of my feete. And so in searching therof I turne my selfe to Christ, because I seeke him here in the earth, and I find how, without impiety, the footstole of his feete may be worshipped: for he tooke earth of earth, in that he is flesh of the earth, and of the fleshe of Marye he tooke flesh, and because that in the same flesh here he walked and also he gaue the same flesh to vs, to be eaten vnto saluation. But no man eateth that fleshe excepte hee haue worshypped before. And so it is found, how such a footestoole of the feet of the Lord is to be worshipped, so that, not only we sinne not in worshipping, but also do sinne in not worshipping the same.

Da- He gaue to vs his flesh to be eaten,* y^e which he tooke of the earth, in which also here he walked. &c.

ti- But he neuer gaue his flesh to be eaten, but when hee gaue it at his Supper, saying: This is my body.

si. Ergo, in the Eucharist he gaue vs his flesh.

Rid.

You do alledge the place of Austen vpon the Psalme. 98. Where he sayth: that Christ gaue his fleshe to be eaten which he tooke of the earth, and in whiche here he walked inferring hereupon that Christ neuer gaue the same hys fleshe to be eaten, but onely in the Eucharist, I deny your Minor, for he gaue it both in the Eucharist to be eaten and also otherwise, as wel in the word, as also vpon the crosse.

Smith.

What if Augustine say, that Christ did not onely Page 1451 geue himself to vs in a figure, but gaue his own very flesh in deed and really?

Rid.

I neuer sayd that Christ gaue onely a figure of his bo|dy. For in deed he gaue himselfe in a reall communication, that is, he gaue his flesh after a communicatiō of his flesh.

West.

Here Weston read the place of Augustine in English,* and afterwarde sayd: Ye say, Christ gaue not his body, but a figure of his body.

Rid.

I say not so, I say he gaue his own body verely. But he gaue it by a reall, effectuell, and spirituall cōmunicatiō.

☞ After this, Doctour Glinne began to reason, who (notwythstandinge Mayster Ridley hadde alwayes taken him for his olde frend) made a very contumelious Preface agaynst him. This preface Mayster Ridley therefore did the more take to hart, because it proceeded from him. Howbeit he thought that Doctour Glins minde was to serue the turne. For afterwarde hee came to the house wherein Mayster Ridley was kept, and as farre as Mayster Ridley could call ro remembraunce, before Doctor Young and Doctour Oglethorpe he desired him to pardon his wordes. The whiche Mayster Ridley did euen from the very hart, and wysshed earnestly, that God would geue, not onely to him, but vnto all other, the true and euident knowledge of Gods Euangelicall sincerity, that all offences put a part, they being perfectly and fullye reconciled, might agree and meete together in the house of the heauenly father.

Glin.

I see that you elude, or shift away all scriptures and fathers,* I will go to worke with you after an other sort.

Christ hath here his Church known in earth, of which you were once a child, although now you speake contumeliously of the Sacramentes.

Rid.

This is a greuous contumely, that you call me a shifter away of the Scriptures, and of the Doctours. As touching the Sacraments, I neuer yet spake contumeliously of them. I graunt that Christ hath here his Church in earth: but that Church did euer receiue & acknowledge the Eucharist to be a sacrament of the body of Christ, and not the body of Christ really, but the body of Christ by grace.

Clin.

Then I aske this question, whether the Catholicke Church hath euer or at any time bene Idolatrous?

Rid.

The Church is the pillar and stay of trueth, that neuer yet hath bene idolatrous in respect of y^e whole: but peradventure in respect of some part therof, which sometimes may be seduced by euill Pastors and through ignoraunce.

Glin.

* That Church euer hath worshipped the fleshe of Christ in the Eucharist.

But the church hath neuer bene idolatrous:

Ergo it hath alwayes iudged the flesh of Christ to be in the Eucharist.

Rid.

And I also worshippe Christ in the Sacrament: but not because hee is included in the Sacrament: like as I worship Christ also in the Scriptures, not because hee is really included in them. Notwithstanding I say that the body of Christ is present in the Sacrament: but yet Sacramētally and spiritually, according to his grace geuing life, and in that respect, really, that is, according to hys benediction geuing life.

Furthermore I acknowledge gladly the true body of Christ to be in the Lordes Supper, in such sort as y^e church of Christ (which is the spouse of Christ, and is taught of the holy ghost, and guided by Gods word) doth acknowledge the same. But the true church of Christ doth acknowledge a presence of Christes body in the Lords Supper to be cōmunicated to the godly by grace and spiritually, as I haue often shewed, and by a Sacramental signification, but not by the corporall presence of the body of his flesh.

Glin.

*Austen contra Faustum Lib. 20. cap. 13. Non nulli propter panem & calicem, Cererem & Bacchum nos colere existimabāt. &c i. Some there were which thought vs in stead of bread and of the cup, to worship Ceres and Bacchus.

Upon this place I gather that there was an adoratiō of the sacramēt amōg the fathers. And Erasmus in an Epistle to the brethren of low Germany, sayth that the worshipping of the sacrament was before Austen & Cyprian.

Rid.

We do handle the signes reuerently: but we worshyp the Sacrament as a Sacrament, not as a thing signified by the Sacrament.

Glin.

What is the Symbole or Sacrament?

Rid.

Bread.

Glin.

Ergo we worship bread.

Ridley.

There is a decepte in this worde [Adoramus.] Wee worship the Symboles when reuerently we handle them.* We worshippe Christ wheresoeuer we perceiue his benefites. But we vnderstand his benefite to be greatest in the Sacrament.

Glin.

So I may fall down before the bench here, and wor: ship Christ: and if any man aske me what I doe, I may aunswre I worship Christ.

Rid.

We adore and worship Christ in the Eucharist. And if you meane the externall sacrament, I say, that also is to be worshipped as a Sacrament.

Glin.

So was the fayth of the primitiue Church.*

Rid.

Would to God we woulde all folow the fayth of that Church.

Glin.

Thinke you that Christ hath now his Church?

Rid.

I do so.

Glin.

But all the Church adoreth Christ, verely and really in the Sacrament.

Rid.

You know your selfe that the Easte Churche woulde not acknowledge transubstantiatiō,* as it appeareth in the Councell of Florence.

Cole.

That is false. For in the same they did acknowledge transubstantiation, although they would not entreat of y^e matter, for that they had not in theyr commission so to doe.

Rid.

Nay, they would determine nothing of that matter, when the Article was propounded vnto them.

Cole.

It was not because they didde not acknowledge the same, but because they had no commission so to do.

Curtop.

Reuerend Syr, I will proue and declare, that the body of Christ is truly and really in the Eucharist: & wher^{as} the holy Fathers,* both of the West and Easte Churche haue written, both manye thinges and no lesse manifest of the same matter, yet I will bring forth onelye Chrisostome. The place is in cap. 10. Corinth. 1. Homel. 24.

* That which is in the cup, is the same that flowed frō the side of Christ.

But true and pure bloud didde flowe from the side of Christ:

Ergo, his true and pure bloud is in the cup.

Rid.

It is his true bloud which is in the Chalice (I graūt) & the same which sprang from the side of Christ. But how? It is bloud in deede, but not after the same maner, after which maner it sprang from his side. For here is the bloud but by the way of a Sacrament.

Agayne, I say, like as the bread of the Sacrament and of thankes geuing is called the bodye of Christ geuen for vs: so the cup of the Lord is called the bloud which sprang from the side of Christ. But that Sacramentall breade is called the body, because it is the Sacrament of his body: euen so likewise the cuppe is called the bloud also, whiche flowed out of Christes side, because it is in the Sacrament of that bloud which flowed out of his side, instituted of the Lord himselfe for our singuler commodity, namely for our spirituall nourishment, like as Baptisme is ordeined in water to our spirituall regeneration.

Cur.

The Sacrament of the bloud is not the bloud.

Rid.

The Sacrament of the bloud, is the bloud, and that is attributed to the Sacrament, which is spoken of the thing of the Sacrament.

Weston.

Here Weston repeateth Curtoppes argument in English.

*That which is in the Chalice, is the same which flowed out of Christes side.

But there came out very bloud:

Ergo, there is very bloud in the Chalice.

Rid.

The bloud of Christ is in the Chalice in deed, but not in the reall presence, but by grace and in a Sacrament.

West.

That is very wel. Then we haue bloud in y^e chalice.

Rid.

It is true, but by grace and in a Sacrament.

Here the people hissed at him.

Rid.

O my maysters, I take this for no iudgement: I will stand to Gods iudgement.

Wat.

Good Syr, I haue determined to haue respect of the time, and to abstayne from all those thinges whiche maye hinder the entraunce of our disceptation: and therefore first I aske this question: When Christ sayd in the vi. of Iohn Qui manducat carnem meam. i. He that eateth my flesh. &c. doth he signify in those wordes the eating of his true and naturall flesh, or els of the bread and Symbole?*

Rid.

I vnderstand that place of the very fleshe of Christ to be eaten, but spiritually: And farther I say, that the sacrament also pertaineth vnto the spirituall manducation. For without the spirit to eat the Sacrament, is to eate it vnprofitably. For who so eateth not spiritually, he eateth hys owne condemnation.

Wat.

I aske them whether the Euchariste be a Sacrament.

Rid.

The Eucharist taken for a signe or symbole, is a Sacrament.

Wat.

Is it instituted of God?

Rid.

It is instituted of God.

Page 1452

Wat.

Where?

Rid.

In the supper.

Wat.

With what wordes is it made a Sacrament?

Rid.

By the words and deedes which Christ sayd and did, and commaunded vs to say and do the same.*
_

Wat.

It is a thing commonly receiued of all, that the Sacramentes of the new law geue grace to them that worthily receiue.

Rid.

True it is that grace is geuen by the Sacrament, but as by an instrument. The inward vertue & Christ geue the grace through the sacrament.

Wat.

What is a sacrament?

Rid.

I remember there be many definitions of a sacrament in Austine: but I will take that whiche semeth most fit to this present purpose. A sacrament is a visible signe of inuisible grace.

Wat.

Ergo, grace is geuen to the receiuers.

Rid.

The society or coniunction with Christ through the holy Ghost, is grace, and by the Sacrament we are made the members of the mystical body of Christ, for that by the sacrament the part of the body is ingrafted in the head.

Wat.

But there is a difference betwene the mysticall body, and naturall body.

Rid.

There is (I graunt you) a difference, but the head of them both is one.

Wat.

*The Eucharist is a sacrament of the new testamēt, Ergo, it hath a promise of grace:

But no promise of grace is made to bread and wine:

Ergo, bread and wine be not the sacramentes of y^e new Testament.

Rid.

I graunt that grace pertaineth to the Eucharist, according to this saying: The bread which we breake is it not the communication or partaking of the body of Christ? And like as he that eateth, and he that drinketh vnworthely the sacrament of the body and bloud of the Lord, eateth & drinketh his owne damnation: euen so he that eateth and drinketh worthy, eateth life, and drinketh life. I graunt also that there is no * promise made to bread and wyne. But in as much as they are sanctified and made the Sacramentes of the body & bloud of the Lord, they haue a promise of grace annexed vnto them, namely of spirituall partaking of the body of Christ to be communicated and geuen, not to the bread and wine, but to them which worthily do receiue the Sacrament.

Wat.

If the substaunce of bread and wine do remayne, thē the society betwixt Christ and vs, is promised to them that take bread and wine.

But that society is not promised to bread and wine, but to the receiuers of his fleshe and bloud. Iohn. 6. Qui manducat. &c.

Ergo, the substance of bread and wyne remayneth not.

Rid.

The promise vndoubtedly is made to the flesh and the bloud, but the same be receiued in y^e sacramēt through faith.

Wat

Euery Sacrament hath a promise of grace adnexed vnto it.

But bread and wine haue not a promise of grace adnexed vnto it.

Ergo, the bread and wine are not sacramentes.

Rid.

True it is, euery sacrament hath grace adnexed vnto it instrumentally. But there is diuers vnderstandyng of this word [Habet] hath. For the sacrament hath not grace in|cluded in it: but to those that receiue it well, it is turned to grace. After that maner the water in Baptisme hath grace promised, and by that grace the holy spirite is geuen, not that grace is included in water, but that grace commeth by water.

Wat.

This promise is made to the flesh & bloud of Christ, and not to bread and wine.

Ergo, the sacrament is not bread and wyne, but the body and bloud of Christ.

Rid.

There is no promise made to him that taketh commō bread and common wine: but to him that receiueth the sanctified bread, and bread of the communion, there is a large promise of grace made: neither is the promise geuen to the symboles, but to the thing of the sacrament. But the thing of the sacrament is the flesh and bloud.

Wat.

Euery sacrament of the new testament geueth grace promised of God, to those that worthely receiue it.

Rid.

This sacramēt hath a promise of grace, made to those that receiue it worthely, because grace is geuen by it, as by an instrument, not that Christ hath transfused grace into the bread and wyne.

Wat.

But this promise which is made, is not but to those that worthely receiue the flesh & bloud: not y^e bread & wine.

Rid.

That proposition of yours hath a diuers vnderstanding. There is no promise made to thē that receiue cōmon bread, as it were: but to those that worthely receiue the sāctified bread, there is a promise of grace made, like as Origen doth testify.

Wat.

Where is that promise made?

Rid.

The bread which he brake, is it not a communication of the body of Christ? [And] we being many are one bread, one body of Christ?

Wat.

What doth he meane by bread in that place?

Rid.

The bread of the Lordes table, the Communiō of the body of Christ.

Wat.

Harken what Chrysostome sayth vpō that place: Panis quem frangimus, nonne communicatio corporis Christi est? Quare non dixit participatio? Quia amplius quid significare voluit, & multam inter haec conuenientiam ostendere. Non enim participatione tantum & acceptione, sed vnitate communicamus. Quemadmodum enim corpus illud vnitum est Christo, ita & nos per hūc panē vnione coniungimur. That is: The bread which we break, is it not the Communication of Christes bodye? Wherefore did he not say participation? because hee would signify some greater matter, and that he would declare a great conuenience and coniunction betwixt y^e same. For we do not communicate by participation onely and re'ceiuing, but also by conning. For likewise as that body is connited to Christ, so also we by the same bread are conioyned and vnited to him.

Rid.

Let Chrisostome haue his maner of speaking and his sentence. If it be true, I reiect it not. * But let it not be preiudiciall to me to name it true bread.

Wat.

All (saith Chrysostome) which sit together at one boord, do cūmunicate together of one true body. What do I call (sayth he) this cōmunicating▪ we are all the selfe same body. What doth bread signify? The body of christ. What be they that receiue it? *The body of Christ For many are but one body. Chrysostome doth interpret this place agaynst you: All we be one bread, & one mysticall bodye, whiche doe participate together one breade of Christ.

Rid.

All we be one mysticall body,* which do communicate of one Christ in bread, after the efficacy of regeneration or quickning.

Wat.

Of what maner of bread speaketh he?

Rid.

Of the bread of the Lordes table.

Wat.

Is that bread one?

Rid.

It is one, of the Church being one, because one bread is set forth vpon the table: and so of one bread altogether do participate which communicate at the table of the Lord.

Wat.

See how absurdly you speake. Do you say all which be from the beginning to the end of the world?

Rid.

All, I say, which at one table together haue communicated in the mysteryes, might well so do. Albeit the heauenly and celestiall bread is likewise one also, whereof the Sacramentall bread is a mystery: the which being one, all we together do participate.*

Wat.

A peruerse aunswere. Which all? Meane you all christian men?

Rid.

I do distribute this word [All]: for all were wont together to communicate of one bread deuided into parts. Al (I say) which were one cōgregatiō, and which all did communicate together at one table.

Wat.

What? do you exclude then from the body of Christ, all them which did not communicate being present▪

Feck.

But Cyprian sayth: panis quem nulla multitudo consumit. i. Bread which no multitude doth consume.* Which cannot be vnderstanded, but onely of the body of Christ.

Rid.

Also Cyprian in this place did speake of the true body of Christ, and not of materiall bread.

Feck.

Nay, rather he did there intreat of the Sacrament in that tractation De Coena domini,* writing vpon the Supper of the Lord.

Rid.

Trueth it is, and I graunt, hee intreateth there of the Sacrament: but also he doth admixt something there with all of the spirituall manducation.

Smith.

When the Lorde sayth: This is my bodye, he vseth no tropicall speach:

Ergo, you are deceiued.

Rid.

I deny your antecedent.*

Smith.

I bring here Augustine in Psal. 33. Conc. 1. expounding these wordes: Ferebatur in manibus suis. He was caried in his owne handes. 1. Regum.

Hoc quomodo possit fieri in homine, quis intelligat? Manibus enim suis nemo portatur, sed alienis. Quomodo intelligatur de Dauid secundum literā, non inuenimus: de Christo autē inuenimus. Ferebatur enim Christus in manibus suis cū diceret: Hoc est corpus meum. Ferebat enim illud corpus in manibus suis. &c. That is. How may this be vnderstāded to be done in mā? For no man is caryed in his owne handes, but in the handes of other. How this may be vnderstanded of Dauid after y^e letter, we do not find. Of Christ we find it. For Christ was borne in his own hands when he sayth: This is my body: for he caried that same body in his owne handes. &c.

Augustine here did not see how this place after y^e letter Page 1453 could be vnderstāded of dauid, because no man cā cary him selfe in his owne handes. Therefore saith he, this place is to be vnderstāded of Christ after the letter. For Christ caried himselfe in his owne hands in his Supper, when he gaue the Sacrament to his Disciples, saying: This is my body.

Rid.

*I deny your argument, and I explicate the same. Austine could not find after his own vnderstanding, how this could be vnderstand of Dauid after the letter. Austine goeth here from other in this exposition, but I goe not from him. But let this exposition of Austine be graunted to you: although I know this place of scripture be otherwise red of other men, after the verity of the Hebrew text, and also otherwise to be expounded. Yet to graūt to you this exposition of Austine, I say yet notwithstanding it maketh nothing agaynst my assertion: for Christ did beare himselfe in his owne handes, when he gaue the sacrament of his body to be eaten of his disciples.

Smith.

Ergo, it is true of Christ after the letter, that he was borne in his owne handes.

Rid.

He was borne literally, & after that letter which was spoken of Dauid: but not after the letter of these woordes Hoc est corpus meum.

I graunt that S. Austine sayth, that it is not found literally of Dauid,* that he caryed himselfe in his own hands, and that is found of Christ. But this word [ad literam] literally, you do not well referre to that which was borne, but rather it ought to be referred to him that did beare it. S. Austines meaning is this: that it is not read any where in the Bible, that this carnal Dauid, the sonne of Iesse, did beare himselfe in his handes, but of that spirituall Dauid which ouerthrew Goliah the deuill: that is, of Christ our sauior, the sonne of the virgine it may well be found literally, that he bare himselfe in his owne handes after a certayne maner,* namely in carying y^e Sacrament of himselfe. And note that S. Austen hath these wordes [quodam modo] after a certain maner: whiche manifestly doth declare howe the Doctours meaning is to be taken.

Smith.

When then was he borne in his owne handes, and after what letter?

Rid.

He was borne in the supper sacramentally, when he sayd: This is my body.

Smith.

Euery man may beare in his own hands a * figure of his body.

But Augustine denyeth that Daudid could cary himselfe in his handes.

Ergo, he speaketh of no figure of his body.

Rid.

It Austen could haue founde in all the Scripture that Daudid had caryed the sacramēt of his body, then he would neuer haue vsed that exposition of Christ.

Smith.

But he did beare himselfe in his owne handes:

Ergo he did not beare a figure onely.

Rid.

He didde beare himselfe, but in a Sacrament: and Austen afterward addeth [quodam modo] that is, Sacramentally.

Smith.

*You vnderstand not what Austen meant when hee sayd [quodam modo:] For he ment that he did beare his very true body in that supper, not in figure and forme of a body, but in forme and figure of bread.

Ergo, you are holden fast, neither are ye able to escape out of his labirinth.

Doctor Weston repeated this place agayne in English. Which done, then Doct. Tresham thus began to speake, moued (as it seemed to M. Ridley) wyth great zeale, and desired that he might be in sted of Iohn Baptist in conuerting the hartes of the fathers, and in reducing the sayde B. Ridley agayne to the mother church. Now at the first, not knowing the person, he thought he had bene some good old man, which had the zeale of God, although not acording to knowledge, and began to aunswere him with mansuetude and reuerence. But afterwarde hee smelled a foxe vnder a sheepes clothing.

*GOd almightye graunt that it may be fulfilled in me, that was spoken by the Prophet Malachy of Iohn Baptist, which maye turne the hartes of the Fathers to the children, and the hartes of the children to theyr fathers, that you at length may be conuerted. The wise man sayth: Sonne, honour thy father and reuerence thy mother. But you dishonor your father in heauen, and pollute your mother the holy church here on earth, while ye sette not by her.

Rid,

These by wordes do pollute your schoole.

Tres.

If there were an Arrian whiche had that subtle wit that you haue,* he might soone shift of the authority of the scriptures and fathers.

West.

Either dispute, or els hold your peace, I pray you.

Tres.

I bring a place here out of the Councell of Laterane, the which Counsell representing the vniuersall Church, wherein were congregated 300. Bishops & 〈◇〉.* Metropolitans, besides a great multitude of other, decreed y^e bread & wine, by the power of Gods word, was trāsubstātiate into the body & bloud of y^e Lord. Therefore whosoeuer sayth contrary cannot be a childe of the church, but an hereticke.

Rid.

Good Syr, I haue heard what you haue cited out of the Councell of Laterane, and remember that there was a great multitude of Bishops and Metropolitans, as you sayde: but yet you haue not numbred how many Abbots, Priors, and Friers were in that councell, who were to the number of 800.

One of the Scribes.

What,* will you denye then the authority of that Counsell for the multitude of those Priors?

Rid.

No syr, not so much for that cause, as for that especially, because the doctrine of that Councell agreed not wyth the word of God as it may well appere by the actes of that Councell which was holdē vnder Innocentius the third,* a man (if we beleue the historyes) moste pernicious to the church and common wealth of Christ.

Tres.

What, doe you not receiue the Councell of Lateran? Whereupon he with certayne other cryed, Scribite, scribite, Write, write.

Rid.

No syr, I receiue not that Councell: Scribite, & rescribite: Write, and write agayne.*

Tres.

Euill men do eat the naturall body of Christ:

Ergo the true and naturall body of Christ is on the aultare.

Rid.

Euill men do eate the very true and naturall bodye of Christ sacramētally, and no further, as S. Augustine saith: but good men do eat the very true body both sacramentally and spiritually by grace.

Tres.

I proue the contrary by S. Austen, Lib. 5. contra Donatistas Cap. 8. Sicut enim Iudas, cui buccellulam Dominus tradidit, non malum accipiendo, sed malè accipiendo peccauit. &c. Like as Iudas, to whome the Lorde gaue the morsell did offend, not in taking a thing that was euill, but in receiuing it after an euil maner. &c. And a litle after, Quia aliquis non ad salutem manducat, non ideo non est corpus. i. Because some do not eate vnto saluation, it foloweth not therefore that it is not his body.*

Rid.

It is the body to them, that is, the sacrament of the bo'dy: and Iudas tooke the sacrament of the Lord to his condemnation. Austen hath distincted these thinges well in an other place, where he sayth: Panem Domini, & panem Dominum. Mali manducant panem Domini, non panem dominum: boni autem manducant & panem Domini, & panem Dominum. That is. The bread of the Lord, the bread the Lorde. Euill men eate the breade of the Lord, but not breade the Lorde. But good men eate both the breade of the Lord and breade the Lord.

West.

Paule sayth, the body, and you say, the sacrament of the body.*

Rid.

Paule meaneth so in deed.

Wat.

You vnderstand it euill concerning the signe: for the Fathers say, that euill men doe eat him which descended from heauen.*

Rid.

They eate him indeede, but sacramentally. The Fathers vse many times the sacrament, for the matter of the sacrament, and al that same place maketh agaynst you: and so here he cited the place.

West.

I bring Theophilacte, which sayth, that Iudas dyd taste the bodye of the Lord. Ostendit Dominus crudelitatem Iudae, qui cum argueretur, non intellexit, & gustauit carnem Domini. &c. id est. The Lord did shewe the cruelty of Iudas, whiche, when he was rebuked, did not vnderstand, and tasted the Lordes flesh. &c.

Rid.

This phrase to Diuines is well knowne,* and vsed of the Doctors. He tasted the flesh of the Lord Insensibiliter, Insensibly, that is the sacrament of the Lordes flesh.

West.

Chrysostome sayth, that the same punishmēt remaineth to them whiche receiue the body of the Lorde vnworthily, as to them which crucified him.*

Rid.

That is, because they defile the Lordes body: for euill menne doe eate the body of Christ sacramentally,* but good men eate both the sacrament, and the matter of the Sacrament.

Wat.

You reiecte the Councell of Laterane,* because (you say) it agreeth not with Gods worde. What say you then to the Councell of Nice? The wordes of the Councell be these:

Ne humiliter spectemus propositum panem & potum, sed exaltata mente fideliter credamus iacere in illa sacra mensa agnum Dei tollentem peccata mundi à sacerdotibus sacrificatum. Let vs not not looke alow by the grounde vpon the bread and the drinke set before vs, but lifting vppe our minde, let vs faithfully beleue, there vpon y^e holy table to lye the Lambe of God taking away the sinnes of the world, being sacrificed of the priestes.

Page 1454

Rid.

That Councell was collected out of an•ient Fathers and is to me of great authority, for it sayth: Positum esse panem in alt•ri, & exaltata mente considerandum eum qui in coelis est. i. That breade is set vpon the aultare, and hauing our mindes 〈◇〉 vp, we must consider him which is in heauen. The words of the Councell make for me.

Wat.

(Exaltata mente) with a minde exalted: That is, not as brute beastes at the racke or maunger, hauing an eye onely vpon the thing that is set before them. Agnus Dei iacet in mensa: the * Lambe of God lieth on the table, sayeth the Councell.

Rid.

The Lambe of God is in heauen, accordyng to the verity of the body: and here he is with vs in a mistery, according to his power, not corporally.

Wat.

But the Lambe of God lyeth on the table.

Rid.

It is a figuratiue speach, for in our minde we vnderstand him which is in heauen.

Wat.

But he lyeth there, the Greeke word is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

Rid.

He lyeth, there that is, he is there present, not corporally, but he lyeth there in his operation.

Wat.

He lyeth, but his operation lyeth not.

Rid.

You thinke very grossely of the sitting or lying of the Celestiall Lambe on the Table of the Lorde. For we may not imagine any such sitting or lying on y^e table, as the reason of man would iudge: but all thinges are here to be vnderstand spirituallie. For that heauenly Lambe is (as I confesse) on the table, but by a spirituall presence, by grace, and not after any corporall substance of his flesh taken of y^e virgin Mary.

And indeed the same Canon doth very playnly teach, that the bread which is set on the table, is materiall bread, and therefore it (the Canon I meane) commaundeth that we shoulde not creepe on the ground in our cogitation, * to these thinges which are set before vs, as who shoulde say, what other thinges are they (as much as pertaineth to their true substaunce) then breade and wine? but rather (sayth the Canon) lifting vp our mindes into heauen, let vs consider w^t fayth the Lambe of God, which taketh away the sins of y^e world, sitting or lying vpon y^e table. For a lifted vp fayth sayth he seeth him, which sitteth on the right hande of God the father, after y^e true maner of a body, set by grace on the Lordes Table, and taking away the sinnes of the worlde. For I thinke you meane not so, as though the Lambe did lye there prostrate with his members spreade upon the table.

Smith.

I bring an other place out of the Councell of Nice, Nullus Apostolorum dixit, *haec est figura corporis Christi, Nullus venerabilium praesbyterorum dixit incruentum altaris sacrificium figuram: Ergo. &c. That is. None of the Apostles sayd, this is a figure of the body of Christ: None of the reuerend Elders sayd, the vnbloudy sacrifice of the aultar to be a figure.

Ergo, you are deceiued.

Rid.

This Chanon is not in the Councell of Nice. For I haue read ouer this Councell many times.

Then came in an other whom M. Ridley knew not, & sayd, *the vniuersall church both of the Greekes & Latines of the East and of the West, haue agreed in the Councell of Florence vniformably in y^e doctrine of the sacrament, that in the Sacrament of the Aultar there is the true and reall Body.

Rid.

I denye the Greeke and the East Church to haue agreed either in the Councel at Florence, or at any time els with the Romish Church in the doctrine of Transubstantiation of bread into the body of Christ. For there was nothing in the Councell of Florence, wherein the Greekes would agree with the Romanistes: albeit hitherto I confesse it was left free for euery Church to vse, as they were wont, leuened or vnleuened bread.

Here cryed out D. Cole, & sayde, they agreed together concerning transubstantiation of breade into the bodye of Christ. M. Ridley sayd, that could not be.

*Here start vp an other vnknowne to M. Ridley, but thought to be one of the Scribes, who affirmed with him, y^t in deed there was nothing decreed cōcerning trāsubstāti|ation, but the Councell left that, as a matter not meete nor worthy to disturbe the peace and concord of the church. To whom M. Ridley answered agayne, saying: that he sayd y^e trueth. *

Pie.

What say you to that councell, where it is sayde, that the Priest doth offer an vnbloudy sacrifice of the Bodye of Christ?

Rid.

I say, it is well sayd, if it be rightly vnderstand.

Pie.

But he offereth an vnbloudy sacrifice.

Rid.

It was called vnbloudy, and is offered after a certain maner, and in a misterye, and as a representation of that bloudy sacrifice, and he doth not lye which sayth, Christ to be offered.

West.

I with one argument will throw downe to y^e groūd your opinion, out of Chrysostome, *Homi. 24. in. 1. ad Corinth. and I wil teach, not onely a figure or signe, or grace onely▪ but the very same body which was here conuersant in the earth, to be in the Eucharist.

We worship the selfe same body in y^e Eucharist, whiche the wise men did worship in the maunger.

But that was his naturall & reall body, not spirituall:

Ergo the reall body of Christ is in the Eucharist.

Agayne, the same Chrysostome sayth: We haue not here the Lord in the maunger, but on the altare. Here a woman holdeth him not in her handes, but a priest.

Rid.

We worship I confesse, the same true Lord and Sauour of the world, which the wise men worshipped in the maunger, howbeit we do it in mystery, and in the sacramēt of the Lordes supper, and that in spiritual liberty, as sayth S. Aust Lib: 3. de doctrina Christiana: not in carnall seruitude: that is, we do not worship seruilely the signes for the thinges: for that shuld be, as he also sayth, a part of a seruile infirmity. But we behold with the eyes of fayth, him present after grace and spirituallly sette vpon the Table: and we worship him which sitteth aboue, & is worshipped o• the Aungels, For Christ is alwaies assistant to his mysteries, as the sayd August. sayth. And the diuine maiesty, as sayth Cyprian, doth neuer absent it selfe from the diuine mysteries, but this assistaunce and presence of Christ, as in Baptisme is wholly spirituall, and by grace, and not by any corporal substaunce of the flesh: euen so is it here in the Lords supper, being rightly & according to the word of God duely ministred,

West.

That which the woman did hold in her wombe, the same thing holdeth the priest.

Rid.

I graunt the prieste holdeth the same thing, but after an other maner. She did holde the natural body: * the priest holdeth the mystery of the body.

West.

Weston repeated agayne his argumēt out of Chrysostome in English.

Rid.

I say that the author meant it spiritually.

West.

Weston here dissolving the disputations, had these wordes: Videtis prae fractum hominis animum, gloriosum, vafrum, inconstantem: videtis hodie veritatis vires inconcussas, Ita que clamate: Vicit veritas: that is, Here you see, the stubborne, the glorious the crafty, the vnconstant minde of this man. * Here you see this day, that the strength of the trueth is with our foyle. Therefore I beseech you all most earnestly to blow the note, and he beganne, and they folowed. Verity hath the victory: Veritye hath the victory.

¶The disputation had at Oxford, the 18. day of Aprill. 1554. betwene Mayster Hugh Latimer Aunswerer, and Mayster Smyth and other Opposers.

AFTER these disputations of Byshop Ridly ended, nexte was brought out Mayster Hugh Latimer to dispute, * vpon Wednesday, which was the eighteenth day of Aprill. Which disputation beganne at eight of the clocke, in suche forme as before: but it was most in English. For mayster Latimer the answerer alleged that he was out of vse with the Latine, and vnfit for that place. *

There replied vnto him M Smith of Oriall colledge. Doctor Cartwright, mayster Harpsfield, * and diuers other had snatches at him, and gaue him bitter tauntes. Hee escaped no hissinges and scornefull laughings, no more then they that went before him. He was very faynt, and desired that he might not long tary. He durst not drinke, for feare of vomiting. The disputation ended before xi. of the clock. Maister Latimer was not suffered to read, that he had (as he sayd) paynfully writtē: but it was exhibited vp, * and the Pro•ocutor read part therof, and so proc•eded vnto the disputation.

¶The Preface of Weston vnto the disputation folowing.

MEN and brethren, we are come together this day (by y^e helpe of God) to vanquish the strength of the Argumentes, and dispersed opinions of aduersaryes, * agaynst y^e truth of the reall presence of the Lordes body in the sacramēt. And therefore, you father, if you haue any thing to answer, I do admonish that you aunswere in short and few wordes.

Lat.

I pray you good mayster Prolocutour,* doe not exacte that of me, which is not in me, I haue not these xx. yeares much vsed the Latine tongue.

West.

Take your ease father.

Lat.

I thanke you Syr, I am well. Let me here protest Page 1455 my fayth: for I am not able to dispute, & afterwarde doe your pleasure with me.

¶The protestation of mayster Hugh Latimet, geuen vp in writing to Doctor Weston.

The conclusions whereunto I must aunswere, are these.

*1 The first is, that in the sacramēt of the Aultar, by the vertue of Gods word pronounced by the Priest, there is really present, the naturall body of Christ, conceiued of the virgin Mary, vnder the kindes of the appearaunces of bread and wine: and in like maner his blood.

2 The second is, that after consecration, there remaineth no substaunce of bread and wyne, nor none other substaunce, but the substance of God and man.

3 The third is, that in the Masse there is the liuely sacrifice of the church, which is propiciable, as wel for the sins of the quicke, as of the dead.

Concerning the first conclusion, me thinketh it is sette forth with certayn new found termes, that be obscure, and doe not sound according to the speach of the scripture. Howbeit, howsoever I vnderstand it, this I do aunswere playnely, though not without perill: I aunswere (I say) that to the right celebration of the Lordes supper, there is no other presence of Christ required, then a spirituall presence: and this presence is sufficient for a Christian man, as a presence by which we abide in Christ, and Christ abideth in vs, to the obtaining of eternall life, if we perseuer. And this same presence may be called most fitly, a reall pre'sence, that is, a presence not fayned, but a true and a faythfull presence. Which thing I here rehearse, least some Sycophant or scorner should suppose me with the Anabaptistes, to make nothing els of the Sacrament, but a naked and a bare signe. As for that, which is fayned of many concerning theyr corporall presence, I for my part take it but for a papisticall inuention, and therfore thinke it vtterly to be reiected.

Concerning the seconde conclusion, I dare be bolde to say,* that it hath no stay or grounde in Gods word, but is a thing inuented and founde out by man: and therefore to be taken as fond and false: and I had almost sayd, as the Mother and Nourse of the other errors. It were good for my Lordes & maysters of the transubstantiation, to take heede least they conspire with y^e nestorians, for I do not see how they can auoyd it.

The third conclusion (as I do vnderstand it) seemeth subtly to sow sedition agaynst the offering which Christ himselfe offred for vs in his own proper person,* according to that pithy place of Paule. Hebre. 1. when he sayth: That Christ his owne selfe hath made purgation of our sinnes. And afterwarde: That he might (sayth he) be a mercifull and a faythfull Byshop, concerning those thinges which are to be done with God,for the taking away of our sinnes. So that the expiation or taking away of our sinnes, may be thought rather to de'pend on this: that Christ was an offering Bishop, then that he was offered, were it not that he was offered of himselfe: and therefore it is needlesse that he should be offered of any other. I will speake nothing of the wonderfull presumption of man, to dare to attempt this thing without a manifest vocation, specially in that it tendeth to the ouerthrowing and making fruitlesse (if not wholly, yet partly) of the Crosse of Christ: for truely it is no base or meane thyng, to offer Christ. And therefore worthily a man may say to my Lordes and maysters the offerers: By what authority doe ye this? And who gaue you this authority? Where? when? A man can not (sayth the Baptist) take any thing, except it be geuen him frō aboue: much lesse then may any man presume to vsurp any honor, before he be therto called. Again, If any mā sin (sayth S. Ioh.) we haue (sayth he) not a masser or offerer at home, which can sacrifice for vs at masse: but we haue (sayth he) an aduocate Iesus Christ, which once offered himselfe long ago: of which offering, the efficacy and effect is perdurable for euer, so that it is needles to haue such offerers.

What meaneth Paule, when he sayth: They that serue at the aultar, are partakers of the aultar? and so addeth: So the lord hath ordeined, that they that preach the Gospell, shall liue of the Gospell Whereas he should haue sayd: The Lord hath ordeined, that they that sacrifice at masse, should liue of theyr sacrificing, that there might be a liuing assigned to our sacrificers now,* as was before Christes comming, to the Iewish Priestes. For now they haue nothing to alleadge for theyr liuing, as they that be Preachers haue. So that it appeareth, that the sacrificing Priesthoode is chaunged by Gods ordinaunce, into a preaching Priesthoode, and the sacrificing Priesthoode shoulde cease vtterly, sauing in as much as all Christian men are sacrificing priestes.

The supper of the Lord was instituted to prouoke vs to thankes geuing, for the offering which the Lorde hymselfe did offer for vs,* muche rather then that our Offciers should do there as they do. Feede (sayth Peter) as muche •s ye may, the flock of Christ: nay rather let vs sacrifice as much as we may, for the flocke of Christ. If so be the matter be as now men make it, I can neuer wonder enough, that Peter would or could forget this office of sacrificing, which at this day is in such a price and estimation, that to feed is almost nothing with many. If thou cease from feeding the flocke, how shalt thou be taken? truely catholicke enough. But if thou cease from sacrificing and massing,* howe wyll that be taken? at the leaste I warrant thee, thou shalt be called an hereticke. And whence I pray you, come these papisticall iudgementes? Except perchance they thinke a mā feedeth the flocke, in sacrificing for them: and then what needeth there any learned pastors? For no man is so foolish, but soone may he learne to sacrifice and masse it.

Thus loe, I haue taken the more payne to write, because I refused to dispute, in consideration of my debilitye thereunto: that all men may knowe, howe that I haue so done not without great paynes, hauing not any manne to helpe me, as I haue neuer before bene debarred to haue. O sir,* you may chaunce to liue till you come to this age and weakenes that I am of. I haue spoken in my time before 2. kinges, more then one, two or three houres together, without interruption: but nowe that I maye speake the truth (by your leaue) I could not be suffered to declare my minde before you, no, not by the space of a quarter of an houre, without snatches, reuilinges, checkes, rebukes, tauntes, such as I haue not felte the like, in such an audience, all my life long. Surely it can not be, but an heinous offence that I haue geuen. But what was it? Forsooth I had spoken of the foure marowbones of the Masse. The which kinde of speaking, I neuer read to be a sinne against the holy ghost,

I could not be alowed to shewe what I meant by my Metaphor: But sir nowe (by your fauor) I will tell your maistership what I meane.

The first is the Popish consecration: which hath bene called a Gods body making.*

The second is Transubstantiation.

The third is the Missall oblation.

The fourth adoration.

These chiefe and principall portions, partes & poyntes belonging or incident to the masse,* and most esteemed and had in price in the same, I call y^e marowbones of the masse, which in deed you by force, might, and violence intrude in sound of wordes in some of the scripture, with racking and cramping, iniuryng, and wronging the same: but els in deede, playne out of the scripture, as I am throughly perswaded, although in disputation I could now nothing do, to perswade the same to others, being both vnapt to study and also to make a shew of my former study, in such readines as should be requisite to the same.

I haue heard much talke of maister Doctor Weston to and fro, in my time:* but I neuer knew your person to my knowledge, till I came before you, as the Queenes maiesties Commissioner. I pray God send you so right iudgement, as I perceiue you haue a great wit, great learning, with many other qualityes. God geue you grace euer wel to vse them,* and euer to haue in remembraūce that he that dwelleth on high, looketh on the lowe things on the earth: and that there is no counsell agaynst the Lord: and also that this world hath bene, and yet is a tottering world. And yet agayn, that though we must obey the princes, yet that hath this limitatiō, namely, in the Lord.* For who so doth obey them agaynst the Lorde, they be most pernicious to them, and the greatest aduersaries that they haue: for they so procure Gods vengeance vpon them, if God be onely the ruler of thinges.

There be some so corrupt in minde, the truth being taken from them, that they thinke gaynes to be godlinesse: Great learned men, and yet men of no learning,* but of railing and raging about questions and strife of wordes, I call thē men of no learning, because they know not Christ, how much els so euer they know. And on this sort we are wont to call great learned clerks, being ignorant of Christ, vnlearned men: for it is nothing but playne ignoraunce,* to knowe anye thinge without Christ: where as who so knoweth Christ, the same hath knowledge enough, although in other knowledge he be to seek. The Apostle S. Paul confesseth of himselfe to the Corinthians, that he dyd know nothing, but Iesus Christ crucified. Many menne Page 1456 babble many things of Christ which yet know not Christ• but pretending Christ, do craftily colour and darken hys glory. Depart from such men, sayth the Apostle S. Paule to Timothie.

It is not out of the way to remember what S. Augustine sayth. The place where, I now well remember not, except it be against the Epistles of Petilian: *Who so euer (saith he) teacheth any thyng necessarily to be beleued, which is not containyd in the olde or new Testament, the same is accursed. Oh beware of this curse if you be wise. I am much deceyued if Basilius haue not such like words: *What so euer (saith he) is besides the holy scripture, if the same be taught as necessarily to be beleueed, that is sinne. Oh therefore take heede of this sinne.

There be some that speake many false things more probable, and more like to the truth, then to the truth it selfe. Therefore Paule geueth a watch word: Let no man (saith he) deceiue you with probabilitie and perswasions of woordes. But what meane you (saith one) by this talke so far from the matter? Well, I hope good maisters, you will suffer an old man a little to play the child, and to speake one thyng twise. Oh Lord God, you haue chaunged the most holy Communion, into a priuate action: and you deny to the Laitie the Lordes cup contrary to Christes commaundement, * and you do blemish the annuntiation of the Lordes death till he come: for you haue chaunged the Common prayer called the diuine seruice, with the administration of the sacramentes, from the vulgar and knowen language, into a strange tongue, contrary to the wyll of the Lord reuealed in his word. God open the dore of your hart, to see the things you should see herein. I would as fayne obey my soueraigne as any in this realme: but in these things I can neuer do it with an vpright consciēce. God be mercifull vnto vs. Amen.

Weston.

Then refuse you to dispute? Will you here then subscribe?

Lat.

No good maister, I pray you be good to an olde man. You may (if it please God) be once old, as I am: ye may come to this age, and to this debilitie.

West.

*Ye said vpon saterday last, that ye could not find the masse, nor the marybones thereof in your booke: but wee will finde a masse in that booke.

Lat.

No good M. Doctor, ye cannot.

West.

What find you then there?

Lat.

Forsooth a Communion I find there.

West.

Which Communion, * the first or the last?

Lat.

I find no great diuersitie in them: they are one supper of the Lord, but I like the last very well.

West.

Then the first was nought belike.

Lat.

I do not wel remember wherin they differ.

West.

Then cake bread & loafe bread are all one with you. Ye call it the Supper of the Lord, but you are deceyued in that: for they had done the supper before, and therfore the Scripture sayth: Postquam coenatum est, that is, After they had supped. For ye know that S. Paul findeth fault wyth the Corrinthians, for that some of them were drunken at this supper: and ye know no man can be dronken at your Communion.

Lat.

The first was called Coena Iudaica, that is, The Iewish Supper, when they did eate the Paschall Lambe together: the other was called Coena dominica, that is, The Lordes supper.

West.

That is false, for Chrysostome denieth that. And S. Ambrose in cap. 19. prioris ad Corinthios, saith, that Mysterium Eucharistiae inter coenandum datum, non est coena dominica: that is, The mysterie of the sacrament, geuen as they were at supper, is not the supper of the Lord.

And Gregory Nazianzene sayth the same: Rursus Pasche sacra cum discipulis in coenaculo ac post coenam, dieque vnica ante passionem celebrat. Nos verò ea in orationis domibus, & ante coenam & post resurrectionem peragimus: that is, Agayne, he kept he holy feast of Passeouer with his Disciples in the dinyng chamber after the supper,* and one day before his passion. But we keepe it both in the Churches and houses of prayer, both before the supper, and also after the resurrection.

*And that first Supper was called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , can you tell what that is?

Lat.

I vnderstande no Greeke. Yet I thinke it meaneth charitie.

West.

Will you haue all thing done that Christ did then? Why, then must the Priest be hanged on the morrow. And where find you I pray you, that a woman should receyue the sacrament?

Lat.

Will you geue me leaue to turne my booke? I finde it in the xi. chapter to the Corinthians. I trow these be hys wordes: Probetautem seipsum homo, &c.

I pray you good maister what Gender is homo▪

West.

Marrie the common gender.

Cole.

It is in the Greeke, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .*

Har.

It is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , that is, vir.

Lat.

It is in my booke of Erasmus translation, Probet seipsum homo.

Feck.

It is Probet seipsum in deed, and therefore it importeth the Masculine gender.

Latimer.

What then? I trowe when the woman touched Christ, he said: Quis tetigit me? Scio quod aliquis me tetigit: that is, Who touched me? I know that some man touched me.

Weston.

I will be at host with you anone. When Christ was at his supper, none were with hym, * but his Apostles onely.

Ergo, he ment no woman, if you will haue this institution kept.

Lati.

In the twelue Apostles was represented the whole Church,* in which you will graunt both men and women to bee.

West.

So thorough the whole hereticall translated Bible, ye neuer make mention of Priest,* tyll ye come to the putting of Christ to death. Where find you then that a priest or minster, (a minstrel I may cal him wel enough) should do it of necessitie?

Lat.

A minister is a more fit name for that office,* for y^e name of a priest importeth a sacrifice.

West.

Well, remember that ye cannot finde that a woman may receiue by scripture. M. Opponent fall to it.

Smith.

Because I perceiue that this charge is layd vppon my necke, to dispute with you: to the ende that the same may go forward after a right maner and order, I wil propose three questions, so as they are put forth vnto me. And first I aske this question of you, although the same in deed ought not to be called in question: but such is the condition of the Church, that it is alwayes vexed of the wycked sort. I aske (I say) whether Christes body be really in the sacrament?

Lat.

I trust I haue obtained of M. Prolocutor, that no mā shall exact that thyng of me, which is not in me.* And I am sory that this worshipfull audience should be deceyued of their expectation for my sake. I haue geuen vp my mynde in writing to M. Prolocutor.

Smith.

Whatsoever ye haue geuen vp, it shall be registred among the Acts.

Latimer.

Disputation requireth a good memory: Ast abolita est mihi memoria, My memorie is gone cleane, and maruellouslye weakened, and neuer the better I wis for the pryson.

West.

How long haue ye bene in prison?

Lat.

These three quarters of this yere.

West.

And I was in prison sixe yeres.

Lat.

The more pitie Sir.

West.

How long haue you bene of this opinion?

Lat.

It is not long sir that I haue bene of this opinion.

Weston.

The tyme hath bene when you sayd Masse full deuoutly.

Lat.

Yea, I cry God mercy hartily for it.

West.

Where learned you this new fanglenes?*

Lat.

I haue long sought for the truth in this matter of the Sacrament, and haue not bene of this mynde past seuen yeres: and my L. of Canterbury his booke hath especially confirmed my iudgement herein. If I could remember all therein conteined, I would not feare to answer any man in this matter.

Tres.

There are in that booke sixe hundred errors.

West.

You were once a Lutheran.

Lat•.

No, I was a Papist: For I neuer could perceiue how Luther could defend his opinion without transubstantiation.* The Tigurines once did write a booke agaynst Luther, and I oft desired God that he might liue so long to make them answer.

Weston.

Luther in hys booke De priuata Missa, sayd, that the deuill reasoned with hym, and perswaded hym that the Masse was not good. Fol. 14. Contigit me, &c Wherof it may appeare, that Luther said Masse, and the deuill dissuaded hym from it.

Lat.

I do not take in hand here to defend Luthers sayings or doyngs. If he were here, he would defend himself well enough I trow. I told you before that I am not meete for disputations. I pray you read myne aunswer, wherein I haue declared my fayth.

West.

Do you beleue this, as you haue written?

Lat.

Yea Sir.

West.

Then haue you no faith.

Lat.

Then would I be sory Sir.

Tres.

It is written, Iohn. 6. Except ye shall eate the fleshe of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye shall haue no lyfe in Page 1457 you.* Which when the Capernaïtes and many of Christes disciples heard, they said, This is a hard saieng, &c. Now that the truth may the better appeare, here I aske of you, whether Christ speaking these wordes, did meane of his fleshe to be eaten with the mouth, or of the spirituall eatyng of the same?

Lat.

I aunswer (as Augustine vnderstandeth) that Christ meant of the spirituall eating of his flesh.

Tres.

Of what flesh ment Christ, his true flesh, or no?

Lat.

Of his true flesh, spiritually to be eaten in the supper by faith, and not corporally.

Tres.

Of what flesh ment the Capernaites?

Latimer.

Of hys true fleshe also: but to bee eaten wyth the mouth.

Tresh.

They (as ye confesse) did meane his true flesh, to be taken with the mouth.* And Christ also (as I shall prooue) did speake of the receiuyng of his flesh with the mouth.

Ergo, they both did vnderstand it of the eating of one thing, which is done by the mouth of the body.

Lat.

I say, Christ vnderstoode it not of the bodily mouth: but of the mouth of the spirit, mynd, and hart.

Tres.

I prooue the contrary: that Christ vnderstandeth it of the eatyng with the bodily mouth. For where as custome is a right good maistresse and interpreter of things,* and where as the actes put in practise by Christ, doe certainly declare those things which he first spake: Christes deeds in his supper, where he gaue his body to bee taken with the mouth, together with the custom which hath ben euer since that tyme, of that eating which is done with the mouth, doth euidently inferre that Christ did vnderstand his words here cited of me out of the vj. of Iohn, of the eatyng with the mouth.

Lat.

He gaue not his body to be receyued with the mouth, but he gaue the sacrament of hys body to be receyued with the mouth.* he gaue the sacrament to the mouth, his body to the mynd.

Tresham.

But my reason doth conclude, that Christ spake concernyng hys fleshe to bee receyued wyth the corporall mouth: for otherwyse (which God forbid) he had bene a deceyuer, and had bene offensiue to the Capernaites and his Disciples, if hee had not meant in this point, as they thought he ment: for if he had thought as you do fayne, it had bene an easie matter for him to haue sayd: * You shall not eate my flesh with your mouth, but the Sacrament of my flesh: that is to say, ye shall receyue with your mouth, not the thyng it selfe, but the figure of the thyng, and thus he might haue satisfied them: but so he sayd not, but continued in the truth of his words, as he was woont: Therefore Christ meant the selfe same thyng that the Capernaits dyd, I meane concerning the thyng it selfe to bee receyued with the mouth: videlicet, that his true flesh is truly to be eaten with the mouth. Moreouer, for as much as you doe expound for (corpus Christi) the body of Christ (Sacramentum corporis Christi) the sacrament of the body of Christ, & hereby do suppose that we obtaine but a spirituall vnion, or vnion of the mynd betweene vs and Christ, playne it is that you are deceyued in this thyng, and do erre from the mynd of the Fathers: for they affirme by playne and expresse wordes, that we are corporally and carnally ioyned together. And these be the wordes of Hyllarie: Si verè igitur carnem corporis nostri Christus assumpsit, & verè homo ille, qui ex Maria natus fuit, nos quoque verè sub mysterio carnē corporis sui sumimus, & per haec vnum erimus, quia pater in eo est, & ille in nobis. Quomodo voluntatis vnitas asseritur, cum naturalis per sacramentum proprietas perfectè Sacramentum sit vnitatis? That is, Therefore if Christ dyd truely take the flesh of our body vpon hym, and the same man be Christ in deede which was borne of Mary, then we also doe receyue vnder a mysterie, the fleshe of hys body in deede, and thereby shall become one, because the father is in hym, and he in vs. How is the vnitie of wyll affirmed, when a naturall proprietie, by the sacrament is a perfect Sacrament of vnitie?

Thus farre hath Hyllarie. Loe here you see how manifestly these wordes confound your assertion.* To be short I my selfe haue heard you preaching at Greenewich, before king Henry the eight, where you did openly affirme, that no Christian man ought to doubt of the true and reall presence of Christes body in the Sacrament, for as much as he had the worde of Scripture on his side, (videlicet, Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body: wherby he might be confirmed. But now there is the same truth: the word of Scripture hath the selfe same thyng which it then had. Therefore why do you deny at this present, that whereof it was not lawfull once to doubt before when you taught it?

Lat.

Will you geue me leaue to speake?

Tres.

Speake Latine I pray you, for ye can doe it if ye li•t, promptly enough.

Lat.

I can not speake Latine so long and so largely. Maister Prolocutor hath geuen me leaue to speake English: And as for the words of Hyllarie, I thinke they make not so much for you. But he that shall answer the Doctours, had not neede to be in my case, but should haue them in a readinesse, and know their purpose. Melancthon sayth, if the Doctours had foreseene that they should haue bene so taken in this controuersie,* they would haue written more playnely.

Smyth.

I will reduce the words of Hyllary into the forme of a Syllogisme.

Da- Such as is the vnitie of our flesh with Christes flesh, such,* (yea greater) is the vnitie of Christ with the Father.

ti- But the vnitie of Christs flesh with ours, is true and substantiall:

si. Ergo, the vnitie of Christ with the Father is true and substantiall.

Lat.

I vnderstand you not.

Seat.

I know your learning well enough, & how su•til ye be: I will vse a few wordes with you, and that out of Cyprian, De coena Domini. The old Testament doth forbidde the drinking of bloud.* The new Testament doth cōmand the drinking and tasting of bloud: but where doth it commaund the drinking of bloud?

Lat.

In these wordes: Bibite ex hoc omnes: that is, Drinke ye all of this.

Seat.

Then we taste true bloud.

Latimer.

We do taste true bloud, but spiritually: and this is enough.

Seat.

Nay, the olde and new Testament in this doe * differ: for the one doth command, and the other doth forbid to drinke bloud.

Lat.

It is true as touching the matter, but not as touching the maner of the thing.

Seat.

Then there is no difference betwene the drinkyng of bloud in the new Testament, and that of the old: for they also dranke spiritually.

Latimer.

And we drinke spiritually also, but a more precious bloud.

West.

Augustine vpon the 45. Psalme, saith: Securè bibite sanguinem quē fudistis. i. Drinke boldly the bloud which ye haue poured out.

Ergo, it is bloud.

Lat.

I neuer denied it, nor neuer wyll go from it,* but that we drinke the very bloud of Christ in deed, but spiritually, for the same S. Augustine saith: Crede & manducasti. i. Beleue, and thou hast eaten.

West.

Nay, Credere, non est bibere nec edere. i. To beleue, is not to drinke or eate. You will not say, I pledge you, when I say, I beleue in God. Is not (manducare) to eate, in your learnyng put for (credere) to beleue?

Weston.

I remember my L. Chauncellor demanded M. Hooper of these questions, whether * (Edere) to eate, were (Credere) to beleue, and (Altare) an Aultar, were Christ, in all the Scripture, &c. And he answered yea.

Then said my Lord Chauncellor: Why, then * Habemus Altare de quo non licet edere. i. Wee haue an Aultare, of which it is not lawfull to eate, is as much to say, as Habemus Christum, in quo non licet credere. i. We haue a Christ, in whom we may not beleue.

Tres.

Beleeue, and thou hast eaten, is spoken of the spirituall eatyng.

Latimer.

It is true, I doe allowe your saying: I take it so also.

Weston.

We are commaunded to drinke bloud in the new Lawe.

Ergo, it is very bloud.

Lat.

We drinke bloud, so as appertaineth to vs to drinke to our comfort, in sacramentall wyne. We drinke bloud Sacramentally: he gaue vs his bloud to drinke spiritually, he went about to shew, that as certainly as we drinke wyne, so certainly we drinke his bloud spiritually.

West.

Do not you seeme to be a papist, which do bryng in new wordes, not found in the scripture? Where find you, that (Sacramentaliter) Sacramentally, in Gods booke?

Lat.

It is necessarily gathered vpon scripture.

West.

The old Testament doth forbid the tasting of bloud, but the new doth commaund it.

Lat.

It is true, not as touching the thing, but as touchyng the maner thereof.

West.

Heare ye people, this is the argument.

That which was forbidden in the olde Testament, is commaunded in the new.

To drinke bloud was forbidden in the old Testament Page 1458 and commaunded in the new.

Ergo, it is very bloud that we drink• in the new.

¶This argument, because the Maior thereof is not vniuersall, is not formall, and may well be retorted agaynst West. thus.

Ce- No naturall or morall thyng forbidden materially in the old Testament,* is commaunded in the new.

la- To drinke mans naturall bloud, is forbidden materially in the old Testament:

rent. Ergo, to drinke mans naturall bloud materially, is not commaunded in the new.

Lat.

*It is commaunded spiritually to be dronken, I grant it is bloud dronken in the new Testament, but we receyue it spiritually.

Pie.

It was not forbidden spiritually in the old law.

Latimer.

The substance of bloud is dronken, but not in one maner.

Pie.

It doth not require the same maner of drinkyng.

Lat.

It is the same thyng, not the same manner. I haue no more to say.

Weston.

*Here Weston cited the place of Chrysostome, of Iudas treason: O Iudae dementia. Ille cum Iudaeis triginta denarijs paciscebatur, vt Christum venderet, & Christus ei sanguinem, quem vendidit, offerebat: That is, O the madnesse of Iudas. He made bargayne with the Iewes for thirtie pence to sell Christ, and Christ offred him his bloud which he sold.

Lat.

I graunt he offred to Iudas his bloud, which he sold, but in a sacrament.

Weston.

Because ye can defend your Doctors no better, ye shall see how worshipfull men ye hang vpon, and one that hath bene of your mynd,* shall dispute with you. M. Cartwright, I pray you dispute.

Cart.

Reuerend father, because it is geuen me in commandement to dispute with you, I will do it gladly. But first vnderstand ere we go any further, that I was in the same error that you are in: but I am sorry for it, and do confesse my selfe to haue erred. I acknowledge myne offence, and I wyshe and desire God that you also may repente wyth me.

Latimer.

*Wyll you geue me leaue to tell what hath caused M. Doctour here to recant? It is poena legis, the payne of the law, which hath brought you backe, and conuerted you, and many moe: the which letteth many to confesse God. And this is a great argument, there are few here can dissolue it.

Cartwright.

That is not my cause, but I wil make you this short Argument, by which I was conuerted from myne errores.

*If the true bodye of Christ bee not really in the Sacrament, all the whole Church hath erred from the Apostles tyme.

But Christ would not suffer his church to erre:

Ergo, it is the true body of Christ.

Lat.

The popish Church hath erred, & doth erre. I thinke for the space of sixe or seuen hundred yeares,* there was no mentiō made of any eating but spiritually: for before these fiue hundred yeares, the Church did euer confesse a spirituall manducation. But the Romish church begate the error of transubstantiation. My Lord of Caunterburies booke handleth that very well, and by him I could answer you, if I had hym.

Cart.

Linus and all the rest do confesse the body of Christ to be in the Sacrament: and S. Augustine also vpon the 98. Psalme, vpon this place: Adorate scabellum pedum. &c. grāteth it to be worshipped.

Lat.

We doe worship Christ in the heauens, & we do worship him in the Sacrament: but the massing worship is not to be vsed.

Smyth.

Doe you thinke that Cyrill was of the auncient Church?

Lat.

I do thinke so.

Smyth.

He sayth, that Christ dwelleth in vs corporally: These be Cyrils words of the mysticall benediction.

Lat.

That (*corporally) hath another vnderstanding, then you do grossely take it.

¶Cyrill sayth, that Christ dwelleth corporally in vs, but he sayth not that Christ dwelleth corporally in y^e bread. Which dwelling of Christ in vs, is as our dwelling is also in Christ, not locall or corporall, but spiritual & heauenly (corporally) therefore it is to be takē here in the same sense as S. Paul saith, the fulnes of diuinitie to dwell in Christ corporally, that is, not lightly nor accidentally, but perfectly and substantially, with all his vertue and power, &c. And so dwelleth Christ corporally in vs also.

Smyth.

Here Smyth repeateth these words of Cyrill: Per communionem corporis Christi, habitat in nobis Christus corporaliter: That is, By the communicating of the bodye of Christ, Christ dwelleth in vs corporally.

Latimer.

The solution of this is in my Lord of Canterburies booke.

Smyth.

Cyrill was no papist, and yet these be his wordes: Christ dwelleth in vs corporally,* but you say he dwelleth in vs spiritually.

Latimer.

I say both: that he dwelleth in vs both corporally and spiritually, accordyng to his meanyng: Spiritually by fayth, and corporally by taking our flesh vpon hym. For I remember I haue read this in my Lord of Canterburies booke.

Weston

For because your learnyng is let out to Ferme, and shut vp in my Lord of Caunterburies booke. I wyll recite vnto you a place of S. Ambrose, De apparatione ad Missam, where he sayth: Videmus principem sacerdotem ad nos venientem, & offerentem sanguinem, &c. That is, Wee see the chiefe Prieste commyng vnto vs, and offeryng bloud, &c.

Likewise both Augustine in the 38. Psal. and Chrysostome, concerning the incomprehensible nature of God,*Tom. 3. say: Non solum homines, &c.

Lat.

I am not ashamed to acknowledge myne ignoraunce, and these testimonies are more then I can beare away.

West.

Then must you leaue some behynde you for lacke of cariage.

Latimer.

But for Chrysostome, hee hath many figuratiue speeches, and Emphaticall loquutions, in many places,* as in that which you haue now recited: but he sayeth not, For the quicke and the dead: he taketh the celebration for the sacrifice.

West.

You shall heare Chrysostome againe, vpon the ninth chap. of the Acts: Quid dicis? Hostia in manibus sacerdotis, &c. He doth not call it a cup of wyne.

Lat.

Ye haue myne answer there with you in a paper: and yet he calleth it not, Propitiatorium sacrificium, i. A propitiatorie sacrifice.

West.

You shal heare it to be so: and I bring another place of Chrysostome out of the same treatise: Non temerè ab Apostolis est institutum, &c.

Weston.

He is too precious a thing for vs to offer: he offereth hymselfe.

Weston.

Here in an other place of Chrysostome to the people of Antioche,* Homil. 69. and also to the Philippians he sayeth: There should bee a memorye and sacrifice for the dead.

Lat.

I doe say that the holy communion beareth the name of a sacrifice, because it is a sacrifice memoratiue.

West.

How say you to the sacrifice for the dead.

Lat.

I say that it needeth not, or it booteth not.

West.

Augustine in his Enchiridion, the 110. chap. sayeth: Non est negandum defunctorum animos pietate suorum viuentium releuari, quum pro illis sacrificium Mediatoris offertur.* That is, We must not deny, that the soules of the dead are relieued by the deuotion of their friends which are liuing,* when the sacrifice of the Mediatour is offered for them. Where he prooueth the veritie of Christes body, & praying for the dead. And it is sayd, that the same Augustine sayd masse for his mother.

Lat.

But that masse was not like yours, which thing doth manifestly appeare in his writings, which are agaynst it in euery place. And Augustine is a reasonable man, he requireth to be beleued no further, then he bringeth scripture for his prooffe, and agreeth with Gods word.

West.

In the same place he proueth a propiciatorie sacrifice and that vpon an aulter, and no Oyster boord.*

Lat.

It is the Lords table, and no Oyster boord. It may be called an aulter, and so the doctors call it in many places: but there is no propiciatorie sacrifice, but only Christ. The doctors might be deceiued in some points, though not in all things. * I beleue them when they say well.

Cole.

Is it not a shame for an old man to lye? You say,* you are of the old fathers fayth, where they say well, and yet ye are not.

Lat.

I am of their faith when they say well. I referre my selfe to my L. of Caunterburies booke wholly herein.

Smyth.

Then are you not of Chrysostomes faith, nor of S. Augustines fayth.

Lat.

I haue said, when they said well, and bring scripture for them, I am of their faith, and further Augustine requireth not to be beleeeued.

West.

Origen. Hom. 13. vpon Leuiticus.

Latimer.

I haue but one worde to say, Panis Sacramentalis,Page 1459 the Sacramentall bread, is called a Propitiation, because it is a Sacrament of the Propitiation. What is your vocation?

West.

My vocation is at this tyme to dispute, otherwise I am a Priest, and my vocation is to offer.

Lat.

Where haue you that authortie geuen you to offer?

West.

Hoc facite, Do this, for facite in that place is taken for offerte, that is, offer you.

Lat.

*Is Facere nothing but sacrificare to sacrifice? Why then no man must receiue the sacrament but priestes onely: for there may none offer but priests.

Ergo, there may none receiue but priests.

West.

Your argument is to be denied.

Lat.

*Did Christ then offer himselfe at his supper?

Pye.

Yea, he offred himselfe for the whole world.

Latimer.

Then if this worde (Facite) Do ye, signifie Sacrificate, Sacrifice ye, it followeth, (as I sayd) that none but Priestes onely ought to receiue the Sacrament, to whom it is onely lawfull to sacrifice: and where find you that, I pray you?

West.

Fourty yeare agone, whether could you haue gone to haue found your doctrine?

Lat.

The more cause we haue to thanke God, that hath now sent the light into the world.

West.

*The light? Nay lite and lewd Preachers: for you could not tell what you might haue: Ye altered & changed so often your communions and altars, and all for this one end, to spoile and rob the Church.

Latimer.

These things pertayne nothyng to mee. I must not aunswere for other mens deedes, but onely for myne owne.

West.

Well, M. Latimer, this is our entent, to wyll you well, and to exhort you to come to your selfe, and remember that without Noes Arke, there is no health. Remember what they haue bene that were the beginners of your doctrine, none but a few flying Apostataes, runnyng out of Germany for feare of the fagot. Remember what they haue bene which haue set forth the same in this Realme: A sort of flyngbraines and light heads, which were neuer constant in any one thyng, as it was to be seene in the turnyng of the Table, where lyke a sort of Apes, they coulde not tell which way to turne their tailes,* looking one day West, and another day East, one that way, and an other this way. They will be lyke (they say) to the Apostles, they wyll haue no Churches. A houell is good enough for them. They come to the Communion with no reuerence. They get them a Tankard, and one sayth, I drinke, and I am thankfull:* the more ioy of thee, sayth another. And in them was it true that Hyllary sayth: Annuas & mēstruas de deo fides facimus▪ id est, We make euery yere and euery month a fayth. A runnagate Scot did take away the adoration or worshipping of Christ in the Sacrament: by whose procurement that heresie was put into the last Cōmunion booke:* so much preuayled that one mans authoritie at that tyme. You neuer agreed with the Tygurines or Germanes, or with the Church, or with your selfe. Your stubbornnesse commeth of a wayne glory, which is to no purpose: for it will do you no good when a fagot is in your beard. And we see all by your owne confession, how little cause you haue to be stubborn, for your learning is in scoffers hold. The Queenes grace is mercifull, if ye will turne.

Lat.

You shall haue no hope in me to turne, I pray for the Queene daily euen from the bottome of my hart, that she may turne from this religion.

West.

Here you all see the weakenes of heresie against the truth: he denieth all truth, and all the old fathers.

HEre all good Readers maye see how this glorious Prolocutor triumpheth: but whether he hath the victorie or no, that I suppose they haue not yet, neyther heard nor seene. And geue that he had the victory, yet what great meruayle was it, disputyng as hee dyd, Non sine suo Theseo: that is, not without his tipplyng cuppe standing at his elbow all the time of his disputation, notwithstanding a priuy notyng and smilyng of them that beheld the matter, but specially at that tyme, when Doctour Ridley disputyng with one of the Opponentes, the sayd Prolocutor tooke the cuppe, and holding it in hys hand, sayd to the Opponent: Vrge hoc. vrge hoc: Nam hoc facit pro nobis. In which wordes as he mooued no little matter of laughter to the beholders thereof:* so I thought here also not to leaue the same vnmentioned, somewhat also to delight the Reader withal, after his tedious wearines in reading the story therof.

¶To the Reader.

And thus hast thou (louyng Reader) the whole action and stage of this Doctourly disputation shewed forth vnto thee, against these three woorthy Confessours and Martyrs of the Lorde, wherein thou mayest behold the disordered vsage of the Uniuersitie men, the vnmanly manner of the Schoole, the rude tumult of the multitude, the fierces and interruption of the Doctors, the full pith and ground of all their argumēts, the censures of the Iudges, the railyng language of the Oblocutor, with his blast of triumph in the latter ende, being both the actor, the moderator, and also Iudge himselfe. And what maruell then if the courage of this victorious Conquerour, hauyng the lawe in his owne handes, to doe and say what him li•ted, would say for himself, Vicit veritas, although he sayd neuer a true word, nor made neuer a true conclusion almost in al that disputation.

It followed furthermore after disputation of these three dayes being ended, that M. Harpsfield the next day after,* which was the xix. of Aprill, should dispute for his forme, to be made Doctor. To the which disputation the Archb. of Cant. was brought forth, and permitted among the rest to vtter an argument or two, in defence of his cause. As in sequele hereof may appeare.

Disputation of Maister Harpesfield Bachelor of Diuinitie, aunswering for his forme to be made Doctour.

Harpesfield.

I Am not ignoraunt what a weighty matter it is, to entreat of the whole order and trade of the scriptures;* and most hard it is to, in the great contention of Religion, to shew the ready way, whereby the scriptures may be best vnderstanded. For the oftē reading of them doth not bring the true vnderstanding of them. What other thing is there then? Uerily this is the redy way, not to folow our owne heads and senses, but to geue ouer our iudgement vnto the holy catholike Church, who hath had of olde yeres the truth, and alwayes deliuered the same to their posteritie: but if the often readyng of scriptures, and neuer so paynefull comparing of places should bring the true vnderstandyng, then diuers heretikes might preuaile euen agaynst whole generall Councels. The * Iewes did greatly brag of the knowledge of the law, and of the Sauour that they waited for. But what auailed it them? Notwithstanding, I know right well, that diuers places of the scripture doe much warne vs of the often reading of the same, and what fruit doth therby follow: as Scrutamini, &c. Search the scriptures: for they do beare witnesse of me, &c. Lex Domini, &c. The law of the Lord is pure, able to turne soules. And that saying of S. Paule: Omnis Scriptura, &c. All Scripture inspired from aboue, doth make that a man may bee instructed to all good workes. Howbeit, doth the lawe of the Iewes conuert their soules? are they by reading instructed to every good worke? The letter of the old Testament, is the same that we haue.

The heretikes also haue euer had the same scriptures which we haue that be Catholikes. But they are serued as Tantalus that the Poetes do speake of, who in the plenty of thynges to eate and drinke, is sayd to bee oppressed with hunger and thirst. The swifter that men do seeke the Scriptures without the Catholike church, the deeper they fall, and fynde hell for their labour. Saint Cyprian neuer swaruing from the Catholike Church, saith: He that doth not acknowledge the Church to bee his mother, shall not haue God to be his father. Therefore it is true Diuinitie,* to bee wise with the Church, where Christ sayeth: Nisi manducaueritis, &c. Vnlesse ye eate my fleshe, and drinke my bloud, ye haue no lyfe in you.

If he had meant of onely eating bread, and drinkyng wyne, nothyng had bene more pleasaunt to the Capernautes, neither would they haue forsaken hym. The fleshe profiteth nothing to them that doe so take it. For the Capernautes did imagine Christ to be geuen in such sorte as he lyued. But Christ spake high thynges: not that they should haue hym as fleshe in the market, but to consider his presence with the spirite, * vnder the formes whereby it is geuen. As there is an alteration of bodies by courses and tymes of ages, so there is no lesse * varietie in eatyng of bodies.

These things which I haue recited briefly. M. Harpsfield did with many more wordes set out: and hereupon D. Weston disputed against hym.

West.

Christes real body is not in the sacrament:

Ergo, you are deceyued.

Page 1460

Harps.

I deny the antecedent.

West.

Iohn the 6. Dico veritatem vobis, &c. I speake the truth vnto you: It behoooueth me that I go away from you. For vnlesse I do depart, that comforter cannot come, &c.

*Upon this I will make this argument.

Christ is so gone away as he did send the holy Ghost.

But the holy Ghost did verily come into the world:

Ergo, Christ is verily gone.

Harps.

He is verily gone, and yet remaineth here.

West.

S. Augustine sayth, that these wordes: Ego ero, &c. I wyll be with you euen to the end of the world, are accomplished, secundum maiestatem, According to his maiestie: But secundum praesentiam carnis, non est hic, By the presence of hys flesh, he is not here. The Church hath hym not in flesh, but by beliefe.

Harps.

We must diligently weigh that there are two natures in Christ: the diuine nature, & humane nature. The diuine nature is of such sort, that it cannot chuse but bee in all places. The humane nature is not such, that of force it must be in all places, althogh it be in diuers, after a diuers maner. So where that the doctors do entreat of hys presence by maiestie, they do commend the maiestie of the Diuine nature not to hinder vs of the * natural presence here in the sacrament.

West.

He sayth further: Me autem non semper habebitis: Ye shall not haue me alwayes with you, is to be vnderstanded in the fleshe.

Harpesfield.

The presence of the flesh is to bee considered, that he is not here as he was woont to lyue in conuersation with them, to be seene, talked withall, or in such sort as a man may geue hym * any thyng: after that sort he is not present.

West.

But what say you to this of S. Augustine: Nō est hic, He is not here.

Harpesfield.

I do answer out of S. Augustine vpon Iohn, Tractatu. 25. vpon these woordes. Non videbitis me. Vado ad patrem, &c. I goe to the Father, ye shall not see me: That is, Such as I now am. Therefore I doe deny the maner of hys presence.

West.

I wil ouerthrow S. Augustine with S. Augustine: who saith this also: Quomodo quis possit tenere Christum? fidem mitte & tenuisti: that is, How may a man hold Christ? send thy fayth, and thou holdest hym.

So he sheweth, that by sending our fayth, we do hold Christ.

Harpesfield.

In deed no man holdeth Christ, vnlesse he beleue in him, but it is another thing to haue Christ merciful and fauourable vnto vs, and to haue him present in the Sacrament.

There s. Augustine speaketh of holding him by faith, as he is fauourable vnto vs.

West.

Nay, he speaketh there how the Fathers had him in the fleshe, and teacheth that we haue him not so in fleshe, as they had him long tyme, sayeng: Your fathers dyd holde Christ present in the flesh, do you hold him in your heart. What wordes can be more plaine? Further he sayth, He is gone, & is not here: he hath left vs, and yet hath not forsaken vs. Hic est maiestate, abijt carne: He is here in maiestie, and gone touching the fleshe.

Harps.

I doe vnderstand Augustine thus: that Christ is here in his flesh to them that receiue him worthily: to such as doe not worthily receiue him, to them he is not present in the fleshe. I iudge S. Augustine meaneth so. We haue hym, and haue hym not: we haue him in receiuyng hym worthily, otherwyse not.

West.

Nay, Tener• carnem est tenere corticem literae: I wyll prosecute another argument. Cyrill doth say: By the maiestie of his diuinitie he is euer here, but the presence of hys fleshe hath he taken away.

Harpsfield.

The sense of Cyrill is thus to be vnderstanded: The most true fleshe of Christ is at the right hande of the Father. Thus the Fathers taught, and so they beleeeued. Thus sayd Cyrill: Thus said Augustine, and because this is the foundation of our fayth, they did oftentimes teach it. Therefore, when they prooue this, (the body to bee in heauen,) they do not make agaynst the presence in the sacrament.*

So vnlesse ye can plainly shew, that the fathers do directly say, he is not in the sacrament, you make nothyng against me: for I haue shewed why the Fathers so spake. They did teach the great difference betwene the diuine nature, and the humane nature, as I haue before sayd.

Weston.

I will then prooue, that he is not in the sacrament. Uigilius against y^e heretike Eutiches, vpon these words: Me autem non semper habebitis, sayeth: The sonne of God as touching his humanitie, is gone from vs, by his diuinitie hee remayneth with vs. And that same Uigilius in hys fourth booke, sayeth: Hee that is in the heauen, is not in the earth, speakyng of Christ.

Harps.

I wyll shew you the reason of these wordes. The hereticke Eutiches did beleeeue that the diuine nature of Christ was fastned on the crosse, and beleeeued that Christ had no naturall body. To this Uigilius sayd, that the humane nature was taken vp and ascended, which could not so haue done, vnlesse he had had a body. This he sayd not, to take away the presence in the sacrament.

For what had he to referre this sentence to the Sacrament? Hee neuer dyd so much as dreame of the Sacrament.

West.

Cyrill sayth: Although he be absent from vs in body, yet are we gouerned by his spirit.*

Harps.

By these wordes he gaue vs a cheerefulnesse, to aspire vpwards, seeking therehence our helpe. For as touching his conuersation, he is not so in the Sacrament, as one meet to be liued withall. But let hym teach vs that he is not there to feed vs: for after that sort he is there.

West.

You haue satisfied me with your answers, in doying the same learnedly, and catholically. But now to an other argument.

*Christ is now so absent from the earth by his body, as he was absent from heauen when he liued here.

But when he did liue bodily on earth, the same naturall body was out of heauen.

Ergo, now whilst his naturall body is in heauen, it is not in earth.

Harps.

I deny the Maior.

West.

Fulgentius ad Transimundum Regem, libro secundo, saith: Secundum humanam substantiam absens erat coelo, cum descēdit de coelo. These are Fulgentius wordes touchyng hys humane substaunce. He was absent from heauen, when he descended from heauen, and touching the same substance, now he is in heauen, he is not on the earth: but concernyng the diuine nature, he neuer forsooke, neither heauen nor earth.

¶After these wordes, not waityng Harpsfields aunswer, he offered maister Cranmer to dispute: who began in this wyse.

Cranmer.

I haue heard you right learnedly and eloquently entreat of the dignitie of the scriptures, which I doe both commend, & haue maruelled thereat within my selfe. But where as you referre the true sense & iudgement of y^e scriptures to the catholicke church as iudge thereof, you are much deceued, specially for y^t vnder the name of the church you appoynt such Iudges as haue corruptly iudged, and contrary to the sense of the scriptures. I wonder likewyse why you attribute so little to the diligent readyng of the scriptures, and conferryng of places, seying the scriptures do so much commend the same, as wel in diuers other places, as also in those which you your selfe haue alredy alleged. And as touching your opinion of these questiōs, * it semeth to me, neither to haue any groūd of the word of god, nor of the Primitiue church. And to say the truth, y^e scholemen haue spoken diuersly of them, and do not agree therein among themselues. Wherefore mynding here briefly to shew my iudgement also, I must desire you first to aunswere me to a fewe questions which I shall demaund of you. Which beyng done, we shall the better proceed in our disputation. Moreouer, I must desire you to beare also with my rudenes in the Latin tonge, which through long disuse is not now so prompt and ready with me, as it hath bene. And now all other things set apart▪ I mynd chiefly to haue regard to the truth. My first question is this: How Christes body is in the sacrament, accordyng to your mynde or determination?

Then answered a Doctor, he is there as touching hys substance, but not after the maner of his substance.*

Harfsfield.

He is there in such sort and manner, as he may be eaten.

Cran.

My next question is: Whether he hath his quantitie & qualities, forme, figure, and such like properties.

Harfsfield.

Are these your questions, sayd Maister Harpsfield? I may likewise aske you when Christ passed thorough the virgines wombe, an ruperit ne•ne? When they had thus a while contended, there were diuers opinions in this matter.

All the doctors fell in a buzzing,* incertaine what to answer: some thought one way, some another, and thus master Doctors could not agree.

Then maister Cranmer said thus: you put of questions with questions, and not with aunsweres. I aske one thyng of you, and you aunswer another. Once agayne I aske: Whether he haue those properties which he had on the earth?*

Tresh.

No, he hath not all the quantities and qualities belonging Page 1461 to a body.

Smyth

Stay you Maister Tresham. I wyll aunswere to you Maister Doctor, with the wordes of Damascene: Transformatur panis, &c. The bread is transformed, &c. But if thou wilt enquire how, Modus impossibilis, The manner is impossible.

Then two or three other added their aunswers to this question,* somewhat doubtfully. A great hurley burley was among them: some affirming one thyng, and some another.

Cran.

Doe you appoynt me a body, and cannot tell what maner of bodye? Either he hath not his quantitie, or els you are ignorant how to answer it.

Harps.

These are vaine questions, & it is not meet to spend the ryme on them.

West.

*Heare me a while, Lanfrancus sometyme Bishop of Caunterbury, doth answer in this wise vnto Berengarius vpon such like questions: Salubriter credi possunt, fideliter queri non possunt: They may be well beleued, but neuer faithfully asked.

Cranmer.

If ye thinke good to aunswer it, some of you declare it.

Harps.

He is there as pleaseth hym to be there.

Cranmer.

I would be best contented with that aunswere, if that your appoynting of a carnall presence had not driuen me of necessitie to haue enquired for disputatiōs sake, howe you place hym there, sithence you will haue a naturall body.

*When agayne he was answered of diuers at one time, some denying it to be quantum, some saying it to be quantitatium, some affirming it to haue modum quanti, some denying it, some one thyng, some an other: vp start D. Weston, and doughtily decided (as he thought) all the matter, saying: It is Corpus quantum, sed non per modum quanti. i. It is a body (sayeth he) hauyng quantitie, but not according to the maner of quantitie.

Whereunto M. Warde, a great Sophister, thinkyng the matter not fully answered, did largely declare and discourse his sentence: How learnedly and truely I cannot tell, nor I thinke he hymselfe neither, ne yet the best learned there. For it was sayd since, that farre better learned then he, layd as good eare to hym as they could, & yet could by no meanes perceyue to what ende all his talke tended. In deed he told a formall tale to cloute vp the matter.* Hee was full of quantum & quantitatium. This that followeth, was as it is thought, the effect, yet others think no. How be it we wyll rehearse the summe of his wordes, as it is thought he spake them.

Warde.

We must consider (sayth he) that there are duae positiones, Two positions. The one standeth by the order of partes, with respect of the whole. The other in respect of that which conteyneth.* Christ is in the Sacrament in respect of the whole. This proposition is in one of Aristotles Predicamentes, called Situs. I remember I dyd entreat these matters very largely, when I dyd rule and moderate the Philosophicall disputations in the publike Schooles. This position is sine modo quantitatiuo, as by an ensample: you can neuer bring heauen to a quantitie. So I conclude that he is in the Sacrament, quantum sine modo quantitatiuo.

These words he amplified very largely, and so high he clymed into the heauens with Duns his ladder, and not with the scriptures, that it is to be marueled how he could come downe again without falling? To whom M. Cranmer said: Then thus do I make myne argument.

Cran.

*In heauen his body hath quantitie, in earth it hath none by your saying.

Ergo, he hath two bodies, the one in heauen, the other in earth.

Here some would haue answered him, that he had quātitie in both, and so put of the antecedent: but thus said M, Harpsfield.

Harps.

I denye your argument, though some would not haue had hym say so.

Cran.

The argument is good. It standeth vpon contradictories, which is the most surest hold.

Harps.

I deny that there are contradictions.

Cran.

I thus prooue it. Habere modum quantitatiuum & non habere, sunt contradictoria.

Sed Christus in coelis, vt dicitis, habet modum quantitatiuū, in terra non habet:

Ergo, duo sunt corpora eius in quae cadunt haec contradictoria: Nam in idem cadere non possunt.

West.

*I deny the Minor.

Harps.

I aunswer, that the Maior is not true. For Habere quantum, & non habere, non sunt contradictoria nisi sic considerantur eiusdem ad idem, eodem modo & simpliciter.

West.

I confirme the same: for one body may haue modum quantitatum, and not haue: * and idem corpus was possible and impossible, one body may haue woundes, and not woundes.

Cran.

This cannot be at one tyme.

Weston.

The ensample of the Potter doth prooue that I say: who of that that is clay now, maketh a pot or cuppe forthwith.

Cran.

But I say againe, that it is so but at diuers tymes: as one piece of meat to be rawe and sodden, cannot be at one time together. But you would haue it otherwise, that Christ should be here and in heauen at one time, & should haue modum quantitatum, and not haue: which cannot be but by such argument as I haue shewed you.

West.

But I say, Christes body was possible and not possible at one * instant.

Seat.

You may aske as well other questions, how he is in heauen? whether he sit or stand, and whether he bee there as he liued here.

Cran.

You your selfe by putting a naturall presence, doe force me to question how he is here. Therefore, next I doe aske this question: Whether good and euill men do eat the body in the sacrament?

Harps.

Yea, they do so, euen as the sunne doth shine vpon kings pallaices, and on dung heapes.

Cran.

Then doe I enquire how long Christ tarieth in the eater.

Harps.

These are curious questions, vnmeet to be asked.

Cranmer.

I haue taken them out of your Schooles and Schoolemen, which you your selues doe most vse: and there also doe I learne to aske how farre he goeth into the body.

Harps.

Wee know that the bodye of Christ is receyued to nourish the whole man concernyng both body and soule: Eo vs{que} progreditur corpus quous{que} *species.

Cran.

How long doth he abide in the body?

Seat.

S. Augustine saith, our flesh goeth into his flesh. But after he is once receiued into the stomacke, it maketh no matter for vs to know how far he doth pierce, or whether he is conueied.

¶ Here M. Tresham and one M. London answered, that Christ beyng geuen there vnder such forme and quantitie as pleased him, it was not to be enquired of his taryng, or of his descending into the body.

Harps.

You were woont to lay to our charge, that we added to the scripture: saying alwayes that we should fetch the truth out of the scripture, and now you your selfe bring questions out of the Schoolemen, which you haue disallowed in vs.

Cran.

I say as I haue sayd alway, that I am constraind to aske these Questions, because of this carnall presence, which you imagine: and yet I know right wel, that these questions be answered out of the Scriptures: As to my last question: How long he abideth in the body? &c. The scripture answereth plainly, that Christ doth so lōg dwell in his people, as they are his members. Wherupō I make this argument.

Ba- They which eate the flesh of Christ, do dwel in hym▪ and he in them.*

ro- But the wicked doe not remaine in hym, nor he in them:

co. Ergo, the wicked do not eate his flesh, nor drinke his bloud.

Harps.

I will answer vnto you, as S. Augustine saith▪^{*} not that how so euer a man do eate, he eateth the body: but he that eateth after a certaine maner.

Cran.

I cannot tel what maner ye appoint, but I am sure that euill men do not eate the flesh and drinke the bloud of Christ, as Christ speaketh in the sixt of Iohn.

Harps.

In the sixt of Iohn, some things are to be referred to the godly, and some to the vngodly.

Cranmer.

Whatsoever he doth entreat there of eating, doth pertayne vnto good men.

Harps.

If you do meane onely of the worde of eating, it is true: if concerning the thing, it is not so: And if your meaning be of that which is contained vnder the word of •ating, it may be so taken, I graunt.^{*}

Cran.

Now to the Argument, He that eateth my fleshe, and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in mee, and I in hym. Doth not this prooue sufficiently, that euill men doe not eate that the good doe?

Tresh.

You must adde, Qui manducat dignè: He that eateth woorthily.

Cran.

I speake of the same manner of eatyng, that Christ speaketh of.

Weston.

Augustinus ad fratres in Eremo, Sermon. 28. Est c•dan•Page 1462 manducandi modus. i. There is a certaine manner of eating. Augustine speaketh of two maners of eating: the one of them that eat worthely, the other that eat vnworthely.

Harps.

All things in the 6. of Iohn are not to be referred to the Sacrament,* but to the receiuing of Christe by faith. The Fathers doe agree that there is not entreatie made of the supper of the Lorde, before they come vnto, Panis quem dabo vobis, caro mea est. &c.

Cran.

There is entreatinge of Manna both before & after.

Harps.

I wil apply an other answer. This argument hath a kinde of poyson in it, which must be thus bitten away, that Manna and this Sacrament be not both one. Manna hath not his efficacie of him selfe, but of God.

Cran.

But they that did take Manna worthily, had fruite therby:* and so by your assertion, he that doth eat the flesh of Christ worthily, hath his fruite by that.

Therefore the like doth folow of them both: and so there should be no difference betwene Manna & thys sacrament by your reason.

Harps.

When it is sayde, that they which did eate Manna, are dead, it is to be vnderstand, that they did want the * vertue of Manna.

*If M. Harpsfield do meane of bodily life, they which eate the Sacrament doe die, as well as they which did eate the Manna. If he meane of spiritual life, neither be they all damned that did eat Manna, nor all sau'd that do eate the Sacrament. Wherefore the truth is, that neither the eating of Manna bringeth death, nor the eating of the Sacrament bringeth saluation: but only the spirituall beleeuing vppon Christes bodely passion, which onely iustifieth both them and vs. And therefore as the effect is spirituall, whych Christ speaketh of in this chapter: so is the cause of that effecte spirituall whereof hee meaneth, which is our spirituall beleeuing in him, and not our bodely eating of him.

Cran.

They then which doe eate either of them worthely, doe liue.

Harps.

They doe lyue whiche doe eate Manna worthely, not by Manna, but by the power of God geuen by it. The other which doe eate this Sacrament, do liue by the same.

Cran.

Christe did not entreate of the cause, but the effecte which folowed: he doth not speake of the cause whereof the effect proceedeth.

Harps.

I do say the effects are diuers, life and death, which do folow the worthy, and the vnworthy eating therof.

Cran.

Sithens you will needes haue an addition to it, we must vse both in Manna & in this Sacrament, indifferently, either worthily or vnworthily.

Christ spake absolutely of Manna, and of the Supper, so that after that absolute speaking of the Supper, wicked men can in no wise eate the fleshe of Christe, and drinke his bloud.

*Further Augustine vpon Iohn, Tractatu 26. vpon these wordes, Qui manducat, &c. sayth: There is no suche respecte in common meates, as in the Lords body. For who that eateth other meates, hath still hunger, and needeth to be satisfied daily: but hee that doth eate the flesh of Christ, and drinketh his bloud, doth liue for euer. But you know wicked men not to doe so.

Ergo, wicked men doe not receiue.

Harps.

S. Augustine meaneth, that hee who eateth Christes flesh. &c. after a certaine manner, should liue for euer. Wicked men doe eate, but not after that maner.

Cran.

Ca- Onely they which participate Christ, be of the mysticall body.*

me- But the euill men are not of the mysticall body:

stres. Therefore they doe not participate Christ.

Weston.

*Your wonderfull gentle behaueour and modesty (good master D. Cranmer) is woorthy muche commendation: and that I may not depriue you of your right & iuste deseruing, I geue you most hearty thanks in myne owne name, and in the name of all my brethren. At which saying all the Doctors gently put off theyr cappes. Then M. Weston did oppose the Respondent on this wise.

West.

*Tertullian doth call the sacrament the signe and figure of the Lorde.

S. Augustine ad Dardanum sayeth: Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis. i. The Lorde did not sticke to say, this is my body, when hee gaue a signe of his body.

Besides this, he geueth rules howe to vnderstand the scriptures, saying: If the Scriptures seeme to commaund some heynous thing,* then it is figuratiue, as by example: Manducare carnem & bibere sanguinem, est tropicus sermo. i. To eate the flesh and drinke the bloud, is a tropicall speache.

Harps.

*Tertullian did wryte in that place against Martion an heretique, who denied Christ to haue a true body, and said, he had onely a fantastical body. He went aboute to shewe that we had Christ both in heauē and in earth: and though we haue the true bodye in the Sacrament, yet hee woulde not goe about so to confounde him, as to say, that Christe was truely in the Sacrament: For that heretique woulde haue thereat rather marueiled, then beleued it. Therefore hee shewed him, that it was the figure of Christe: and a figure can not be, but of a thing that is, or hath bene extant.

To the texte of Augustine: the Church hath neuer taught the contrarye.* There is an outwarde thing in the Sacrament, which sometimes hath sundry names. For it maye be called a Figure in this declaration: That Bodye which is in the sacrament, is a figure of Christ dwelling in heauen.

To the thirde: That which is brought by Augustine for example, about the vnderstanding of the Scriptures,* is thus to be vnderstanded, as tending to a generall manner of eating: so Manducare carnem, & bibere sanguinem. i. To eate the flesh, and drinke the bloude, may be a figuratiue speache to exclude Anthropophagiam. i. The eating of mans flesh, the which is, when we eate mans flesh cutte into morsels, as we eate common meate: so as we neither haue nor eat Christ in the Sacrament.

West.

I vnderstand your short & learned answeare,* which doth sufficiently content me. But nowe to the second question, which is of transubstantiation.

The scripture calleth it bread.

Ergo, it is bread.

Harps.

In the name of breade all is signified whyche wee doe eate.

West.

Theodoretus an ancient wryter,* in his firste Dialogue, sayth, that Christ changed not the nature, but called it his body.

Harps.

He doeth there speake de Symbolo, which is, Externa species sacramenti. i. The outwarde forme of the Sacrament.* Hee meaneth that, that doth tarie in his owne nature. Moreouer, as it was reported, hee brought for his answere Augustinum in sententijs Prosperi.

West.

Theodorete also in hys seconde Dialogue of these kindes of breade and wine sayeth: Nec naturam egrediuntur,*manent etiam in sua substantia. i. They goe not oute of their owne nature, but they tarie in their owne substaunce.

Harps.

They are vnderstanded to be of the same substance wherein they are * turned.

West.

But what say you by this? Manent in priori substantia: They remaine in their former substance.

Harps.

Symbola manent: The outward signes doe tarie.

West.

But what is meant here by this word, Symbolum?

Harps.

The outwarde fourme or shape onely of the Nature.

West.

Then you can not call them a substance.

Harps.

Yes Syr, euery thing hath a certaine substaunce in hys kinde.

West.

That is true, but accidentes are not substaunces in theyr kinde.

Harpsfielde.

Sunt quid in suo genere. Of thys they contended much.

West.

Chrysostome ad Caesarium Monachum sayeth,^{*} Sicut antequam consecratur, panis est: sic postquam consecratur, liberatus est ab appellatione panis, donatusque est appellatione corporis Domini, cum natura remanet: That is. Like as before it is consecrated, it is breade: so after it is consecrated, it is deliuered from the name of breade, and is endued with y^e name of the Lordes body, where as the nature doth remaine.

Harps.

Where reade you this place, I pray you?^{*}

West.

Here in Peter Martyr I finde it: I haue hys Booke in my hand.

Harps.

The authour shall be of more credite, before that I make so much of him, as to frame an answer vnto it.

Weston.

In deede I knowe not well where he findeth it. But Gelasius sayeth,^{*} that the nature of breade and wine doe tarrie.

Harps.

What is that Gelasius?

West.

A Bishop of Rome.

Harps.

Then he allowed the Masse.

West.

Yea, and oftentimes sayde it: and Purgatorie he also allowed, and so prayer for the deade, reliques, and inuocation to saintes.

Harps.

Belyke then hee meant nothing against Transubstantiation.

West.

It doeth appeare so in deede.* But Origene vppon Math. the 15. Chapter saith, that the material breade doeth tarrie, and is conueyed into the priuie, and is eaten of wormes.

Harps.

Tushe, tushe, thys place appertaineth vnto holye breade.

West.

What, doth it appertaine to holy bread?

Harps.

Yea, vnto holy breade.

Page 1463

West.

By what meanes can you shewe how this myraculous worke bringeth Christ into the sacrament.

Harps.

By the scriptures I prooue that, which sayeth: Hoc est corpus meum. This is my body.

West.

It doeth reioyce all vs not a little, that you haue so well maintained the sound doctrine of the sacrament of the Altare, wherein you haue faithfully cleaued to the Catholike Church, as an onely stay of our religion: by the whych meanes you haue prooued your selfe meete to be authorised further towardes the practising of the scripture.

And heere I doe openly wnesse, that I doe thoroughly consente wyth you, and haue for disputations sake onely, brought these argumēts against you, which you haue right learnedly satisfied: and now all things being done, after our forme and maner, we wil end this disputation, saying: In oppositum est sacra theologia. In oppositum est. &c.

¶Thus haue ye heard in these foresaide disputations, about the holy supper of the Lorde, the reasons and arguments of the Doctors, the answeres and resolutions of the Bishops, and the triumphe of the Prolocutor, triumphing before the victorie, w^t Vicit veritas, who rather in my minde shoulde haue exclaimed, vicit potestas: As it happeneth alwaies, Vbi pars maior vincit meliorem. For els if potestas had not helped the Prolocutor more then veritas, there had ben a small victoria. But so it is where iudgements be partiall, and parties be addicted, there all thinges turne to victorie, though it be neuer so meane and simple, as in this disputation might well appeare.

For first of the Opponents part, neither was there almost any argument in true moode & figure rightly framed: neither could the answerers be permitted to say for them selues: and if they answered any thing, it was condemned before they began to speake. Againe, such disturbance and confusion, more like a conspiracy then anye disputation, without al forme and order, was in the schooles during the time of their answering, that neither could the answerers haue place to vtter their minds, neither would the Opponents be satisfied with any reasons. Cōcerning the which disturbance of that misruled disputation, you shall heare what M. Ridley himselfe reporteth by his owne description, in maner as foloweth.

The reporte and narration of M. Ridley concerning the misordered disputation had against him and his felow prisoners at Oxford.

I Neuer yet sithence I was borne saw, or heard any thing done or handled more vainely, or tumultuously, then the disputation which was with mee in the Schooles at Oxforde. Yea verely, I coulde neuer haue thought that it had ben possible to haue founde amongst men recounted to be of knowledge and learning in thys Realme, any so brasen faced and shamelesse, so disorderly and vainely, to behaue themselues, more like to Stageplayers in Enterludes, to set forth a Pageant, then to be graue Diuines in Schooles to dispute. The Sorbonical clamours (which at Paris I haue seene in time past when Popery most raigned) might be worthely thought (in cōparison of this thrasonical oftētation) to haue had muche modestie. And no greate maruaile, seeing they which should haue beene Moderatours, and Ouerseers of others, and whych shoulde haue geuen good ensample in woordes and grauitie: they themselues, aboue all other gaue worst ensample, and did (as it were) blow the trompe to the rest, to raile, rore, rage, and cry out. By reason wherof (good christen reader) manifestly it may appeare, that they neuer sought for any truth or verity, but onely for the glory of the worlde, and their owne bragging victorie. But least by the innumerable railings & reprochful taūts, wherwith I was baited on euery side, our cause, yea rather Gods cause & his churches, should be euill spoken off, and slandered to the world through false reportes, and vntrue ensamples geuen out of oure disputation, and so the veritie might sustaine some damage, I thought it no les then my duety to wryte mine answeres: to the intent y^t who so euer is desirous to know the truth thereof, may by this perceiue, as well those things which were chiefly objected, as summarily that which was answered of me vnto euery of them. How be it (good Reader), I confesse this to be most true, that it is vnpossible to set foorth either all that was (God knoweth) tumultuously and confusedly objected of their partes being so many, speaking many times all together so thicke that one coulde not well heare an other, either all that was answered on my behalfe, to thē so sondry and diuers Opponents.

Moreouer, a great parte of the time appoynted for the disputations, was vainly cōsumed in opprobrious checks and reuiling tauntes, with hissing and clapping of hands, and that in the English tongue,* to procure the peoples fauour wythall. All which things, when I with great grief of heart did beholde, protesting openly, that suche excessiue and outrageous disorder, was vnseemely for those schooles and men of learning and grauitie, and that they which wer the doers and stirrers of suche things, did nothing else but bewray the slendernesse of theyr cause, and theyr owne vanities: I was so farre off by thys my humble complaynt from doing any good at all, that I was enforced to heare suche rebukes, checkes, and tauntes for my labour, as no persone of any honestie wythout blushing coulde abide to heare the like spoken of a moste vile varlet, against a moste wretched Russian.

At the firste beginning of the Disputation, when I should haue confirmed mine answeare to the firste proposition in fewe wordes,* and that (after the maner and lawe of Schooles) afore I coulde make an ende of my firste probation, which was not very long, euen the Doctors themselues cried oute, hee speaketh plasphemies, hee speaketh blasphemies. And when I on my knees besoughte them, and that heartily, that they woulde vouchsafe to heare me to the ende, (whereat the Prolocutour being mooued, cryed out on hie, Let him reade it, let him reade it) yet when I began to reade it agayne, there followed immediately such showting, such a noyse and tumult, and confusion of voyces, crying, blasphemies, blasphemies, as I to my remembraunce neuer hearde, or read the like, excepte it be that one whych was in the Actes of the Apostles, stirred vp of Demetrius the siluer Smith, and other of hys occupatiō, crying out against Paule, Greate is Diana of the Ephesians, great is Diana of the Ephesians: and except it be a certaine disputation whych the Arrians had against the Orthodoxes, and suche as were of godlye iudgemente in Aphryca, where it is sayde, that suche as the President and rulers of the Disputation were, suche was the ende of the disputations. All were in a hurly burly, and so great were the sclanders which the Arrians cast out, that nothing could quietly be heard. This wryteth Uictor in the second booke of his Hystorie.

The which cries and tumultes of them agaynst mee so preuailed, that wild I, nild I,* I was enforced to leaue of y^e reading of my probations, although they were short. If any man doubt of the truth hereof, let the same aske any one that was there, and not vtterly peruered in Poperie, and I am assured hee will say, I speake the least. But to complaine of these things further, I will cease.

And further speaking of thys disputation, hee concludeth with these wordes: And thus was ended thys moste glorious disputation of the most holy Fathers, sacrificers, Doctours, and Maisters, which fought most manfully (as yee may see) for theyr god and goodes, for theyr faith and felicitie, for theyr countrey and kitchin, for theyr beautye and belly, with triumphant applauses and fauour of the whole Uniuersitie.

After the disputation of maister Latimer ended, whych was the 18. day of April, the Friday following whych was the 20. day of the sayde moneth, the Commissioners sate in saint Maries Church, as they did the Saterdag before, and Doctor Weston vsed particularly disswasions wyth euery of them, and woulde not suffer them to answeare in anye wise, but directly and peremptorily, (as his woordes w•re) to say whether they woulde subscribe, or no. And firste to the Bishop of Canterbury he said he was ouercome in disputations: whome the Byshop aunswere^{d,*} that where as Doctour Weston sayde, he had aunswere^d and opposed, and could neither mainteine his own errors, nor impugne the veritie, all that he said, was false. For he was not suffered to Oppose as he would, nor could answer as he was required, vnles he would haue brauled with them, so thick they reasons came one after an other. Euer foure or fiue did interrupt him, that he coulde not speake. Maister Ridley and M. Latimer were asked, what they would do, they sayde, they would stande to that they had sayd. Then were they all called together, and sentence read ouer them, that they were no members of the Church. And therefore they, theyr fautors and patrones were condemned as heretiks: and in reading of it, they were asked, whether they would turne or no, & they bade them read on in the name of God, for they were not minded to turne. So were they condemned all three.

After which sentence of condemnation being awarded against them, they aunswere^d againe euery one in theyr turne, in maner and effect of words, as foloweth, the archbishop first beginning thus.

The Archbishop of Caunterburie.

From this your iudgement and sentence, I appeale to Page 1464 the iust iudgement of God almighty, trusting to be present wyth him in heauen, for whose presence in the altare, I am thus condemned.

Doctour Ridley.

Although I be not of your companie, yet doubte not I but my name is wrytten in an other place, whether thys sentence wil sende vs sooner, then we shoulde by the course of nature haue come.

Doctour Ridley.

I thanke God most hartily, that he hath prolonged my life to this end, that I may in this case glorify God by that kinde of death.

Doctor Westons answere vnto Latimer.

If you goe to heauen in thys faith, then will I neuer come thither,^{d,*} as I am thus perswaded.

After the sentence pronounced, they were separated one from the other, videlicet, the Archbishop was retourned to Bocardo, D. Ridley was caried to the sheriffes house, master Latimer to the Bailiffes.

On Saterdag following, they had a Masse with a generall procession and great solemnitie. Doctor Cranmer was caused to beholde the Procession oute of Bocardo, Doctour Ridley out of the Sheriffes house. Latimer also being brought to see it, from the Bayliffes house, thoughte that he should haue gone to burning, and spake to one Augustine Cooper a Catchpoll, to make a quicke fire. But when he came to Karfox, and sawe the matter, he ranne as fast as his olde bones would carrie him, to one Spensers shop, and would not looke towards it. Last of all, D. Weston caried the sacrament, and foure doctors caried the Canapie ouer him.

Immediately after the sentence was geuen, D. Ridley wryteth to the Prolocutor, in maner, as foloweth.

Doctor Ridley to the Prolocutor.

MAister Prolocutor, you remember, I am sure, howe you promised me openly in the schooles, after my protestation, that I should see howe my answeares were there taken and wrytten of the Notaries whom ye appoynted, (me fateor neminem recusare) to wryte what should be sayd, and to haue had licence for to haue added vnto them, or to haue altered them, as vpon more deliberation should haue seemed me best. Ye graūted me also at the deliuary of my aunswere vnto your first proposition, a copie of the same: these promises are not performed. If your sodaine departure be any part of the cause therof, yet I pray you remember that they may be perfourmed: for performaunce of promise is to be looked for at a righteous Iudges handes. Nowe I send you here my aunsweres in wryting, to your second and third propositions, & doe desire and require earnestly a copie of the same, & I shal by Gods grace procure the paines of the wryter to be paid for and satisfied accordingly. Maister Prolocutor, in the time of my aunswearing in the Scholes, when I would haue cōfirmed my sayings with authorities and reasons, ye said then openly, that I should haue time and place to say and bring whatsoeuer I could an other time, and the same your saying was then there confirmed of other of the Commissioners: yea, and (I dare say) the audience also thoughte then that I shoulde haue had an other daye, to haue broughte and sayde what I coulde for the declaration and confirmation of mine assertions. Nowe that this was not done, but so sodainly sentence geuen before the cause was perfectly heard, I canne not but maruaile. &c.

On Monday next ensuing, after these things done and past, being the xxiiij. of the sayde moneth of Aprill, D. Weston Prolocutor tooke his iourney vp to London, with the letters certificatorie from y^e vniuersitie vnto the Queene, by whome the Archb. of Cant. directed his letters supplicatorie vnto the Counsaile. The whych letters after the Prolocutor had receiued, & had caried them wel neare halfe way to London, by the way he opened the same, and seeing the contentes thereof, sente them backe againe, refusing to carie them. &c. Likewise Bishoppe Ridley, hearing of the Prolocutors going to London, writeth to him his letters, wherein he desireth him to cary his answers vp to certaine Bishops in London, the forme of which letters, first of D. Ridley, then of the Archb. and lastly an other letter of D. Ridley to the Archbishop, here in order foloweth.

A letter of B. Ridley to the Prolocutor.

MAister Prolocutour, I desire you, and in Gods name require you, that you truely bring forth and shew al mine answers, wrytten and subscribed with mine owne hande, vnto the higher house of the Conuocation, and specially to my L. Chauncelor, my Lordes of Duresme, Ely, Worcester, Norwich, and Chichester, and also to shewe and exhibite this my wryting vnto them, whyche in these fewe lines heere I wryte vnto you: and that I did make thys request vnto you by this my wryting, know ye that I did take witnesse of them by whome I did send you this wryting, and also of those whiche were then with them present, videlicet, the two Bailiffes of Oxforde, and of master Irishe Alderman, then there called to be a witnesse.

By me Nicholas Ridley 23. of April, An. 1554.

The copie of the Archb. of Canterb. letters to the Counsaile, sent by Doctour Weston, who refused to deliuer them.

IN right humble wise sheweth vnto your honourable Lordships, Thomas Cranmer late Archbishop of Canterburie,* beseeching the same to be a meanes for mee vnto the Queenes highnesse for her mercy and pardon. Some of you knowe by what meanes I was broughte and trained vnto the will of oure late soueraigne Lorde king Edwarde the sixte, and what I spake against the same, wherein I referre me to the reportes of your honoures and woorships. Furthermore, this is to signifie vnto your Lordshippes, that vpon Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last past, were open disputations heere in Oxforde against me, maister Ridley, and maister Latimer, in three matters concerning the Sacrament: First of the reall presence, secondly of Transubstātiatiō, & thirdly of the sacrifice of the Masse: vpon Monday against me, vpon Tuesday against Doctour Ridley, and vpon Wednesday against maister Latimer. Howe the other two were ordered, I knowe not, for we were seperated▪ so that none of vs knoweth what the other sayd, nor how they were ordered. But as concerning my selfe I can report. Doctour Chadsey was appoynted to dispute against me, but the disputation was so confused, that I neuer knewe the like, euery man bringing forth what him liked▪ without order, and such hast was made,* that no aunswere coulde be suffered to be taken fully to any argument, before an other brought a newe argument: and in suche waightie matters the disputation must needes be ended in one day, which can scantly well be ended in three moneths. And when we had answered them, they woulde not appoynte vs one day to bring forth our proofes, that they might answere vs, being required by me thereunto, whereas I my selfe haue more to say, then can be well discussed, as I suppose in twentie dayes. The meanes to resolue the truth, had bene to haue suffered vs to aunswere fully to all that they coulde say, and then they again to answere vs fully to all that we can say. But why they woulde not answere vs, what other cause can there be, but that either they feared their matter, that they were not able to answere vs, or else for some consideration they made such hast, not to seke the truth, but to condemne vs, that it must be done in poast haste before the matters coulde be throughly heard: for in all haste we were all 3. condemned of heresie. Thus much I thought good to signifie vnto your Lordshippes, that you may knowe the indifferent handlinge of matters, leauing the iudgement thereof vnto your wisdomes.* And I beseeche your Lordships to remember me a poore prisonner vnto the Queenes Maiestie, and I shall pray as I doe daily, vnto God for the long preservation of your good Lordshippes in all godlinesse and felicitie. April. 23.

Doctour Ridley to the Archbishop of Caunterburie.

I Wishe ye might haue seene these mine answeres before I had deliuered them, y^t yee myght haue corrected them.* But I truste in the substaunce of the matter wee doe agree fully, both led by one spirite of truth, and both walking after one rule of Gods woorde. It is reported that Sergeant Morgane,* the chiefe Iustice of the Common place is gone madde. It is sayde also that Iustice Hales hath recanted, peruerted by D. Moreman. Item, that M. Rogers, D. Crome, and M. Bradforde shall be had to Cambridge, and there be disputed with, as we were here, and that the Doctours of Oxforde shall goe likewise thither,* as Cambridge men came hither. When ye haue red mine answeres, sende thē againe to Austen, except ye wil put any thing to them. I trust the day of oure deliuerie out of all miseries, and of our entrance into perpetuall rest, and vnto perpetuall ioye and felicitie draweth me: the Lorde strengthe vs wyth hys mighty spirite of grace. If you haue not to wryte with, you must make your man your frende. And this bearer deserueth to be rewarded, so he may and will doe you pleasure. My man is trustie, but it greeueth both him and mee, that when I sende hym with any thing to you, your man will not let him come vp to see you, as he maye to M. Latimer, and yours to me. I haue a promise to see how my answers were wrytten in the schooles, but as yet I cannot come by it. Praye for me. I pray for you, and so shall I for you. The Lord haue mercy of his church, and lighten the eyes of the magistrates, that Gods extreme plagues light not on this realme of England.

Turne, or burne.

Page 1465 These disputations being thus discoursed and ended, which were at Oxforde in the moneth of April, as is aforesayd: now let vs returne againe to the prosecuting of our story, touching other things likewise y^t happened in other parties of the realme, in this tumultuous time of Queene Marie. And because thinges that happened in that time, were so many and diuers, that it is hard to keepe a perfecte order in reciting them all: to the entent therefore to inserte things leaft out before, or els to prosecute the same more at full, we haue thought heere a litle to interrupt the order of time (albeit not much) returning againe to the moneth of Iulie the yeare before, videlicet. 1553. In the which moneth of Iuly I shewed before howe the Duke of Northumberland was apprehended by the Gard, and brought to London by the Earle of Arundell and other Lordes and Gentlemen appoynted for that purpose on S. Iames day, being the 25. day of Iuly, and so to the tower, where they remained. These be the names of them which were committed to the Tower with the Duke.

First the Earle of Warwike, the Earle of Huntington, Lord Ambrose,* and Lord Henry Dudley, Lord Hastings, who was deliuered againe y^e same night, sir Iohn Gates, sir Henry Gates, sir Andrew Dudley, sir Thom. Palmer, and D. Sandes Chancelour of Cambridge.

The 26. day the Lorde Marques of Northampton, the B. of London, Lord Robert Dudley, and sir Richard Corbet were brought and committed to the Tower.

The 27. day the Lorde chiefe Iustice of Englande, and the Lord Mountacute chiefe Iustice of the common place, were committed to the Tower.

Uppon the Friday being the 28. of Iulye, the Duke of Suffolke, and Sir Iohn Cheeke were committed to the Tower.

The 30. of Iulye, the Lorde Russell was committed to the Sheriffe of Londons custodie.

The 31. day the Earle of Rutlande was committed to the Fleete.

*Uppon the monday the last of Iuly, the Duke of Suffolke was deliuered out of the Tower againe.

Upon thursday the 3. of August, the Queene entred into the citie of London at Algate, & so to the Tower, where shee remained seuen daies, and then remooued to Richmond.

Uppon friday the fourth day, doct. Day was deliuered out of the Fleete.

Upon saterday the 5. day, the Lorde Feries was committed to the tower, and the same daye D. Boner was deliuered out of the Marshalsey. The same day at nyght D. Co•kes was committed to the Marshalsey, and one M. Edward Underhill to Newgate. Also the same day doctor Tons••• and Ste. Gardiner were deliuered out of the Tower▪ and Gardiner receiued into the Quenes priuie counsaile, and made Lord Chancellor.

Uppon Sunday the 7. day, Henry Dudley captaine of the Garde at Guynes,* whych before had beene sente to the French king by his cosin the Duke of Northumberlande, after the dispatch of his ambassage with the French kinge, returned to Guines, & so was taken, and this day brought to the Tower.

Uppon mondaye the seuenth day of August, Dirige in Latine was songe wythin the Tower, by all the Kynges Chappel, and the bishop of Winchester was chief minister, wherat was present the Queene, and the most parte of the Counsaile.

Uppon Tuesday the viij. day of August, the kings body was brought to Westminster, and there buried, where D. Day Bishop of Chichester preached. The same daye a Masse of Requiem was songe within the tower, by the Byshop of Winchester, who had on his Miter, & did al things as in times past was done, at whyche Masse the Queene was present.

Upon thursday the Duke of Northfolke came foorth of the Tower,* with whom the Duches of Somerset was also deliuered this thursday.

Uppon sonday the 11. of August, Doctor Bourne preached at Paules Crosse, of the whych sermone reade before, pag. 1339.

In the weeke folowing, commaundement was geuen throughout the citie, that no Prentises should come to the sermon, nor weare any knife or dagger.

Uppon the wednesday, being the xvi. daye of August, M. Bradford, M. Beacon, and M. Ueron, were committed to the Tower: with whom also M. Sampson shoulde haue bene committed,* and was sought for the same time in M. Elsinges house in Fleetestreete (where M. Bradforde was taken) and because he was not founde, the Byshop of Winchester fumed like a prelate with the messenger.

Upon the Fridaye being the 18. of August, the Duke of Northumberland, the marques of Northampton, and the Earle of Warwicke were arrayned at Westminster, and there y^e same day condemned, the Duke of Northfolke that day being the high Iudge.

Upon saterday the 19. of August, sir Andrew Dudley, sir Iohn Gates, sir Henrye Gates, and sir Thomas Palmer were araigned at Westminster, & condemned the same day, the L. Marques of Winchester being hie Iudge.

Upō which day, a letter was sent vnto sir Henry Tirrel, Anthony Browne, and Edmonde Browne Esquiers, praying them to committe to warde all suche as shall contemne the Queenes order of religion, or shall keepe them selues from church, there to remaine vntill they be conformable, and to signifie their names to the counsaile.

Upon Sunday the 20. of August,* Doctour Watson the Byshoppe of Winchester's Chaplaine Preached at Paules Crosse, at whose Sermon was presente the Marques of Winchester, the Earle of Bedford, the Earle of Penbroke, the Lord Rich, and two hundred of the Garde wyth their Halbardes, lest the people would haue made any sturre against the Preacher.

Uppon Monday the 21. of August, the Duke of Northumberlande, the Marques of Northampton, Syr Andrewe Dudley, Syr Iohn Gates, and Syr Thomas Palmer hearde a Masse wythin the Tower, and after Masse they all fiue receaued the Sacramente in one kinde onely, as in the Popishe time was vsed. On the whiche day also Queene Mary set forth a Proclamation, signifying to the people that she could not hide any longer the religiō which she from her infancy had professed. &c. inhibiting in the said Proclamation Printing & Preaching, the tenour wherof, read before pag. 1334.

Uppon the Tuesday, being the 22. of August, the Duke of Northumberlande, Syr Iohn Gates, and Syr Thomas Palmer, were beheaded at the Tower hil, as before is sayd, pag. 1338.* The same day certaine noble personnages heard Masse wythin the Tower, and likewise after masse, receaued the Sacrament in one kinde.

Uppon Sunday the 27. day of August, Doctour Chedsey Preached at Paules Crosse, and the same daye the Byshop of Canterbury, Syr Thomas Smith, and the deane of Paules were cited to appeare the weeke following before the Queenes Commissioners, in the Bishops Consistorie within Paules.

In this meane time it was noysed abroad by running rumours falsely and craftely deuised, eyther to stablish the credite of the Masse, or els to brynge Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury out of credite, that he to currye fauour with Queene Mary, should promise to say Dirige Masse after the old custome, for king Edward, and that he had already sayd Masse at Caunterburie, &c. Wherefore to stoppe the noyse and slaunder of those rumours, the sayde Thomas Archb. of Caunter. the 7. day of September sette foorth a letter, which was also printed, in purgation of him selfe, the copie of which letter heere ensueth.

A purgation of Thomas, Archbishoppe of Caunterburie, against certaine sclaunders falsely raised vpon him.

AS the deuill, Christes auncient aduersarie, is a lier and the father of lies,euen so hath he stirred vp his seruants and members, to persecute Christ and his true worde and religion with lying: which hee ceaseth not to doe most earnestly at this present time. For where as the Prince of famous memorie kinge Henrie the eighte seeing the greates abuses of the Latine Masse, reformed some things therein in his life time, and after our late soueraigne Lord king Edward the 6. tooke the same whole away for the manifolde and great errors and abuses of the same, and restored in the place therof Christes holy Supper according to Christes own institution, and as the Apostles used the same in the primatiue Church: the deuill goeth about nowe by lying to ouerthrow the Lordes holy Supper againe, and to restore his Latine satisfactorie Masse, a thing of his owne inuention and deuise. And to bringe the same more easylie to passe, some haue abused the name of mee Thomas Archb. of Canterburie, bruting abroad that I haue set vp the Masse again at Canterburie, & that I offred to say Masse at the buriall of our late soueraign prince K. Ed. 6. & that I offred also to say Masse before the Queenes highnesse and at Paules Church, and I wot not where. And although I haue bene well exercised these xx• yeres to suffer and beare euill reports and lyes, and haue not bene much greued thereat, but haue borne all things quietly, yet when vntrue reports & lyes turne to the hinderance of Gods truth, they are in no wise to be suffered. Wherefore these bee to signifie vnto the world, that it was not I that dyd set vp the Masse at Caunterbury, but it was a false flatteryng, lying, and dissembling Page 1466 monke, which caused Masse to be set vp there without mine aduise or Counsell: Reddat illi Dominus in die illo. And as for offering my selfe to say Masse before the Queenes highnesse or in any other place, I neuer did it, as her grace well knoweth. But if her grace will geue me leaue,* I shalbe ready to prooue, against all that will saye the contrary, that all that is contained in the holy Communion set out by the most innocent and godly Prince king Edward the 6. in his high court of Parliament, is conformable to that order which our Sauour Christ did both obserue and commaund to be obserued, & which his Apostles & primatiue church vsed many yeares, whereas the Masse in many things not onely hath no foundation of Christe, his Apostles, nor the primatiue Church, but is manifestly contrary to the same, and cōtaineth many horrible abuses in it. And although many, either vnlearned or malicious, do report that M. Peter Martyr is vnlearned, yet if the Queene• highnes wil graunt thereunto, I with the sayde M. Peter Martyr, and other 4. or 5. whiche I shall chuse, will by Gods grace take vppon vs to defende, not onely the common praiers of the Church, the ministration of the Sacraments, and other rites & ceremonies: but also al the doctrine and religion set out by our said soueraigne Lord king Edward the 6. to be more pure and according to Gods worde, then any other that hath bene vsed in England these 1000. yeares: so that Gods word may be iudge, & that the reasons and proufes of both parties may be sette out in wryting, to the intent, as well that all the worlde maye examine and iudge thereon, as that no man shall start backe from his wrytinge. And where they boast of the faith that hath bene in the Church these 1500. yeres, we will ioyne with them in this poynt, and that the same doctrine and vsage, is to be followed, whiche was in the Church .1500. yeres past, and we shall prooue that the order of the Church, let out at this present in this Realme by Acte of Parlament, is the same that was vsed in the Church .1500. yeres past, & so shall they be neuer able to prooue theirs.

The same Thursday beinge the 7. of Septemb. Lorde Mountacute chiefe Iustice, and Lorde chiefe Baron were deliuered out of the Tower.

The 13. of September the reuerende father M. Hughe Latimer was committed to the Tower.

The 14. of Septemb. the bishop of Caunterburye was committed to the Tower.

The 26. of September, one Maister Graye of Cambridge called before hym one M. Garth, for that he would not suffer a boy of Peter house to helpe hym saye Masse in Penbroke hal, which was before any law was established for that behalfe.

The Queene came to the Tower of London vpon the Thursday being the 28. of September,* and vpon the Saturday following, shee rode from the Tower thorough the Citie of London, where were made many Pageants to receiue her, and so was triumphantly brought to Westminster to White hall.

Uppon the Sondag being the first day of October, the Queenes highnesse went from White hall to Westminster Abbey, accompanied wyth the most part of the Nobility of this Realme, namelye these: The Duke of Norfolke, the Earle of Arundell, the Earle of Shrewsburie, the Marques of Winchester, the Earls of Darby, Bedford, Worcester, Cumberland, Westmerland, Oxford, Sussex, Deuonshire, Penbroke, the Lord Dacres of the North, Lord Ferris, Lorde Cobham, Lord Aburgeiny, Lord Wentwoorth, Lord Scroupe, Lord Rich, Lord Uaus, Lorde Hawarde, Lord Conias, Lord Morley, Lorde Paget, and the Lorde Willowbye, with many other Nobles, and all the Embassadours of diuers countreys, the Maior of London wyth all the Aldermen. Also out of the Abbey to receiue her comming, came three siluer Crosses, and to the number of four score or neare vppon,* of singing men, all in very rich & gorgeous coapes. Amongest whom were the Deane of Westminster, and diuers of her Chaplaines, which bare euerye one some ensigne in their handes, and after them followed 10. Byshops mytred all, and their Croyser stauies in theyr handes, and rich Copes vpon them euery one. And in this order they returned frō Westminster hal, before the Quene to the Abbey, where she was crowned by Steuen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, and Lorde Chancellor of England. At the time of the Coronation Doctour Day Bishop of Chichester made a sermon to the Queenes maiestie, and to the rest of the nobilitie.

Also there was a generall Pardon proclaimed wythin the Abbey at the sayd time of her Coronation, out of which Proclamation all the prisonners of the Tower and of the Flete were excepted, and 62. more. Wherof M. Whitchurch and M. Grafton were two.

The thirde of October, the Uicechauncellour of Cambridge did challenge one M. Pierson, for that hee ministred still the Communion in his owne Parish, and did receyue straungers of other Parishes to the same, and woulde not say masse. Whereupon within 2. dayes after, he was cleane discharged from farther ministring in his Cure.

Uppon the Wedensday following,* the Archb. of Yorke was committed to the Tower.

Uppon Thursdays being the 5. of October. 1553. the Queene road to the Parliament in her roabes, and all the nobilitie with her, and when they were set in the Parliament house, the Bishop of Winchester made to them a solemne Oration, and Sergeant Pollarde was chosen speaker of the Parliament. The same day the Bishops of Lincolne, Harford, and Westchester, were discharged from the Parliament and Conuocation.

Also the 10. daye of October, the Earle of Huntington was deliuered out of the Tower.

Upon the Sondag after, being the 15. of Oct. M. Laurence Saunders preached at Alhallowes in Breadstreete in y^e morning: where he declared the abhominacion of the masse, with diuers other matters very notably and godly. Wherof more shalbe heard (by the Lordes leaue) heereafter when we come to his story. In which his doing, as he shewed himselfe to be Gods faithful minister, so is he sure not to be defrauded of gods faithful promise, who sayth: Omnis qui confitebitur me coram hominibus, confitebor & ego illum coram patre meo qui est in coelis.

Math. 10. But about noone of the same day he was sent for by the bishop of London, and from thence committed to the Marshalsee.

Upon the Sunday folowing, being the 20. of October, Doctor Weston preached at Paules Crosse.* Who in the beginning of his Sermone willed the people to praye for the soules departed on this wise: You shall pray for all them y^t be departed, that be neither in heauē, nor hell, but in a place not yet sufficiently purged to come to heauē, that they may be releued by your deuout prayers. He named the Lodes table an oyster board. He saide that the Catechisme in Latin, lately sette out, was abhominable heresie, & likened the setters out of the same Catechisme to Iulianus Apostata, and the booke for a Dialogue set out by the sayd Iulianus Apostata, wherein Christ and Pilate were the speakers:* with many other things. Which Sermon with al the poynts therof, maister Couerdall the same time learnedly confuted by wryting, which remaineth yet in my handes to be seene.

In the weeke following, began the disputations in the conuocation house in Paules Church, whereof sufficient hath bene before declared, pag. 1342.

The 26. day of October, the Uicechauncellour of Cambridge went to Clarehall, and in the presence of Doctoure Walker, displaced Doctour Madewe, and placed Maister Swynborne in the Maistership there, by force of the Lorde Chauncellours letters, for that he was (as they termed it,) Vxoratus, that is, married.

The 28. day of October,* the Papistes in the kings colledge in Cambridge (not tarying the making of any lawe, but of their blinde zeale) had their whole seruice againe in the Latin tong, contrary to the law then in force.

The last of October, the Uicechauncelloure of Cambridge, did sharply reprocue and threaten one M. Thrackold, for that he challenged the sayd Uicechauncellor, who had suffered maister Bouell (contrary to the statutes then in force) quietly wythout punishment to depart, notwithstanding that he refused to sweare to the supremacie of the Queene, and the abrogation of the bishop of Rome.

The third day of Nouember,* the Uicechauncellor sent for the Curate of the rounde Parish in Cambridge, commaunding hym not to minister any more in the English tounge, saying: he would haue one vniforme order of seruice throughout the Towne, and that in Latine, wyth Masse, which was established the xij. day of this moneth.

The 6. day of Nouember, M. Pollarde preached at S. Michaels, and in his Sermon approoued Purgatorie.

The 28. day of Nouember, the Archdeacons Officiall visited in Hynton, where hee gaue in charge to present all suche as did disturbe the Queenes proceedings, in letting the Latine seruice, the setting vp of their altars, and saying of Masse, or any parte thereof: whereby it was easie to see how these good fellowes ment to proceede, hauing the law once on their side, that thus readely against a manifest law would attempt the punishment of any man.

The 15. day of December,* there was two Proclamations at London: the one for the repealing of certaine actes made by kynge Edwarde, and for the setting vppe of the Masse, for the 20. day of December then next folowing: the other was, that no man should interrupt any of those that would say Masse.

The Parliament beginning aboute the v. daye of October, continued till the fifth of December. In the whyche Parliament were dissolved as well all Statutes made of Fremunire, in the time of King Henrie viij. &c. as also other Page 1467 lawes and statutes concerning religion and administration of Sacraments decreed vnder king Edwarde the 6. as is partly aboue touched. In the which Parliament moreouer was appoynted the 20. day of December next ensuing the same yeare .1553. that all the olde forme and manner of Church seruice, vsed in the last yere of king Henry, should now againe be restored.

On Newyeres euen being the last of December, the Lorde Marques of Northampton was deliuered oute of the Tower.

About this time a Priest at Caunterbury sayde Masse on the one day,* & the next day after he came into the pulpit and desired all the people to forgeue him, for he said he had betraied Christe, but not as Iudas did, but as Peter did, and there made a long Sermon against the Masse.

The day after Newyeres day, being the seconde daye of Ianuary, in the yeare of our Lord. 1554. foure Ambassadors came into London from the Emperour, and were honorably receiued. Their names were these. Le Countie de Egmont, Le Countie de Lalen, Mounsieur Corire, Le Chauncellour Nigre.

About this time a great number of newe Byshoppes, Deanes. &c. were chosen, more then were made at one time since the Conquest. Theyr names are these.

- D. Holyman B. of Bristow.
- D. Coates B. of Westchester.*
- D. Hopton Byshop of Norwiche.
- D. Bourne B. of Bathe.
- D. White B. of Lyncolne.
- D Mores B. of Rochester.
- D. Morgan Bishop of S. Dauies.
- D. Poole B. of S. Asse.
- D. Brookes Bish. of Glocester.
- D. Moreman, coadiutour to the Byshop of Exceter, & after his decease Byshop of Exceter.
- D. Glin B. of Bangor.
- Maister Fecknam Deane of Paules.
- D. Rainoldes Deane of Bristow, with others.

The 12. day of Ianuarie, the Uicechancellour of Cambridge called a congregation generall, wherein amongst other things, he shewed that the Quene would haue there a Masse of the holy Ghost vppon the 18. day of Februarie then next following, for that it was her birthe day, whyche was fulfilled the day appoynted, and that very solemnely.

Upon the Saturday being the 13. of Ianuarie Doctour Crome was committed to the Fleete. Also vpon the Sunday following, one M. Addington was committed to the Tower.* Also this same Sunday knowledge was giuen in the Court openly by the B. of Winchester, that the marryage betweene the Queenes maiestie & the king of Spaine was concluded, and the day following, being monday and the 15. of Ianuary,* the Maior, with the Aldermen and certaine Commoners were at the Court, and there they were commanded by the Lord Chauncellor to prepare the Citie ready to receiue the said king of Spaine, who declared vnto them what a Catholicke, mighty, prudent & wise prince the said king is, with many other commendations of him.

Upon the Saturday folowing, being the 20. of Ian. the Court of the first fruites and tenthes was dissolved.

Upon the Thursday at night, following the 25. day of Ianuarie, the Lorde Marques of Northampton was againe committed to the Tower, and sir Edward Warnar with him. Who were brought to the Tower by the Maior.

Uppon the Saterdaye followinge, being the 26. of Ianuary, Iustice Hales was committed to the Marshalsee, and the same day maister Rogers was cōmitted to Newgate.* Upon this Saterdag, Sunday, and Monday folowing the Londiners prepared a number of souldiors (by the Queenes commaundement) to goe into Kent against the Commons: whereof were chiefe Captaines the Duke of Northfolke, the Earle of Wormewood, sir Harry Iernyngham, sir George Haward, and 10. other captaines. Which soldiors when they came to Rochester bridge, where they should haue set vpon their enemies, most of them (as it is sayde) lefte theyr owne Captaines, and came wholly to the Kentishmen, and so the foresaid Captaines returned to the Court, both void of men and victory, leauing behind them both 6. peeces of ordinance, and treasure.

Aboute the latter ende of Ianuarie, the Duke of Suffolke with his brethren departed from his house at Shene, and tooke hys voyage into Leycester shyre. After whome was sent the Earle of Huntington to take hym and bring hym to London, who proclaimed the said Duke traytor by the way as he r•ade.

And thus passing to the moneth of Februarie, heere is to be noted by the way of story, that vpon the 15. day of the sayd moneth being Thursday, there was seene wythin the Citie of London, aboute 9. of the clocke in the forenoone, straunge sightes.* There was seene two Sunnes both shining at once, the one a good prety way distaunt from the other. At the same time was also seene a Rainebowe turned contrary, and a great deale higher then hath bene accustomed. The common standinge of the Raynebowe is thus with the heade downward, and the feete as it were vpwarde. Both these sightes were sene, as wel at Westminster, in Cheapeside, on the Southside of Paules, as in very many other places, and that by a great number of honest men. Also certaine Aldermen went out of the Guild Hall to beholde the sight.

As touching the rising of master Wyate, with Syr W. Cobham and others in Kent, and there comming to London in the moneth of Februarie: also of the Queenes comming to the Guilde Hall, and her Oration there made: and after of the taking of the said Wyat and his company: likewise of the apprehension of the Duke of Suffolke with his brother Lord Iohn Gray: and the next day after of beheading of Lord Gildford and Lady Iane, which was the 12. day of February, and how the day before, which was 11. of the sayd moneth, Lord William Haward and sir Edward Hastings, were sent for the Ladie Elizabeth: and how the same Sondag, Syr Harrye Iseley, M. Culpeper,* and M. Winter were committed to the Tower, the B. of Winchester, the same daye being the 11. of Februarie, preaching before the Queene, and perswading her to vse no mercy towarde these Kentishmen, but seuer execution, all whyche was in the moneth of February: because most of these matters haue bene briefly touched before, or els may be founde in other Chronicles, I wil cease to make any further story of them: hauing somewhat notwithstanding to declare touching the raiment and death of the Duke of Suffolke.

Uppon Saturday, beinge the 17. day of Februarye, the Duke of Suffolke was arraigned at Westminster, and the same day condemned to die by his Peres, the Earle Arundel was chiefe Iudge for this day.*

Uppon the Sondag following, which was the 18. day of the sayd moneth, Sessions was kept in London, whych hath not before bene sene to be kept vpon the Sondag.

Upon the monday the 19. of Februarie, the Lord Cobhams 3. sonnes, and 4. other men were arraigned at Westminster: of whiche sonnes the youngest was condemned, whose name is Thomas, and the other two came not at the barre, and the other 4. were condemned.

Upon the Tuesday being the 20. of February,* the Lord Iohn Gray was arraigned at Westminster, and there condemned the same day, and other 3. men, whereof one was named Nailer.

Upon the Wedensday the 21. of Februarie, the L. Thomas Gray, and sir Iames Croft were broughte throughe London to the Tower with a number of horsemen.*

Upon the Thursday being the 22. of Februarie, syr Nicholas Throgmorton was committed to the Tower.

Uppon the Friday being the 23. of Februarie. 1554. the Duke of Suffolke was beheaded at the Tower hil, the order of whose death heere followeth.

The godly ende and death of the Duke of Suffolke beheaded at Tower hil. An. 1554. Febr. 23.

ON Friday the 23. of February. 1554. about 9. of y^e clocke in the fore noone, the Lorde Henrie Gray duke of Suffolke, was broughte foorth of the Tower of London vnto the Scaffolde on the Tower hill,* wyth a greate company, &c. and in his comming thither, there accompanied him Doctor Weston as his Ghostly father, notwythstanding, as it should seeme, against the will of the sayde Duke. For when the Duke went vp to the Scaffolde, the sayd Weston being on his left hand, preased to goe vp wyth hym. The Duke with his hand put him downe againe of the staires:

and Weston taking holde of the Duke, forced hym downe likewise. And as they ascended the second time, the Duke againe put him downe.

Then Weston sayde that it was the Queenes pleasure he shoulde so doe. Wherewith the Duke casting hys handes abroad, ascended vpp the Scaffolde, and paused a pretie while after. And then he sayde: Maisters I haue offended the Queene, and her lawes, and thereby am iustly condemned to die, and am willing to die, desiring all men to be obedient, and I praye God that thys my death may be an ensample to all men,* beseeching you all to beare mee witnesse, that I die in the faithe of Christe, trusting to bee saued by his bloude onely, and by no other trumperie, the whych died for me, and for all them that truly repent, and stedfastly trust in him. And I do repent, desiring you all to pray to God for me, that when you see my breathe departe frō me, you wil pray to God that he may receiue my soule. And then he desired all men to forgeue him, saying that the Queene had forgeuen him.

Page 1468Then M. Weston declared with a loude voyce that the Queenes Maiestie had forgiuen him. With that, diuers of the standers by said with meetely good and audible voice: such forgiuenes God send thee, meaning Doctor Weston. Then the Duke kneeled downe vpon his knees, and sayd the Psalme Miserere mei Deus, vnto the end, holding vp his hands, and looking vp to heauen. And when he had ended the Psalme,* he sayd: In manus tuas Domine commendo spiritum meum, &c. Then he arose and stode vp, and deliuered his cap and his skarffe vnto the executioner.

Then the sayd executioner kneeled downe and asked the Duke forgiuenes. And the Duke sayd, God forgiue thee & I do, & when thou doest thine office, I pray thee do it wel, and bring me out of this world quickly,* and God haue mercy to thee. Then stood there a man and sayd, my Lord, how shal I do for the money that you do owe me? And the Duke sayd, alas good felow, I pray thee trouble mee not now, but go thy way to my officers. Then he knit a kercher about his face, and kneeled downe and said, Our father which art in heauen, &c. vnto the ende. And then he saide, Christ haue mercy vpon me,* and layd downe his head on the blocke, and the executioner tooke the Axe, and at the first chop stroke off his head, and held it vp to y^e people, &c.

The same day a number of prisoners had their pardon, and came through the Citie with their halters about theyr neckes. They were in * number about two hundreth.

Upon the Saterdag the 24. of February. Syr William Sentlow was committed as prisoner to the maister of the horse to be kept. This Syr William was at this time one of the Lady Elizabeths Gentlemen.

Upon the Sunday beeing 25. of February, Syr Iohn Rogers was committed to the Tower.

In this weeke, all suche Priestes within the Dioces of London as were married, were diuorced from theyr liuings, and commaunded to bring in their wiues within a fortnight, that they might likewise be diuorced from them. This the Byshop did of his owne power.

Upon the Tuesday in the same weeke, being the 27. of February,* certayne Gentlemen of Kent were sente into Kent to be executed there. Their names were these, the two Mantels, two Kneuels, and Bret: with these, Maister Rudston also and certayne other were condemned, and should haue bene executed, but they had their pardon.

As touching the foresayde Maister Mantell the elder, heere by the way is to be noted, that as he was lead to execution, and at his first casting vnder the Gallowes, the rope brake. Then they woulde haue had him recanted the trueth, and receiued the sacrament of the aultar (as they tearme it) and then they sayd he should haue the Queenes pardon: but Maister Mantell like a worthy Gentleman, refused their serpentine counsell, and chose rather to dye, then to haue lyfe for dishonouring of God.

Moreouer, as touching the sayid M. Mantell, for that he was reported falsely to haue fallen from the constancie of his profession, to cleare himselfe thereof, and to reproue the sinister surmise of his recantation, he wrote this brieue Apologie in purgation of himselfe: the copie whereof you shall heare.

¶The Apologie of M. Mantell the elder.

PERceiuing that already certayne false reports are rayseed of me concerning my aunsweres in the behalfe of my beliefe,* whiles I was prisoner in the Tower of London, and considering how sore a matter it is to be an occasion of offence to any of those little ones that beleeeue in Christ:* haue thought it the duty of a Christian man as neare as I can (with the truth) to take away thys offence. It pleased the Queenes Maiesty to send vnto me M. Doct. Bourne,* vnto whome at the first meeting I acknowledged my fayth in all points to agree with the foure Creedes, that is, the common Creede, the Creede of Nicene, Quicunque vult, and Te Deum laudamus.

Further, as concerning confession and penance, I declared that I could be contente to shewe vnto anye learned Minister of Christes Church, any thing that troubled my conscience, and of such a mā I would most willingly heare absolution pronounced.

Touching the Sacrament of the aultar (as he termed it) I sayd that I beleeeued Christ to be there present as the holy Ghost ment when these words were written:* Hoc est corpus meum.

Further, when this would not satisfye, I desired him to consider that I was a condemned man to dye by a law, and that it was more mee•e for me to seeke a readines and preparation to death. And in so much as I dissented not from him in any article of the Christian fayth necessary to saluation, I desired him for Gods sake no more to trouble me with such matters, as whiche to beleeeue is neyther saluation, nor not to beleeeue, damnation. He aunswered, that if I dissented but in the least matter frō the catholick Church, my soule was in great daunger, therefore much more in thys great matter, alleading this text: Qui offenderit in minimo, factus est reus omnium. He that offendeth in the least of these, is guilty of them all. Yea (quoth I) Verum est,* ex hisce mandatis i. It is true, of these commaundementes of God. To this I desired him to consider, that it was not my matter, neither was I able in these matters to keepe disputation, nor minded so to doe, and therefore to take these few wordes for a full aunswere, that I not onely in the matter of the sacrament, but also in all other matters of Religion,* Beleeeue as the holy Catholicke Church of Christ (grounded vpon the Prophetes and Apostles) beleeeueth. But vppon this worde Church we agreed not, for I tooke exceptionat the Antichristian Popish Church.

Then fell we in talke of the Masse, wherein wee agreed not: ^{*} for I, both for the occasion of Idolatry, and also the cleare subuersion of Christes institution, thought it nought, and he è cōtra vpon certaine considerations supposed it good. I founde fault that it was accounted a Sacrifice propiciatory for sinne, and at certaine other applications of it. But he sayde that it was not a propiciatory sacrifice for sinne (for the death of Christ onely was the Sacrifice) and this but a commemoration of the same. Then I: if ye thinke so, certaine blasphemous collectes left out, I could be content (were it not for offending my poore brethren that beleue in Christ, which know not so muche) to heare your Masse. See (quoth he) howe vayne glory toucheth you. Not so sir (quoth I) I am not now I thanke God, in case to be vayne glorious.

Then I found further faulte with it, that it was not a communion. Yes (sayth he) one Priest saying Masse here, ^{} and an other there, and the third in an other place &c. is a communion. This agreeth scarcely with these words of Paule (sayd I): Non in melius, sed in deterius conuenitis i. Ye come not after a better maner, but after a worse. Yea, ^{} and it is a communion to (said he) when they come together. Now draweth on the time (quoth hee) that I must depart from you to the Court, to saye Masse before the Queene, and must signifie vnto her in what case I finde you, and me thinke I finde you sore seduced. Then I sayd, I pray you report the best, for I trust you finde me not obstinate. What shall I say are ye content to heare Masse, ^{*} and to receaue the sacrament in the Masse? I beseeche you, sayd I, signifie vnto her Maiestie, that I am neither obstinate, nor stubburne, for time and perswasion may altar me, but as yet my cōscience is such, that I can neither heare Masse, nor receaue the sacrament after that sort, Thus after certaine requestes made to the Queenes Maiestie concerning other matters, he departed.

The next daye hee came to me agayne and brought with him S. Cyprians woorkes, for so I had required him to doe the day before, because I woulde see his sermon De mortalitate. He had in thys booke turned in and interlyned certaine places both concerning the Church and the sacrament which he willed me to read. I read as much as my time would serue, and at his next cōming I sayd that I was wholly of Cyprians mynd, in the matter of the Sacrament. Doctour Weston and Doctour Mallet came after to me, whome I aunswered muche after that sorte as I did the other. Doctour Weston brought in the place of Ciprian, Panis iste non effigie sed natura mutatus. &c. I asked of him how natura was taken in the Conuocation house in the disputation, vpon the place of Theodoret.

To be short Doctour Bourne came often vnto me, and I alwayes sayde vnto him that I was not minded nor able to dispute in matters of Religiō, but I beleued as the holy Catholick Church of Christ, grounded vpon the Prophetes and Apostles doth beleue, and namely in the matter of the Sacrament, as the holy fathers Cyprian and Augustine do write and beleued, and this aunswere and none other they had of me in effecte, what wordes soeuer haue bene spread abroad of me that I should be conformable to all thinges &c. The trueth is, ^{*} I neither heard Masse nor receaued the sacrament during the time of my imprisonment.

One time he willed me to be confessed. I sayd I am content. We kneeled downe to pray together in a windowe. I beganne without Benedicite, desiring him not to looke at my hand for any superstitious particular enumeration of my sinnes Therewith he was called away to the Coūcell, & ego liberatus Thus muche I beare onely for my life, as God knoweth. If in this I haue offended any Christian, from the bottome of my hart I aske them forgeuenes. I trust God hath forgeuen me, who knoweth that I durst neuer deny him before men, least he shoulde deny me before his heauenly father.

Thus haue I left behinde me written with myne own hand the effect of all the talke, especially of the worst that euer I graunted vnto, to the vttermost I can remember, as (God knoweth) all the whole communication I haue not written, for it were both to long and to foolish so to doe. Now I beseche the liuing God which hath receiued me to his mercy and brought to passe that I dye steadfast and vndefiled in his trueth, at vtter defiaunce and detestation of all Papisticall and Antichristian doctrine, I beseech him (I say) to keepe and defend al his chosen for his names sake, from the tyranny of the Byshop of Rome Page 1469 that Antichrist,* and from the assault of all his satellites. Gods indignation is knowne: he will trie and proue who be his. Amend your liues. Deny not Christ before men, least he deny you before his heauenly father. Feare not to lose your liues for him, for yee shall fynde them agayne. God hold his mercifull hand ouer thys Realme, and auert the plagues imminent, from the same. God saue the Queene, and send her knowledge in his truth. Amen, pray, pray, pray ye Christians, and comfort your selues with the Scriptures.

Written the 2. of March. an. 1554.

by me Walter Mantell prisoner, whom both God and the world hath forgeuen his offences.
Amen.

And thus much concerning the purgation of Mayster Walter Mantell, who if he had cōsented vnto the Queene, what time she sent Doctour Bourne vnto him, to deny his fayth, it is not otherwise to be thought, but he had had his pardon, and escaped with life.

Upon the Saterday being the iij. of March, sir Gawen Carew,* and maister Gibbes were brought through London to the Tower with a company of horsemen.

In Lōdon the vij. day of March, euery housholder was commaunded to appeare before the Alderman of their ward, and there were commaunded, that they, their wiues and seruants should prepare themselues to shrift, and receiue the Sacrament at Easter, and that neither they, nor any of them should depart out of the Citie, vntill Easter was past.

*Upon the Sondag following, being the xvij. daye of March, the Lady Elizabeth, of whom mention was made before, the Queenes Sister, was brought to the Tower.

Upon Easter euen, being the xxiiij. of March, the Lorde Marques of Northampton, the Lord Cobham, and Sir William Cobham were deliuered out of the Tower.

The xxv. day (being Easter day) in the morning, at S. Pancrase in Cheape, the Crucifixe with the Pixe were taken out of the Sepulchre,* before the Priest rose to the resurrection: so that when after his accustomed maner he put his hande into the Sepulchre, and sayde very deuoutely: Surrexit non est hic, he found his words true, for he was not there in deede. Whereupon being halfe dismayed, they consulted amongst themselues whom they thought to be likeliest to do this thing. In which debatement they remembred one Marsh, which a little before had bene put from that personage, because he was married, to whose charge they layde it.* But when they could not proue it, beeing brought before the Maior, they then burdened him to haue kept company with his wife, since that they were by commaundement diuorsed. Whereto he aunswered, that hee thought the Queene had done him wrong to take from him both his liuing and his wife: which words were then noted, and taken very greeuously, and he and his wife were both committed to seuerall Counters, notwithstanding that he had bene very sicke.

The viij. of Aprill, there was a Cat hanged vpon a gallowes at the Crosse in Cheape,* apparelled like a Priest, ready to say Masse, with a shauen crowne. Her two forefeete were tyed ouer her head, with a rounde paper lyke a wafer cake put betweene them: whereon arose great euil will against the Citie of London. For the Queene and the Byshops were very angry withall: and therefore the same after noone, there was a Proclamation, that who soeuer could bring foorth the partie that did hang vp the Cat, should haue xx. nobles, which reward was afterwarde increased to xx. markes, but none could, or would earne it.

As touching the first occasion of setting vp this Gallowes in Cheapeside,* heere is to be vnderstand, that after the Sermon of the Byshop of Winchester (aboue mentioned) made before the Queene for the straite execution of Wyats souldiours, immediately vppon the same the xiiij. of February, were set vp a great number of Gallowes in diuers places of the Citie, namely two in Chepeside, one at Leaden hall, one at Billynges gate, one at S. Magnus Church, one in Smithfield, one in Fleetestreete, foure in Southwarke, one at Allgate, one at Byshops gate, one at Aldersgate, one at Newgate, one at Ludgate, one at Saint Iames parcke corner, one at Cripplegate: all which Gibbets & gallowes to y^e number of xx. there remained for terrour of other, frō the xiiij. of February, till the iiij. of Iune, & then at the cōming in of King Philip were taken downe.

The xj. day of Aprill, was Syr Thomas Wyat beheaded and quartered at the Tower hill, where hee vttered these woordes,* touching the Lady Elizabeth, and the Earle of Deuonshyre. Concerning (sayd he) what I haue sayd of other in my examination, to charge any other as partakers of my doings, I accuse neyther my Lady Elizabeths grace, nor my Lord of Deuonshyre. I can not accuse them, neyther am I able to say, that, to my knowledge, they knew any thing of my rising. And when Doctour Weston tolde him, that his confession was otherwise before the Counsell, he aunswered: that which I said then, I sayd: but that which I say now, is true.

Uppon the Tuesday beeing the xvij. of Aprill, Syr Iames Croft, and Maister Winter,* were brought to the Guild hall, with whom also the same time, and to the same place was brought sir Nicholas Throgmorton, and there arraigned of treason, for that he was suspected to be of the conspiracie with the Duke of Suffolke & the rest, agaynst y^e Queene, where he so learnedly and wisely behaued him selfe (as well in clearing his owne case, as also in opening such lawes of the Realme as were then alledged agaynst him) that the Quest which was charged with his matter, could not in conscience, but finde him not guilty:* for y^t which the said xij. persons of the Quest, being also substantiall mē of the Citie, were bounde in the summe of 500. poundes a peece, to appeare before y^e Queenes Counsell at a day appointed, there to answeere such things as should be laid against thē for his acquiting. Which Quest appeared accordingly before the Counsell in the Starre chamber vppon Wednesday, being the xxv. of Aprill, and S. Markes daye.* From whēce, after certaine questioning, they were cōmitted to prison, Emanuell Lucar, & maister Whetstone were committed to the Tower, and the other ten to the Fleete.

As concerning the condemnation of Thomas Archbyshop of Cant. of Doctour Ridley, and M. Latymer, which was the xx. of this moneth of Aprill, & also of their disputations, because we haue sayd enough before, it shall not neede now to bestow any further rehearsall thereof.

The Friday next following, after the condemnation of them, the xxvij. of Aprill, Lord Thomas Gray,* the late Duke of Suffolkes brother, was beheaded at Tower hil.

Upon the Saterdag, beeing the xxviij. of Aprill, Syr Iames Croft, and Maister Winter were agayne brought to the Guild hall, where Sir Iames Croft was arraigned and condemned, and because the day was farre spent, Maister Winter was not arraigned.

Upon the Thursday, being the xvij. of May, William Thomas was arraigned at the Guild Hall,* and there the same day condemned, who the next day after, was hanged, drawne, and quartered. His accusation was, for cōspiring the Queenes death: which how true it was, I haue not to say. This is certaine, that he made a right godly ende, and wrote many fruitfull exhortations, Letters and Sonets in the prison before his death.

In the moneth of May it was so giuen out, and bruiited abroad,* that a solemne disputation should be holden at Cambridge (as ye heard before in Maister Ridleys letter page. 1396) betwene M. Bradford, M. Saunders, mayster Rogers, and other of that side, and the Doctours of both the Uniuersities on the other side, like as had bene in Oxford before, as you haue heard. Whereupon y^e godly Preachers which were in prison hauing word therof, albeit they were destitute of their bookes, neither were ignorant of the purpose of the aduersaries, and how y^e cause was preiudicate before, also how the disputations were cōfusedly hādled at Oxford: neuerthelesse they thought not to refuse the offer of disputatiō, so that they might be quietly and indifferently heard, and therefore wisely pondering the matter with themselues, by a publicke consent, directed out of prison a declaration of their minde by writing, the vij. day of May. Wherein first as touching the disputation, although they knew that they should do no good, wheras all things were so predetermined before, yet neuertheles, they would not deny to dispute,* so that the disputation might be either before the Queene, or before the Counsaile, or before the Parlamēt houses, or else if they might dispute by writing: for else if the matter were brought to the Doctours handling in their owne scholes, they haue sufficient prooffe (they sayd) by the experience of Oxford, what little good will be done at Cambridge: and so cōsequently declaring the faith and doctrine of their Religion, and exhorting the people withall to submit themselues with all patience and humilitie, either to the will or punishmēt of the higher powers, they appealed in the end from them to be theyr Iudges in this behalfe, and so ende their protestation, the copie and contents whereof I thought not vnfit here to be inserted.

A copie of a certayne declaration drawne and sent out of prison by Mayster Bradford, Mayster Saunders, and dyuers other godly Preachers, concerning theyr disputation,* and doctrine of their Religion, as followeth.

BEcause we heare that it is determined of the magistrats and such as be in authoritie, especially of the Clergye, to send vs speedely out of the prisons of the kings Bench, the Page 1470 Fleet, the Marshalsey, and Newgate, where presently we are, and of long time some of vs hath ben, not as rebelles, traytors, seditious persons, theeues, or transgressours of any lawes of this realme, inhibitions, Proclamations, or commaundements of the Queenes highnes, or of any of y^e Councels (Gods name be prayسد therfore) but alonely for the conscience we haue to God and his most holy word & truth, vpon most certayne knowledge: because we say, we heare that it is determined, we shal be sent to one of the vniuersities of Cambridge, or Oxford, there to dispute with such as are appointed in that behalfe: * in that wee purpose not to dispute otherwise then by writing, except it may be before the Queenes highnes and her Counsell, or before y^e Parliament houses, and therfore perchaunce it will be bruted abroad, that we are not able to mayntaine by the truth of Gods word, and the consent of the true and Catholicke Church of Christ, the doctrine we haue generally and seuerally taught, and some of vs hath writtē & set forth (wherthrough the godly and simple may be offended & somewhat weakened:) we haue thought it our bounden dutie, now whilst we may, by writing to publish and notifie the causes why we will not dispute otherwise then is abouesayd, to preuent the offences which might come thereby.

First, because it is euidently knowne vnto the whole world, * that the determinations of both the Uniuersities in matters of Religion, especially wherein we should dispute, are directly against Gods word, yea against their own determinations in the time of our late soueraigne Lord and most godly Prince, King Edward: and further it is knowne they be our open enemies, and haue already condemned our causes, before any disputation had of the same.

Secondly, because the Prelates and clergie do not seeke either vs or the verity, but our destruction and their glory. For if they had sought vs (as charity requireth) thē would they haue called vs forth hereaboutes before theyr lawes were so made, that franckly and without perill we might haue spoken our consciences. Againe, if they had sought for the veritie, they woulde not haue concluded of controuersies, * tofore they had bene disputed: so that it easely appeareth that they seeke their owne glory and our destruction, and not vs and the veritie: and therefore we haue good cause to refuse disputation, as a thing which shall not further preuaile, then to the setting forth of their glory, and the suppression of the veritie.

Thirdly, because the Censors and Iudges (as we heare who they be) are manifest enemies to the truth, and that which worse is, obstinate enemies, before whome pearles are not to be cast, * by the commaundements of our Sauior Iesus Christ, and by his owne example. That they be such their doings of late at Oxford, and in the Conuocation house in October last past, do most euidently declare.

Fourthly, because some of vs haue bene in prison these 8. or 9. monethes, where we haue had no bookes, no paper, no penne, no inke, or conuenient place for study, we thinke we should do euill thus sodainly to descend into disputation with them, which may alledge as they list, the fathers and their testimonies, * bicause our memories haue not that which we haue read so readily, as to reprove, when they shall report and wrest the authors to their purpose, or to bring forth that we may haue there for our aduantage.

Fiftly, because in disputation we shall not be permitted to prosecute our Argumentes,* but be stopped when we would speake, one saying thus, another that, the third his mind,* &c. As was done to the godly learned fathers, especially D. Ridley at Oxford, who could not be permitted to declare his minde and meaning of the propositions, & had oftentimes halfe a dosen at once speaking against hym: alwayes letting him to prosecute his argument, and to aunswere accordingly: we will not speake of the hissing, scoffing, and taunting, which wonderfully then was vsed. If on this sorte and much worse they handled these fathers, much more will they be shameles bold with vs if we shuld enter into disputation with them.

Sixtly, because the Notaries that shall receiue & write the disputations, shal be of their appointment, and such as either do not or dare not fauour y^e truth, and therefore must write eyther to please them, or else they themselues (the Censours and Iudges we meane) at their pleasure wyll put to and take from,* that which is writtē by y^e Notaries, who can not,* nor must not haue in their custody that which they write, longer then the disputation indureth, as their doings at Oxford declareth. No copy nor scroule could anye man haue by their good will. For the Censors and Iudges will haue all deliuered into their hands: Yea, if any man was sene there to write (as the report is) the same man was sent for, and his writings taken from him: so must the disputation serue only for the glory, not of God, but of the enemies of his truth.

For these causes we all thinke it so necessary not to dispute with them, as if we did dispute we shuld do that whiche they desire & purposely seek, to promote the kingdome of Antichrist, and to suppress (as much as may be) y^e truth. We will not speake of the offence that might come to the godly, whē they shuld heare, by the report of our enemies, our aunsweres and arguments framed (you may be sure) for their fantasies, to the sclaundering of the veritie.

Therefore we publish, and by this writing notifie vnto the whole congregation and church of England,* that for these aforesaid causes we will not dispute with thē, otherwise then with the penne, vnlesse it be before the Queenes highnes and her Councell, or before the houses of the parliament, as is aboue sayd. If they will write,* we will aunswere, & by writing confirm and proue out of the infallible veritie, euen the very word of God, and by the testimonye of y^e good and most auncient fathers in Christes Church, this our fayth and euery peece thereof, which hereafter we in a summe do write and send abroad purposely, that oure good brethren and sisterne in the Lord may knowe it: and to seale vp y^e same,* we are ready through Gods helpe and grace to geue our liues to y^e halter of fire, or otherwise as God shall appoynt, humbly requiring, & in the bowels of our Sauour Iesus Christ, beseeching all that feare God, to behaue themselues as obedient subiects to the Queenes highnes and the superiour powers, which are ordeyned of god vnder her, rather after our exāple to geue their heads to the blocke, then in any poynt to rebell or once to mutter agaynst the Lordes annoynted: we meane our soueraigne Lady Queene Mary, into whose hart we beseech the Lord of mercye plentifully to doure the wisdom and grace of his holy spirite, now and for euer. Amen.

First we confesse and beleue all the Canonically bookes of the old Testament,* and al the bookes of the new Testament, to be the very true word of God, and to be written by the inspiration of the holy Ghost, and are therefore to be heard accordingly, as the Iudge in all controuersies and matters of religion.

Secondly,* we confesse and beleue the Catholick church whiche is the spouse of Christ, as a most obedient and louing wife, to embrace and follow the doctrin of these books in all matters of religion, and therefore is shee to be heard accordingly: so that those which will not heare this church thus following and obeying the word of her husband, we accompt as heretickes and schismatickes, accordyng to this saying: If he will not heare the Church, let him be vnto thee as a Heathen.

Thirdly, we beleue and confesse all the Articles of faith & doctrine set forth in the Simbole of the Apostles,* whiche we commonly cal the Creede, and in the Symboles of the Councils of Nice, kept. An. dom. 324. of Constantinople An. dom. 384. of Ephesus kept An. dom. 432. of Calcedon, kept An. dom. 454. of Toletum, the first and fourth. Also the Symboles of Athanasius, Irenaeus, Tertullian, & of Damasus, which was about the yeare of our Lorde. 376. we confesse and beleue (we saye) the Doctrine of the Symboles generally and particularly: so that who soeuer doth otherwise, we hold the same to erre from the truth.

Fourthly, we beleue and confesse concerning iustification,* that as it commeth onely from Gods mercy through Christ, so it is perceaued and had of none whiche be of yeares of discretion, otherwise then by fayth onely: which fayth is not an opinion, but a certaine perswasio wrought by the holy Ghost in the minde and hart of man,* where through as y^e minde is illumined, so the hart is soupled to submitte it selfe to the will of God vnfaynedly, & so sheweth forth an inherēt righteousnes,* which is to be discerned in the Article of iustification, from the righteousnes which God endueth vs withall iustifying vs, although inseperably they goe together. And this we do not for curiositie or contention sake, but for conscience sake, that it might be quyet, whiche it can neuer be, if we confounde without distinction, forgeuenes of sinnes, and Christes Iustice imputed to vs, with regeneratiō and inherent righteousnes. By this wee disallowe Papisticall doctrine of free will, of woorkes of supererogation, of merites, of the necessitie of auricular confession, and satisfaction to Godwardes.*

Fiftly, we confesse and beleue concerning the exterior service of God, that it ought to be according to the word of God, and therefore in the congregation al thinges publike ought to be done in such a tongue as may be most to edifie & not in Latin, where the people vnderstād not the same.

Sixtly, we confesse and beleue that God onely by christ Iesus is to be prayed vnto and called vpon,* & therefore we disalow inuocation or prayer to Saints departed this life.

Seuenthly, we confesse and beleue, that as a man departeth this life, so shall he be iudged in the last day generally, & in the meane season is entred either into the state of Page 1471 the blessed for euer,* or damned for euer, and therefore is either past all helpe, or else needes no helpe of any in this life. By reason whereof we affirme Purgatory, Masses of Scala coeli, Trentals, and suche Suffrages as the Popishe Church doth obtrude as necessary,* to be the doctrine of Antichrist.

Eightly, we confesse and beleue the Sacramentes of Christ, which be Baptisme and the Lordes Supper, that they ought to be ministred according to the institution of Christ, concerning the substantiall partes of them: and that they be no longer Sacraments, then they be had in vse, and vsed to the end for the which they were instituted.

*And heere we playnly confesse that the mutilation of the Lords Supper, and the subtraction of the one kinde from the lay people, is Antichristian.

And so is the doctrine of transubstantiation of the Sacramentall bread and wyne after the words of consecration, as they be called.

Item, the adoration of the Sacrament, with honor due vnto God: the reseruacion and carying about of the same.

Item, the Masse to be a propitiatory sacrifice for the quicke and dead, or a worke that pleaseth God.

All these we confesse and beleue to be Antichristes doctrine: as is the inhibition in Mariage as vnlawfull to any state. And we doubt not by Gods grace, but we shal be able to prooue all our confessions heere to be most true by the veritie of Gods word, and consente of the Catholicke Church, which followeth and hath followed the gouernaunce of Gods spirit, and the iudgement of his word.

And this thorough the Lordes helpe we will do, eyther in disputation by word before the Queenes hyghnesse and her Counsaile, eyther before the Parliament houses, of whome we doubt not but to be indifferently heard, eyther with our pennes, whensoever we shall be thereto by them that haue authoritie required and commaunded.

In the meane season, as obedient Subiectes wee shall behaue our selues towardes all that be in authoritie, and not cease to pray to God for them, that he woulde gouerne them all, generally and particularly with the spirite of wisdom & grace. And so we hartily desire, & humbly pray all men to do, * in no point consenting to any kinde of rebellion or sedition against our soueraigne Lady the Queenes highnes: but where they can not obey, but they must disobey God, there to submit themselues with all patience and humilitie to suffer as the will and pleasures of the higher powers shall adiudge: as we are ready thorough the goodnes of the Lord to suffer whatsoever they shall adiudge vs vnto, rather then we will cōsent to any doctrine contrary to this which we heere confesse, vnlesse we shall be iustly conuincid therof, either by writing or by word, before such Iudges as the Queenes hyghnes and her Counsell, * or the Parlamēt houses shall appoint: For the Uniuersities and Clergy haue condemned our causes already by the bigger, but not by the better part, without all disputation of the same: and therefore most iustly we may, & do appeale from them to be our Iudges in this behalfe, except it may be in writing, that to al men the matter may appeare. The Lord of mercy endue vs all with the spirit of his truth and grace of perseuerance therein vnto the end. Amen.

☞ To these things abouesayd, do I Myles Couerdale late of Exon, consent and agree with these my afflicted breethren being prisoners with mine owne hand.

And thus much concerning this present declaration subscribed by these preachers, which was on the viij. day of May.

Furthermore, the xix. day of the sayd moneth, the Lady Elizabeth,* Sister to the Queene, was brought out of the Tower, and committed to the custody of Syr Iohn Williams, after Lord Williams of Tame, of whom, her highnes was gently and curteously entreated: who afterward was had to Woodstocke, and there committed to the keeping of Sir Henry Benifield Knight of Oxeborough in Northfolke:* who on the other side, both forgetting her estate, and his owne duty, (as it is reported) shewed hymselfe more hard & straight vnto her, then either cause was geuen of her part, or reason of his owne part would haue led him,* if either grace or wisdom in him might haue sene before, what daunger afterward might haue ensued thereof. Whereof we haue to entreate more at large (the Lorde willing) hereafter in the story & life of Queene Elizabeth.

Upon the Friday following, being the xx. of Iuly, and S. Margarets day, the prince of Spaine lāded at Southhampton. The Prince him selfe was the first that landed: who immediately as he set foote vpon the land, drew out his sword, and caried it naked in his hād a good prety way.*

Then met him without the Towne a little the Maior of Southampton, with certayne Commoners, who deliuered the keyes of the Towne vnto the Prince, who remoued his sword (naked as it was) out of his right hand, into his left hand, and so receiued the keyes of the Maior without any word speaking, or countenance of thankfulness, and after a while deliuered the keyes to the Maior againe. At the Towne gate met hym the Earle of Arundell and Lord Williams, and so he was brought to his lodging.

Upon the Wednesday following, being S. Iames day,* and the xxv. of Iuly, Philip Prince of Spayne, & Mary Queene of England, were maryed together solemnely in the Cathedrall Church at Winchester, by the Byshop of Winchester, in the presence of a great number of noble men of both the Realmes. At the time of this mariage the Emperours Embassadour being present, opely pronounced, y^t in cōsideration of that Mariage, the Emperour had graūted & giuen vnto his sonne, the Kingdome of Naples, &c.

Whereupon the first daye of August following, there was a Proclamation, that from that tyme forth, the style of all maner of writings should be altered,* and this following should be vsed.

☞ Philip and Mary by the grace of God, Kyng and Queene of England, Fraunce, Naples, Ierusalem, and Ireland, defenders of the Fayth, Princes of Spayne and Cicill, Archdukes, of Austrich, Dukes of Millaine, Burgundie, and Brabant, Counties of Haspurge, Flaunders and Tyroll.

Of this Mariage, as the Papistes chiefly seemed to be very glad, so diuers of them after diuers studies, to shew forth their inward affections, some made Interludes and Pagentes, some drewe forth Genealogies, deriuing his petigrue from Edwarde the third and Iohn of Gaunte, some made Uerses. Amongst all other, Mayster Whyte, then Byshop of Lincolne (his Poeticall vayne beeyng drunken with ioye of the Mariage) spued out certayne Uerses: the copy whereof we haue heere inserted.

¶Verses of M. White Byshop of Lincolne, concerning the Marriage of Philip and Mary.

NVbat vt angla anglo, regina Maria Philippo,

Inque suum fontem regia stirps redeat,

Noluit humani generis daemon vetus hostis,

Sed Deus Anglorum prouida spes voluit.

Nollet Scotus inops, timidusque ad praelia Gallus,

Caesar, & Italia, & Flandria tota volet.

Noluit Haereticus (stirps Caiphae) pontificum grex,

Pontificum sed grex Catholicus voluit.

Octo vxorati Patres in daemone nollent:

Quinque Cathenati pro pietate, volent.

Noluit Iohannes D•dley Northumbrius vrsus,

Sed fidum regni Consilium voluit.

Noluit aetatis nostrae Catelina Viatus,

Sed procures & plebs & pia turba volet.

Nollet Graius dux, & Cantia terra rebellans:

Nos quoniam Dominus sic voluit, volumus.

Clarior effectus repetat sua limina sanguis,

Cum sit Philippo iuncta Maria viro.

¶Aunswere by the reuerend Byshop of Norwich to the Byshop of Lyncolne.

EXterno nubat Maria vt regina Philippo,

Vt sint pulsa suis scepra Britanna locis:

Vult Daemon generis nostri antiquissimus hostis,

Anglorum non vult anchora sola Deus.

Nolunt hoc Galli, nolunt Scoti armipotentes,

Vult Caesar, Flandrus, vult Italus Golias.

Page 1472Vult grex Pontificum, stirps Caypha, turba bicornis,

NVbat vt Hispano Regina Maria Philippo

Dic age Whyte mihi, quos voluisse vides?
Noluit aut voluit quid inanis turba, refert nil,
Velle & nolle Dei est: quid volet ille, refert.
Hoc quoniam voluit (inquis) Dominus, voluistis:
Quid voluit, quoniam nescis inepte, scias.
Scilicet hoc voluit, vates vt vanus & augur,
Et mendax Whitus pseudopropheta foret.
Regi non regi nupsit, non nupserat, Angla est,
Nō Angla est, grauida est, nō grauida est, grauius est.
Parturit atque parit, sic vos voluistis ouantes,
Nil tamen illa parit: hoc voluit Dominus.
Duxerat ad paucos menses, mox deserit idem:
Sponsa est, mox vidua est: hoc voluit Dominus.
Irrita frustrentur semper sic vota malorum,
Perniciem patriae qui voluere suae.
Sit nomen Domini benedictum.

After the consummation of which mariage, they both remoued frō Winchester to sondry other places, and by easy iourneyes came to Windsore Castle, where he was stalled in the order of the Garter, vppon Sonday, being the xij. of August. At which tyme an Herald tooke downe the armes of England at Windsore, and in the place of them woulde haue set the armes of Spaine, but he was commaunded to set them vp againe by certayne Lordes. From thence, they both remoued to Richmond, and frō thence by water came to London, and landed at y^e Bishop of Winchesters house through which they passed both into Southwark parke, & so to Southwarke house called Suffolk place, where they lay that night being the 18. of August.

And y^e next day, being Saturday, and the xix. of August the king and Queenes maiesties rode from Suffolk place (accompanied with a great number,* as wel of noble men as gentlemen) through the City of London to White Hall and at Londō bridge as he entred at the draw bridge, was a vayne great spectacle set vp,* two Images representyng 2. Gyantes, one named Corineus, and the other Gogmagoge holding betweene them certain Latin verses, which for the vayne ostentation of flattery, I ouerpasse.

And as they passed ouer the bridge, there was a number of ordinaunce shot at the Tower, such as by old mens report the like hath not bene heard or seene these hundreth yeares.

From London Bridge they passed to the Conduit in Gracious streete whiche was finely painted, and among other thinges, the ix. worthies, whereof king Henry the 8. was one. He was paynted in harnesse hauing in one hand a sworde, and in the other hand a booke, wherupon was written Verbum Dei,* deliuering the same booke (as it were) to his sonne 〈◇〉 Edward, who was paynted in a corner by him.

But hereupon was no small matter made, for the Bishop of winchester Lord Chauncellour, sēt for the painter and not onely called him knaue for paynting a booke in K. Henries hand, and specially for writing therupon Verbum Dei, but also rancke Traytour and Uillaine, saying to hym that he should rather haue put the book into the Queenes hand (who was also paynted there) for that she had reformed the church and religion,* with other things according to the pure and sincere word of God in deede.

The Paynter answered and sayd, that if he had knowē that that had bene the matter wherfore his Lordship sent for him, he coulede haue remedied it, and not haue troubled his Lordship.*

The bishop answered & said, that it was the Queenes maiesties will and commaundement that he shoulde send for him: and so commaunding him to wye out the booke and Verbum Dei too: he sent him home. So the Paynter departed, but fearing least he should leaue some parte eyther of the booke, or of Verbum Dei, in king Henries hand: hee wiped away a piece of his fingers withall.

Here I passe ouer and cut of other gaudes & Pageantes of pastime shewed vnto him in passing through London, with the flattering verses set vp in Latine, wherein were blased out in one place the fiue philips, as the fiue worthies of the worlde, Philip of Macedonia Philip y^e Emperor, Philippus Audax, Philippus Bonus, Philip Prince of Spayne and king of England.

In an other Poetry K. Philip was resembled by an Image representing Orpheus,* and all Englishe people resembled to brute & sauage beastes following after Orpheus harpe, and daunsing after king Philips pipe. Not that I reprehend the arte of the Latine verses, which was fine and cunning, but that I passe ouer y^e matter, hauing other grauer thinges in hand, and therefore passe ouer also the sight at Paules church side of him that came downe vpon a rope tyed to the batilmentes with his head before, neyther staying himselfe with hand or foote: which shortly after cost him his life.

But one thing by the way I cannot let passe touchyng the young flourishing Roode newly set vp agaynst this present tim• 〈◇〉 welcome king Phillip into Paules Church. The setting vp of which Roode was this, and may make as good a Pageant as the best.

An 2. Mariae Boner in his royaltie, and all his Prebendaries about him in Paules Quiere, the Roode layde a long vpon the pauement,* and also all the doores of Paules being shut, the Bishop with other, sayde and song diuers prayers by the Rood: that being done they annoynted the Roode with oyle in diuers places, and after the annoynting crept vnto it and kissed it.

After that they tooke the sayd Roode and weyed hym vppe and set him in his olde accustomed place,* and all the while they were doing thereof, the whole Quiere sang Te Deum, and when that was ended, they rang the Belles, not only for ioy, but also for the notable and great fact they had done therein.

Not long after this, a mery fellow came into Paules and spyed the Roode with Mary and Iohn new set vppe whereto (among a great sorte of people) he made low curtesie and sayd: sir, your Maistership is welcome to towne.* I had thought to haue talked further with your Maistership, but that ye be here clothed in the Queenes colours. I Page 1473 hope yee bee but a sommers byrd, in that ye be dressed in white and greene, &c.

The Prince thus being in the Church of Paules, after Doctour Harpesfield had finished his Oration in Latine, set forwarde through Fleetestreete, and so came to White hall, where he with the Queene remayned four dayes after, and from thence remoued vnto Richmond.

After this, all the Lords had leaue to departe into theyr countreies, with straitte commaundement to bring all their harnesse and artillery into the Tower of London with all speede. Now remained there no English Lord at the court but the Byshop of Winchester. From Richmond they remoued to Hampton Court, where the hall doore within the Court was continually shut, so that no man might enter, vnlesse his arrand were first knowne: which seemed straunge to English men that had not bene vsed thereto.

About the eight day of September, Byshop Bouer began his visitation,* who charged vj. men in euery parish to inquire (according to their othes) and to present before him the day after S. Mathewes day, being the xxij. of September, all such persons as either had or should offend in any of his Articles, which he had set forth to the number of 37. Of the whiche visitation of Boner, I haue somewhat more largely to entreate, after that first I shall ouerpasse a few other things folowing in course of this present story.

The xvij. day of September, was a Proclamation in London,* that all Uacabonds and master•es men, as well straungers as Englishmen, should depart the Citie within fiue dayes: & straitly charging all Inholders, Uictuallers, Tauerners, and Alehousekeepers, with all other that sell victuals, that they (after the said fiue dayes) should not sell any meate, drinke, or any kind of victuall to any Seruingman whatsoever, vnlesse he brought a testimoniall from his Maister to declare whose seruauant he was, and were in continuall houshold with his sayd Maister, vpon payne to runne in daunger of the law if they offend herein.

Uppon the Sondag following, beeyng the xxx. daye of September,* the Bishop of Winchester Lord Chauncellour of England preached at Paules Crosse, at whose Sermon were present all the Coūsell that were at the Court,* namelye the Marques of Winchester, the Earle of Arundell, Lord North, Sir Anthony Browne, Maister Rochester, Maister Walgraue, Maister Englefield, Lord Fitzwaters, and Secretary Peter, & the Bishop of London, Duresme, & Ely, which iij. sate vnder the Bishops armes. The Gospell wherof he made his Sermon is writtē in the xxij. cha. of Math. Where the Phariseis came vnto Christ, & amōgst them one asked Christ which was the greatest commaundement. Christ aunswered: Thou shalt loue thy Lorde God with all thy hart, &c. and thy neighbour as thy selfe, in these two is comprehended the Lawe and the Prophetes.

After his long declaration of these wordes, speaking very much of loue and charitie, at the last he had occasion vpon S. Iames his wordes, to speake of the true teachers, and of the false teachers, saying, that all the Preachers almost in King Edwards tyme, preached nothing but voluptuousnesse,* and filthy and blasphemous lyes, affirming their doctrine to be that false doctrine whereof S. Iames speaketh: saying, that it was full of peruerse zeale, earthly, full of discord and discensiō, that the preachers aforenamed would report nothing truly, & that they taught that it was lawfull for a man to put away his wyfe for adultery, and marry another,* and that if a man vowed to day, he might breake it to morrowe at hys pleasure, wyth many other thyngs which I omit. And when he spoke of the Sacrament, he sayd that all the Church from the beginning haue cōfessed Christes natural body to be in heauen, & here to be in the Sacramēt, and so concluded that matter: & then willed al men to say with Iosephs brethren: Peccauimus in fratrem. We haue all sinned against our brother, and so (sayd he) haue I to. Then he declared what a noble King & Queene we haue, saying that if he should go about to shew that the King came hether for no necessitie or neede, & what he had brought w^t him, it should be superfluous, seing it is euidētly known that he hath x. times as much as we are in hope & possession of, affirming him to be as wise, sober, gentle & temperate a Prince as euer was in Englād, and if it were not so proued, then to take him for a false liar for his so saying: Exhorting all men to make much of him, & to wynne him whylest we had him, and so should we also winne all such as he hath brought with him, and so made an ende.

Upon the Tuesday following, being the seconde day of October, xx. carts came from Westminster laden (as it was noysed) with gold and siluer, and certain of the Gard with them through the Citie to the Tower, and there it was receiued in by a Spanyard, who was the Kings Treasurer, and had custody of it within the Tower. It was matted about with mattes, and mayled in little bundels about two foote long, and almost halfe a foote thicke, and euery cart were sixe of those bundels. What it was in deede God knoweth, for it is to vs vncertayne.

Aboute the same time, or a little before, vppon Corpus Christi day, the processiō being made in Smithfield,* where after the manner the Priest with his boxe went vnder the Canapy, by chaunce there came by the way a certaine simple man, named Iohn Streate, a ioyner of Colemā streete, who hauing some hast in his busines,* and finding no other way to passe through, by chaunce went vnder the Canapy by the Priest. The Priest seeing the man so to presume to come vnto the Canapy, being belike afraid, and worse feared then hurt, for feare let his Pixe fall downe.* The poore man being straight wayes apprehended, was had to the Counter, the Priest accusing him vnto the Counsayle, as though he had come to slay him, whē as y^e poore man (as he himselfe hath since declared vnto vs) had no such thought euer in his mind. Then from the Counter he was had vnto Newgate, where he was cast into the Dongeon,* there chayned to a post, where he was cruelly & miserably handled & so extremely dealt withall, that being but simple before, he was now feared out of his wit altogether, and so vpon the same had to Bedlem. Wherupon the brieue Chronicle of London in this poynt is not to be credited,* which vntruely reported that he fayned himselfe in Newgate to be mad: which thing, we in writing of this history by due inquisition of the partie, haue found to be contrary.

About the v. day of October,* and within a fortnight folowing, were diuers as well housholders as seruants & prentises apprehended and taken, and committed to sondry prisons, for the hauing and selling of certaine bookes which were sent into England by the Preachers that fled into Germany and other Countreys, which bookes nipped a great number so neare,* that within one fortnight there were little lesse then threescore imprisoned for thys matter: among whome, was M. Browne a Goldsmith, Mayster Sparke a Draper, Randall Tirer a Stationer, M. Beston a Marchaunt, with many other.

Upon the Sondag being the xiiij. daye of October, the old Byshop of Duresme preached in the shroudes.*

Upon S. Lukes day following, being the xvij. of October, the Kyngs Maiesty came from Westminster to Paules Church along the Streetes, accompanied with a great number of Noble men, and there he was receyued vnder a Canapy at the West dore, and so came into the Chauncell where he heard Masse (which a Spanishe Byshop and his owne Chappell soong) and that done, he returned to Westminster to dyner agayne.

Upon the Friday being the xxvj. of October,* certayne men, whereof I spake before, which were of Mayster Throgmortons quest, being in number viij. for the other foure were deliuered out of prison, for that they submitted themselues and sayd they had offended, like weakelyngs, not considering truth to be truth but of force for feare sayd so: these viij. men I say (whereof Maister Emanuell Lucas, and M. Whetstone were chiefe) were called before the Counsaile in the Starre chamber: where they all affirmed that they had done all thyngs in that matter according to theyr knowledge and with good consciences, euen as they shoulde aunswere before God at the daye of iudgemente. Where maister Lucas sayde openly before all the Lordes, that they had done in the matter lyke honest men and true and faythfull subiects, and therfore they humbly besought the Lord Chauncellor and the other Lordes, to be meanes to the King and Queenes Maiesties, that they might be discharged and set at liberty, & sayd that they were all contented humbly to submit themselues to their maiesties, sauing and reseruing theyr trueth, consciences and honesty. Some of the Lordes sayde that they were worthy to pay a thousand poundes a peece, and other some sayd that Mayster Lucas and Maister Whetstone were worthy to pay a thousand markes a peece, and the rest fiue hundreth poūds a peece. In conclusion, sentence was geuen by the Lorde Chauncellour, that they should pay a thousand Markes a peece, and that they should go to prison againe, & there remayne till further order were taken for their punishment.

Upon the Tuesday being the xxx. of October, the Lorde Iohn Gray was deliuered out of the Tower and set at liberty.

Upon Sondag the fourth of Nouember, fyue Priestes dyd penaunce at Paules Crosse, which were contente to put away their wiues, and take vpon them agayne to minister. Euery of them had a Taper in his hand, and a rod, wherewith the Preacher did disple them.

Upon Wednesday the vij. of Nouember, the Lord Paget & Syr Edward Hastings Maister of the horse, were sent as Ambassadors, I knowe not whither, but as it was adiudged, to Cardinall Poole, who lay all the sommer Page 1474 before at Bruxelles,* and it was thought: they were sent to accompany and conducte him into England, where at that time he was nominated and appoynted Byshoppe of Caunterbury.

Upon the Friday folowing the 9. of Nouember Mayster Barlow late Byshop of Bathe, and M. Cardmaker were brought before the counsell in the Starre Chamber,* where a•ter communication they were commaūded to the Fleete.

Upon the Saterdag being the tenth of Nouember, the Sheriffes of London had commaūdemēt to take an inuē|tory of euery one of theyr goods which were of M. Throgmortons quest,* & to seale vp theyr doores, which was done the same day. M. Whetstone, maister Lucas, and Mayster Kyteley, were iudged to pay 2000. pounds a piece and the rest 1000. Markes a piece, to be payd within one fortnight after. From this payment were exempted those 4. whiche confessed a fault and submitted themselues whose names are these, M. Loe, M. Poynter, M. Beswicke, and M. Cater.

Mention was made a little before of the visitation of Ed. Boner bishop of Londō,* whiche began (as is sayd) about the moneth of September: for the better preparation whereof were set forth certayne Articles to the number of 37. Which articles partly for the tediousnes of them, partly for that maister Bale in a certayne treatise hath sufficiently paynted out the same in theyr coulours, partly also, because I will not infect this booke with them, I slippe them ouer, proceeding in the progresse of this bishop in his visitation in the Countye of Essex. Who passing through the sayde Countye of Essex being attended with diuers worshipfull of the shyre (for so they were commaūded) ariued at Sterford in Hertfordshyre where hee rested certayne dayes,* solacing himselfe after that paynefull peregrination with no small feasting and banqueting with his attendants aforesayd, at the house of one Persons his Nephew whose wife he commonly called his fayre Niece (and fayre she was in deede) he tooke there great pleasure to heare her play vpō the Uirginals (wherin she excelled) in so much y^t euery dinner (sitting by his sweete side) she rose and played three seuerall times at his request of his good and spirituall deuotiō towards her. These certeine daies thus passed in this bishoplke fashion, he proceded in his popish vi|sitation towards Hadham his owne house and parish, not past two myles from Sterford,* being there most solemnly rang out, as in all other places wheras he passed. At lēgth drawing nere vnto Hadham, when he heard no bels there •••ring in honor of his holines, he grew into some choler & the nearer he approached the hotter was his fit, & the quieter the bels were, the vnquieter was his moode. Thus rode he on chafing and fuming with himselfe.* What meaneth (sayth he) that knaue the Clarke, that he ringeth not, and the parson that he meeteth me not? with sundry other furious words of fiery element. There this patient prelate comming to the towne, alighted, calling for the key of the Church, which was then all vnready, for that (as they thē pretended) he had preuēted his time by two houres, whervpon he grew frō coler to plaine melancholy, so as no man willingly would deale with him to qualify the raging humor so farre incorporated in his brest. At last the Church-doore being opened, the Byshop entred, and finding no sacrament hanged vp, nor roode lost decked after the Popysh precept (which hade commaūded about the same tyme a well fauoured Roode, and of able stature vniuersally in all Churches to be set vp) curtalled his small deuotions, and fell from al coler and melancholy to flat madnes in the vppermost degree, swearing and raging with an huntynge •the or two, and by no beggers, that in his owne Church where he hoped to haue sene best order, he foūd most disorder (to his honors most heauy discomfort, as he sayde) calling the Parsō (whose name was Doctor Bricket) knaue,* and hereticke. Who there humbled himselfe and yelded as it were, to his fault, saying he was sory his Lordship was come before that he and his parish looked for him: and ther|fore could not do theyr dueties to receiue him accordingly: & as for those thinges lacking, he trusted, a short time hereafter should cōpasse that, which hitherto he could not bring about. Therefore if it pleased his Lordship to come to hys poore house (where his dynner was prepared) he woulde satisfy him in those thinges, which his Lordship thought amisse. Yet thys so reasonable an aunsweare, nothyng could satisfy nor asswage his passion vnreasonable. For the Catholicke Prelate vtterly defied him and his chere, commaunding him out of his sighte saying: * (as hys by worde was) before God thou art a knaue, auant hereticke, and therewithal, whether thrusting or striking at him, so it was that with his hand he gaue syr Thomas Iosselin Knight (who was then amongst the rest, & stood next the bishop) a good flewe vpon the vpper part of the neck, euen vnder his eare (as some say which stood by) but as he himself said he hit him full vpon the eare: * wherat he was somewhat astonied at the sodennes of the quarrell for that time. At last, he spake and said, what meaneth your Lordship? haue you bene trayned in Will Somers scole, to strike him who stādeth next you? The Bishop still in rage either heard not, or would not heare.

Then M. Fecknam Deane of Paules seing the bishop stil in this bitter rage, said: O M. Iosselin, you must beare with my lord: * for truly his long imprisonment in the marshalsey, and the misusing of him there hath altered hym, y^t in these passions he is not ruler of himselfe, nor it booteth any man to geue him counsell vntill his heat be past, & then assure your selfe M. Iosselin my lord will be sory for those abuses that now he cānot see in himselfe. Wherunto he merily replied and sayd: so it seemeth Maister Fecknam, * for now that he is come forth of the marshalsey, he is ready to go to Bedlem. At which mery conciepte some laughed and moe smiled because the nayle was so truely hitte vpon the head. The Bishop nothing abashed at his own folly, gaue a deafe eare, as no maruell it was that hee shamed little to strike a straunger, which spared not the burning of so many good men.

After this worthy combate thus finished and atchiued, this marshiall Prelate presently taketh him to his horse agayne (notwithstanding he was minded to tary at Hadhā 3. or 4. daies, and so had made prouisiō in his owne house) and leauing his dinner rode that night with a small company of his householde to Ware (where he was not looked for 3. dayes after) to the great wonder of all the countrey why he so preuented his day afore stalled.

At this hasty posting away of this Bishop, his whole trayne of attendants there left him. Also his Doctors and chaplaines (a few excepted) taryed behind, and dined at D. Brickets as merily as he rode towards Ware all chasingly: which diner was prepared for the bishop himself. Now whether the Bishoppe were offended at those solemnities which he wanted and was accustomed to be saluted withall in other places where he iornied, ioyning to y^t his great God was not exalted aboue ground ouer y^e aultar, nor his blocke almighty set seemely in the roode lost to entertayne straungers, * and therupō took occasion to quarrell with D. Bricket (whose religion percase he somewhat suspected) I haue not perfectly to say, but so it was supposed of diuers the cause therof to rise, which draue the bishop so hastily frō such a dinner. Testified by such as there and thē were present, Rich. K. &c.

¶A story of a Roode set vp in Lankashyre.

In this Uisitation of Bishop Boner aboue mentioned, ye see how the bishop tooke on for not setting vp the Roode and ringing the bells at Hadham. * Ye heard also of the precept, which commaūded in euery parish a Rood to be erected both well fauoured and of an hab•e stature. By the occasion whereof, it commeth in mind (and not out of place) to storye likewise what happened in a certayne Towne in Lankashyre nere to Lancaster called Cockram, where the Parishioners & Churchwardens hauing the same time a like charge for the erecting of a rood in theyr parish church had made theyr bargayn and were at a price with one that could cunningly karue & paynt such idols, for the framynge of theyr Roode: who according to his promise,* made them one, & set it vp in theyr Church. This done, he demaunded his mony. But they misliking his workemanship, refused to pay him, whereupon he arrested them, and the matter was brought before the Maior of Dancaster, who was a very meet man for such a purpose, and an olde fauourer of the Gospell, which is rare in that country. Then the karuer began to declare how they had couenaunted with him for the making of a Rood, with the appurtenaunces ready karued and set vp in theyr Churche, which he according to his promise had done and nowe demaunding his money they refused to pay him. Is this true, quoth the Maior to the Wardens? Yea Syr, sayd they. And why do ye not pay the poore man his due, quoth he? And it please you Mayster Maior (quoth they) because the Roode wee had before was a welfauored man, and he promised to make vs such an other: but this that he hath set vs vp now, is y^e worst fauored thing that euer you set your eies on, gaping & grinning in such sort that none of our Children dare once looke him in the face or come nere him.* The maior thinking that it was good enough for y^e purpose if it had bene worsse, my maisters (quoth he) howsoever the rood like you, the poore mans labor hath bene neuer the lesse, and it is pity that he Page 1475 should haue any hinderaunce or losse thereby.* Therefore I will tell you what you shal do: Pay him the mony ye promised him, and goe your wayes home and looke on it, & if it will not serue for a God, make no more a doe: but clap a payre of hornes on his head, and so will he make an excellent deuill. This the Parishioners tooke well aworth, the poore man had his mony, and diuers laughed well therat: but so did not the babilonish Priestes.

*This Maior aboue mentioned continued a Protestant almost fifty yeares, & was the onely releuer of M. Marsh the Martyr (whole story foloweth hereafter) with meate, drinke, and lodging while he laye in Lancaster Castle the space of iij. quarters of a yeare, before he was had to Chester to be burned. &c.

About this time or the moneth next before, which was October, there came a precept or mandate from Boner bishop of London, to all Parsons and Curates within hys Dioces, for the abolishing of such scriptures & wrytinges as had bene paynted vpon Churche walles before, in king Edwardes dayes. The copy of which precept or mandate here we thought good to expresse, that the world might see the wicked proceedinges of theyr impious zeale, or rather theyr malicious rage agaynst the Lord and his word, & agaynst the edyfying of Christian people: whereby it might appeare by this blotting out of these Scriptures, not only how blasphemously they spake agaynst the holy Scriptures of God, but also howe studiously they sought by all maner of meanes, to keepe the people still in ignoraunce.

¶A Mandate of Boner Byshop of London, to abolish the Scriptures and writings paynted vpon the Church Walles.

EDmund by Gods permission bishop of London, to all & euery Parsons,*Vicars, Clarkes, and lettered, within the parishe of Hadham, or within the precinct of our dioces of London whersoever being, sendeth greeting, grace, & benediction. Because some children of iniquity, geuen vp to carnall desires and noueltyes, haue by many wayes enterprised to banish the auncient maner & order of the Church and to bring in and establish sectes and heresies: taking from thence the picture of Christ, and many thinges besides instituted and obserued of auncient time laudably in the same, placing in the roome therof suche thinges, as in such a place it behoued them not to do: & also haue procured as a stay to their heresies (as they thought) certayne scriptures wrongly applied,*to be paynted vpon the Churche walles, all which persons tende chiefly to this end, that they might vphold the liberty of the flesh & mariage of priestes, and destroy as much as lay in them, the reuerend sacramēt of the aultar and might extinguish and enaruate holydayes, fasting dayes, and other laudable discipline of the Catholicke church,*opening a window to all vices, and vtterly closing vp the way vnto vertue: Wherefore we being mooued with a christian zeale, iudging that the premises are not to be longer suffered do for discharge of our duety, cōmit vnto you ioyntly & seuerally, & by the tenor hereof do straight•y charge and cōmaund you, that at the receit hereof, with all speed conuenient, you doe warne, or cause to be warned, first, secōd, & third time, & peremptorily, all and singuler Churchwardens and Parishioners whosoever within your foresayd Dioces of London, wheresoeuer any such Scriptures or payntings haue bene attempted, that they abolish and extinguishe such maner of Scriptures, so that by no meanes they bee either readde or seene, and therein to proceede moreouer as they shall see good and laudable in this behalfe. And if after the sayd monition, the sayd Churchwardens and Parishioners shall be founde remisse and negligent, or culpable, then you ioyntly and seuerally shall see the foresayd Scriptures to be rased abolished and extinguished forthwith: citing al and singuler those Churchwardens and Parishioners (whome we also for the same do cite here by the tenour hereof) that all and singuler the sayde Churchwardens and Parishyoners being slacke and negligent, or culpable therein, shall appeare before vs our Vicar generall and principall officiall, or our Commissary speciall in our Cathedrall Church of S. Paule at Londō, in the Consistory there, at the houre appoynted for the same, the sixt day next after theyr citation if it be a court day, or els at the next court day after ensuing▪ whereas either we or our Officiall or Commissary shall sit: there to say and alledge for themselues some reasonable cause: if they haue or cā'tell of any, why they ought not to be excommunicated, and otherwise punished for theyr such negligence, slackenesse, & fault, to say and to alledge, and further to do and receiue, as law & rea'son requireth. And what you haue done in the premises, do you certify vs, or our Vicar, principall Officiall, and such our Commissary, diligently and duely in all thinges, and through all thinges, or let him among you thus certify vs, which hath taken vpon him to execute this Mandate: In witnes whereof we haue set our seales to these presentes. Dated in the byshops pallace at London the 25. daye of the moneth of October in the yeare of our Lorde 1454. and of our translation the 16▪

About this time the L. Chauncellour sent M. Christopherson vnto the vniuersity of Cābridge with these 3. Articles, which he enioyned them to obserue.*

The first, that euery scholer should weare his apparell according to his degree in the scholes.

The second was touching the pronūciation of y^e Greek tongue.

The third, that euery Preacher there should declare the whole stile of the king and Queene in theyr sermons.

In this vniuersity of Cambridge, and also of Oxford, by reason of the bringing of these thinges, and especiall^ye for the alteration of religion, many good wits and learned men departed the Uniuersities: of whō, some of theyr own accord gaue ouer, some were thrust out of their felowships some were miserably handled: in so much that in Cābridge in the Colledge of Saint Iohn, there were 24. places void together, in whose roomes were taken in 24. other which neither in vertue nor in religiō semed to answere to them before. And no lesse miserable, was the state of Oxforde,* by reason of the time, and the straight dealing of the visitours that for setting forward theyr Papisticall procedinges, had no regard or respect to the forwardnes of good wittes, and the maynteinaunce of good letters beginning then more & more to florish in that Uniuersity.

And for so much as we haue entred into the mention of Oxford, we may not passe ouer in silēce the famous exhortation of D. Tresham who supplying the roome of y^e Subdeane in Christes Church,* after he had called all the Studentes of the Colledge together, with great Eloquence & art persuasory, began to commend the dignity of the masse vnto them, declaring that there was stuffe in Scripture enough to proue the masse good. Then to allure them to the catholick seruice of the Church, he vsed these reasons declaring that there were a goodly cōpany of Copes,* that were appoynted to Windsore, but he had foūd the Queene so gra'cious vnto him, that they should come to Christes church. Now if they like honest men, would come to Church, they should weare them on holydayes. And besides all this, he would get them the Lady Bell of Bampton, & that should make the sweetest ring in all England. And as for an holy watersprinckle, he had already the fayrest that was within the realme, Wherfore he thought that no man would be so mad to forgo these commodities. &c.

Which thinges I rehearse, that it may appeare what want of descretion is in the fathers of popery, & into what idle follies such men do fall. Whome I beseech the Lord if it be his pleasure, to reduce to a better truth, & to opē theyr eyes to see theyr owne blindnes.

To proceed now further in the course & race of our story where as we left, being before in the moneth of Nouēber it foloweth more that in the * xij. day of the same month of Nouember being Monday, beganne the Parliament holden at Westminster, to the beginning whereof both the king and Queene rode in theyr Parliament robes hauing 2. swords borne before them. The Earle of Penbroke bare his sword, & the Earle of Westmerland bare the Queenes. They had ij. cappes of maynteinaunce borne before them: whereof the Earle of Arundell bare one, and the Earle o• Shrewsbury the other.

Cardinall Poole landed at Douer vpon the Wednesday being the xxi. day of Nouember, on which day one Act passed in the parliamēt for his restitution in bloud, vtterly repealing as false & most slaunderous that Act made against him in king Henry the eightes tyme, and on the next day being Thursday and the xxij. of Nouember, the King and the Queene both came to the Parliament house to geue theyr royall assent & to establish this Act agaynst his comming.*

Upon the Saterdag being the xxiiij. of Nouember, the sayd Cardinal came by water to London, & so to Lambeth house which was ready prepared agaynst his comming.

Upon the Wednesday folowing being the 28. of Nouember, there was generall procession in Paules for ioy y^t the Quene was conceiued and quick with child, as it was declared in a letter sent from the counsell to the Byshop of London. The same day at this procession was present ten Bishops with al the Prebendaries of Paules, and also the Lord Maior with the Aldermen, and a greate number of Commons of the City in theyr best aray. The Copy of the Coũcels letter here foloweth, ad perpetuam rei memoriam.

A Copy of a letter sent from the Counsell vnto Edmund Boner Byshop of London, concerning Queene Mary conceiued with Childe.

AFTER our hartly commendations vnto your good Lordshippe whereas it hath pleased almighty God amongst other his infinite Page 1476 benefites of late most graciouslye poured vpon vs and thys whole Realme, to extend his benediction vpon the Queenes maiesty in such sort, as she is conceiued and * quicke of childe. Wherby (her maiesty being our natural liege Lady, queene & vndoubted inheritor of this imperiall crowne) good hope of certayn succession in the crowne is geuen vnto vs, & consequētly the great calamities, which (for want of such succession might otherwise haue fallen vpon vs, & our posterity) shall by Gods grace be well auoyded, if we thankfully acknowledge this benefite of almighty God, endeuoring our selues with earnest repentance to thanke honor and serue him as we be most bounden: These be not onely to aduertise you of these good newes, to be by you published in all places within your Dioces, but also to pray and require you, that both your selfe do geue God thanks with vs for this his especial grace, and also geue order that thanks may be openly geuen by singing of Te Deum in all the churches within your sayde Dioces: and that likewise all priestes and other Ecclesiasticall ministers, in theyr Masses and other diuine seruices, may continually pray to almighty God, so to extend his holy hand ouer his maiesty, the kinges highnes and this whole Realme, as this thing being by his omnipotent power graciously thus begon may by the same be well continued and brought to good effect, to the glory of his name. Whereunto, albeit we doubt not, ye woulde of your selfe haue had special regard without these our letters yet for the earnest desire we haue to haue this thing done out of hand, & diligently continued, we haue also written these our letters, to put you in remembraunce: and so bid your Lordshippe most hartily well to fare.

Also the same day in the afternoone, Cardinall Poole came to the Parliament house,* which at that present was kept in the great Chamber of the Court at Whitehall: for that the Queene was then sicke, and could not go abroad: where as (the King and Queenes Maiesties sittynge vnder y^e cloth of Estate, & the Cardinall sitting on theyr right hand, with all the other Estates of the Parliament being present) the Byshop of Winchester being Lord Chauncellor, began in this maner.

¶The wordes of Winchester for receiuing of the Cardinall.

MY Lordes of the vpper house, & you my Maisters of the nether house, here is present the right reuerend father in God my Lord Cardinall Poole come frō the apostolicke Sea of Rome.* As Ambassador to the king and Queenes Maiesties, vpon one of the weightiest causes that euer happened in this Realme, & whiche pertaineth to the glory of God, and your vniuersall benefite. The which Ambassage theyr Maiesties pleasure is to be signified vnto you all by his owne mouth, trusting that you will receiue and accept it in as beneuolent and thankfull wise, as their highnesses haue done, and that you will geue an attent and inclinable eare vnto him.

When the Lord Chauncellor had thus ended his talke, the Cardinall taking the time then offered, began hys Oration, wherein he declared the causes of his comming, and what were his desires and requestes. In the which meane time, the Court gate was kept shut vntill he had made an end of his Oration. The tenour and wordes wherof here foloweth.

¶The tenour of Cardinall Pooles Oration. made in the Parliament house.

*MY Lordes all, and you that are the Commons of thys present Parliament assembled, which in effecte is nothing els but the state and body of the whole realm, as the cause of my repayre hither hath bene most wisely & grauely declared by my Lord Chancellor, so before that I enter to the particularities of my Commission, I haue somewhat touching my selfe, and to geue most humble and hartly thanks to the king and Queenes Maiesties, and after them to you all, which of a man exiled and banished from this Cōmon wealth, hath restored me to be a mēber of the lame, & of a man hauing no place, neither here, or els wher within this Realme, haue admitted me in place, where to speake and to be heard. This I protest vnto you all, that though I was exiled my natiue coūtry without iust cause as God knoweth, yet the ingratitude could not pull from me the affection and desire that I had to profite & doe you good. If the offer of my seruice might haue bene receiued, it was neuer to seek, and where that could not be taken, you neuer fayled of my prayer, nor neuer shall.

But leauing the rehearsall thereof, and comming more neare to the matter of my Commission, I signify vnto you all that my principall trauell is, for the restitution of thys noble realme to the auncient nobility, and to declare vnto you, that the Sea Apostolicke from whence I come, hath a speciall * respect to this realme aboue all other, & not without cause seing that God himselfe, as it were by prouidēce hath geuen this realme, prerogatiue of Nobility aboue other, which to make more playne vnto you, it is to be considered that this Iland, first of all Ilandes receyued the light of Christes religion. For as stories testifye,* it was prima prouinciarum quae amplexa est fidem Christi.

For the Brittaines being first inhabitauntes of thys Realme (notwithstanding the subiunction of Emperours and heathen Princes) did receiue Christes fayth from the Apostolicke Sea vniuersally, and not in partes as other Countrys nor by one and one, as Clockes increase theyr houres by distinction of times, but altogether at once, as it were in a moment. But after that theyr ill merites or forgetfulnes of God had deserued expulsion, and that Straūgers being Infidels had possessed this land, yet God of his goodnes not leauing where he once loued, so illuminated the hartes of the Saxons being Heathen menne, that they forsooke the darckenes of heathen errors and embraced the light of Christes religion. So that within small space, idolatry and Heathen superstition was vtterly abandoned in this Iland.

This was a great prerogatiue of Nobilitye, whereof though the benefite therof be to be ascribed to God, yet the meane occasion of the same came frō the * church of Rome. In the faith of which Church, we haue euer since continued and consented with the rest of the world in vnity of religion. And to shew further the feruent deuotion of the inhabitantes of this Iland towards the Church of Rome, we read that diuers princes in the Saxons time w^t great trauel & expenses went personally to Rome, as Offa & Adulphus which thought it not enough to shew themselues obedient to the said Sea, vnlesse that in theyr owne persons they had gone to that same place from whence they had receiued so great a grace and benefite.

In this time of Carolus Magnus who first founded the Uniuersity of Paris, he sent into England for Alcuinus a great learned man, which first broughte learning to that Uniuersity, Wherby it seemeth that the greatest part of the world set the light of the religion from England.

Adrian the fourth being an Englishmā, cōuerted Norway from infidelity, which Adrian afterwards, vpō great affection and loue that he bare to this Realme, being hys natie coūtry, gaue to Henry the second king of England the righte and segniory of the dominion of Ireland, which perteyned to the Sea of Rome.

I will not rehearse the manifold benefites that thys Realme hath receiued frō the Apostolicke Sea, nor how ready y^e same hath bene to releiue vs in all our necessities.* Nor I will not rehearse the manifold miseries & calamities that this realme hath suffered by swaruing from that vnity. And euen as in this realme, so in all other coūtries which refusing the vnity of the Catholick sayth haue folowed fantastical doctrine, the like plagues haue happened. Let Asia and the Empyre of Greece be a spectacle vnto the world who by sweruing from the vnity of the Church of Rome are brought into captiuitie & subiectiō of the Turk.* All stories be full of like examples. And to come vnto the latter time, looke vpon our neighbours of Germany, who by swaruing from this vnity, are miserably afflicted with diuersity of sectes and diuided in factions.

What shall I rehearse vnto you the tumultes & effusiō of bloud, y^t hath happened there of late dayes? Or trouble you with the rehearsall of those plagues that haue happened since this innouation of religion, where you haue felt the bitternes, and I haue heard the report? Of all whiche matters I can say no more, but such was the misery of the time. And see how far forth this fury went. For those that liue vnder the * Turk, may freely liue after theyr consciēce, and so was it not lawfull here.

If men examine well vpon what grounds these innouations began: they shall wel finde that the roo• of this as of many other mischiefes, was auarice, and that the lust & carnall affection of one man confounded al lawes both diuine and humaine. And notwithstanding all these deuises and policies practised within this realme against y^e church of Rome, they needed not to haue lost you, but that they thought rather as frendes to reconcile you, then as enemies to infest you. For they wanted not great offers of the most mighty Potentates in all Europe to haue ayded the Church in that quarrell. Then marke the sequell: There Page 1477 semed by these chaūges to rise a great face of riches & gayn which in prooffe came to great misery and lacke. See how God then can confound the wisdom of the wise, & turne vniust pollicy to meere folly, & that thing that seemed to be done for reliefe, was cause of playne ruine & decay. Yet see that goodnes of God, which at no time fayled vs, but most beningly offred his grace, when it was of our partes least sought, and worse deserued.

And when all light of true religion seemed vtterly extinct, as the churches defaced, the aultars ouerthrown, the Ministers corrupted: euen like as in a lampe the light being couered, yet it is not quenched, euen so in a few remained the confession of Christes fayth, namely in the brest of the Queenes excellency, of whom to speake without adulation, the saying of the prophet may be veriefied: Ecce quasi derelicta.

And see how miraculously God of his goodnes preserued her highnes, contrary to the expectatiō of man, y^t whē numbers conspired against her, and pollicies were deuised to disherite her, and armed power prepared to destroy her yet she being a virgine helpeles, naked and vnarmed, preuayled, & had the victory of tyrants, which is not to be ascribed to any * pollicy of man, but to y^e almighty great goodnes and prouidēce of God, to whom the honor is to be geuen. And therefore it may be sayd, Da gloriam Deo. For in mans iudgement, on her graces part, was nothing in appearaunce, but despayre.

And yet for all these practises and deuises of ill menne here you see her Grace established in her estate being your lawfull Queene and Gouvernesse, borne among you, whō God hath appointed to raigne ouer you for the restitution of true religion, and extirpation of all errorrs and sectes. And to confirme her grace the more strongly in this enterprise, loe how the prouidēce of God hath ioyned her in mariage with a Prince of like religion, who being a King of great might, armor & force, yet vseth towards you neither armor nor force, but seeketh you by the way of loue and amity: in which respect great cause you haue to geue thākes to almighty God, that hath sent you such a catholicke Gouvernesse. It shall be therefore your part agayne to loue, obey and serue them.

And as it was a singuler fauor of God to conioyne thē in mariage, so it is not to be doubted but that he shall send them  issue, for the comfort & surety of this commō wealth. Of all Princes in Europe, the Emperour hath trauayled most in the cause of Religion, as it appeareth by his actes in germany: yet happely by some secret iudgement of god, he hath not atchiued the end. With whom in my iourney hitherwardes I had conferēce touching my legation, wherof whē he had vnderstanding, he shewed great appearance of most earnest ioy & gladnesse, saying that it reioyced him no lesse of y^e recōcilemēt of this realme vnto christiā vnity, thē that his sonne was placed by mariage in y^e kingdome, and most glad he was of al, that the occasion therof should come by me, being an English man borne, which is, (as it were) to call home our selues.  I can well compare hym to Dauid, which though he were a man elect of God, yet for that he was contaminate with bloud and warre, he could not build the temple of Ierusalē, but left the finishing ther'of to Salomon, whiche was Rex pacificus. So may it bee thought that the appeasing of controuersies of religion in christianity, is not appoynted to this Emperour, but rather to his sonne, who shall performe the building that his Father hath begonne. Which church can not be perfectly builded, without vniuersally in all Realmes we adhere to one head,* and doe acknowledge him to be the Uicare of God, and to haue power frō aboue. For al power is of God, according to the saying, Non est potestas nisi a Deo. And therefore I consider that all power, beyng in God, yet for the conseruation of quiet & godly life in the world, he hath deriued that power frō aboue into two partes here in earth: whiche is into the power Imperiall and Ecclesiasticall. And these two powers, as they be seuerall and distinct, so haue they two seuerell effectes and operations. For secular Princes to whome the temporall sword is committed, be ministers of god to execute vengeance vpon transgressors and euill liuers, and to preserue the wel doers and Innocentes from iniury and violence. Which power is represēted in these two most excellent persōs, the king & Queenes Maiesties here present, who haue this power committed vnto them immediately from God, without any superior in that behalfe.

The other power is of ministratiō, which is the power of the keies,* and order in the ecclesiasticall state, which is by the authority of gods word, & examples of the apostles, and of all old holy fathers from Christ hitherto, attributed and geuen to the Apostolick sea of Rome by speciall prerogatiue. From which sea I am here deputed Legate & Embassador, hauing full and ample cōmissiō from thence, and haue the keyes committed to my handes. I confesse to you that I haue the keyes, not as mine owne keies,* but as the keyes of him that sent me: and yet cannot opē, not for wat of power in me to geue, but for certain impedimēts in you to receiue, which must be taken away before my commission can take effect. This I protest before you, my Commission is not of preiudice to any persō. I come not to destroy but to build, I come to reconcile, not to condemne, I come not to compell, but to call agayne, I am not come to call any thing in question already done, but my Commission is of grace and clemency, to such as will receiue it. For touching al matters that be past, they shalbe as things cast into the sea of forgetfulness.

But the meane whereby you shall receiue this benefit, is to reuoke and repeal those lawes and statutes,* which be impediments, blocks, and barres to the executiō of my cōmission. For like as I my selfe had neither place nor voyce to speake here among you, but was in all respectes a banished man, till suche time as ye had repealed those lawes, that lay in my way: euen so cannot you receiue the benefite and grace offred from the apostolick sea, vntill the abrogation of such lawes, wherby you haue disioined and disseuered your selues from the vnity of Christes Church.

It remayneth therefore, that you like true christians & prouident men for the weale of your soules & bodyes, ponder what is to be done in this so weighty a cause, and so to frame your actes and procedings, as they may tend first to the glory of God, and next to the conseruation of your cōmon wealth, surety and quietnes.

The next day after, the 3. Estates assembled agayne in the great chamber of the Court at Westminster: where the king and queenes maiesties, and the Cardinall being present, they did exhibite (sitting all on theyr knees) a supplica'tion to theyr highnesses, the tenor wherof ensueth.

The Copy of the supplication and submission exhibited to the king and Queenes maiesties, by the Lordes and Commons of the Parliament.

WE the Lordes spirituall, and temporall, and the commōs of this present parliament, assembled,* representing the whole body of the realme of England, and dominions of the same, in our own names particularly, and also of the sayd body vniuersally in this supplicatiō directed to your maiestyes, with most hūble sute, that it may by your gracious intercession and meane be exhibited to the most reuerend father in God, the Lord Cardinall Poole Legate, sent specially hither from our most holy father Pope Iulius the third, and the Sea Apostolicke of Rome, do declare our selues very sorye and repentaunt for the schisme and disobedience committed in this realme and the dominions of the same, against the sayd sea Apostolicke, either by making, agreing, or executing any lawes, ordinaunces,* or commaundementes agaynst the supremacye of the sayde sea, or otherwise doing or speaking, that might impugne the same: Offring our selues & promising by this our supplication, that for a token and knowledge of our sayd repentance, we be, and shalbe alway ready, vnder and with the authorities of your Maiesties, to the vttermost of our power, to doe that shalbe in vs, for the abrogation and repealing of the sayd lawes and ordinaunces in this present parliament, as well for our selues, as for the whole body, whom we represent.

Whereupon we most humbly beseech your maiesties, as persons vndefiled in the offence of his body towards the sayde Sea, which neuerthesse God by his prouidence hath made subiecte to your maiesties so to set forth this our moste humble sute,* that we may obtaine from the sea Apostolicke, by the sayd most reuerent father, as wel particularly as vniuersally, Absolution, release and discharge from all daunger of such Censures, and sentences, as by the lawes of the church we be fallen in, and that we may, as children repentant, be receiued into the bosome & vnity of Christes church, so as this noble Realme, with all the members therof, may in vnity and perfect obedience to the Sea Apostolicke, and Popes for the time being, serue GOD and your Maiesties to the furtheraunce and aduancement of his Honour and Glorie. Amen.

The Supplication being read, the king and Queene deliuered the same vnto the Cardinall, who (perceiuing y^e effect thereof to aunswere his expectation) did receiue the same most gladly from theyr Maiesties: and after he had in fewe wordes geuen thanks to God, and declared what great cause he had to reioyce aboue all others, that his cōming from Rome into England had takē most happy successe: He by the Popes authority, did geue them this absolution folowing.

¶An absolution pronounced by Cardinall Poole, to the whole Parliament of England, in the presence of the King and Queene.

OUr Lord Iesus Christ which with his most precious bloud hath redemed and washed vs frō all our sinnes and iniquities,* that he might purchase vnto himselfe a glo|r'ious spouse without spot or wrinkle, & whō the Father hath appoynted head ouer all his church: he by his mercy absolue you. And we by apostolicke authority geuen vnto vs by the most holy lord Pope Iulius the 3. his Uicegerent in earth) do absolue & deliuer you, and euery of you with the whole Realme and the Dominions therof, from all Heresy and Schisme, and from all and euerye iudgement, Censures, and paynes, for that cause incurred: & also we do restore you agayn, vnto the vnity of our Mother the holy Church: as in our Letters more playnely it shall appeare: In the name of the father, of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost.

When all this was done they went into the Chappell, and there singing Te Deum, with great solemnity, declared the ioy and gladnesse that for this reconciliation was pretended.

The reporte of thys was with great speede sent vnto Rome, as well by the king and Cardinals Letters, which hereafter folow: as also otherwise. Wherupō the pope caused there at Rome processions to be made, and thanks to be geuē to God with great ioy, for the conuersion of England to his Church: and therefore praysing the Cardinals diligence, and the deuotion of the king and queen, on Christmas euen, by his Bulls he set forth a generall pardō to all such as did truely reioyce for the same.

¶A copy of king Philips Letter, written with his owne hand to Pope Iulius, touching the restoring of the Realme of England.

MOST holy Father, I wrote yesterday vnto Don Iohn Maurique,* that he shoulde declare by worde of mouth, or els write to your holynes, in what good state the matter of religion stode in this Realme, and of the submission to your holinesse, as to the chiefe. As this day, which is the feast of S. Andrew, late in the eue'ning, we haue done God that seruice (to whose onely goodnesse we must impute it, and to your holynes, who haue taken so great payne to gayne these soules) that this realme with full & generall consent of all them that represent the state, being very penitēt for that was past and well bent to that they come to doe, submitted themselues to youe holynes, & to that holy Sea, whom at the request of the Queene and me, your Legate did absolue. And forasmuch as the sayd Don Iohn shall signify vnto your holinesse, all that passed in this matter, I will write no more therof, but onely that the Queene & I, as most faythful & deuout children of your holynes, haue receiued the greatest ioy and comfort hereof, that may be expressed with tong: Considering that besides the seruice done to God hereby, it hath chaunced in the time of your holynes, to place as it were in the lappe of the holy Catholicke church, such a kingdome as this is. And therefore I thinke I cannot be thankfull enough for that is done this day. And I trust in hym, that your holynes shall alway vnderstand, that the holy sea hath not had a more obedient sonne then I, not more desirous to preserue and encrease the authority of the same. God guid and prosper the most holy personage of your holinesse as I desire.

From London the xxx. of Nouember. 1554.

Your holines most humble Sonne the king. &c.

¶Here foloweth likewise the Cardinals letter to the sayd Pope concerning the same matter.

THose things which I wrote vnto your holines of late, of that hope,* which I trusted would come to passe, that in short space this realme would be reduced to the vnity of the church, & obedience of the Apostolick sea, though I did write them not without great cause: yet neuerthesse, I could not be voyd of all feare, not onely for that difficulty, which the mindes of our countrey men did shew, beyng so long alienated from the sea Apostolicke, and for the old hatred which they had borne so many yeares to that name: but much more I feared, least the first entry into the cause it self shuld be put of by some other by matter or conuention comming betwixt.

For the auoyding wherof, I made great meanes to the king and Queene, which litle needed, for their own godly forwardnes, and earnest desire to bring the thing to passe, farre surmounted my great and earnest expectation. This day in the euening being S. Andrewes day, (who fyrst brought his brother Peter to Christ) it is come to passe by the prouidence of God, that this Realme is reclaymed to geue due obedience to Peters seat and your holynesse, by whose meanes it may be cōioyned to Christ the head, & his body, which is the Church. The thing was done and concluded in Parliament (the king and queene being present) with such full consent & great reioysing, that incontinently after I had made my Oration, and geuen the Benediction with a great ioy, and shout, there was diuers times sayde, Amen, Amen: which doth euidently declare, that that holy seed, although it hath bene long oppressed, yet was not vtterly quenched in them: which chiefly was declared in the * Nobility. Returning home to my house, these thinges I wrote vnto your holynes vpon the sodaine reioysing that I had of so weighty a matter, so luckely brought to passe by the diuine prouidence, thinking to haue sent my letters by the kings post, who? as it was sayd) should haue departed shortly: but afterwarde, chaunging my purpose, when I had determined to send one of mine owne men, I thought good to adde this much to my Letters, for the more ample gratulation and reioysing at that good chaūce: which thing as it was right great gladnes to me, through the euent of the same (being it selfe very great, and so holy, so profitable to the whole Church, so healthsome to this my Countrey, which brought me forth, so honorable to y^e same (which receiued me) so likewise I tooke no lesse reioysing of y^e Princes themselues, through whose vertue and godlinesse the matter did take successe and perfection. Of how many, and how great things may the Church (which is the spouse of Christ, & our mother) make her accompt through those her children? Oh notable zeale of godlines,* Oh auncient fayth which vndoubtedly doth so manifestly appeare in thē both that who so seeth them, muste needes (whether he wyll or no) say the same which the Prophette spake of, of the firste children of the Church: Isti sunt semen, cui benedixit Dominus. Haec plantatio Domini ad gloriandum. That is. These are the seede which the Lord hath blessed. This is the Lordes planting to glory in. How holily did your holines with al your authority and earnest affection fauour this mariage, which truly semeth to expresse a great similitude of y^e highest king, which being heyre of the world, was sēt down by his father from the Regall seat,* to be Spouse and Sonne of the Uirgine, & by this meanes to comfort all mankind: for euen so this king himselfe, the greatest heyre of all men which are in the earth, leauing his fathers kingdoms that are most great, is come into his litle kingdome, and is become both the spouse, and sonne of this Uirgine (for he so behaueth himselfe as though he were a sonne, whereas in deed he is an husbände) that he might (as he hath in effect already performed) shew himselfe an ayder & helper to recōcile this people to christ, & his body, which is the church.* Which things seing they are so, what may not our mother the Church her selfe looke for at his handes that hath broughte this to passe, to conuerte the hartes of the Fathers towards theyr Sonnes, and the vnbeleuers to the wisdom of the righteous, which vertue truely doth wōderfully shine in him. But the Queene, which at that time when your holines sent my Legate vnto her, did rise vp as a rodde of incēce springing out of the trees of mirre, and as Frankincence our in the desert, she I say, whiche a litle before was forsakē of all men, how wonderfully doth she now shine? what a sauour of myrre & frankincēce doth she geue forth vnto her people? which (as y^e Prophet saith, of the mother of Christ) brought forth before she laboured, before she was deliuered brought forth a man childe,* who euer heard of such a thing?

and who hath seene the lyke of this? shal y^e earth bring forth in one day, or shal a whole natiō be brought forth together? But she hath now brought forth a whole nation before the time of that deliury, wher^of we are in most great hope.

How great cause is geuen to vs to reioyce? How great cause haue we to geue thanks to Gods mercy, your holines and the Emperors maiesty, which haue bene causers of so happy and so godlye a mariage, by whiche we beyng reconciled, are ioyned to God the father, to Christ & to the Church? of the which, although I cannot comprehend in wordes the ioy that I haue taken, yet I can not keepe silence of it. And to this my reioysing, this also was ioyned (which whē I had perceiued by the letters of the reuerend Archb. of Cousane, your holynes Nuncio, with the Emperours maiestye, brought me maruelous great gladnes) y^t your said holynes began to restore to y^e aūciēt bewty, those thinges which in the Church of Rome through the corruptiō of times were deformed, which truely whē it shalbe finished, thē in deede may we wel cry out with y^e Prophet,* and speake vnto your holynes with these wordes. Exue te stola luctus & vexationis & indu te decore, qui a deo tibi est in gloria sempiterna: nominabitur enim tibi nomen tuum a deo sempiternū, pax iustitiae, & honor pietatis. Tum autē dicetur, circumspice Page 4179 & vide collectos filios tuos ab oriente sole us{que} in occidēt•m, verbo sancto gaudentem. That is: Put of the stoole of sorow and vexation and put on comliness, whiche thou hast of God in euerlasting glory. For thy name shall be named of God euerlasting, peace of righteousness, and honor of godlines: & then it shall be sayd: looke about and see thy sonnes gathered together from the sonne rising to the going downe of the same, reioysing in the holy worde. There is nothing truely (to speake of thy children gathered together in the West, which prepare thēselues to meet theyr mother) which they had rather see, thē her apparelled (that I may vse the wordes of the prophet) in that garment of righteousness, wherwith God adorned her in times past. This one thing remayneth, that your ho^lines ioy, and the ioy of all the vniuersall Church maye be perfited, which together with vs her vnworthy children, ceaseth not to pray to God for it. The almighty God preserue your holines long to continue in health, for the profite of his church.

Frō London the last of Nouember. 1554.

Your most humble seruauant Reginald Poole Cardinall.

Upon the Sondag folowing, being the 2. of December the Byshop of Wynchester Lorde Chauncellour of England preached at Paules Crosse, at whiche Sermon was present the King and Cardinall Poole. Hee tooke for hys Theame this parte of the Epistle of S. Paule to the Romaynes the 13. chap. This also we know the season (brethren) that we should now awake out of sleep, for now is our saluation nearer, then when we beleued &c.

Some notes whereof as they came to my hands faithfully gathered (as it appeareth by sundry copies) I haue here thought good to set forth.

*First, he shewed how the saying of S. Paul was verified vpon the gentiles, who had a long time slept in darke ignorance not knowing god: therfore S. Paul (quoth he) to stir vp theyr heauy dulnesse, willed them to wake out of theyr long sleepe, because theyr saluation was nearer then when they beleued. In amplifying this matter, & comparing our times with theirs: he took ocasiō to declare what difference the Iewish Sacramentes had, from those of the Christians, wherein he vsed these wordes:

Euen as the Sacramentes of the Iewes did declare Christ to come, so doth our sacraments declare Christ to be already come: but Christ to come, and Christ to be come is not al one. For now that he is come, the Iewes sacramēts be done away, and ours only remayne, which declare y^t he is already come, & is nearer vs then he was to the fathers of the old law: for they had him but in signes, but we haue him in the Sacrament of the aultar, euen his very bodye. Wherefore nowe also it is time that we awake out of our sleepe, who haue slept, or rather dreamed these xx. yeares past, as shall more easely appere by declaring at large some of the propertyes and effectes of a sleepe or dreame. And first, as men intending to sleep, do separate themselues frō company, and desire to be alone: euen so haue we seperated our selues from the sea Apostolick of Rome, and haue bene alone,* no Realme in Christendome like vs.

Secondly, as in sleep men dreame sometime of killing, sometime of maiming, sometime of drowning, or burning sometime of such beastlinesse as I will not name, but wyll spare your eares: so haue we in this our sleepe, not onely dreamed of beastlines but we haue done it in deede. For in this our sleepe, hath not one brother destroyed an other? Hath not halfe our money bene wiped away at one tyme? And agayn those that would defend their conscience, were slayne: and others also otherwise troubled, besides infinite other thinges: which you all know as well as I: whereof I report me to your owne consciences.

Farther in a mans sleepe all his senses are stopped, so y^t he can neither see, smell, nor heare, euen so wheras the ceremonies of the church were instituted to moue and stirre vp our senses, they being taken away, were not our senses (as ye would say) stopped and we fast a sleepe? Moreouer whē a man would gladly sleepe, he will put forth the candle least peraduenture it may let his sleepe, & awake hym: So of late all such writers as did holde any thing with the Apostolick Sea were condemned,* and forbiddē to be read and Images (whiche were * lay mens bookes) were cast downe and broken.

The sleep hath continued with vs these xx. yeares, and we all that while without a head. For when King Henry did first take vpon him to be head of the church, it was thē no Church at all. After whose death, King Edward (hauing ouer him Gouvernors and Protectours which ruled as them listed) coulde not be head of the Churche but was onely a shadow or signe of a head: and at length it came to passe, that we had no head at all, no, not so much as our 2. Archbishops. For on the one side, the Queene being a woman could not be head of the Church,* and on the other side they both were conuicted of one crime & so deposed. Thus while wee desired to haue a supream head among vs, it came to passe that we had no head at all. When the tumult was in the North, in the time of king Henry the •. (I am sure) the king was determined to haue geuen ouer the supremacy agayne to the Pope: but the houre was not then come, and therefore it went not forward, least some would haue sayd, that he did it for feare.

After this M. Kneuet, and I were sent Ambassadors vnto the Emperour to desire him that he would be a meane betwene the popes holines and the king, to bring the king to the obedience of the sea of Rome: but the time was neyther yet come. For it might haue bene sayd, that it had bene done for a ciuill pollicy. Agayne, in the beginning of Kyng Edwardes raigne, the matter was mooued, but the tyme was not yet: for it would haue bene sayd that the king (being but a child) had bene bought and solde. Neither in the beginning of the Queenes raigne was the houre come. For it would haue bene sayd that it was done in a tyme of weaknes Likewise when the king first came, if it had bene done, they might haue sayd it had bene by force & violence. But now euen now, *hora est, the houre is come, when no thing can be obiected, but that it is the mere mercy and pro'uidence of God. Nowe hath the Popes holynesse, Pope Iulius the 3. sent vnto vs this most reuerend father, *Cardinall Poole, an Ambassadour from his side. What to doe? not to reuēge the iniuries done by vs agaynst his holines: sed benedicere maledicētibus, to geue his benedictiō to those which defamed and persecuted him.

And that we may be the more meete to receiue the sayd benedictiō, I shall desire you that we may alway acknowledge our selues offēders agaynst his holines. *I do not exclude my selfe forth of the number. I will flere cum flentibus, & gaudere cum gaudentibus, that is: weep with them that weep and reioyce with them which reioyce. And I shall desire you that we may deferre the matter no longer, for now hora est the houre is come. The King and the Queenes Maiesties haue already restored our holy Father the Pope to his supremacy and the three estates assembled in the Parliament representing the whole body of the Realme haue also submitted themselues to his holines, and his successors * for euer. Wherefore let not vs any longer stay. And euen as S. Paule sayd to the Corinthians, that he was theyr father, so may the Pope saye that he is our Father: for we receiued our doctrine first from Rome, therefore he may challenge vs as his owne. We haue all cause to reioyce, for hys holynesse hath sent hither, and preuēted vs before we sought him: such care hath he for vs. Therefore let vs say: Haec est dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & laetemur in ea, Reioyce in this day which is of the Lordes working: that suche a noble man of byrth is come, yea suche a holye Father (I meane my Lord Cardinall Poole) which can speake vnto vs, as vnto brethren, and not as vnto straungers: who hath a long time bene absent. And let vs now awake, whiche so long haue slept, and in our sleepe haue done so much naughtines agaynst the Sacramentes of Christ, denying the blessed Sacrament of the Aultar, and pulled downe the *aultars which thing Luther himselfe would not doe, but rather reprobued them that did, examining them of theyr be'liefe in Christ.

This was the summe of this Sermon before his prayers, wherein he prayed, first for the Pope, Pope Iulius the 3. withall his Colledge of Cardinals, the B. of Londō with the rest of that order: then for the king and Queene & the nobility of this Realme, and last for the commons of the same, with the soules departed, lying in the paynes of Purgatory. This ended (the time being late) they beganne in Paules to ring to theyr Euening song, wherby the precher could not be well heard, whiche caused him to make a short end of this clerkly Sermon.

About this very time a Poste or Messenger was sent frō the whole Parliament to the Pope, to desire him to cōfirme and establish the sale of Abbey landes and Chauntry landes: For the Lordes and the Parliament would graūt nothing in the Popes behalfe before theyr purchases were fully confirmed.

Upon the Thursday folowing, being the 6. day of december, and S. Nicholas day, * all the whole Conuocation both Bishops and other: were sent for to Lambeth to the Cardinall, * who the same day forgaue them all theyr per•urations, schismes, and heresies, and they all there kneeled downe and receiued his absolution, and after an exhortation and gratulation for theyr conuersion to the catholicke church made by the Cardinall, they departed.

Upon the Wednesday being the 12. of December, fiue of the 8. menne (which lay in the Fleete, that were of M. Throgmortons quest) were discharged and set at libertye Page 1480 vpon their fine payed, which was ccxx.li. a piece, and the other •oure put vp a Supplication, therein declaring, that their goods did not amount to the summe that they were appointed to pay, and so vpon that declaration paying lx.li. a piece,* they were deliuered out of prison vpon S. Thomas day before Christmas, beyng the xxi. of December.

Upon the Saterdag followyng, beyng the xxij. of December, all the whole Parliament had strait commaundement, that none of them should depart into their countrey this Christmas, nor before the Parliament were ended. Which commandement was wonderful contrary to their expectations. For as well many of the Lords, as also many of the inferior sort had sent for their horse, and had them brought hither.

*Upon the Friday following, being the 28. of December, and Childermas day, the Prince of Piedmont came to the court at Westminster.

Anno. 1555.

*Upon Newyeres day at night folowing, certain honest men and women of the Citie, to the number of xxx. & a minister with them named M. Rose, were taken as they were in a house in Bow Churchyard at the Communion, and the same night they were al committed to prison. And on the Thursday following, being the 3. day of Ianuary, M. Rose was before the B. of Winchester beyng L. Chancellor, and from thence the same day he was committed to the Tower, after certaine communication had betweene the Bishop and him.

The same day the Act of the supremacie past in the parlament. Also the same day at night was a great tumult betwene Spaniards & English men at Westminster, wherof was like to haue ensued great mischief through a Spanish Frier, which got into the Church and rong Alarum. The occasion was about two whores which were in the cloister of Westminster with a sort of Spaniards, whereof whilest some playd the knaues with them, other some dyd keepe the entry of the Cloister with Dags in harneis. In the meane tyme certaine of the Deanes men came into the cloister, and the Spaniards discharged their dags at them and hurt some of them. By and by the noyse of this doying came into the streetes, so that the whole towne was vp almost, but neuer a stroke was striken. Notwithstandyng, the noise of this doying with the Deanes men, and also the ringing of the Alarum made much ado, and a great number also to be sore afraid.

Ye heard a little before the Councels letter sent to B. Boner, signifyng the good newes of Queene Mary to be not onely conceyued, but also quicke with childe, which was in the moneth of Nouember, the xxviij. day. Of this child great talke began at this tyme to ryse in euery mans mouth, with busy preparation, and much ado, especially amongst such as semed in England to cary Spanish hartes in English bodies. In number of whom here is not to be forgotten, nor defrauded of his condigne commendatiō for his woorthy affection toward his Prince and her issue, one sir Rich. Southwel, who being the same tyme in the parlament house when as the Lordes were occupied in other affaires & matters of importance, sodainly starting vp, for fulnes of ioy, brast out in these words folowing: Tush my Maisters (quoth he) what talke ye of these matters? I would haue you take some order for our yong maister that is now comming into the world apace,* lest he find vs vnprouided, &c. By the which words both of him, and also by the foresaid letters of the counsaile, and the common talke abroad, it may appeare what an assured opinion was thē conceiued in mens heds of Queene Mary, to be conceiued and quicke with child. In so much that at the same tyme, and in the same Parliament: there was eftsoones a bill exhibited, and an Act made vpon the same, the words wherof for the more euidence, I thought here to exemplificate, as vnder followeth.

¶The wordes of the Acte.

ALbeit we the Lordes spirituall and temporal, & the commons in this present parliament assembled,* haue firme hope & confidence in the goodnes of almighty God, that like as he hath hitherto miraculously preserued the Queenes maiesty from many great imminent perils and daungers: euen so he will of his infinite goodnes, geue her highnes strength, the rather by our continuall prayers to passe well the danger of deliuerance of chylde,* wherwith it hath pleased him (to al our great comforts) to blesse her: Yet forasmuch as all things of this world be vncertaine, and hauing before our eyes the dolorous experience of this inconstant gouernment during the tyme of the raigne of the late king Edward the 6. do plainly see the manifold inconueniences, great dangers and perils that may ensue to this whole realme, if foresight be not vsed to preuent all euill chances if they should happen: For the eschewyng hereof, we the Lordes spirituall & temporall, and the commons in this present Parliament assembled, for and in consideration of a most speciall trust and confidence, thot we haue and repose in the kings maiesty,* for and cōcerning the politike gouernment, order, and administration of this realm in the tyme of the yong yeres of the issue or issues of her maiesties body to bee borne, if it should please God to call the Queenes highnes out of this present lyfe, during the tender yeares of such issue or issues (which God forbid) according to such order and maner, as hereafter in this present Acte his highnes most gracious pleasure is, should be declared and set forth, haue made our humble sute by the assent of the Queenes highnes, that his maiestie would vouchsafe to accept and take vppon hym the rule, order, education, and gouernment of the sayd issue or issues to bee borne, as is aforesayd, vpon which our sute beyng of his said maiestie most graciously accepted, it hath pleased his highnesse not onely to declare, that like as for the most part his maiesty verely trusteth that almighty God (who hath hitherto preserued the Queenes maiesty) to geue this realme so good an hope of certayne succession in the bloud royall of the same realme, will assist her highnes with his graces and benedictions, to see the fruite of her body well brought forrh,* lyue and able to gouerne (whereof neither all this realme, ne all the world besides, should or could receiue more comfort then his maiesty should and would) yet if such chaunce should happen, hys maiesty at our humble desires is pleased and contented, not onely to accept and take vpō him the cure and charge of the education, rule, order, and gouernmēt of such issues as of this most happy Mariage, shall be borne betweene the Queenes highnes and him: but also during the time of such gouernment, would by all wayes and meanes, study, trauaile, and employ hymselfe to aduance the weale both publike & priuate, of this realme and dominions thereunto belonging, according to the sayd trust in his maiestye reposed, with no lesse good will and affection, then if his highnesse had bene naturally borne amongst vs. In consideration whereof, be it enacted by the King and the Quenes most excellent maiesties, by the assent of the Lordes spirituall and temporall, and the commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authoritie of the same, &c. as it is to be seene in the Acte more at large ratified and confirmed at the same Parliament, to the same entent and purpose.

¶ Thus much out of the Acte and statute I thought to rehearse, to the entent the Reader may vnderstand, not so much how Parliaments may sometimes be deceiued (as by this childe of Queene Mary may appeare) as rather what cause we Englishmen haue to render most earnest thanks vnto almighty god, who so mercifully against the opinion, expectatiō, and working of our aduersaries, hath helped & deliuered vs in this case, which otherwise might haue opened such a window to the Spaniardes to haue entred and replenished this land, that peraduenture by this tyme Englishmen should haue enioyed no great quiet in their owne countrey: the Lord therefore make vs perpetually myndfull of his benefits, Amen.

Thus we see then, how man doth purpose, but God disposeth as pleaseth him. For all this great labour, prouision, and order taken in the Parliament house for their yōg maister long looked for, commyng so surely into the world in the end appeared neither yong maister, nor young maistresse, that any man yet to this day can heare of.

Furthermore, as the labour of the lay sort was herein deluded: so no lesse ridiculous it was to behold what litle effect the prayers of the Popes Churchmen had wyth almighty God, who trauailed no lesse with their processions Masses, and Collects, for the happy deliuerance of thys yong maister to come, as here followeth to be seene.

¶ A prayer made by D. Weston Deane of Westminster, daily to be sayd for the Queenes deliuerance.

O Most righteous Lord God, which for the offence of the first woman, hast threatened vnto all women a common, sharpe, and ineuitable malediction, and hast enioyned them that they should conceiue in sinne, and beyng conceiued, should be subiect to many and grievous tormentes, and finally be deliuered with the danger and ieopardy of their lyfe: We beseech thee, for thine exceeding great goodnes and bottomlesse mercy, to mittigate the straightnes of that law. Asswage thine anger for a while and cherish in the bosome of thy fauour and mercye, our most gracious Queene Mary, beyng now at the poynt of her deliuerance. So helpe her, that without danger of her lyfe, she may ouercome the sorow, and in due season bring forth a chyld, in body beautifull and comely, in mynd noble and valiant. So that afterward she forgetting the trouble, may with ioy, laude & prayse Page 1481 the bountifulnesse of thy mercy, and together with vs, praise and blesse both thee and thy holy name, world withouten ende. This (Oh Lord) we desire thee, we beseeche thee, and most hartily craue of thee. Heare vs oh Lord, and graunt vs our petition: Let not the enemies of thy faith, and of thy Church say: Where is theyr God?

¶ A solemne prayer made for king Phillip and Queene Maries childe, that it may be a male chylde, welfauoured and wittie, &c.

O Most mighty Lord God, which regardest the prayer of the humble, and despisest not their request, bowe downe from thine high habitation of the heauens, the eies of thy mercy, vnto vs wretched sinners, bowing y^e knees of our hartes, and with many and deepe sighes bewayling oure sinnes & offences, humbly with eyes intent, & hands displayed, praying & beseeching thee, with the shield of thy protection, to defend Mary thy seruant, and our Queene, who hath none other helper but thee, and whom through thy grace thou hast willed to be conceiued with chyld: and at the time of her trauaile graciously with the helpe of thy right hand deliuer her, and from all danger with the child in her conceiued, mercifully preserue.

It hath seemed good in thy sight mercifull Father, by thy seruaunt Mary, to worke these wōders, that is to say: in her hands to vanquish and ouerthrow the stout enemy & to deliuer vs thy people out of the hands of * heretikes, Infidels, enemies to thee, and to the crosse of thy beloued sonne Iesus Christ, that of thy seruaunt thou mightest speake in farre countreys. Therefore for these wonderfull workes which thou doest to thy seruants, thou art magnified Lord God for euer, and we thy people blesse thee the God of heauen, which hast wrought vpon vs this great mercy, and hast excluded from vs the heretike, the enemy of truth, the persecuter of thy church. We know, we know that we haue grievously (Lord) sinned, that we haue bene deceiued by vanitie, and that we haue forsaken thee our God. Our iniquities be multiplied on our head, and our sinnes be increased vp to heauen, and we our selues haue offended, and our princes & our priests for these our sinnes haue deserued an hypocrite to our prince, our sinnes haue deserued a Tyrant to our Gouernour, that should bryng our lyfe to bitternes. We be not worthy to haue so gentle and mercifull a Queene, so godly a ruler, & finally so vertuous a prince: at the very beginning of whose raigne, a new light as it were of Gods religion, seemed to vs for to spring & rise.* The Iews did blesse y^e widow Iudith with one voice, saying: Thou art the glory of Ierusalem, thou art the ioy of Israell, thou art the honor of our people, for that thou hast loued chastity, and thou shalt be blessed for euer.

And we the English people with one agreeable consent do cry:* Thou Mary art the glory of England, our ioy, the honour of thy people, for that thou hast embraced chastitie: thine heart is strengthened, for the hand of our Lord hath comforted thee, and therefore thou shalt be blessed for euer. But bow downe, O most mercifull Father, thine eare, and open thine eyes, and behold our affliction, and our humble confession. Thou knowest Lord, that against Phillip, not by humane, but by thy ordinaunce our king, and against thy seruaunt Mary by thy prouidence our Queene, the restorers and maintainers of thy Testament & of the faith & most constāt defenders of thy church? thou knowest I say, that against these our two gouernors (the enimies of thy holy * Testament, & of the Church thy spouse) be most ranke Rebels and spitefull murmurers, walking after their lustes, whose mouth speaketh wordes of pride, to the end they may set vp the kingdome of heretikes & schismatikes. By the power of their handes they would * chaunge thy promises, and destroy thine inheritaunce, and stop and shut vp the mouthes of them y^t praise thee, and extinguish the glory of thy catholike Church and aultar.

It is manifest and plaine, how many contentiōs how many conspiracies and seditions, how great wars, what tumults, how many, & how great troublesome vexations, how many heresies & schismes (for these be the most ready deuises, and euident tokens of heretickes) for our sinnes do hang ouer vs, if thy seruant be taken from this life: for we acknowledge that our Lord is omnipotent, who hath pitched his dwellyng place in the midst of his people, to y^e intent to deliuer vs out of y^e hands of our enemies. Turne therefore thy countenance vnto vs, shew vnto vs, O Lord, thy face. Punish vs for our sinnes according to thy will & pleasure, onely now deliuer vs. We bowing the knees of our hart, beseech thee that thou wilt not reserue vnto vs punishment for euer, & we shall prayse thee, all the days of our life. Heare our cry, and the praier of thy people, & open to them the treasure of thy mercy, thy gracious sauour, the spring of liuely water. Thou that hast begon, make in the hand of the seruaunt a perfect worke. Suffer not, we pray thee, the * faythlesse rebels to say of thy seruaunt and her Counsellours, that they haue deuised matters which they cannot performe. And graunt vnto thy seruant an happy and an easie trauail. For it is not impossible to thy power, nor indecent to thy iustice, nor vnwoonted to thy mercy.

It is well knowen vnto vs, how maruelously thou diddest worke in Sara of the age of xc. yeares, and in Elizabeth the barren, and also far stricken in age: for thy counsel is not in the power of men. Thou Lord that art y^e searcher of harts & thoughts, thou knowest that thy seruāt neuer lusted after man, neuer gaue her selfe to wanton cōpany, nor made her selfe pertaker w^t them that walk in lightnes: but she consented to take an husband with thy feare, & not with her lust. Thou knowest that thy seruaunt tooke an husband, not for carnal pleasure, but only for the desire & loue of posteritie, wherein thy name might be blessed for euer and euer. Geue therfore vnto thy seruaunts, Phillip our king, and Mary our Queene, a male issue, which may sit in the seat of thy kingdome. Geue vnto our Queene thy seruant, a little infant in fashion and body, comely & beautifull, in pregnant wit notable and excellent.

Graunt the same to be in obedience like * Abraham, in hospitalitie like Loth, in chastitie and brotherly loue, lyke Ioseph, in meekenes & myldnes like Moses, in strength & valiantnes like Sampson. Let him be found faythful as Dauid after thy hart. Let him be wise among kings as the most wise Salomon. Let him be like Iob, a simple and an vpright man, fearing God & eschewyng euill. Let hym finally be garnished with the comelynes of all vertuous cōditions, and in the same let him waxe old and lyue, that he may see his childrens children to the third & fourth generation. And geue vnto our soueraigne Lord and Lady. K. Phillip and Queene Mary, thy blessing and long life vpō earth. And graunt that of thē may come kings & Queenes which may stedfastly continue in faith, loue, and holynesse. And blessed be their seed of our God, that all nations may know, thou art only God in all the earth, which art blessed for euer and euer, Amen.

¶Another prayer for Queene Mary, and her conceiued chyld.

O Almighty father, which diddest sanctifie the blessed Virgine and mother of Mary in her conception, and in the byrth of Christ our sauour (thy onely sonne:) also by thy omnipotent power didst safely deliuer the prophet Ionas out of the Whales belly: Defend O Lord, we beseech thee, *thy seruaunt Mary our Queene, with child conceyued, and so visite her in and with thy godly gift of health, that not onely the child thy creature within her contained, may ioyfully come from her into this worlde, and receyue the blessed Sacraments of Baptisme and Confirmation, enioying therwith dayly encrease of all princely and gracious gifts both of body & soule, but that also she, the mother, thorowe thy speciall grace and mercy, may in tyme of her trauaile auoyde all excessiue dolour and payne, and abide perfect and sure from all perill and danger of death, with long and prosperous life, thorough Christ our Lord, Amen.

It followeth now further in processe of the story, that vpon the Tuesday, being the x. of Ianuary, xix. of the lower house of the Parliament, with the Speaker, * came to the White Hall to the kyng, and there offred him the gouernment of the realme, and of the Issue, if the Queene should faile, which was confirmed by act of Parliament, within ten dayes after.

Upon Wednesday folowing,* beyng the xxvi. of Ianuary, the Parliament was cleane dissolued. In this Parliament, among other things, the bishop of Rome was established, and all such lawes as were made against hym since the xx. yeare of K. Henry the 8. were repealed, & also cardinall Poole, bish. Pates,* Lilly & other were restored to their bloud. Also there was an acte made for speakyng of words: that whosoever should speake any thyng agaynst the king or Queene, or that might mooue any sedition or rebellion, at the first tyme to haue one of his eares cut of▪ or to forfeit an C. markes: and at the second tyme to haue both his eares cut off, or els to forfeit an C. pounds, & who so euer should write, cipher, or print any of the premisses, to haue their right hand cut off.*

Also in this Parliament, three statutes were reuiued for triall of heresie: one made in the fift yere of Richard the 2. an other in the 2. yeare of Henry the 4. and the third, in the 2. yeare of Henry the 5. Also the doying of M. Rose and the other that were with him, was communed of in this Parliament, and vpon that occasion an acte was made, Page 1482 that certaine euill prayers should be treason agaynst the Queenes highnes. The prayers of these men were thus: God turne the hart of Queene Mary from Idolatrie, or els shorten her dayes. Wherof read the statute, Ann. 1. & 2. Reg. Phil. & Mariae. Cap. 9.

As touching the taking of M. Rose & his felows, word was brought therof to M. Hooper being thē in the Fleete. Whereupon the said M. Hooper sendeth aunswer againe, with a letter also of consolation sent to the sayd prisoners: the copie wherof I thought here not to ouerpasse.

¶The aunswer of M. Hooper to a letter sent vnto him concerning certaine prisoners taken in Bowe churchyard.

*The grace of God be with you. Amen. I perceiue by your letter, how that vpon Newyeres day at night, there were taken a godly company of Christians, whilst they were praying. I doe reioyce in that men can be so well occupied in this perilous time, and flee vnto God for remedy by prayer, as well for theyr owne lackes and necessities, as also charitably to pray for them that persecute them. So doth the worde of God commaund all men to pray charitably for them that hate them, and not to reuile any Magistrate with wordes, or to meane him euill by force or violence. They also may reioyce that in well doying, they were taken to the prison. Wherefore I haue thought it good to send them this little writing of consolation: praying God to send them patience, charitie & constancie in the truth of his most holy word. Thus fare you well, and pray God to send his true word into this Realme againe amongst vs, which the vngodly Bishops haue now banished. Ianua. 4. ann. 1555.

¶A letter of consolation sent from M. Hooper to the godly brethren taken in Bow churchyard, in prayer, and layd in the Counter in Breadstreet.

The grace, fauor, consolation, and ayd of the holy ghost, be with you now and euer, So be it.

Dearely beloued in the Lord, euer sithens your imprisonment,* I haue bene maruelously mooued with great affections and passions, as well of myrth and gladnes, as of heauines & sorrow. Of gladnes in this, that I perceyued how ye be bent & geuen to prayer and inuocation of gods helpe in these darke & wicked proceedings of men agaynst Gods glory. I haue bene sory to perceiue the malice and wickednes of men to be so cruel, diuelish, & tyrannicall, to persecute the people of God for seruyng of God, saying & hearing of the holy Psalmes, and the word of eternall life. These cruell doings do declare, that the Papistes Church is more bloudy and tyrannicall, then euer was the sword of the Ethnikes and Gentiles.

When I heard of your taking, and what ye were doing wherfore, and by whom ye were takē, I remembred how the Christians in the Primatiue Church were vsed by the crueltie of vnchristened heathens, in the tyme of Traiane the Emperour about 77. yeares after Christes ascension into heauen: * and how the Christians were persecuted very sore, as though they had bene traytors and moouers of sedition. Wherupon the gentle Emperor Traiane required to know the true cause of Christian mens trouble. A great learned man called Plinius, wrote vnto him & said, it was because the Christians said certaine psalmes before day, * vnto one called Christ, whō they worshipped for god. When Traiane the Emperour vnderstood it was for nothyng but for conscience & religion, he caused by hys commaundements euery where, that no man should be persecuted for seruyng of God. But the Pope & his church hath cast you into prison, beyng taken euen doynge the worke of God, and one of the excellents workes that is required of Christian men: that is, to wit, whiles ye were in praier, & not in such wicked & superstitious prayers as the papists vse, but in the same prayer that Christ hath taught you to pray. And in his name onely ye gaue God thanks for that ye haue receiued, and for his sake ye asked for such thyngs as ye want. O glad may ye be that euer ye were borne, to be apprehended whilest ye were so vertuously occupied. Blessed be they that suffer for righteousnesse sake. For if God had suffred them that tooke your bodies, then to haue taken your life also, now had ye bene following the Lamb in perpetual ioyes, away from the company and assembly of wicked men. But the Lord would not haue you sodainly so to depart, but reserueth you, gloriously to speake and maintaine his truth to the world.

Be ye not careful what ye shall say, for God will go out & in with you, and will be present in your harts, & in your mouthes to speake his wisdom, although it seemeth foolishnes to the world. He that hath begun this good worke in you, continue you in the same vnto the end: & pray vnto him, that ye may feare him only, that hath power to kill both body & soule, and to cast them into hel fire. Be of good comfort. All the haire of your hed are numbred, and there is not one of them can perish, * except your heavenly father suffer it to perish. Now ye be in the field & placed in y^e forefront of Christs battel. Doubtles, it is a singuler fauour of God, & a special loue of him towards you, to geue you this foreward & preeminence, & a signe that he trusteth you before others of his people. * Wherfore (deare brethren and sisters) continually fight this fight of the Lord. Your cause is most iust and godly, ye stand for the true Christ (who is after the flesh in heauen) & for his true religion and honor, which is amply, fully, sufficiently and abundantly conteyned in the holy Testament, sealed with Christes owne blood. How much be ye bound to God, to put you in trust with so holy and iust a cause.

Remember what lookers vpon you haue, to see & behold you in your sight, God & all his Angels, who be ready alway to take you vp into heauen, if ye be slaine in his fight. Also you haue standing at your backes all the multitude of the faithfull, who shal take courage, strength, * and desire to follow such noble & valiant Christians as you be. Be not afraid of your aduersaries: for he that is in you, is stronger then he that is in them. Shrinke not although it be payne to you, your paynes be not now so great, as here after your ioyes shall be. Read the comfortable chapters to the Romans. 8.10.15. Heb. 11.12.* And vpon your knees thanke God that euer ye were accompted worthy to suffer any thing for his names sake. Read the 2. chap. of s. Lukes gospell, & there you shal see how the shepherds that watched vpon their sheep all night, as soone as they heard that Christ was borne at Bethlem,* by and by they went to see him. They did not reason nor debate with thēselues, who should keepe the Wolfe from the sheep in the meane time, but did as they were commanded, & committed their sheep vnto him, whose pleasure they obeyed. So let vs do now we be called, commit all other thinges to him that calleth vs. He will take heed that all things shall be well. He wil helpe the husband, he will comfort the wyfe, he will guide the seruants, he will keepe the house,* he will preserue the goods: yea, rather then it should be vndone, he will wash the dishes, and rocke the cradle. Cast therfore all your care vpon God, for he careth for you.

Besides this, you may perceiue by your imprisonment that your aduersaries weapons against you, be nothyng but flesh, bloud, and tyrannie. For if they were able,* they would maintaine their wicked religion by Gods worde: but for lacke of that, they would violently compell such as they cannot by holy Scripture perswade, because the holy word of God, and all Christes doyngs be contrary vnto them. I pray you pray for me, & I will pray for you. And although we be asunder after the world, yet in Christ (I trust) for euer ioyning in the spirite, and so shall meete in the pallace of the heauenly ioyes, after this short and transitorie lyfe is ended. Gods peace be with you. Amen. The 14, of Ianuary. 1554.

Upon the Friday after this following, being the 18. of Ianuary, all the Counsaile went vnto the Tower, & there the same day discharged and set at libertie all the prisoners of the Tower, or the most part of them, namely,* the late duke of Northumberlands sonnes, Ambrose. Robert, and Henry, sir Andrew Dudley, sir Iohn Rogers, sir Iames Crofts, sir Nich. Throgmorton, sir Nicholas Arnall, sir George Harper, sir Edw. Warner, sir W. Sentlow, sir Gawen Carew, M. Gybbes, Cuthbert Uaughan, wyth many other.

Upon the Tuesday folowing,* being the xxij. of Ianuary, all the preachers that were in prison were called before the B. of Wincher, L. Chancellour and certain other, at the bishops house at S. Mary Oueres. From whence (after communication beyng asked whether they would conuert and enioy the Queenes pardon, or els stande to that they had taught: they all aunswered that they would stand to that they had taught) they were cōmitted to straiter prison then before they were, with charge that none should speake with them.

Amongst the which number of prisoners, one Iames George the same tyme died in prison,* being there in bands for religion & righteousnes sake: who therfore was exempted to be buried in the popish churchyard, and was buried in the field.

Upon the Wednesday folowing beyng the 23. of Ianuary, all the bishops with all the rest of the Conuocation house were before the cardinal at Lambeth,* where he willed them to reparaire euery man where his cure and charge lay, exhorting them to intreat the people and their flocke with all gentlenes, and to endeouour themselves to winne the people rather by gentlenes then by extremity & rigor, Page 1483 and so let them depart.

Upon the Friday following, being the 25. of Ianuary & the day of the Conuersion of S. Paule, there was generall and solemne procession through London to geue God thanks for their conuersion to y^e catholike church: * Wherin (to set out their glorious pompe) there were fourescore & ten crosses, 160. priests and clerkes, who had euery one of them copes vpon their backs, singing very lustely. There followed also for the better estimation of the sight, 8. Bishops, and last of all came Boner the B. of London, carying the popish pixe vnder a Canapy.

Besides, there was also present the Maior, Aldermen, and all the liuery of euery occupation. Moreouer, the king also himselfe, and the Cardinall came to Paules Church the same day. From whence after Masse they returned to Westminster againe. As the king was entred the Church at the steps goyng vp to the Quiere, all the Gentlemen that of late were set at libertie out of the Tower, kneeled before the king and offred vnto him themselues and their seruices.

After the procession there was also commaundement giuen to make Bonefires at night. Whereupon did rise among the people a doubtful talke why all this was done. Some sayd it was that the Queene, beyng then (as they said) with child, might haue a safe deliuary. Others thoght that it was for ioy that the realme was ioyned agayne to the sea of Rome, which opinion of both, seemed most true.

Upon the Monday folowing being the 28. of Ianuary, * the B. of Winchester and the other bishops, had Commission from the cardinall to sit vpon, and order according to the lawes, all such preachers and heretikes (as they termed them) as were in prison, and according to this Commission, the same day the B. of Winchester and the other bishops with certaine of the counsail, sate in S. Mary Oueries church, and called before them these three, M. Hooper, M. Rogers, and M. Cardmaker, who were brought thether by the shriues, from whence after communication, they were committed to prison till the next day, but Cardmaker this day submitted himselfe vnto them.

*Upon the Tuesday beyng the 29. of Ianuary, Hooper, Rogers, D. Taylor, and Bradford were brought before them, where sentence of excommunication and iudgement ecclesiasticall was pronounced vpon M. Hooper, and M. Rogers by the Bish. of Winchester, who sate as Iudge in Caiphas seat, who droue them out of the church according to their law and order. D. Taylor and Bradford were cōmitted to prison till the next day.

Upon the Wednesday being the 30. of Ianuary, Doct. Taylor, D. Crome, M. Bradford, M. Saunders, and D. Ferrar sometyme B. of S. Dauids, * were before the sayd bishops, where iij. of them, that is to say, D. Taylor, M. Sanders, and M. Bradford were likewise excommunicated, & sentence pronounced vpon them, & so committed to the Shiriffes. D. Crome desired two months respite, and it was granted him, & M. Ferrar was againe committed to prison till another tyme. All these men shewed thēselues to be learned (as in deed they were no lesse) but what auaieth either learning, reason or truth it self, where will beareth rule.

After the examination and condemnation of these good men and preachers aboue recited, Commissions and Inquisitours were sent abroad likewise into all partes of the realme: by reason wherof a great number of most godly & true christians (out of all the quarters of the realme, but especially Kent, Essex, Northfolke, and Suffolke) were apprehended, brought vp to London, and cast in prison, and afterward (most of them) either consumed cruelly by fire, or els thorough euill handlyng died in the prisons, & were buried on dunghils abroad in the fields, or in some backside of the prison. Of all which matters, cōcerning the tragicall handling of these blessed Martyrs and witnesses of Iesus Christ, of all the bloudy persecution of this tyme, now followeth (the Lord so grantyng) seuerally and more particularly in this next booke in order to be declared: after that I shall first recite a generall supplication, giuen vp in the name of the preachers aforesayd lying in prison, vnto the King and Queene, during the tyme of the Parliament, as followeth.

¶Vnto the King and Queenes most excellent Maiesties, and to their most honourable and high Court of Parliament.

IN most humble and lamentable wise complain vnto your Maiesties, and to your high court of Parliament,* your poore desolate & obedient subiects, H. F. T. B. P. R. S. &c. That where as your said subiects liuing vnder the lawes of God and of this realme in the days of the late most noble king Edward 6. did in all things shew themselues true, faithfull and diligent subiects, accord•ng to their vocation, as well in the sincere ministring of Gods holy word, as in due obedience to the higher powers, & in the dayly practise of such vertues and good demeanor, as the lawes of God at all tymes, and the statutes of the realme did then allow: Your sayd subiects neuerthesse, contrary to all lawes of iustice, equitie and right, are in very extreme maner, not onely cast into prison (where they haue remained now these 15. or 16. months) but their liuings also, their houses and possessions,* their goodes and bookes taken from them, and they slandered to be most hainous heretikes, their enemies themselues being both witnesses, accusers, and Iudges, belying, slandering, and misreportyng your said subiectes at their pleasure, whereas your sayd subiectes beyng straightly kept in prison, cannot yet be suffred to come forth and make aunswer accordingly.

In consideration whereof, it may please your most excellent Maiesties, and this your high court of Parliament, graciously to tender the present calamitie of your sayd poore subiects, and to call them before your presence, graunting them liberty, either by mouth or writing in the playne English tong, to aunswer before you or before indifferent Arbiters to be appointed by your Maiesties vnto such articles of controuersie in religion as their sayd aduersaries haue already condemned them of,* as of hainous heresies: Prouided, that all things may be done with such moderation & quiet behauior, as becommeth subiectes and children of peace, & that your said subiects may haue the free vse of all their owne bookes and conference together among themselues.

Which thing beyng granted, your said subiects doubt not but it shall plainly appeare that your sayd subiects are true and faithful christians, & neither heretikes, neither teachers of heresie, nor cut of from the true catholike vniuersal church of Christ: Yea, that rather their aduersaries themselues be vnto your Maiesties, as were the charmers of Egypt vnto Pharao Sedechias & his adherents, vnto the king of Israel,* and Bariesu to the Proconsul Sergius Paulus. And if your said subiects be not able by the testimonie of Christ, his prophets, Apostles, & godly fathers of his church to prooue, that the doctrine of the church, homilies, and seruice taught and set forth in the tyme of our late most godly prince and king, Edward the 6. is the true doctrine of Christes Catholicke church, and most agreeable to the articles of the christian fayth: your sayd subiects offer themselues then to the most heauy punishment, that it shall please your maiesties to appoynt.

Wherefore for the tender mercy of God in Christ (which you looke for at the day of iudgement) your sayd poore subiectes in bonds, most humbly beseech your most excellent maiesties, and this your high court of Parliament, beningly and graciously to heare and graunt this their petition, tendyng so greatly to the glory of God, to the edifyng of his church, to the honor of your maiesties, to the commendation and maintenāce of iustice, right, and equitie, both before God and man. And your sayd subiectes according to their bounden duety, shall not cease to pray vnto almighty God, for the gracious preseruacion of your most excellent maiesties long to endure.

¶Here beginneth the eleuenth Booke, wherein is discoursed the bloudy murthering of Gods Saintes, with the particular Processes and Names of such good Martyrs, both Men and Women, as in this tyme of Queene Mary, were put to death.

☛The Story, Life, and Martyrdome of Maister IOHN ROGERS.

THE fourth daye of February, suffered the constant Martyr of God, M. Iohn Rogers, concernynge whose life, examinations, and suffring, here followeth in order set forth. And first touching his lyfe and bringing vp. Iohn Rogers brought vp in the Uniuersitie of Cambridge, where hee profitably trauelled in good learning,* at the length was chosen and called by the Merchants Aduenturers, to be their Chaplaine at Antwerpe in Brabant, whome he serued to their good contentation many yeares. It chaunced him there to fal in company with that worthy seruant and Martyr of God, William Tindall, and with Miles Couerdale (which both for the hatred they bare to popish superstition and idolatry, and loue to true religion, had forsaken their natiue country.) In conferring with them the scriptures, he came to great knowledge in the Gospell of God, in so much that he cast of the heauy yoke of Popery, perceiuyng it to be impure and filthy Idolatry, and ioyned himselfe with them two in that paynefull & most profitable labour of translating the Bible into the Englishe tongue,* which is intituled: The Translation of Thomas Mathew. He knowing by the scriptures, that vnlawful vows may lawfully be broken, and that Matrimony is both honest and honourable amongst all men, ioyned hymselfe in lawfull matrimonye, and so went to Wittemberge in Saxony, where he with much sobernes of liuyng did not onely greatly encrease in all good and godly learnyng,* but also so much profited in the knowledge of the Dutch tong, that the charge of a congregation was orderly committed to his cure.

In which ministry, he diligently and faithfully serued many yeares, vntil such tyme as it pleased God by y^e faithfull trauell of his chosen and deare seruant king Edward the sixt,* vtterly to banish all Popery forth of England, & to receiue in true Religion, setting Gods Gospell at liberty. He then beyng orderly called, hauyng both a conscience and a ready good will to helpe forward the worke of the Lord in his natie country, left such honest and certaine conditions as he had in Saxony, and came into England to preach the Gospel, without certaintie of any condition. In which office, after he had a space diligently and faithfully trauailed,* Nicholas Ridley then bishop of London, gaue him a Prebende in the Cathedrall Church of Paules, and the Deane and the Chapter chose hym to be the Reader of the Diuinitie lesson there, wherein he diligently trauailed, vntill such tyme as Queene Mary obtaining the crowne, banished the Gospell and true religion, and brought in the Antichrist of Rome, with his Idolatry and superstition.

After the Queene was come to the Tower of Londō, he beyng orderly called thereunto, made a godly and vehement Sermon at Paules Crosse, confirmyng such true doctrine as he and other had there taught in K. Edwards dayes, exhortyng the people constantly to remayne in the same, and to beware of all pestilent Popery, Idolatry, and superstition. The Councel beyng then ouermatched with popish and bloody bishops,* called hym to accompt for his Sermon: To whom he made a stout, wittie, & godly answer, and yet in such sort handled himself, that at that time he was clearely dismissed. But after that, Proclamation was set foorth by the Queene to prohibite true preachyng, he was called agayne before the Counsel, (for the bishops thirsted after his blood.) The Counsell quarelled wyth hym concerning his doctrine, and in conclusion commanded hym as prisoner to keepe his owne house, and so hee did: although by flying he might easily haue escaped their cruell hands, and many thyngs there were,* which myght haue mooued hym thereunto. He did see the recouery of religion in England for that present, desperate: he knew he could not want a liuyng in Germany, and he coulde not forget his wyfe and x. children, and to seeke means to succour them. But all these things set apart, after he was called to answer in Christes cause, he would not depart, but stoutly stood in defence of the same, and for the triall of that truth, was content to hazard his lyfe.

Thus he remayned in hys owne house as prisoner a long tyme, till at the length through the vncharitable procurement of Boner Bishop of London, who could not abyde such honest neighbours to dwell by him,* he was remooued from his owne house, to the prison called Newgate, where he was lodged among theeues and murtherers, for a great space: during which tyme, what businesse he had with the aduersaries of Christ, all is not knowen, neither yet any certaintie of his examinations, further thē he hymselfe did leaue in writyng, which God would not to be lost, but to remayne for a perpetuall testimony in the cause of Gods truth, as here followeth recorded and testified by his owne writyng.

¶The Examination and aunswere of John Rogers made to the L. Chancellor, and to the rest of the Counsell, the 22. of Ianuary, Anno. 1555.

The Lord Chauncellour.

First the L. Chancellour said vnto me thus. Sir,* ye haue heard of the state of the realme in which it standeth now.

Rogers.

No my Lord, I haue bene kept in close prison, and except there haue bene some generall thyng sayd at the table whē I was at dinner or supper, I haue heard nothing, and there haue I heard nothing whereupon any speciall thing might be grounded.

L. Chan.

Then sayd the L. Chancellor: Generall thynges, generall things, mockingly? Ye haue heard of my L. Cardinals commyng, and that the Parliament hath receyued his blessing, not one resisting vnto it, but one man which did speake against it. Such an vnitie, and such a myracle hath not bene seene. And all they, of which there are eyght score in one house, sayd one that was by (whose name I know not) haue with one assent and * consent, receyued pardon of their offences, for the schisme that we haue had in England, in refusing the holy fater of Rome to be hed of the Catholike Church. How say ye, are ye content to vnite and knit yourselfe to the fayth of the catholike church with vs in the state in which it is now in England? Wyll ye do that?

Page 1485

Rogers.

The Catholike Church I neuer did nor will dissen• from.

L. Chancel.

Nay, but I speake of the state of the Catholike church, in that wyse in which we stand now in England, hauyng receaued the Pope to be supreme head.

Rog.

*I know none other head but Christ, of his catholike church, neither will I acknowledge the Bishop of Rome to haue any more authority then any other bishop hath by the word of God, and by the doctrine of the olde and pure Catholike church 400. yeres after Christ.

L. Chaun.

Why didst thou then acknowledge King Henry the 8. to be supreme head of the church, if Christ be the onely head?

Rog.

*I neuer graunted hym to haue any supremacy in spirituall thyngs, as are the forgeuenesse of sinnes, geuing of the holy Ghost, authoritie to be a Iudge aboute the worde of God.

L. Chan.

Yea said he, and Tonstall B. of Duresme, and N. B. of Worcester,* if thou hadst said so in his dayes (and they nodded the hed at me, with a laughter) thou hadst not ben alyue now.

Rog.

Which thing I denied, and would haue told how hee was said and ment to be supreme head. But they looked & laughed one vpon another, and made such a busines, that I was cōstrayned to let it passe. There lyeth also no great waight thereupon: for all the world knoweth what the meanyng was. The L. Chancellor also sayd to the L. Wil. Haward, that there was no inconuenience therin, to haue Christ to be supreme head,* and the B. of Rome also: and when I was ready to haue answered that there could not be two heds of one church, and haue more plainly declared the vanity of that his reason, the L. Chancellor said: what saist thou? make vs a direct answer whether thou wilt be one of this catholike church, or not, with vs in the state in which we are now?

Rog.

My L. without faile I cannot beleeeue, that ye your selues do thinke in your harts that he is supreme head in forgeuing of sinne.* &c. (as is before sayd) seyng you, & all the bishops of the realme haue now xx. yeares long preached, and some of you also written to the contrary, and the Parliament hath so long agone condescended vnto it. And there he interrupted me thus.

L. Chan.

Tush that Parlament was with most great crueltie constrained to abolish and put away the primacie frō the bishops of Rome.

Rog.

With crueltie? Why then I perceyue that you take a wrong way with crueltie to perswade mens consciences. For it should appeare by your doyngs now, that the cruelty then vsed hath not perswaded your consciences▪ How would you then haue our consciences, perswaded wyth cruelty.

L. Chan.

I talke to thee of no cruelty, but that they were so often & so cruelly called vpon in that Parlament, to let the Act go forward, yea and euen with force driuen thereunto, where as in this parliament it was so vniformly receiued, as is aforesayd.

Rog.

Here my L. Paget told me more plainly, what my L. Chauncellor ment.* Unto whom I answered: My Lord what will ye conclude thereby? that the first Parliament was of lesse authoritie, because but few condescended vnto it? and this last Parliament of great authoritye, because more condescended vnto it? It goeth not (my Lord) by the more or lesser part, but by the wyser, truer, & godlier part: and I would haue sayd more, but the L. Chauncellour interrupted me with his question, willyng me once agayne to aunswer him. For (sayd he) we haue mo to speake▪ with the thou,* which must come in after thee. And so there were in deed ten persons moe out of Newgate, besides two that were not called. Of which ten, one was a citizen of London, which graunted vnto them, and ix. of the contrarye: which all came to prison agayne, and refused the cardinals blessing, and the authoritie of his holy fathers Church, sauynge that one of these ix. was not asked the question other wyse then thus, whether hee would be an honest man as his father was before hym, and aunsweryng yea, he was so discharged by the friendship of my Lord William Haward (as I haue vnderstanded): He bade me tell hym what I would doe: whether I would enter into one Church with the whole Realme as it is now, or not? No, sayd I, I will first see it prooued by the Scriptures. Let me haue pen, inke, and bookes, &c. And I shall take vpon me plainly to set out the matter, so that the contrary shall be prooued to be true, & let any man that wil, conferre with me by wrytyng.*

L. Chan.

Nay, that shall not be permitted thee. Thou shalt neuer haue so much profered thee as thou hast now, if thou refuse it, and wilt not now condescend and agree to the catholike church. Here are ij. things, Mercy, and Iustice: If thou refuse the Queenes mercy now, then shalt thou haue Iustice ministred vnto thee.

Rog.

I neuer offended, nor was disobediēt vnto her grace,* and yet I will not refuse her mercy. But if this shal be denied me to conferre by writing, and to try out the truth▪ then it is not wel, but to far out of the way. Ye your selues (all the Bishops of the Realme) brought me to the know^lledge of the pretended primacie of the Bishop of Rome, when I was a yong man twenty yeares past: and wil ye now without collation▪ haue me to say and do the contrary? I cannot be so perswaded.

L. Chan.

If thou wilt not receiue the Bishop of Rome to be supreme head of the Catholike Church,* then thou shalt neuer haue her mercy thou maist be sure. And as touching conferring and triall, I am forbidden by the Scriptures to vse any conferring and triall with thee. For S. Paule teacheth me that I shall shun and eschew an heretike after one or two monitions, knowing that such an one is ouerthrowen and is faulty, in as much as he is condemned by his owne iudgement.

Rog.

My L. I deny that I am an heretike: prooue ye that first, and then alledge the foresayd text. But still the Lord Chancellor played on one string, saying.

L. Chan.

If thou wilt enter into one Church with vs, &c. tell vs that,* or els thou shalt neuer haue so much proferred thee agayne, as thou hast now.

Rog.

I will fynd it first in the Scripture, and see it tryed therby, before I receiue hym to be supreme head.

Wor.

Why? do ye not know what is in your Creed: Credo ecclesiam sanctam catholicam. I beleeeue the holy Catholike Church.

Rog.

I fynde not the bishop of Rome there. For [Catholike] signifieth not the Romish Church: It signifieth the consent of all true teaching Churches of all tymes,* and all ages. But how should the Bishop of Romes Church bee one of them which teacheth so many doctrines y^t are plainly and directly against the word of God? Can that bishop be the true head of the Catholike Church that doth so? that is not possible.

L. Chancellor.

Shew me one of them, one, one, let me heare one.

Rog.

I remembred my selfe, that amongst so many I were best to shew one, and sayd I will shew you one.

L. Chan.

Let me heare that, let me heare that.

Rog.

The B. of Rome and hys Church, say, read, and sing all that they do in their congregations, in Latin,* which is directly and plainly against the first to the Corinthians, the 14. chapter.

L. Chan.

I deny that, I deny that, that is against the word of God. Let me see you prooue that, how prooue ye that?

Rog.

Thus I began to say the text from the beginning of the chap. Qui loquitur lingua,*&c. to speake with tonge sayd I, is to speake with a strange tong: as Latine or Greeke, &c. and so to speake, is not to speake vnto mē, but to God. But ye speak in Latin, which is a strange tong, wherfore ye speake not vnto men, but vnto God * (meanyng God only at the most.) This he graunted, that they speake not vnto men, but vnto God.

L. Chan.

Well, then it is in vayne vnto men.

Rog.

No, not in vaine. For one man speaketh in one tong, and another in another tong, and all well.

L. Chan.

Nay I wil prooue then, that he speaketh neyther to God nor to man, but vnto the wynde.

Rog.

I was willing to haue declared how and after what sort these two textes do agree (for they must agree,* they be both the sayings of the holy Ghost, spoken by the Apostle Paule) as to witte, to speake, not to men, but vnto God▪ and to speake into the wynd: and so to haue gone forward with the prooue of my matter begon, but here arose a noyse and a confusion. Then sayd the L. Chancellor.

L. Chan.

To speake vnto God, and not vnto God, were vnpossible.

Rog.

I will prooue them possible.

L. Haward.

No sayd my Lorde William Haward to my L. Chauncellour: nowe will I beare you witnesse that hee is out of the way. For he graunted first, that they whiche speake in a straunge speach, speake vnto God: and now he sayth the contrary, that they speake neither to God, nor to man.

Rog.

I haue not graunted or sayde (turning me to my L. Haward) as ye report. I haue alledged the one text, and now I am come to the other. They must agree, and I can make them to agree. But as for you, you vnderstand not the matter.

L. Haward.

I vnderstand so much, that that is not possible. This is a poynte of Sophistrie,* quoth Secretarye Bourne.

L. Chan.

Then the Lord Chauncellor began to tell the L. Page 1486 Hawarde,* that when hee was in high Dutchlande, they at Hale, which had before prayed and vsed their seruice all in dutch, began thē to turne part into latin, & part into dutch.

Worcest.

Yea and at Wittembergh to.

Rog.

Yea (but I could not be heard for the noise) in an Uniuersitie, were men for the most part vnderstande the Latine, and yet not all in Latine. And I would haue tolde the order & haue gone forward both to haue answered my lord and to haue proued the thing that I had taken in hand: but perceiuing their talking and noyse to be too noysome,* I was faine to thinke this in my heart (suffering them in the meane while to talke one of them one thynge, and an other a nother) Alas, neither wil, these men heare me if I speake, neither yet wil they suffer me to write. There is no remedy but let them alone, and commit the matter to God. Yet I began to go forward, and said that I would make the texts to agree, and to prooue my purpose well enough.

L. Chan.

No, no, thou canst proue nothing by the scripture. The scripture is dead: it must haue a liuely expositor.

Rog.

No the Scripture is aliue. But let me goe forwarde wyth my purpose.

Wor.

All heretikes haue alleaged the scriptures for them, and therefore we must haue a liuely expositor for them.

Rog.

Yea, all heretikes haue alleaged the Scriptures for them: but they were cōfuted by the scriptures, and by none other expositor.

Wor.

But they wold not confesse that they were ouercome by the scriptures, I am sure of that.

Rog.

I beleue that: and yet were they ouercome by them, and in all Coūcels they were disputed with & ouerthrown by the scriptures.* And heere I would haue declared howe they ought to procede in these daies, & so haue come againe to my purpose, but it was vnpossible, for one asked one thing, an other saide an other, so that I was faine to holde my peace, and let them talke. And euen whē I would haue taken holde on my prooffe, the Lord Chauncelor bad, to prison with me again: and away, away (said he) we haue more to talke withall: if I woulde not be reformed (so he termed it) away, away. Then vp I stode, for I had kneeled all the while.

Then sir Richard Southwell, who stode by in a window, sayd to me: thou wilt not burne in this geare when it commeth to the purpose,* I know well that.

Rog.

Sir I cannot tel, but I trust to my Lorde God yes, lifting vp mine eyes vnto heauen.

B. of Ely.

*Then my Lord of Ely told me much of the Quenes Maiesties pleasure and meaning, and set it out wyth large wordes, saying that shee tooke them that woulde not receiue the Bishop of Romes supremacie, to be vnworthy to haue her mercy. &c.

Roger.

I sayde, I would not refuse her mercye, and yet I neuer offended her in all my life: And that I besought her Grace and all their honors to be good to me, reseruing my conscience.

Diuers speake at once.

No, quoth they then, a great sorte of them,* and specially Secretary Bourne, a married priest, and haue not offended the lawe?

Rog.

I sayd, I had not broken the Queenes lawe, nor yet any poynt of the law of the Realme therin, For I married where it was lawfull.

Diuers at once.

Where was that sayd they? thinking that to be vnlawfull in all places.*

Rog.

In Dutchland. And if ye had not heere in England made an open law that Priestes might haue had wiues, I would neuer haue come home again:* for I brought a wife and eight children with me: whych thing yee might be sure that I would not haue done, if the lawes of the realme had not permitted it before.

Then there was a great noise, some saying that I was come too soone with such a sort: I should finde a soure comming of it, and some one thing, some another. And one said (I coulde not well perceyue who) that there was neuer catholike man or countrey, that euer graunted that a priest might haue a wife.

Rog.

I sayd the Catholike church neuer denied mariage to Priests,* nor yet to any other man, and therewith was I going out of the chamber, the sergeaunt which brought me thether, hauing me by the arme.

Wor.

Then the B. of Worcester turned his face towardes me, and saide that I wist not where that church was or is.

Rog.

I sayd yes, that I could tell where it was, but therewith went the sergeant with me out of the doore.

This was the very true effecte of all that was spoken vnto me, and of all that I answered thereunto.

And here would I gladly make a more perfect answer to al y^e former obiections, as also a due prooffe of that which I had taken in hande: but at this present I was informed that I should to morrow come to further answer. Wherefore I am compelled to leaue out that which I wold most gladly haue done, desiring here the hearty & vnfaigned helpe of the praier of all Christes true members, the true imps of the true vnfaigned Catholicke Church, that the Lorde God of all cōsolation, wil now be my comfort, aid, strēgth, buckler and shield: as also of all my brethren that are in the same case & distresse, that I and they all may despise all maner of threats and cruelty, and euen the bitter burning fire and the dreadfull dart of death, and sticke like true soldiors to our deare & louing captaine Christ, our onely redemer, and sauour, and also the only true head of the church, that doth all in vs al, which is y^e very property of an heade (and is a thing that all the Bishops of Rome cannot doe,) and that we doe not traiterously run out of his tents, or rather out of the plaine field from him, in the most ieopardy of the battaile, but that wee may perseuere in the fight (if he will not otherwise deliuer vs) till we be most cruelly slayne of his enemies. For this I most hartely, and at thys present, with weeping teares most instantly & earnestly desire and beseeche you all to pray: And also if I die, to be good to my poore and most honest wife, being a poore straunger, and all my little soules, hers and my children.* Whom with all the whole faithfull and true catholicke congregation of Christ the Lord of life and death, saue, keepe and defend, in all the troubles and assaults of this vaine world, and to bryng at the last to euerlasting saluation, the true & sure inheritance of all crossed Christians. Amen, Amen.

The 27. day of Ianuarie at night.

The 2. confession of Iohn Rogers, made and that should haue bene made (if I might haue ben heard) the 28. and 29. day of Ianuarie. 1555.

First being asked againe by the Lord Chauncelor,* whether I would come into one Church wyth the Bishops and whole realme, as now was concluded by Parliamēt, (in the which all the Realme was conuerted to the Catholike church of Rome) and so receiue the mercy before profered me, arising againe with the whole realme,* out of the schisme and errour in which we had long bene, with recantation of my errors: I answered, that before I coulde not tell what his mercy meant, but now I vnderstoode that it was a mercy of the Antichristian church of Rome,* whyche I vtterly refused, & that the rising which he spake off, was a very fall into errour and false doctrine. Also that I had and woulde be able by Gods grace, to prooue that all the doctrine which I had euer taught, was true and catholike, and that by the scriptures and the authoritie of the fathers that liued 400. yeres after Christes death. He aunswared that should not, might not, nor ought not be graunted me: for I was but a priuate man,* & might not be heard against the determination of the whole realme. Should (quoth he) when a Parliament hath concluded a thinge, one, or anye priuate person haue authority to discusse, whether they had done right or wrong? No that may not be.

I aunswared shortly, that all the lawes of men myght not, neither coulde rule the worde of God, but that they all must be discussed and iudged thereby, and obey therto: and my conscience, nor no christian mans could be satisfied with such lawes as disagreed from that worde: and so was willing to haue said much more, but the L. Chauncellor began a long tale to very smal purpose, concerning mine answer, to haue defaced me, that there was nothing in mee wherefore I should be heard, but arrogancie, pride, and vainglory. I also graunted mine ignorauncy to be greater then I coulde expresse, or then he tooke it: but yet that I feared not by Gods assistance & strēgth, to be able by wryting to performe my word,* neither was I (I thanked God) so vtterly ignorant as he would make me, but all was of God, to whom be thanks rendred therfore. Proud man was I neuer, nor yet vaine glorious. Al the world knew wel, where and on which side pride, arrogancie, and vaine glory was. It was a poore pride y^t was or is in vs, God it knoweth.

Then sayde hee, that I at the first dashe condemned the Queene and the whole realme, to be of the church of Antichrist, and burdened me highly therewithall. I aunswared that the Queenes maiesty (God saue her grace) would haue done wel enough, if it had not ben for his counsel. He sayde, the Queene wente before him, and it was her owne motion, I said with out faile, I neither could nor I wold euer beleuee it.

Then sayde D. Aldrise the bishop of Carlile, that they the bishops woulde beare him witnesse.*
Yea (quoth I) that I beleue well, and with that the people laughed: For that day there were many, but on the morrow they had kept the dores shut, and would let none in, but the Byshops adherentes and seruauntes, in maner, yea and the firste day the Page 1487 thousand man came not in. Then master Comptroler and Secretary Bourne, woulde haue stande vppe also to beare witnesse, and did.

I sayd it was no great matter: and to say the truthe, I thought that they were good helpers thereto them selues: but I ceased to say any more therein, knowyng that they were too strong and mighty of power, and that they should be beleued before me, yea and before our sauior Christ, and all his Prophets and Apostles thereto in these daies.

Then after many words he asked me what I thought concerning the blessed sacrament,* and stooode vp and put off his cap, & al his felow bishops (of which there were a great sort new men, of whom I knew few) whether I beleued in the sacrament to be the very body and bloude of our sauior Christ that was borne of the virgin Mary, and hanged on the crosse, really and substantially.

I aunswered, I had often tolde him that it was a matter in which I was no medler, and therefore suspected of my brethren to be of a contrary opinion. Notw^tstanding, euen as the most part of your doctrine in other poyntes is false, and the defence therof onely by force and crueltie: so in thys matter I thinke it to be as false as the rest. For I cannot vnderstand [really and substantially] to signifie otherwyse then corporally:* but corporally Christ is only in heauē, and so cannot Christ be corporally also in your sacrament. And here I somewhat set out hys charitie after thys sorte: My Lord (quoth I) ye haue dealt with me most cruelly. For ye haue set me in prison without law, and kept me there now almost a yere and a halfe.* For I was almost halfe a yere in my house, where I was obedient to you (God knoweth) and spake w^t no man. And now haue I bene a full yere in Newgate at great costes and charges,* hauing a wife and 10. children to finde, and I had neuer a penie of my liuings which was against the lawe.

Hee answeared, that D. Ridley which had geuen them me, was an vsurper, and therefore I was the vniust possessour of them.

Was the king then an Usurper (quoth I) which gaue D. Ridley the Bishoppricke?*

Yea (quoth he) and began to sette out the wrongs that the king had done to the B. of London, and to himself also. But yet I do misuse my termes (quoth he) to call the King vsurper. But the word was gone out of the aboundance of the heart before: and I thinke that he was not very sorye for it in hart. I might haue sayd more cōcerning that matter, but I did not.

I asked hym wherefore he set me in pryson. He said because I preached against the Queene.

I aunswered that it was not true: and I woulde be bound to prooue it, and to stand to the triall of the law, that no man should be able to prooue it,* and thereupon woulde set my life. I preached (quoth I) a sermon at the Crosse, after the Queene came to the Tower: but therein was nothing said against the Queene, I take witnesse of al the audience: which was not small. I alleaged also that he had after examination let me goe at libertie after the preaching of that Sermon.

Yea, but thou didste read thy lectures after (quoth hee) against the commaundement of the Counsell.

That did I not (quoth I:) lette that be prooued and let me die for it. Thus haue ye now against the law of God & man handled me, & neuer sent for me, neuer conferred with me, neuer spoke of any learning, till now that ye haue gotten a whip to whip me with, & a sword to cut off my necke, if I will not condescende vnto your minde. Thys charitie doth all the world vnderstand.

I might and woulde haue added, if I coulde haue bene suffred to speake, that it had ben time enough to take away mens liuings, and thereto to haue prisoned them, after that they had offended lawes. For they be good Citizens that breake not lawes, and worthy of praise and not of punishment.* But theyr purpose is to kepe men in prison so long, vntil they may catche them in their lawes, and so kill them. I could & would haue added the example of Daniel, which by a crafty deuised law was cast into the Lions den. Item, I might haue declared, that I most humbly desired to be set at libertie, sending my wife to him with a supplication, being great with childe, & with her 8. honest women, or therabout, to Richmond, at Christmas was a 12. monthe, whiles I was yet in my house.

Item, I wrote two supplications to him out of Newgate,* and sent my wife many times to hym. M. Gosnolde also that worthy man, who is now departed in the Lord, laboured for mee, and so did diuers other worthy men also take paines in the matter. These things declare my Lorde Chancellors Antichristian charitie, which is, that he hathe and doth seeke my bloud, and the destruction of my poore wife and my ten children.

This is a short summe of the wordes which were spoken the 28. day of Ianuarye at after noone, after that Maister Hooper had bene the first, & M. Cardmaker the second in examination before me. The Lorde graunte vs grace to stand together, fighting lawfully in hys cause, till wee be smitten downe together, if the Lords wil be so to permitte it. For there shall not a haire of our heades pearish again•• hys will, but with his will. Whereunto the same Lorde graunt vs to be obedient vnto the ende, and in the end. Amen: Sweete, mighty, and mercifull Lord Iesus the sonne of Dauid and of God, Amen, Amen, let euery true Christian say and pray.

Then the clocke being (as I gessed) aboute foure, the L. Chauncellor sayde,* that he and the Church must yet vse charitie with me (what maner of charitie it is, all true christians do well vnderstand, as to wit, the same that the foxe doeth with the chickens, and the wolfe with the Lambes) and gaue me respite til to morow, to see whether I would remember my selfe wel to morrow, and whether I would returne to the catholike church (for so he calleth hys Antichristian false church) againe, and repent, and they woulde receiue me to mercy.

I sayde that I was neuer oute of the true Catholicke Church, nor would be: but into hys church, woulde I, by Gods grace, neuer come.

Well (quoth he) then is our church false and Antichristian.*

Yea, quoth I.

And what is the doctrine of the sacrament?

False, quoth I, and cast my handes abroade.

Then sayd one, that I was a player. To whom I answered not: for I passed not vpon his mocke.*

Come againe quoth the Lord Chancellour, to morrow betweene nine and ten.

I am ready to come againe, whensoever ye call quoth I.

And thus was I broughte by the shiriffes to the Counter in Southwarke, Maister Hooper going before me, and a great multitude of people being present, so that we hadde much to doe to goe in the streates.

Thus much was done the 28. day of Ianuarie.

The second day, which was the 29. of Ianuary, we were sent for in the morning about 9. of the clocke,* and by the Shriffes fetched from the Counter in Southwarke, to the Church againe, as to wit, to S. Mary Oueries, where we were the daye before in the after noone, as is sayde. And when Maister Hooper was condemned (as I vnderstoode afterward) then sent they for me. Then the Lorde Chauncellour sayd vnto me:

Rogers (quoth hee) here thou wast yesterday, and wee gaue thee liberty to remember thy selfe this night, whether thou wouldest come to the holy catholicke church of Christ agayne or not. Tell vs now what thou haste determined,* whether thou wilt be repentant and sory, and wilt returne againe and take mercy.

My Lorde, quoth I, I haue remembred my selfe right wel what you yesterday laid for you,* and desire you to giue me leaue to declare my minde what I haue to say thereunto, and that done, I shall answer you to your demaunded question.

When I yesterday desired that I myght be suffered by the Scripture and authoritie of the firste, best,* and purest Church to defende my doctrine by wryting (meaning not onely of y^e primacie: but also of all the doctrine that euer I had preached) ye answered me that it might not, nor ought not to be graūted me, for I was a priuate person: and that the parlament was aboute the authoritye of all priuate persons, & therefore the sentēce therof might not be found faultie and valureles by mee being but a priuate persone. And yet my Lorde, quoth I, I am able to shewe examples, that one man hath come into a generall Councell, and after the whole had determined and agreed vppon an act or article, that some one mā comming in afterward, hath by the word of God declared so pithely that the counsel had erred in decreeing the sayd Article,* that he caused the whole Councell to chaunge and aulter their Acte or Article before determined. And of these examples (sayde I) I am able to shewe two. I can also shewe the authoritie of S. Augustine, that when hee disputed with an hereticke,* hee woulde neyther himselfe, nor yet haue the heretike, to leane vnto the determination of two former Councils, of the whyche the one made for him, and the other for the hereticke that disputed against him: but sayd that he would haue the scriptures to be their iudge which were cōmon and indifferent for them both, and not proper to either of them.

Item I could shewe (sayde I) the authoritye of a learned Lawyer Panormitanus, whiche saith: * that vnto a simple [Page \[unnumbered\]](#) laye man that bringeth the woorde of God with hym there ought more credite to be geuen, then to a whole Councell gathered together. By these thinges will I prooue that I ought not to be denied to say my minde, and to be heard against a whole Parliament, bringing the worde of God for me and the authoritie of the olde Church 400. yeares after Christ, all be it that euery man in the Parliament had willingly and without respect of feare and fauor agreed therunto (which thing I doubt not a little off, specially seeing the like had bene permitted in that olde Church, euen in generall Councils, yea and that in one of the chieftest councils that euer was, * vnto which neither any Actes of thys Parliament, nor yet any of the late general Councils of the Bishops of Rome oughte to be compared.) For, sayde I, if Henry the eight were aliue, and should call a Parliament, and begin to determine a thing (and heere I woulde haue alledged the example of the Acte of making the Queene a Bastarde, * and of making himselfe the Superiour head, but I coulde not, being interrupted of one, whome God forgeue) then will ye (poynting to my Lorde Chauncellour) and yee and yee, and so yee all (poyntinge to the rest of the Byshops) say, Amen: yea, and it like your grace, it is mete that it be so enacted, &c.

*Here my L. Chauncellor would suffer me to speake no more: but had me sit downe mockingly, saying that I was sent for to be instructed of them, and I woulde take vppon me to be their instructor.

My Lorde (quoth I) I stand and sit not: shall I not be suffred to speake for my life?

*Shall we suffer thee to tel a tale, and to prate quoth he? and with that he stode vp, and began to face me, after hys olde arrogant proude fashion, for he perceiued that I was in a way to haue touched them somewhat, which he thought to hynder, by dashing mee oute of my tale, and so hee dyd. For I could neuer be suffered to come to my tale agayne, no not to one word of it: but he had much like communication with me as he had the day before, and as his maner is, taunt vpon taunt, and checke vpon checke. For in that case (being Gods cause) I tolde hym he should not make me afraid to speake.

L. Chaun.

See what a spirit this fellow hath, sayde he, finiding fault at mine accustomed earnestnesse, and harty maner of speaking.

Rog.

*I haue a true spirite, quoth I, agreeing and obeying the word of God, and would further haue sayd, that I was neuer the worse, but the better, to be earnest in a iuste and true cause and in my master Christes matters: but I might not be heard. And at the length he proceeded towards his excommunication and condemnation, after that I had told hym that his Church of Rome was the Church of Antichriste, * meaning the false doctrine and tyrannicall lawes, with the maintenance thereof by cruel persecution vsed by the Bishops of the said church (which the B. of Winchester and the rest of his fellow bishops that are now in Englād, are the chiefe members): Of lawes I meane (quoth I) and not of all men and women which are in the popes church. Likewise when I was saide to haue denied their sacramēt (whereof he made his wonted reuerent mention, more to maintaine his kingdom therby, then for the true reuerence of Christes institution: more for his owne and his Popish generations sake, then for religion or Gods sake) I tolde him after what order I did speake of it (for the manner of hys speakyng, was not agreeing to my woords, which are before recited in the communication that wee had the 28. of Ianuarie) wherewith he was not contented, but he asked the audience whether I had not simply denied y^e sacramēt.* They would haue said, and did what he lusted: for the most of them were of his owne seruants at that day, the 29. day of Ianuary I meane. At the last I said, I wil neuer denye that I sayd, that is, that your doctrine of the Sacrament is false: but yet I tell you after what order I sayde it.

To be short, he red my condemnation before me perticularly, mentioning therein but 2. Articles, firste that I affirmed the Romish catholike church, to be the church of antichrist, and that I denied the reality of their sacrament. He cursed me to be disgraded and condemned, and put into the hands of the laitie, and so he gaue me ouer into the shriues hands, which were much better then his.

¶The copie of which his condemnation here I thought to put downe in English, to the entent that the same being here once expressed, may serue for all other sentences condemnatory through the whole storie to be referred vnto.

The Sentence condemnatorie against Maister Rogers.

IN the name of God Amen, Wee Steuen by the permission of God Bishop of Winchester, lawfully and ryghtly proceeding with all godly fauoure by authority and vertue of our office, againste thee Iohn Rogers priest,*alias called Mathewe before vs personally heere present, being accused and detected, and notoriously slaundered of heresie, hauing heard, seene, and vnderstand, and with al diligent deliberation wayed, discussed, and considered the merites of the cause, all thinges being obserued, which by vs in thys behalfe, in order of law ought to be obserued, sitting in our iudgement seat, the name of Christ being first called vpon, and hauing God onely before our eyes: because by the actes enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this matter, and by thine owne confession iudicially made before vs, we do finde, that thou hast taught, holden, and affirmed, and obstinately defended diuers errours, heresies, and damnable opinions, contrarye to the doctrine and determination of the holy church, as namely these: That the catholike church of Rome, is the church of Antichrist: Item,that in the Sacrament of the aultare, there is not substantially nor really the natural bodye and bloude of Christe. The which aforesayde heresies and damnable opinions being contrary to the law of God, and determination of the vniuersall and Apostolicall Church, thou hast arrogantly, stubburnely, and wittingly mainteined, held, and affirmed, and also defended before vs, as wel in thys iudgement, as also otherwise, and with the like obstinacie, stubbornnesse, malice and blindnesse of heart, both wittingly and willingly haste affirmed, that thou wilt beleue, maintaine and holde, affirme, and declare the same: Wee therefore S. Wint. B. Ordinarie and Diocesan aforesayd, by the consent and assent as well of our reuerend brethren the Lord Bishops heere present and assistant, as also by the counsell and iudgement of diuers worshipfull lawyers and professours of Diuinitie, wyth whome wee haue communicated in thys behalfe, doe declare and pronounce thee the sayde Iohn Rogers, otherwise called Mathewe, through thy demerites, transgressions, obstinacies, & wilfulnesses (whych thou manifolde wayes hast incurred by thine owne wicked and stubburne obstinacie) to haue bene and to be guiltie in the detestable, horrible, and wicked offence of hereticall prauitie and execrable doctrine, and that thou haste before vs sondry times spoken, maintained, and wittingly and stubbornely defended the sayde cursed and execrable doctrine in thy sundry cōfessions, assertions, and recognitions heere iudicially before vs oftentimes repeated, and yet stil doest maintaine, affirme and beleue y^e same, and that thou haste beene and arte lawfully and ordinarily conuicted in this behalfe. Wee therefore (I say) all be it folowing the example of Christ, Which woulde not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should conuert and liue, we haue gon about oftentimes to correct thee, and by al lawfull meanes that wee coulde, and all wholesome admonitions that wee did knowe, to reduce thee againe vnto the true faith and vnitie of the vniuersall catholike church, notwithstandinge haue founde thee obstinate and stifnecked, willingly continuing in thy damnable opinions and heresies, and refusing to retourne againe vnto the true faith and vnitie of the holy mother Church, and as the childe of wickednesse and darkenesse so to haue hardned thy heart, that thou wilt not vnderstand the voice of thy shephard, which with a fatherly affection doth seeke after thee, nor wilt not be allured w^t his fatherly and godly admonitions: wee therfore Ste^m the B. aforesaid, not willing that thou which art wicked, shuldest now become more wicked, and infect the Lords flocke with thine heresie (which we are greatly afraide off) wyth sorrowe of minde and bitterness of hearte doe iudge thee, and diffinitiuely condemne thee the sayde Iohn Rogers, otherwise called Mathew, thy demerites & defaultes being agrauate through thy damnable obstinacy, as guilty of most detestable heresies, and as an obstinate impenitent sinner, refusing penitently to returne to the lappe and vnitie of the holy mother church, and that thou hast ben and art by law excommunicate, & doe pronounce and declare thee to be an excommunicate person: Also we pronouce and declare thee being an heritike, to be cast out from the church, & left vnto the iudgement of the secular power, & now presently so doe leaue thee as an obstinate heretike, and a persone wrapped in the sentence of the greate curse, to be disgraded worthely for thy demerites [requiring them notwithstanding in the bowels of our Lord Iesus Christ, that thys execution and punishment worthely to be done vpon thee, may so be moderated, that the rigor therof be not too extreme, nor yet the gentlenes too much mitigated, but that it may be to the saluation of thy soule, to the extirpation, terror, and conuersion of the heretikes, to the vnitie of the Catholike fayth] by thys our sentence definitiue which we heere lay vpon, and against thee, and doe with sorrowe of heart promulgate in this forme aforesaid.*

After this sentence being read, he sent vs (M. Hoper, I Page 1489 meane, and me) to the Clinke, there to remaine till nyghte: and when it was darke, they caried vs, M. Hoper going before with the one sherife, and I comming after with the other, with bils and weapons enough, out of the Clinke, & led vs through the bishops house, and so thorow S. Marie Oueries churchyarde, and so into Southwarke, and ouer the bridge on procession to Newgate through the city. But I must shewe you this also, that when he had red the condemnation, he declared that I was in the great curse, and what a vengeable daungerous matter it were to eate and drinke with vs that were accursed,* or to geue vs anye thyng: for all that so did, shoulde be pertakers of the same great curse.

Well my Lord (quoth I) heere I stand before God and you,* and all this honorable audience, and take him to witnesse, that I neuer wittingly or willingly taughte any false doctrine: and therefore haue I a good conscience before God and all good men. I am sure that you and I shall come before a iudge that is righteous, before whome I shall be as good a man as you: and I nothing dout but that I shall be found there a true member of the true Catholike church of Christ & euerlastingly saued. And as for your false church ye neede not to excommunicate me foorth of it. I haue not bene in it these 20. yeares, the Lorde be thanked therefore. But now ye haue done what ye can my Lorde, I pray you yet graunt me one thing.

What is that? quoth he.

That my poore wife being a straunger, may come and speake with me so long as I liue.* For she hath ten children that are hers & mine, and somewhat I would counsell her what were best for her to do.

No (quoth he) shee is not thy wife.

Yes my Lord (quoth I) and hath ben these 18. yeres.

Should I graunt her to be thy wife, quoth he?

Chuse you, quoth I, whether ye will or not: she shalbe so neuerthelesse.

Shee shall not come at thee quoth he.

Then I haue tried out all your charitie, sayde I. You make your selfe highly displeased with the Matrimonie of priestes, but you maintaine open whoredom: as in Wales (quoth I) where euery priest hath his whore opely dwelling with him and lying by him: euen as your holy Father suffereth all the priestes in Dutchlande and in Fraunce to do the like. Therto he answered not, but looked as it were, a squint at it: and thus I departed, and saw him last.

Other good matter there is besides penned by M. Rogers in the prison, which he thought and would haue aunswered, if he myght haue bene permitted, touching whych matter, as heere vnder foloweth to be seene by hys owne setting downe.

Hitherto dearely beloued, ye haue heard what was said: nowe heare what I purposed the night before to haue sayd if I could haue bene permitted. Two things I purposed to haue touched. The one howe it was lawfull for a priuate man to reason and wryte against a wicked acte of Parliament, or an vngodly counsell, whych the L. Chauncelor the day before denied me. Thother was to proue that prosperitie was not alwaies a token of Gods loue.

And thys I purpose to speake off, because the Lorde Chauncellour boasted of hym selfe that hee was deliuered fourth of prison, as it were by myracle, & preserued of God to restore true religion, and to punish mee and suche other, whom he termed hereticks. Concerning these two poynts in this manner I purposed to haue proceeded. It is not vnknownen to you, that king Henrie the eight in hys time made his daughter the Queene that now is, a bastarde: he abolished the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, hee pulled downe Abbeyes, and all this hee did by the consent of Parliament.

King Edward the sixte in hys time made lawfull the mariage of priests, turned the service into English, abolyshed the idolatrous Masse, with all like superstitious trūperie, sette vp the holy Communion, and all by consent of Parliament.

The Queene that now is, hath repealed the Acte that made her bastarde, hath broughte in the Bishop of Rome, and sette him in his olde authoritie, beginneth to set vp abbeis againe, hath made the mariage of priestes vnlawfull, hath tourned the English service into Latine againe, hath set vp the Masse againe w^t like baggage: and pulled downe the holy Communion: and all this is done by consente of Parliament.

If the Acts of Parliament made in king Henries time & in K. Edwards, had theyr foundatiō vpon Gods word, where vpon all positieue lawe ought to be grounded, then these which are stablished in the Quenes time, being cleane contrary to the others, as they are not warranted by gods woorde, so are they wicked, and therfore to be both spoken, and wrytten against of all menne, as well of priuate as of publique persons.

If your Actes, my Lord Chancellour which you ha•e lately coyned (I call them yours, because ye only beare the swinge, deuise, and decree, what yee list all other men are forced to followe,) be good, and according to Gods woord, then the former Actes were naught, whych thing ye seeme to say, in vtterly taking of them away, and setting vp of the contrary: if the former were nought, why then did ye consent vnto them, and confirme them to be good by your voluntarie and aduised wryting, as it appeareth, and will to the worldes ende in your Booke, de vera Obedientia, where you prooue the Queene a Bastard, and the bishop of Rome to be an vsurper, and to haue no authoritie in the Realme of Englande?

Yee must needes confesse, that the moste parte of your Actes of Parliament in these latter dayes, haue bene according to the fantasies of a fewe. King Henry in his time established by Parliament in a manner what he listed, and many thinges that might well haue bene amended.

In Kinge Edwardes dayes the Duke of Somersette and Northumberlande, bare a great stroke in thyngs, and did not all things syncerely. Euen so, since the Quene that now is, came to the gouernement of the realme, al thinges are ordered by your deuise, and head, and the whole Parliament house is ledde as you list, by reason whereof they are compelled to condescende to thinges both contrarye to Gods manifest woorde, and also contrary to theyr owne consciences: so great is your crueltie.

For, to bryng youre wicked purposes to passe, and to establish your Antichristian kingdome (whyche I truste the Lorde wyth the breathe of hys mouthe will spedely blowe ouer) yee haue called three Parliamentes in one yeare and an halfe, that what you coulde not compasse by subtil perswasion, ye might bring to passe by tyrannical threatning: for if yee hadde not vsed cruell force in your doinges, yee had neuer broughte to passe suche thinges as this daye yee haue, to the vtter defacing and abolishing of Gods true religion, and to the casting away and destruction of your naturall Countrey, so much as in you lieth.

And as it is moste true that Actes of Parliament haue in these latter dayes bene ruled by the fantasies of a fewe, and the whole Parliament house, contrary to their minds was compelled to consent to such things as a few had conceiued: So it muste needes be graunted that the Papistes at all times were moste readie to apply them selues to the present worlde, and like menne pleasers to follow the fantasies of suche as were in authoritie, and turne with the estate, which way so euer it tourned. Yea, if the estate should chaunge ten times in one yeare, they woulde euer be ready at hande to chaunge with it, and so folowe the crie, and rather vtterly to forsake God, and be of no religion, then that they would forgoe lust or liuing, for God or for religion.

King Henrie by Parliamente, accordinge to Goddes woorde putte downe the Pope: the Clergie consented, and all men openly by othe refused this vsurped supremacie, knowing by Gods worde Christ to be head of the church•, and euery Kinge in hys Realme to haue vnder and nexte vnto Christe, the chiefe Soueraigntie.

King Edward also by Parliament, according to Gods woorde, sette the marriage of Priestes at libertie, abolished the Popish and idolatrous masse, chaunged the Latin seruice, and sette vp the holy Communion: the whole Cleargie consented heereunto: many of them set it foorth by then preaching: and all they by practising confirmed the same.

Notwythstanding, now when the state is altered, and the lawes chaunged, the Papisticall cleargie wyth other, like worldlinges, as menne neither fearing God, neyther flying worldly shame, neither yet regardinge their consciences, othes, or honestie, like wauering weather Cockes, tourn roūd about, & putting on harlots foreheades, sing a newe song, and crie wyth an impudent mouth: Come aagaine, come againe to the catholicke church, meaning the Antichristian church of Rome which is the Synagogue of Sathan, and the very sincke of all superstition, heresie and Idolatrie.

Of what force I pray you may a man think these Parliamentes to be, which scantly can stand a yere in strength? Or what credite is to be geuen to these law makers, which are not ashamed to establish contrary lawes, and to condempne that for euill, which before (the thing in it selfe and the circumstances remaining al one) they affirmed, and decreed to be good. Truelye, yee are so readye, contrarie to all ryghte to chaunge and turne for the pleasure of manne, that at the lengthe I feare, GOD wyll vse you lyke Page 1490 chaungelings,* and both tourne you foorth of his kingdom, and out of your owne countrey.

Yee charge the Gospell preachers with the vndoing of thys realme: nay it is the turning papists, whych haue not onely sette a sale theyr Countrey like Traitours, but also troubled the simple people, so that they canne not tell what they may beleue. For that which they affirmed, and preached to be newe doctrine in King Edwardes dayes, nowe they crie against it, as it were moste abhominable heresy. This fault I trust yee shall neuer finde at our hands.

Therefore, to conclude that whiche I purposed, for somuche as the Actes of Parliament of these latter times are one contrary to an other, and those which yee nowe haue stablished in your time, are contrary to Gods most manifest woorde, as is the vsurped supremacie of the Byshoppe of Rome, the Idolatrous Masse, the Latine Seruice, the prohibiting of lawfull marriage (which Sainte Paul calleth the Doctrine of Deuilles) wyth many suche other: I say it is not onely lawfull for any priuate man, which bringeth Gods woorde for hym, and the authoritie of the primatiue and best Church, to speake and wryte against such vnlawfull lawes, but it is hys duetie, and he is bounde in very conscience to doe it: Which thyng I haue prooued by diuers examples before, and now will adde too but one other, which is wrytten in the fifth of the Actes, where it appeareth that the high Priestes, the Elders, Scribes, and Pharisees decreed in their Councell, and gaue the same cōmaundement to the Apostles, that they should not preache in the name of Christe, as yee haue also forbidden vs: notwithstanding when they were charged therewithall, they aunswere. Obedire oportet Deo magis quam hominibus, that is, we ought more to obey God then man: euen so we may and doe answere you. God is more to be obeyed then mā: & your wicked lawes can not so tongue tie vs, but we will speake the truthe.

The Apostles were beaten for theyr boldnesse, and they reioyced that they suffered for Christes cause. Yee haue also prouided roddes for vs, and bloody whippes: yet when ye haue done that whiche Goddes hande and Counsell hathe determined, that yee shall doe, be it life or deathe, I truste that God wil so assist vs by his holy spirite and grace, that wee shall patiently suffer it, & praise God for it: and whatsoeuer become of mee and others, whiche now we suffer for speaking, and professing of the truthe, yet be yee sure that Goddes woorde will preuaile and haue the ouer hande, when youre bloody lawes and wicked decrees, for want of sure foundation, shall fal in the dust: and that which I haue spoken of your Actes of Parliament, the same may be sayd of the generall Councils of these latter dayes, whych haue bene wythin these fiue hundreth yeares, where as the Antichrist of Rome, by reason of hys vsurped authority ruled the roaste, and decreed suche things as made for his gaine, not regarding Goddes glorye: and therefore are they to be spoken, wrytten, and cried against of all such as fear God, and loue hys truthe.

And thus muche I purposed to haue sayde, concerning the first poynte.

Nowe touching the second poynte. That where as my Lorde Chauncellour hadde the daye before sayde hys pleasure of them that ruled the Realme, while hee was in prysone, and also reioyced as though God hadde make this alteration, euen for his sake and his Catholike Church, as hee calleth it, and to declare as it were by myracle, that we were before in a Schisme and Heresie, and the Realme was now brought to an vnitie, and to a trueth, and I can not tell whereto: Thereto was I fully purposed to haue sayde. Secondlye, my Lorde, where as yee yesterdaye so highly dispraised the gouernment of them that ruled in innocent King Edwardes dayes, it maye please your Lordshippe to vnderstande, that wee poore Preachers, whome yee so euill allowe, did moste boldly and plainly rebuke theyr euill gouernaunce in manye things, speciallye theyr couetousnesse, and neglecte and small regarde to liue after the Gospell: as also theyr negligence to occasion other to liue thereafter, wyth mo things then I can now rehearse. Thys can all London testifie wyth vs, I would also haue tolde hym, what I my selfe for my parte did once at Pauls Crosse, concerning the misuse of Abbeyes, and other church goodes: and I am assured right well, that neuer a Papiste of them all did euer so much therein as I did, I thanke the Lorde therefore: I was also (as it is well knowen) faine to aunswere therefore before all the Counsell, and manye of my brethren did the like, so that wee for the not rebuking of theyr faultes, shall not aunswere before God, nor be blame worthy before menne. Therefore lette the Gentlemen and the Courtiers them selues, and all the Citizens of London, testifie what we did.

But my Lord, you could not abide them, for that which they did vnto you, and for that they were of a contrary Religion vnto you. Wherefore in that you seeme so infest against them, it is neither any iust or publique cause, but it is your owne priuate hate, that maketh you to reporte so euill of their gouernaunce. And yee may now say what yee list of them, when they be partely dead and gone, and partly by you put out of office.

But what shal be sayde of you when your fall shall folowe, yee shall then heare. And I muste say my conscience to you: I feare me ye haue and wil with your gouernance bring England out of Gods blessing into a warme sunne. I pray God you doe not.

I am an Englishe manne borne, and God knoweth, doe naturally wishe well to my Countrey. And my Lorde, I haue often prooued, that the thyngs which I haue much feared afore hande shoulde come to passe, haue in deede followed. I praye God I may faile of my gessing in thys behalfe: but truely that will not be wyth expellyng the true woorde of God out of the Realme, and wyth sheading of innocent bloude.

And as touching your reioycing, as thoughe God had sette you alofte to punishe vs by myracle, (for so you reporte and bragge openly of yourselfe) and to minister Iustice, if wee will not receaue youre holye fathers mercye, and thereby to declare youre churche to be true, and oures false, to that I aunsweare thus: Goddes workes be wonderful, & are not to be comprehēded, and perceiued by māns wisdomē, not by the witte of the moste wise and prudent. Yea, they are soonest deceiued, and doe moste easely iudge amisse of Goddes wonderfull woorkes, that are moste worldly wise. God hathe made all the wisdomē of thys worlde foolishnesse, first Corrinthians the firste, and the seconde Chapter. Dedit dilectam animam suam in manus inimicorum eius. Hierem. xij.

That is.

Hee doeth putte his beloued and deare heart, into the handes of the ennemies thereof.

Thys thing doeth God, whiche thing all wise menne accompte to be the moste foolish and vnwise parte that can be. Will the wise of the worlde (trowe ye) putte their most deare frendes and tenderly beloued children, into their enmies handes, to kill, slaye, burne? &c. that is vnto them a madnesse aboue all madnesse. And yet doeth God vse thys order, and thys is an highe and singular wisdomē in his syght, which the world taketh to be most extreme madnes.

Canne the worlde shewe a cause whye hee suffered the greate multitude of innocente children to be murdered of Herode, of Ascalon, or why he putte that moste holy man Iohn Baptiste, into the handes of Herode hys sonne to be headed, and that in prisone secreatly wythout open iudgement moste tyrannously? Whye he suffered hys beloued Apostle Iames, to be beheaded of another Herode. Acts 12? Whye he suffered his beloued seede of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, to be foure hundred yeares in thraldome and bondage, and vnder Pharaos? And all the stocke of Iuda and Benjamin hys beloued children and Churche, to come vnder the power, sweard, and tyrannie of Nabuchodonosor? No verely, but hys true Catholicke Churche knoweth diuers causes heereof, whyche are nowe too long to reherse, and whych I would right gladly shew, if I had time.

But this I am righte sure off, that it was not because that the aforesayd Godly menne were in heresies, and subiecte to false gods seruices, and Idolatrie, and that theyr aduersaries were men of God, and beloued of God. The contrarye was true: Iohn Baptist was beloued of God, and Herode hated, and so forth of the rest: and Iohn Baptist, the innocent children, Iames, the Children of Israel, in Egypte, and in Babylon, were the catholike members and people of God: and theyr aduersaries, into whose handes they were putte and deliuered, and that of GOD, and by hys good will and pleasure were Idolaters and the people of the Deuill: but they woulde be called the chiefe members of God, and reioyced that they hadde the true God, and that it was nowe declared by myracle, that the Israelites hadde but a false God, and a false religion, seeing they were deliuered into the Babylonians handes. And all the other (the Herodes and Pharaos I meane) plainely determined, that if the menne whiche they killed and handled euill, hadde bene Goddes people, God would neuer haue suffered them to come into their hands, but rather haue done the contrarye, and haue lette Iohn Baptist kill Herode, and the Israelites Pharaos, and Nabuchodonosor. Euen the like is nowe to be seene in vs, and in our most cruell aduersaries.

They are not therfore the catholike Church, because our merciful God hath at this present geuē our liues into their Page 1491 handes: neyther are wee therefore heretickes, because wee suffer punishment at theyr handes, as the Lord Chauncellour by hys reioycing, seemeth to gather: the contrarye is hereby to be gathered, that we be the members of the true Catholike church, because wee suffer for the same Doctrine which Iohn Baptiste, Iames, the Israelites, yea Christe, & the Apostles, did teache: of which none taught any thing of oure aduersaries doctrine, namely that the rotten Antichristian heade of Rome, shoulde be the heade of Christes church: But they haue manifestly taught the contrary, specially Paule 2. to the Thessalonians, the 2. chapter. Iohn in the Apocalypse, Dan. 11. which thing, if I might haue life and Bookes, I would so (by Gods grace) set forth, that all the world should see it: and that our aduersaries with their Antichristian head, are the members of the Deuils church, as they vndoubtedly are. And in like case, as the aboue mētioned holy men, though they in their dayes, were counted to be heretickes, seditious, and disturbers of the whole worlde, (for vnto Iohn Baptiste it was sayde, Iohn 1. Wherefore baptisest thou, if thou be not Helias, nor that Prophet? &c. As who saye, thou haste no such authoritie to beginne a newe Ceremonie in the Churche. For we be in ordinarie possession of the churche: and of vs thou haste receiued no such power. We abide by our circumcision: and the like coulde I declare of Iames, and of all the Apostles and Prophetes, and of our Sauour Christe him selfe, that were all condemned as heretickes & blasphemers of God, and disturbers of the whole world. Paule and Silas. Act. 16. heard like woordes of the Philippians: these men trouble our Citie, seeing they are Iewes, and preache institutions, whych are not lawful for vs to receiue, seeing we be Romaines. And in 17. In Athens, the wise menne of this world, & suche as gaue their endeuour to wisdom, said by S. Paule: Quid vult spermologus hic dicere? That is. What will this prater (as my Lord Chancelour sayd to me, shall we suffer this fellow to prate, whē I would faine haue sayd that thyng, that I haue heere wrytten) trifler, newes caryer, or •ringer, that telleth what so euer men will haue him, for gaine and aduauntage, that will for a piece of bread say what yee will haue hym. &c. And an other sayd in the same place: hee seemeth to be a preacher of newe Deuelles. &c. And Actes 21. The Iewes say by Paule, laying handes on hym, helpe O yee Israelites (saye they) this is the manne that teacheth all men euery where against the people (meaning the Iewes) and the law and this place (meaning Ierusalem) and yet was neuer a woorde of these true. And Actes 22. the same Iewes sayde of Paule: out of the earthe wyth that man, or away wyth him. For it is not lawfull for him to liue, or he is not woorthy to liue. And howe many moe of these examples are to be found in the Bible? Although (I say) these men were in their dayes taken for heretickes, of them that were then in authoritye, and of the great multitude of the worlde, yet it is nowe wel knownen, yea and very shortly after their deathes this was known: yea, and euen in theyr liues also vnto the true Catholicke Church, that they were not onely the chiefe and speciall members of the true Catholicke Church, but also the founders and builders thereof, (notwithstanding the sinister iudgement, that the wise and mighty menne, and the great multitude of the worlde hadde of them) and in theyr consciences they were alwayes assuredlye certified of the same. Euen the same shall the world find true in vs, shortlye after oure deathes, as also there be at thys houre (the Lorde be thanked therefore) not a fewe, that already know it, as we our selues also are by Gods grace assuredly certified in our consciences, that we are no heretikes, but members of the true catholike church, and that our aduersaries the bishops and popish cleargie, which wil haue that title, are the members of Sathans church, and theyr Antichristian head of Rome wyth them.

But here they wil crie out: loe these men wil be stil like Iohn Baptist, the Apostles, and the Prophets. &c.

I answere, we make not our selues like vnto them, in the singular vertues and giftes of God, geuen vnto them: as of miracles doing, and of many other things. The similitude and likenesse of them and vs, consisteth not in all things, but only in this, that is, that we be like them in doctrine, and in the sufferinge of persecution and infamie for the same.

We haue preached theyr very doctrine and none other thing: that we are able sufficiently to declare by theyr wrytings: & by wryting for my part, I haue profered to prooue the same (as is now often sayd.) And for this cause we suffer the like reproche, shame, and rebuke of the worlde, & the like persecution, leeing of our liues and goodes, forsaking (as our maister Christ commandeth) father, mother, sister, brethren, wiues, children, and all that there is, being assured of a ioyfull resurrection, and to be crowned in glorye wyth them, according to the vnfallible promises made vnto vs in Christ, our onely and sufficient mediatour, reconciler, priest and sacrifice, which hath pleased the father, and quieted and pacified his wrath against our sinnes, & made vs wythout spot or wrinkle in his sight by imputation, although wee, off, and in our selues are bespotted, & be blotted w^t many filthy sinnes, which if the great mercy graunted in Christ, did not put away, by not imputing them vnto vs of his measurelesse vnspeakeable mercye and loue to saue vs, they woulde haue brought vs to euerlasting damnation, and death perpetuall. Heerein, and in no other, doe we affirme our selues to be like vnto our head Christe, and all his Apostles, Prophetes, Martyrs and Saintes: And heerein oughte all Christian menne to be like them, and heerein are all true Christen men and women lyke them euery one, according to the measure of y^e faith that God hath dealt vnto them, and to the diuersitie of the gifts of the spirite geuen vnto them. But let vs nowe consider, y^t if it be Gods good will and pleasure, to geue hys owne beloued heart, that is, hys beloued church and the members therof, into the handes of theyr ennemies, to chasten, trie & prooue them, and to bryng them to the true vnfeined acknowledging of theyr owne naturall stubburnnesse, disobedience towards God, and his commaundements, as touching the loue of God and of their brethren or neighbours, and their naturall inclination, readinesse & desire, to loue creatures, to seeke their owne lusts, pleasures and things forbidden of God, to obtaine a true and earnest repentaunce, and sorowfulnesse therefore, and to make them to sigh and crie for the forgeuenesse of the same, and for the aide of the spirite, daily to mortifie and kill the saide euill desires and lustes: yea and often falling into grosse outwarde sinnes, as did Dauid, Peter, Magdalen, and other, to arise againe also thereout with a mighty crying for mercy, wyth many other causes: lette vs also consider what he hereafter doeth with the said enemies, into whose hands he hath geuen his tenderly beloued dearlings to be chastened and tried. Forsothe, wheras he but chasteneth his dearlings, and crosseth them for a small while, accordinge to his good pleasure, as all fathers doe with their children. Heb. 12. Prouerb. 3.* He vtterly destroyeth, yea and euerlastingly damneth the vnrepentant enemies. Let Herode tell me what he wanne by killing Iames, and persecuting Peter, and Christes tender dearlings, and beloued spouse and wife, hys Church. Uerely God thought him not worthy to haue death ministred vnto him by mē or Angels, or any worthy creatures, but those small, and yet most vile beastes, lice, and small wormes, must consume and kill his beastly, vile, and tyrannous body. Pharao and Nabuchadonoser, for all their pride and most mighty power, must at the length let Gods dearlings go freely away out of their land, yea out of their bandes and tirannie. For when it could not be obtained at theyr handes, that Gods congregation mighte haue true mercy ministred vnto them, but the counterfaite mercye of these our dayes, that is to saye, extreeme crueltie, and euen the very and that most horrible and cruel death, God arose and awoke out of his sleepe, and destroyed those ennemies of his flock, with a mighty hand, and a stretched out arme. Pharao did wyth moste great and intollerable labors and burdens, expresse and bring vnder the poore Israelits, and yet did the Courtiers vndoubtedly noyse abroad, that the king was mercifull vnto them, to suffer them to liue in his land, and to sette them aworke, that they might gette them theyr liuings. If he shoulde thruste them out of hys lande, whether should they go, like a sort of vagabunds and runagates? This title & name of mercy, wold that tyāt haue, and so did his flattering false Courtiers spreade hys wayne praise abroad. Haue not wee the like examples nowe a dayes? O that I had nowe time to wryte certaine thyngs pertaining to our Winchester mercy.* Howe mercifull hee hath bene to me and to my good brethren I will not speake of, neither yet vnto the Duke of Suffolkes moste innocent daughter, and to her as innocent husband. For althoughe their fathers were faultie, yet had their youth and lacke of experience deserued a pardon by all true merciful mennes iudgements. O that I had time to painte out thys matter a right: but there be many aliue that can doe it muche better when I am deade. Pharao had hys plagues: and hys moste flourishinge lande was by his counterfaite mercye, whych was in deede righte crueltie and abhominable tyrannie, vtterly destroyed. And thinke yee that thys bloody butcherly Byshoppe of Winchester and his moste bloudie brethren shall escape? Or y^e Englande shall for theyr offences, and specially for the maintenaunce of theyr Idolatrie, and wilful following of them not abide a great brunt? Yes vndoubtedly.

Page 1492If God looke not mercifully vpon England,* the seedes of vtter destruction are sown in it already, by these hypocriticall Tyrauntes, and Antichristian Prelates Popishe Papistes, and double Traytours to theyr naturall Countrey. And yet they speake of mercy, of blessing of the Catholicke Church, of vnitie, of power and strengthening of the Realme. This double dissimulation will shew it selfe one day when the plague commeth, which will vndoubtedly light vpon these crowneshorne capteines, and that shortly, whatsoever the godly and the poore Realme suffer in the meane while by Gods good sufferance and will.

Spite of Nabuchodonosors beard, and maugre his heart, the captiue, thrall and miserable Iewes must come home agayne, and haue their Citie and temple builded vp agayne by Zorobabell, Esdras, and Nehemias, &c. And the whole Kingdome of Babylon must go to ruine, and be taken in of straunges, the Persians and the Medes. So shall the disperpled English flocke of Christ be brought againe into theyr former estate, or to a better I trust in the Lorde God, than it was in innocent Kyng Edwardes dayes, and our bloudy Babylonicall Byshops, and the whole crowneshorne companye brought to vtter shame, rebuke, ruyne, decaye, and destruction: for God can not, and vndoubtedly wyll not suffer for euer theyr abhominable lying false doctrine, theyr hypocrisie, bloudthrist, whoredome, idlenesse, theyr pestilent lyfe pampored in all kynde of pleasure, theyr thrasonicall boasting, pryde, theyr malicious, enuious, and poysoned stomackes, which they beare towards hys poore and miserable Christians. Peter truely warneth, that if iudgemente begynneth at the house of God, what shall be the ende of them that beleeeue not the Gospell? If the righteous shall scant be sauēd, where shall the vngodly and sinfull appeare? Some shall haue theyr punishmente heere in thys worlde, and in the worlde to come, and they that doo escape in thys worlde, shall not escape euerlastyng damnation. Thys shall bee youre sauce, O yee wicked Papistes, make yee merry heere as long as yee may.

After that I. Rogers (as yee haue heard) had bene long & straitly imprisoned,* lodged in newgate amōgst theeeues, oftē examined: and very vncharitably intreated & at lēgth vniustly and most cruelly by wicked Winchester cōdemned the 4. of February,* in the yeare of our Lord 1555. beeyng Monday in the morning, hee was warned sodenly by the kepers wife of newgate, to prepare himself to the fire: who then being sound a slepe, scarce with much shogging could be awaked.* At length being raysed and waked, and byd to make haste, then, saide he, if it be so, I neede not to tye my poyntes:* and so was had downe, first to Boner to bee disgraded. That done, hee craued of Boner but one petition. Boner asking what that should be: nothing sayde he: but that he might talke a few wordes with his wife, before his burning. But that coulde not bee obtained of hym. Then said he, you declare your charitie, what it is: and so he was brought into Smithfield by Maister Chester, and Maister Woodrofe, then Shiriffes of London, there to bee burnt, where he shewed most constant paciencie, not vsing many wordes, for he could not be permitted, but onely exhorting the people constantly to remaine in that faith and true doctrine which he before had taught and they had learned, and for the confirmation whereof he was not only content patiently to suffer and beare all such bitternes and cruelty as had bene shewed him, but also most gladly to resigne vp his life, and to geue his flesh to the consuming fire for the testimonie of the same.

Briefly and in few wordes to comprehend the whole order of his lyfe, doynge, and Martyrdome, first this godly M. Rogers was committed to prison (as is abouesayd) & there continued a yeare and halfe. In prison he was mery, and earnest in all he went about. He wrote much: his examinations he penned with his owne hand,* which else had neuer come to light. Wherein is to be noted by the way a memorable working of Gods prouidence. Ye heard a litle aboue how M. Rogers craued of Boner, going to hys burning, y^t he might speake a few wordes before with hys wife, whiche coulde not be graunted. What these wordes were which he had to say to his wife, it is for no man certainly to define. Likely it may be supposed that his purpose was, amongst other things, to signifie vnto her of the booke written of his examinations and aunsweres whych he had priuily hid in a secret corner of the prison where he lay. But where mans power lacketh, see how Gods prouidence worketh. For notwithstanding y^t during the tyme of his imprisonment, straite search there was to take away his letters and writings: yet after his death, his wyfe and one of her sonnes called Daniell, cōming into y^e place wher he lay, to seeke for his bookes and writings, and now ready to go away, it chaunced her sonne aforenamed, cast^{ng} his eye aside to spy a blacke thing (for it had a blacke couer belike because it shuld not be known) lying in a blind corner vnder a payre of stayres. Who willing his mother to see what it was, found it to be the booke written with his own hand, contayning these his examinatio^{ns} & answers with other matter aboue specified. In the latter end where of this also was conteyned, which because it concerneth a Propheticall forewarning of thinges pertayning to the Church I thought to place the same his woordes, as they be there written, which are these. If God looke not mercifully vppon Englande, the seedes of vtter destruction are sowne in it already, by these hipocritical tyrauntes, & Antichristian Prelates, Popish Papists, and double traytors to their naturall country. And yet they speake of mercy,* of blessing, of the Catholicke Church, of vnitie, of power, & strengthning of the realm. This double dissimulation will shewe it selfe one daye when the plague commeth, whiche will vndoubtedly light vppon these crowneshorne Captaines, and that shortly, whatsoeuer the godly and y^e poore realme suffer in the meane while by Gods sufferance and will.

Spite of Nabuchodonozers beard, and maugre hys hart, y^e captiue, thral & miserable Iewes must come home agayne, and haue their Citie and temple builded vp again by Zorobabell, Esdras, & Nehemias, &c. And the whole kingdome of Babilon must goe to ruine and be taken of straungers, the Persians and Medes. So shal y^e disper•kled english flock of Christ be brought agayn into their former estate, or to a better I trust in the Lorde God, then it was in innocent king Edwardes dayes, and our bloudye Babilonicall Bishops,* and the whole crowneshorn company, brought to vtter shame: rebuke, ruine, decay and destruction, for God cannot and vndoubtedly will not suffer for euer theyr abhominable lying, false doctrine, their hipocrisie, bloudthirst, whoredome, idlenes, their pestilent life pampred in all kinde of pleasure: their thrasonicall boasting, pride, their malicious, enuious, and poysoned stomackes which they beare towards his poore and miserable Christians. Peter truely warneth that if iudgement beginneth in the house of God,*what shal be the end of them that beleue not the Gospell? If the righteous shall scant bee saued, where shall the vngodly and sinfull appeare? Some shall haue their punishment here in this world and in the worlde to come, and they that doe escape in this worlde, shall not escape euerlasting damnation. This shall be your sauce O ye wicked Papistes, make yee merye here as long as ye may.

Furthermore, amongst other his wordes & sayinges, which may seeme prophetically to be spoken of hym, thys also may be added, and is notoriously to be marked,* that he spake being then in prison, to the Printer of this presente booke, who then also was laid vp for like cause of religion: Thou (sayd he) shalt liue to see the alteration of this religiō and the gospell to be freely preached againe: And therefore haue me commended to my brethren, as well in exile as others, and bid them be circumspect in displacing the Papists, & putting good ministers into churches, or els their ende will be worse then ours. And for lacke of good ministers to furnish churches,* his deuise was (M. Hooper also agreeing to the same) that for euery x. Churches, some one good and learned superintendent shuld be appointed, which should haue vnder him faythfull Readers, suche as might well be got, so that popish Priests shoulde cleane be put out, and the bishop once a yeare to ouersee the profiting of the Parishes, and if the minister did not his dutye, as well in profiting himselfe in his book, and his Parishioners in good instructions, so that they may be trayned by little & litle to geue a reckoning how they do profite, thē he to be expelled, and another put in his place. And the Byshop to do the like with the superintendent, this was hys counsell and request. Shewing moreouer, and protestyng in his commendations to hys brethren by the Printer aforesayd, that if they would not so doe, their ende he sayde would be worse then theirs.

Ouer and besides diuers other thinges touching M. Rogers, this is not to be forgottē,* how in the dayes of K. Edward the sixt, there was a controuersie among the Bishops and clergye, for wearing of priestes caps, and other attire belonging to that order. M. Rogers beyng one of y^e number which neuer went otherwise then in a round cap, during all the time of K. Edward, affirmed that he would not agree to that decreement of vniformitie, but vpō this condition, that if they would needes haue such an vniformitie of wearing the cap, tippet, &c. then it shoulde also be decreed with all that the Papistes for a difference betwixt them and other, shuld be constrayned to weare vpon their sleeues a Chalice with an host vpon it. Whereunto if they Page 1493 would consent, he would agree to the other, otherwise he would not he sayd consent to the setting forth of the same, nor euer weare the cap, as in deede he neuer did.

To proceede now further in describing the doinges of this man, during the time while he remayned prysoner in Newgate, he was to the prisoners beneficiall and liberall, for whome he had thus deuised,* that he with his fellowes should haue but one meale a day, they paying notwithstanding, for the charges of the whole: the other meale should be geuen to them that lacked on the other side of the prison. But Alexander their keeper, a strait man, and a right Alexander,* a Copersmith in deede, of whose doings more shall be said God willing hereafter, would in no case suffer that. The Sonday before he suffered, he dronke to M. Hooper (beeing then vnderneath him) and bad them commende him vnto him, and tell him, there was neuer little fellow better would sticke to a man then hee woulde sticke to him, presupposing they should both be burned together, although it hapned otherwise, for M. Rogers was burnt alone. And thus much briefly concerning the life and such actes of M. Rogers, as I thought worthy noting.

Now when the time came, that he being deliuered to the Sheriffes, should be brought out of Newgate to Smithfield the place of his execution, first came to him M. Woodrofe one of the foresaid Sheriffes, and calling M. Rogers vnto him, asked him if he would reuoke his abhominable doctrine,* and his euill opinion of the Sacrament of the aluter. M. Rogers answered and sayd: that which I haue preached, I will seale with my bloud. Then quoth maister Woodrofe, thou art an hereticke. That shall be knowne, quoth Rogers, at the day of iudgement. Well, quoth mayster Woodrofe, I will neuer pray for thee. But I will pray for you, quoth M. Rogers, and so was brought the same day, which was Monday the fourth of February, by the Sheriffes toward Smithfield, saying the Psalme Miserere by the way, all the people wonderfully reioycing at hys constancie, with great prayses and thanks to God for the same: and there in the presence of M. Rochester, Comptroller of the Queenes housholde, Sir Richard Southwell, both the Sheriffes, and a woonderfull number of people, he was burned into ashes, washing his handes in the flame as he was in burning. A little before his burning at the stake,* his pardon was brought if he woulde haue recanted, but he vtterly refused it. He was the first Protomartyr of all that blessed company that suffered in Queene Maryes time, that gaue the first aduenture vpon the fire. His wife and children being xj. in number, x. able to go, and one sucking on her brest, met him by the way as he went towards Smithfield: this sorowfull sight of hys owne flesh and bloud could nothing moue him, but that he constantly and cheerefully tooke his death with woonderfull patience, in y^e defence & quarell of Christes Gospell.

The burning of M. Iohn Rogers, Vicar of S. Pulchers, and Reader of Paules in London.

The history and martyrdome of Laurence Saunders, burned for the defence of the Gospell at Couentry. An. 1555. February 8.

AFTER that Queene Mary by publicke proclamation in the first yeare of her raigne,* had inhibited the sincere preaching of Gods holy word, as is before declared, dyuers godly Ministers of the word which had the cure and charge of soules committed to them,* did notwithstanding according to their bounden duty, feede their flocke faythfully, not as Preachers authorized by publicke authoritye (as the godly order of the Realme was in the happy daies of blessed King Edward) but as the priuate pastors of particular flockes, among whome, Laurence Saunders was one,* a man of worshipfull parentage. His bringing vp was in learning from his youth, in places meete for that purpose, as namely, in the schoole of Eaton. From whence (according to the manner there vsed) he was chosen to go to the Kings Colledge in Cambridge, where he continued scholler of the Colledge three whole yeares, and there profited in knowledge, and learning very much for that time: shortly after that, he did forsake the Uniuersitie, and went to his parents, vpon whose aduise he minded to become a Merchaunt, for that his mother was a Gentlewoman of good estimation, being left a widdow, and hauing a good portion for him among his other brethren, she thought to set him vp welthely, and so he comming vp to London, was bound prentise with a Marchaunt, named Sir William Chester (who afterward chanced to be Sheriffe of London the same yeare that Saunders was burned at Couentry.)* Thus by the minde of his frends Laurence should needes haue bene a Marchant, but almighty God which hath his secret working in all things, saw better for his seruant, as it fell out in the end, for although that Saunders was bound by fast indenture to play the Marchant, yet the Lord so wrought inwardly in his hart, that he could find no liking in that vocation: so that when hys other fellowes were busily occupied about that kinde of trade, he would secretly withdraw himselfe into some priuy corner, and there fall into his solitary lamentations, as Page 1494 one not liking with that kind and trade of life.

It hapned that his maister, being a good man, and hearing his prentise thus in his secret prayers inwardely to moorne by himselfe, called him vnto him, to knowe what the cause was of that his solitarines and lamentation, who then perceiuing his minde nothing to fantasie that kind of life, (for so Saunders declared vnto him) and perceauing also his whole purpose to be bent to the study of his booke,* and spirituall contemplation, like a good man, directed his letters incontinently vnto his frends, and geuing him his Indenture, so set him free, And thus Laurence Saunders being rauished with the loue of learning, and especially with the reading of Gods word, taryed not long time in the trafficke of marchandise, but shortly returned to Cambridge againe to his study, where he began to couple to the knowledge of the Latin, the study of the Greeke tongue, wherein he profited in small time very much: Therewith also he ioyned the study of the Hebrue. Then gaue he himselfe wholly to the study of the holy scripture, to furnish himselfe to the office of a Preacher.

In study he was diligent and paynefull, in godly life he declared the fruites of a well exercised conscience, he prayed often and with great feruour, and in his praiers as also at other times, hee had hys parte of spirituall exercises, which his hartie sighing to God declared. In which when any speciall assaulte did come, by prayer he felt presente reliefe: then was his company marueilous comfortable. For as his exercises were speciall teachinges, so in the ende they proued singular consolations: wherein he became so expert, that within short space he was able to comforte other which were in any affliction, by the cōsolation wherwith the Lord did comfort him. Thus continued he in the Uniuersitie, till he proceeded Maister of Arte, and a long space after.

In the beginning of K. Edwards raigne, when Gods true religion was begon to be restored,* after licence obtained, he began to preach, and was so well liked of them which then had authoritie, that they appointed him to read a Diuinitie lecture in the Colledge at Fothringa, where by doctrine and life he edified the godly, drew many ignoraunt to Gods true knowledge, and stopped the mouth of the aduersaries.* He marryed about that time, and in the marryed estate led a life vnblameable before all men. The Colledge of Fothringa being dissolued, he was placed to be reader in the Minster at Lichefield: where he so behaued himselfe in teaching and liuing, that the very aduersaries did geue him a full report as well of learning, as of much godlines. After a certaine space, he departed from Lichfield to a benefice in Leicester shyre, called Churchlangton, wherupon he keeping residence, taught diligently, and kept a liberall house. From thence he was orderly called to take a benefice in the Citie of London, named Alhallowes in Breadstreete. Then minded he to geue ouer his Cure in the Countrey: and therefore after he had taken possession of his benefice in London, he departed from London into the Countrey, clearely to discharge hymselfe thereof. And euen at that time began the broyle aboute the clayme that Queene Mary made to the Crowne, by reason whereof he could not accomplish his purpose.

In thys trouble, and euen among the begynners of it, (suche I meane as were for the Queene) he preached at Northampton,* nothing medling with the estate, but boldly vttered his conscience against Popish doctrine and Antichrists damnable errorrs, which were like to spring vp agayne in England as a iust plague for the little loue which the English nation did beare to the blessed word of God, which had bene so plentifully offred vnto them. The Queenes men which were there and heard him, were highly displeased with him for his Sermon, and for it kept him among them as prisoner. But partly for loue of hys brethren & frends, which were chiefe doers for the Quene among them, partly because there was no lawe broken by his preaching, they dismissed him. He seeing the dreadfull dayes at hand, inflamed with the fire of godly zeale, preached with diligence at both those benefices, as tyme coulde serue him, seeing he could resigne neither of them now, but into the hand of a Papist.

Thus passed he to and fro in preaching, vntill that proclamation was put forth, of which mention is made in the beginning. At which tyme he was at his benefice in the countrey, where he (notwithstanding the proclamation aforesayd) taught diligently Gods truth, confirming y^e people therin, and arming them against false doctrine, vntill he was not only commaunded to cease, but also with force resisted,* so that he could not proceede there in preaching. Some of his frends perceiuing such fearefull manassings, counseled him to flie out of the realme, which he refused to do. But seing he was with violence kept from doing good in that place, he returned towardes London, to vysite the flocke, of which he had there the charge.

On Saturday, the 14. of October, as he was comming nigh to the Citie of London, Sir Iohn Mordant a Coūsellour to Queene Mary, did ouertake him, & asked him whether he went. I haue (sayd Saunders) a cure in London, and now I go to instruct my people according to my duety. If you wil follow my counsell, quoth M. Mordant let them alone, and come not at them. To this Saunders aunswered: how shall I then be discharged before God, if any be sick and desire consolation, if any want good counsell & neede instruction, or if any should slipp into errour & receaue false doctrine? Did not you, quoth Mordāt preach such a day, and named the day, in Breadstreet in London? Yes verely, sayd Saunders, that same is my cure.* I heard you my self, quoth M. Mordant: and will you preach now there agayne? If it please you sayde Saunders, to morow you may heare me agayne in that same place, where I wil confirme by the authoritie of Gods worde, all that I sayd then, and whatsoeuer before that time I taught them.

I would counsell you (quoth the other) not to preache. If you can and will forbid me by lawfull authoritie, then must I obey, sayde Saunders. Nay quoth hee, I will not forbid you, but I doe geue you counsell. And thus entred they both the Cittie, & departed eche from other. M. Mordant of an vncharitable minde, went to geue warning to Boner Bishop of London, y^t Saunders would preach in his Cure the next day. Saunders resorted to his lodging, w^t a minde bent to doe his duety. Where because he seemed to be somewhat troubled,* one which was there about him asked him how he did. In very deede (sayth hee) I am in prison till I be in prison: meaning that his minde was vnquiet vntill he had preached, and that then hee shoulde haue quietnes of minde, though he were put in prison.

The next day whiche was Sonday, in the forenone he made a sermon in his parish,* entreating that place whiche Paule writeth to the Corinthians: I haue coupled you to one man, that ye shoulde make your selues a chast Virgine vnto Christ. But I feare lest it come to passe, that as the Serpent beguiled Eue: euen so your wittes should be corrupt from the singlenes which ye had towards Christ. He recited a summe of that true Christian doctrine, through whiche they were coupled to Christ, to receiue of him free iustification thorough fayth in his blood. The Papisticall doctrine hee compared to the Serpentes deceiuing, and lest they shuld be deceiued by it, he made a comparison betweene y^e voice of God, and the voice of the Popish Serpent: descending to more particular declaratiō therof, as it were to let them plainely see the difference that is betweene the order of the Church seruice set forth by king Edward in the Englishe tongue: comparing it with the popish seruice then vsed in the Latine tongue.

The first he sayd was good, because it was accordyng to the worde of God. Corinth. 14. and the order of the primatiue Church. The other he sayd was euill, and though in that euill hee intermingled some good Latine wordes: yet was it but as a little hony or milke mingled with a great deale of poyson, to make them to drinke vp al. This was the summe of hys sermon.

In the after noone hee was ready in his Church to haue geuen an other exhortation to his people.* But the B. of London interrupted him by sending an officer for hym. This officer charged him vpon the payne of disobedience and contumacie, forthwith to come to the Bishop his maister. Thus, as the Apostles were brought out of the Temple where they were teaching, vnto the rulers of y^e priests so was Laurence Saunders brought before this Byshop in his Pallace of London, who had in his company the aforementioned Sir Iohn Mordant & some of his Chapleins. The bishop layd no more to Laurence Saunders charge but treason for breaking the Queenes proclamation, heresie and sedition for his Sermon.

The treason, and sedition, his charitie was content to let slip, vntill an other time. But an hereticke hee woulde now proue him and all those, he sayd, which did teach and beleue that the administration of the Sacramentes and al orders of the Church are most pure, which doe come most nigh to the order of the primitiue Church. For the Church was then but in her infancie, and could not abide that perfection whiche was afterward to be furnished with ceremonies. And for this cause Christ himselfe, & after hym the Apostles did in many thinges beare with the rudenes of y^e Church.* To this Laurence Saunders answered w^t the authoritie of S. Augustine, that ceremonies were euen from the beginning inuented and ordayned for the rude infancy & weake infirmitie of man, and therefore it was a token of the more perfection of the primitiue Church, y^t it had fewe ceremonies, and of the rudenes of the Church Papisticall▪ Page 1495 because it had so many ceremonies, partly blasphemous, partly vnsauery and vnprofitable.

After much talke had concerning this matter, the Byshop willed him to write what he beleueed of transubstantiation.* Laurence Saunders did so, saying: My Lorde, ye do seeke my bloud, and ye shall haue it: I pray God that ye may be so baptised in it, that ye may thereafter loath bloud-sucking, and become a better man. This writing the Byshop kept for his purpose, euen to cut the writers throate, as shall appeare heereafter. The Byshop when he had his will, sent Laurence Saunders to the Lord Chauncellour, as Annas sent Christ to Cayphas:* and lyke fauour found Saunders as Christ his Mayster did before him. But the Chauncellour beeing not at home, Saunders was constrayned to tary for him by the space of foure houres, in the vtter chamber, where he found a Chapleyn of the Bishops very merily disposed with certeine Gentlemen playing at the Tables, with diuers other of the same family or house, occupied there in the same exercise.

All this time Saunders stood very modestly and soberly at the screene or Cupbord, bareheaded, Syr Iohn Mordant his guide or leader walking vp and downe by hym: who (as I sayd before) was then one of the Counsell. At the last, the Byshop returned from the Court, whome, as soone as he was entred, a great many suters met and receiued: so that, before he could get out of one house into another, halfe an hour was passed. At the last, he came into the chamber where Saunders was, and went through into another chamber: where in the meane way Saunders leader gaue him a writing containing the cause, or rather the accusation of the sayd Saunders, which when he had perused, where is the man, sayd the Byshop? Then Saunders being brought forth to the place of examination, first, most lowly and meekely kneeled downe, and made curtesie before the table where the Byshop did sit: Unto whom the Byshop spake on this wise.

How hapneth it (sayd he) that notwithstanding the Queenes Proclamation to the contrary,* you haue enterprised to preach?

Saunders denied that he dyd preache: Saying, that for so much as he saw the perillous tymes now at hande, he did but (according as he was admonished,* and warned by Ezechiel the Prophet,) exhort his flocke and Parishioners to perseuer and stand stedfastly, in the doctrine which they had learned, saying also, that he was moued and pricked forward thereunto by that place of the Apostle wherein he was commaunded rather to obey God then man: and moreouer, that nothing more moued or stirred hym thereunto, then his owne conscience.

A goodly conscience surely sayd the Byshop. This your conscience could make our Queene a Bastard or misbegotten:* Would it not I pray you?

Then sayd Saunders, we (sayd he) do not declare or say that the Queene is base or misbegotten, neither go aboute any such matter.* But for that let them care whose writings are yet in the hands of men, witnessing the same, not without the great reproch and shame of the Authour:* priuely taunting the Byshop hymselfe, which had before (to get the fauour of Henry 8.) written and set forth in print a booke of true obedience, wherein he had openly declared Queene Mary to be a Bastard.* Now M. Saunders going forwards in his purpose, sayd: We do only professe and teach the sinceritie and puritie of the word, the which albeit it be now forbidden vs to preache with our mouthes, yet notwithstanding I do not doubt, but that our bloud hereafter shall manifest the same. The Byshop being in thys sort pretily nipped and touched, said: Cary away this frensie foole to prison.* Unto whome M. Saunders aunswered, that he did geue God thanks which had geuen hym at the last, a place of rest and quietnesse, where as he might pray for the Byshops conuersion.

Furthermore, he that did lye with him afterwarde in prison in the same bed,* reported that he heard him say that euen in the time of his examination, he was wonderfully comforted, in so much as not only in spirite, but also in body, he receaued a certayne taste of that holy communion of Saints, whilst a most pleasant refreshing did issue from euery part and member of the body vnto the seate & place of the hart, and from thence did ebbe and flow to and fro, vnto all the partes againe.

This Saunders continued in prison a whole yeare and 3. moneths. In all which space he sent diuers letters to diuers men: as one to Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer: and other to his wife and also to others,* certifying them both of the publike calamitie of the time, and also of his priuate afflictions, and of sondry his conflictes with his aduersaries: As in writing to his friend, he speaketh of Weston conferring with him in prison, whereof you shall heare anone (by the leaue of the Lorde) as followeth in the story. In the meane time the Chauncellor, after this little talke with M. Saunders (as is aforesaid) sent him to the prison of the Marshalsey, &c. For the Caiphas (Winchester I meane) did nothing but bayte him with some of his currish eloquence, and so committed him to the prison of the Marshalsey, where he was kept prisoner one whole yeare and a quarter. But of his cause and estate, thou shalt now see, what Laurence Saunders himselfe did write.

¶A parcell of a Letter of Laurence Saunders sent to the Byshop of Winchester, as an aunswere to certayne thyngs wherewith he had before charged hym.

TOuching the cause of my imprisonment,* I doubt whether I haue broken any law or proclamation. In my doctrine I did not, forasmuch as at that time it was permitted by the proclamation to vse according to our consciences, such seruice as was then established.* My doctrine was then agreeable vnto my conscience and the seruice then vsed. The Act which I did (he meaneth publike teaching of Gods word in his owne parish, called Alhallowes in Breadstreete in the Citie of London) was such, as being indifferently weyed, sounded to no breaking of the proclamation, or at the least no wilfull breaking of it, forasmuch as I caused no bell to be roong, neyther occupied I any place in the Pulpit, after the order of Sermons or Lectures. But be it that I did breake the Proclamation, this long time of continuance in prison may be thought to be more then a sufficient punishment for such a fault.

Touching the charging of me with my Religion, I say wyth S. Paule: This I confesse,* that after the way which they call heresie, so worship I the God of my forefathers, beleeuing all thyngs which are written in the lawe and the Prophets, and haue hope towards God, &c. And herein study I •o haue alway a cleare conscience towardes God, and towards men:* so that God I call to witnesse, I haue a conscience. And this my conscience is not grounded vpon vayne fantasie, but vpon the infallible veritie of Gods word, with the witnessing of his chosen Church agreeable vnto the same.

It is an easie thing for them, which take Christ for theyr true Pastor, and be the very sheepe of his pasture, to discerne the voice of their true shepheard, from the voyce of wolues, hyrelings, and straungers, for as much as Christ sayeth:* My sheepe heare my voice, yea and thereby they shall haue the gift to know the right voice of the true shepheard, and so to follow him, and to auoyde the contrary, as he also sayeth: The sheepe follow the shepheard, for they knowe his voyce: A straunger will they not follow, but will flie from him: for they knowe not the voice of a stranger. Such inward inspiration doth the holy Ghost put into the children of God, being in deede taught of God, but otherwise vnable to vnderstand the true way of their saluation.* And albeit that the Wolfe (as Christ saith) commeth in sheepes clothing, yet he sayth: by their fruites yee shall knowe them.* For there be certayne fruites whereby the Wolfe is bewrayed, notwithstanding that otherwise in sondry sortes of deuoute holines in outwarde shew, he seemeth neuer so simple a sheepe. That the Romish religion is rauening & woluish, it is apparant in 3. principall points.

First, it robbeth God of his due and only honour.

Secondly, it taketh away the true comfort of cōscience,* in obscuring, or rather burying of Christ, and his office of saluation.

Thirdly, it spoyleth God of his true worship and seruice in spirit and truth, appointed in his prescript commaundementes, and driueth men vnto that inconuenience, against the which Christ with the Prophet Esay doth speake sharply: This people honoureth me with their lips, but their hart is far from me.* They worship me in vaine, teaching the doctrine and precepts of men. And in another place: ye cast aside the commaundemente of God to mayntayne your owne traditions.

Wherefore I in conscience weying the Romish Religion, and by indifferent discussing thereof, finding the foundation vnstedfast, and the building thereupon but vayne: and on the other side hauing my conscience framed after a right and vncorrupt religion, ratified and fully established by the word of God, and the consent of his true Church. I neyther may, nor do intend by Gods gracious assistance, to be pulled one iot from the same, no though an Angell out of heauen should preach another Gospell then that which I haue receyued of the Lord.

And although that for lacke either of such deepe knowledge and profound iudgement, or of so expedite vttering of that I do know and iudge, as is required in an excellent clarke, I shall not be able sufficiently to aunswere, for the conuincing of the gainesayer: yet neuerthesse, this my protestation shall be of me premised, that for the respect of the grounds and causes before considered, albeit I cannot * explicita fide as they call it, conceiue all that is to be conceiued, neither can discusse all that is to be discussed, nor can effectually expresse all that is to be expressed in the discourse of the doctrine of this most true religion, whereunto Page 1496 to I am professed: Yet do I bind my selfe as by my humble simplicity, so by my fide^m * implicitam: that is, by faith in generalty (as they call it) to wrap my beliefe in the credit of the same, that no authority of that romish religion repugnant thereunto, shall by any meanes remoue me from the same, though it may hap that our aduersaries will labour to beguile vs with entising wordes, and seeke to spoyle vs through Philosophy and deceitfull vanity after the traditions of men, and after the ordinances of the world, and not after Christ, &c.

And thus much out of M. Sanders letter, so much as remained thereof. The residue, because it was rent away, I could not adioine hereunto. Notwithstāding by this alredy expressed, it is sufficient to vnderstand how good was y^e cause & estate of this blessed child of god, being prisoner for Christes cause. *For y^e defence wherof he wholly bestowed & resigned himself in such sort as he forbad his wife to sue for his deliury, & whē other of his friends had by suite almost obtained it, he discouraged them, so that they did not folow their suite, as by this letter following may appeare.

¶ A letter of M. Saunders to his wife.

GRace, mercy, and peace in Iesus Christ our Lord.

Entirely beloued wife, euen as vnto mine owne soule and body, so do I dayly in my harty prayer wish vnto you, for I doo dayly, twise at the least in this sort remember you. And I do not doubt (deare wife) but that both I and you, as we be written in the booke of life, so we shall together enioy the same euerlastingly, through the grace and mercy of God our deare father, in hys sonne our Christ. And for this present life, let vs wholly appoynt our selues to the will of our good God, to glorifie him either by life or by death, and euen that same mercifull Lord make vs worthy to honour him either way as pleaseth him Amen. I am mery, I thanke my God and my Christ, * in whome and through whome I shall (I knowe) be able to fight a good fight, and finishe a good course, and then receiue the crowne which is layde vp in store for me, and all the true Soldiours of Christ. Wherefore wife, let vs in the name of our God, fight lustely to ouercome the flesh, the deuil and the world. What our harnesse and weapons be in this kind of fight, looke the 6. vnto the Ephesians, and pray, pray, pray. I would that you make no suite for me in any wise. * Thanke you knowe whome, for her most sweete and comfortable putting me in remembrance of my iourney whether I am passing. God send vs all good speede, and a ioyfull meeting. I haue too fewe suche frends to further me in that iourney, which is in deede the greatest friendship. The blessing of God be with you all, Amen.

A prisoner in the Lord Laurence Saunders.

This his constancie is sufficiently commended and declared by his valiant buckling with two mighty enemies, * Antichrist and death. To neither of these did he geue place: but by suffering their malice, got y^e victory ouer them both. One of the conflictcs which he had with Antichrist & hys members, I haue gathered out of a letter of his own hand writing. It was with Doctour Weston, a man, whome though I should prayse, yet would all good and godly mē worthely disprayse. Of this the said Laurence Saunders thus writeth in a letter which he sent to one of his frends, which wrote to him to knowe what Doct. Weston dyd at the Marshalsey: whereunto he thus aunswereth.

M. Weston came to conferre with M. Grimoald. What he hath cōcluded with him,* I know not: I wish it may be to Gods glory, Amen, Amen. M. Weston of his gentlenes visited me, & of•red me frendship in his worldly wily sort, &c. I had not so much good maner, as to take it at his hād: for I said, that I was well inough, and ready cherefully to abide the extremity, to keepe thereby a good cōscience. You be a sleepe in sin (said he.) I would awake (quoth I) and do not forget Vigilate & orate. i. Watch & pray. What church was there,* said he 30. yeres past? What church was there, quoth I, in Helias time? Ioane of Kent, sayd he, was of youre Church. No, quoth I, we did cōdemne her as an heretick.

Who was of your Church, sayd he 30. yeares past? Such (quoth I) as that Romish Antichrist, and his rabble haue reputed and condemned as heretickes, Wicklife, sayd he, Thorpe, Old castle, &c. Yea, quoth I, with many moe, as storyes do tell.

The B. of Rome hath, sayd he, long tyme played a part in your tayling sermons: but now be ye sure he must play another maner of part. The more pitie, quoth I, and yet some cōfort it is to see how that the best learned,* wisest, & holiest of you all, haue heeretofore had him to play a part likewise in your sermōs & writings, though now to please the world, you do turne with the weathercocke. Did you euer said he, heare me preach against the Bishop of Rome? No (quoth I) for I neuer heard you preach. But I trowe you haue ben no wiser then other, &c. with more about the Sacrament. Pray, pray. God keepe your family & blesse it.

What a blessed taste thys good man had of Gods holy spirit, by diuers and sondry his letters may right wel appeare to him that is disposed to peruse the same:* whereof certayne we haue here thought good, the Lord willing, to expresse, first beginning with that whiche he wrote out of the Marshalsey to D. Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, prisoners for the like cause of Christ in Oxford.

To the Archbishop Cranmer, Bish. Ridley, and M. Latimer, being prisoned in Oxford.

IN my most humble wise I salute you most reuerend fathers in Christ Iesus our Lord,* Immortall thanks and euerlasting prayes be geuen vnto that our father of mercies, Whiche hath made vs meete to be pertakers of the inheritaunce of Saintes in light, whiche hath deliuered vs from the power of darckenes, and hath translated vs into the kingdome of his beloued Sonne, by whome we haue redemption through his blood. &c O most happy estate, that in an vnspeakable wise our life is hid with Christ in God:* But whensoever Christ which is our life shall shew himselfe, then shall we also appeare with him in glory. In y^e meane season as our sight is but in a glasse, euen in a darcke speaking,* so wee walke in fayth, not after outward appearaunce, the which fayth although for want of outward appearaunce, reason reputeth but as vaine, yea the chosen of God do know the effect thereof, to bring a more substanciall taste and liuely fruition of very felicitie and perfect blessednes, then reason can reach or sences receaue. By this fayth we haue in our profession all good things, yea euen them whiche the eye hath not seene, and the eare hath not heard, neither hath entred the hart of man. &c.* Then if hereby we doe enioy all good things, it followeth that we must needes possesse, haue and enioy you most reuerend Fathers, who be no small part of our ioy and good things geuen vs of God.

vnspeakeable cōfort, by your reuerēt fatherhoodes for y^t in this so glorious sort,* ye become a towne set vpon a hill, a candle vpon a candlestick, a specktacl vnto y^e world both to the Angels & vnto men. So y^t, as we to our great cōfort do feelee,* you also may assuredly say with saint Paule, y^t the things which happē vnto vs, do chance vnto y^e great furtherance of the Gospell, so y^t our bonds in christ are manifest, not onely throughout all the iudgement hall, but in all wholl Europa, in so much that many of the brethren in the Lord, being encouraged through our bondes, dare more boldly speake the word without feare. And here in as you haue with s. Paule greatly to reioyce, so we doe reioyce with you, and we do in deed with you geue thāks for this worthy excellēt fauour of our God, towards you, that christ is thus magnified in you, yea and hereafter shal be magnified in your bodies,* whether it be through life or death. Of which thing truely wee are assured in our prayers for you, and ministring of the spirite. And although for your owne partes Christ is vnto you life, and death aduantage, and that your desire is (as in deede it were better for you) to be loosed, and to be w^t Christ, yet for the Church of Christ were it much more necessary, that ye shuld abide in the fleshe. Yea that mercifull God, euen for his Christes sake graunt that ye may abide and continue for the furtheraunce of the Churche and reioysing of fayth, that the reioysing therof may be the more abundant through Iesus Christ by your restoring, Amen, Amen.

But if it seeme better otherwise vnto the diuine wisdomē y^t by speedy death he hath appoynted you to glorifie him, y^e Lords wil be done. Yea euen as we do reioyce both on your behelfes, & also on our own, that God is magnified by life, and shuld be more abundantly glad for the continuance thereof: so we shall no lesse reioyce to haue y^e same wrought by death. We shall geue thanks for this honour geuen vnto you, reioysing that ye are accounted worthye to suffer for the name of Christ, and that it is geuen to you of God, not onely that ye shoulde beleue in him, but also that ye should suffer for his sake. And herein we shal haue to reioyce in the behalfe of the Churche of Christ, whose faith may be the faster fixed vpon Gods veritie, being confirmed with three such worthy witnesses. Oh thanks be to God for this his vnspeakeable gift.

And now most reuerend Fathers, that you may vnderstand the trueth of vs and our estate howe we stand in the lord, I do assure your reuerences, partly by y^t I perceauē by such of our brethren as be here in bondes w^t me, partly by that I heare of them which be in other places, & partly by that inward experiēce which I most vnworthy wretch haue of Gods good comfort (more abundance whereof I knowe there is in others) you may be assured (I say) by Gods grace, that you shall not be frustrate of your hope of Page 1497 our constaunt continuance in the cheerefull confession of Gods euerlasting veritie. For euen as we haue receyued the word of truth, euen the Gospell of our saluation, wherin we beleeuing, are sealed with the holy spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritaunce (the which spirite certifieth our spirit,* that we are the children of God, and therefore God hath sente the spirite of his Sonne into our harts, crying, Abba, Father) so after such portion as God measureth vnto vs, we with the whole Church of Christ, and with you reuerend fathers, receiuing the same spirite of faith, according as it is writen: I beleueed, and therefore I haue spoken.* We also beleuee, and therefore speake. For the which we in this dangerous bondage and other afflictions, hauing euen such a fight as we haue seene in you and haue heard of you,* are in no wise afraid of our aduersaries.

And forasmuch as we haue such an office, euen as God hath had mercy on vs,* we go not out of kind, but euē with you, after our little power, we labour to maintain the faith of the Gospell, knowing most certainly that though we haue this treasure in earthen vessels,*that the excellency of thys power might be Gods and not ours: yet shall we not be dashed in pieces: For the Lord will put his hand vnder vs. [When] we are troubled on euery side, yet are we not without shift: [when] we are in pouerty, we are not vtterly without some thing: [when] we suffer persecution, we are not forsaken therein: [when] we are cast downe, yet we shall not perish: but to communicate with our sweete Sauour Christ in bearing the crosse, it is appointed vnto vs, that euen with him also we shall be glorified. For it is a true saying: If we be dead with him,*we shall also liue with him: If we be patient, we shall also raigne with him: If we deny him, he shall also deny vs. Wherefore be we of good cheere,*alwayes bearing about in our body the dying of the Lord Iesus, that the life of Iesus might appeare also in our body: For we know that he which raised vp the Lorde Iesus, shall rayse vp vs also by the meanes of Iesus, and shall ioyn vs to himselfe together with you. Wherefore we are not weered: but though our outward man perish, yet the inwarde man is renued day by day. For our tribulation, which is momentane and light, prepareth an exceeding and eternall weight of glory vnto vs, while we looke not on the things which are seene, but on the things which are not seene. For the things which are seene, are temporall: but the things which are not seene, are eternall.

We testifie vnto you, Reuerend fathers, that we drawe these waters with ioy out of the Wels of the sauour. And I trust we shall cōtinually with you blesse the Lord, & giue thanks to the Lord out of the wels of Israell, we trust to bee merry together at that greate Supper of the Lambe, whose spouse we are by faith, and there to sing that song of euerlasting Haleluyah, Amen. Yea come Lorde Iesu. The grace of our Lord Iesu Christ be with you, Amen.

Another letter written to his wife, wherein is to bee seene how this woorthy warriour prepared himselfe to the appoynted fight, and to keepe hys standyng in Christes Campe.

Laurence Saunders to his wyfe.

GRace and comfort in Christ Iesu our onely comfort, in all extreme assaultes, Amen.

Fayne woulde this flesh make strange of that which the spirit doth embrace. Oh Lorde how loth is this loitering sluggard to passe forth in Gods pathe? It fantasieth forsooth much feare of fraybugs: and were it not for the force of faith which pulleth it forward by the reyne of Gods most sweete promise, and of hope which pricketh on behinde, great aduenture there were of fainting by the way. But blessed, and euerlastingly blessed be that heauenly father of ours, who in his Christ, our sufficient Sauour, hath vouched safe to shine in our harts, that he geueth vs the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Iesu Christ: and hauing this treasure in our earthen vessels, that the excellencie of the power might be Gods, and not oures, we are [according to his good will] troubled on euery side, yet are we not without shift: we are in pouerty, but yet not without that is sufficient:*we suffer persecution, but are not forsaken therein: we are cast downe, neuertheles we perish not: we beare in the body the dying of the Lorde Iesus, that the life of Iesus might also appeare in our body. Wherefore by the grace of our Christ we shall not be weered, neyther be dismayed by this our probation thorough the fire of affliction, as though some strange thing had hapned vnto vs: but by his power we shall reioyce, in as much as we are pertakers of Christes passion, that when he doth appeare, we may be merry and glad, knowing that our tribulation which is momentane and light,*prepareth an exceeding and an eternall weyght of glory vnto vs, while wee looke not on the thyngs which are seene, but on the things whych are not seene. They that sowe in teares,shall reape in ioye. For he that goeth on his way weeping and scattering his good seede, shall doubtles come agayne wyth ioy, and bring his whole sheaues wyth him. Then, then shall the Lorde wipe awaye all teares from our eyes. Then, then shall be brought to passe that saying which is written: Death is swallowed vp in victory. Death, where is thy sting? Hell, where is thy victory? Yea, thanks be to God which hath geuen vs the victory thorough our Lord Iesus Christ, Amen.

In the meane season it remayneth for vs to followe S. Peters bidding: Let them (sayth he) that are troubled according to the will of God,commit their soules to him with well doing, as a faithfull Creator and Maker. He is our maker: we are his handyworke and creatures, whome now when he hath made, he doth not leaue and forsake as the shipwright doth the shyp, leauing it at all aduentures to be tossed in the tempest, but he comforteth vs his creatures, and in him we liue, moue, and haue our being: Ye not onely that, but now that he hath in his deare Christ repayed vs, being before vtterly decayed, and redeemed vs, purging vs vnto himselfe as a peculiar people by the blood of hys Sonne he hath put on a most tender good will and fatherly affection toward vs, neuer to forget vs: vnto whome by such promises he hath plighted such faith, that though it were possible that the mother could forget her infant,* and not be tender harted to the childe of her wombe, yet may not it be that his faithfull beleeuers should be forgotten of him. He biddeth vs to cast our care on him, and sayth, that assuredly he careth for vs. And what though for a season he doth suffer vs to be turmoyled in the troublous tempestes of temptation, and seemeth as in much anger to haue geuen vs ouer, and forgotten vs? let not vs for all that leaue off to put our trust in him, but let vs with godly Iob conclude in our selues and say: Euen though he kill mee,*yet will I put my trust in him. Let vs with the blessed Abraham in hope, euen contrary to hope by beliefe, leane vnto that our louing Lord, who though for our probation, he suffereth vs to be afflicted, yet will he not bee alwayes chiding, neyther keepeth he his anger for euer: for he knoweth whereof wee bee made: he remembreth that we are but dust. Wherefore, looke how high the heauen is in comparison of the earth,*so great is his mercy towards them which feare him. Looke how wide the East is from the West, so farre hath he set our sinnes from vs. Yea, like as a father pitieth his owne children, euen so is the Lorde mercifull vnto them that feare him. Oh what great cause of reioycing haue we in our most gracious God? we can not but burst foorth into the praying of suche a bountifull benefactour, and say with the same Psalmist: Prayse the Lord O my soule, and all that is within me prayse his holy name Praise the Lord O my soule, and forget not all his benefites.

Deare wife, riches haue I none to leaue behynde mee, wherewith to endow you after the worldly maner. But that treasure of tasting how sweete Christ is vnto hungry consciences (whereof I thanke my Christ, I do feelee part,* and would feelee more) that I bequeath vnto you, and to the rest of my beloued in Christ, to retaine the same in sense of hart alwayes. Pray, pray, I am merry,* and I trust I shall be merry, maugre the teeth of all the deuils in hell. I vtterly refuse my selfe, and resigne my selfe vnto my Christ in whome I knowe I shall be strong as he seeth needefull. Pray, pray, pray.

Laurence Saunders.

As the sayde Mayster Saunders was in prison, strayte charge was geuen to the keeper,* that no person shoulde speake with him. His wife yet came to the prison gate with her yong childe in her armes, to visit her husband. The keeper, though for his charge, hee durst not suffer her to come into the prison, yet did he take the little babe out of her armes, and brought him vnto his father. Laurence Saunders seeing him, reioyced greatly, saying, that he reioysed more to haue such a boy, then he should if two thousand pounce were geuen him. And vnto the standers by, which prayed the goodlines of the childe, he sayde: what man fearing God woulde not lose this life present, rather then by prolonging it heere, he should adiudge this boy to be a Bastard, his wife a whoore, and himselfe a whooremonger? Yea, if there were no other cause, for which a man of my estate should loose his life, yet who woulde not geue it, to aduouch this child to be legitimate, and his mariage to be lawfull and holy?

I do (good Reader) recite thys saying, not onely to let thee see what he thought of Priests mariage: but chiefly to let all maryed couples and parents learne to beare in their bosome true affections: naturall, but yet seasoned with the true salt of the spirit, vnfaynedly and throughly mortified to do the naturall workes and offices of married couples & parents, so lōg as with their doing they may keepe Christ with a free confessing faith, in a conscience vnfoyled: otherwise, both they and their owne liues are so to be forsaken, Page 1498 as Christ required thē to be denied, and geue in his cause,

And now to come to the examination of this good man, alter that the Bishops had kept him one whole yeare and a quarter in prison, at the length they called him, as they did the rest of his felowes, openly to be examined. Of the which his first examination the effect and purpose thus foloweth.*

¶The Examination of Laurence Saunders.

PRayed be our gracious God who preserueth his from euill, and doth geue them grace to auoyd al such offēces as might hinder his honor, or hurt his Church. Amen.

Being conuented before the Queenes most honorable Councell,* sundry bishops being present, the Lord Chauncellor began to speake in such forme as foloweth.

I. Chan.

It is not vnknowne, that you haue bene Prisoner for such abhominable heresies & false doctrine as hath bene sowne by you: and now it is thought good that mercy be shewed to such as seeke for it. Wherefore if now you will shew your selfe conformable, & come home agayne, mercy is ready. We must say that we haue fallen in maner all: but now we bee risen agayne, and returned to the Catholicke Church, you must rise with vs, and come home vnto it. Geue vs forthwith a direct aunswere.

Saun.

My Lord, and my Lordes all, my it please your honors to geue me leaue to aunswere with deliberation.

Chan.

Leaue of your painting and pride of speech. For such is the fashion of you all to please your selues in your glorious wordes.* Aunswere yea or nay.

Saund.

My Lord, it is no time for me now to paynt. And as for pride, there is no great cause why it should be in me. My learning I confesse to be but small: and as for riches or worldly wealth I haue none at all. Notwithstanding it standeth me in hand to aūswere to your demaund circumspectly, considering that one of these two extreme perilles are like to fall vpon me: the losing of a good conscience, or y^e losing of this my bodye and life. And I tell you trueth, I loue both life and liberty, if I could enioy them without the hurt of my conscience.

Chan.

Conscience? you haue none at all, but pride and arrogancy, * deuiding your selues by singularitye from the Church.

Saun.

The Lorde is the knower of all mens consciences. And where your Lordship layeth to my charge thys deuiding my selfe from the Church (as you do mean, & is now among you concluded vpon, as I do vnderstand) I do assure you, that I lyue in the fayth wherein I haue bene brought vp sithens I was 14. yeare old: being taught that the power of the B. of Rome is but vsurped, w^t many other abuses springing thereof. Yea this I haue receiued euen at your hands that are here present, as a thing agreed vpon by the Catholicke Church and publicke authority.

Chan.

Yea mary, but I pray you, haue you receiued by cōsent and authoritye all your heresies of the blessed Sacrament of the aultar?

Saund.

My Lorde, it is lesse offence to cutte off an arme, hand, or ioynt of a man, then to cut of the head. For y^e man may liue though he do lacke an arme, hand or ioynt, and so he can not without his head. But you, all the whole sort of you, haue agreed to cut of the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, whome now you will haue to be the head of your Church agayne.

Bish. of Lond.

And if it like your Lordship, I haue his hand agaynst the blessed sacrament. How say you to that?

Saunders.

What I haue written, that I haue written, and farther I will not accuse my selfe. Nothing haue you to burden me withall, for breaking of your lawes since they were in force.*

Chan.

Well, you be obstinate and refuse liberty.

Saund.

My Lord, I may not buy liberty at suche a pryce: but I beseech your honours to be meanes to the Queenes Maiesty for suche a pardon for vs, that wee may liue and keep our consciences vnclogged, and we shal liue as most obedient subiectes. Otherwise, I must say for my selfe, that by Gods grace I will abide the moste extremity that man may do against me, rather then to do against my consciēce.

Chan.

Ah Syrra, you will liue as you list. The Donatistes did desire to liue in singularity: but in deed they were not meete to liue on earth: no more be you, and that shall you vnderstand within these seuen dayes: and therefore away with him.

Saund.

Welcome be it, whatsoeuer the will of God shalbe, either life or death. And I tell you truely, I haue learned to dye. But I exhort you to beware of shedding of innocēt blood. Truly it will cry. The spirite of God rest vpon all your honors. Amen. This is the summe and forme of my first examination. Pray. &c.

This examination being ended the officers led him out of the place, & so stayed vntill the rest of his fellowes were likewise handled, that they might haue them altogether to prison. Laurence Saunders standing among the Officers seing there a great multitude of people, opened his mouth and spake freely, warning them wel of that,* which by their falling from Christ to Antichrist they did deserue, & therefore exhorting them by repentaunce to rise agayne, and to embrace Christ with stronger fayth, to confesse him to the end, in the defiance of Antichrist, sinne, death & the deuill: so should they reteine the Lordes fauor and blessing.

The cotypes of his other examinations and excommunication came to the hands of such as do keepe them still in secret. But in them as he defended Christes cause stoutly:* so warned he the Phariscaill bishops and papists, of their hypocrisy and tyranny freely, and cleared himselfe of theyr vniust quarrellinges truly. After he was excommunicate and deliuered to the secular power, he was brought by the Shriffe of London,* to the prison called the Counter in his owne parish in Breadstreet: whereat he reioyced greatly, both because he found there a fellow prisoner, M. Cardmaker, with whom he had Christian and comfortable conference, and also because out of prison, as before out of a pulpit, he might preach to his parishners: as by his letter here after shall be declared.

The fourth day of February,* the Bishop of London did come to the prisō where he was, to disgrace him: which when he had done, Laurence Saunders sayd to hym: I thanke God I am none of your Church.

The day folowing in the morning,* the Shriffe of London deliuered him to certayn of the Queenes Gard, which were appoynted to cary him to the City of Couētry, there to be burned. The fyrst night they came to S. Albōs, wher M. Grimoald (a man who had more store of good giftes, then of great constancy) did speake with him.

After M. Saunders had geuen him a lesson meete for his lightnes, he tooke a cup into his hand, and asked him if he would pledge him of that cup, of which he would begin to him. Grimoald by his shrugging and shrinking shewing what he was, sayd: of that cup which is in your hand, I will pledge you: but of that other which you meane, I will not promise you. Well sayde Mayster Saunders, my deare Lord Iesus Christ hath begon to me of a more bitter cup then mine shall be, and shall I not pledge my most sweet Sauior? yes I hope.

After they were come to Couentry,* the same nyght a poore Shoomaker, which was wont to serue him of shoes, came to him after his maner & sayd: Oh my good Mayster God strengthen and comfort you. Gramercies good Shoo'maker, quoth M. Saunders, and I pray thee to pray for me: for I am the vnmeetest man for this high office, that euer was appoynted to it: but my gracious God and deare father is able to make me strōg enough. That same night he was put into the common Gayle among other prisoners, where he slept litle, but spent the night in prayer,* and instructing of others.

The next day, which was the viij. of Februarye hee was lead to the place of execution in the Parcke without the City, going in an old gowne, and a shyerte, barefooted, and aftimes fell flat on the ground and prayed. When he was come nigh to the place, the Officer appoynted to see y^e execution done, sayd to M. Saunders, that he was one of them which marred the Queenes Realme with •alse doctrine and heresy: wherfore thou hast deserued death (quoth he) but yet if thou wilt reuoke thy heresies, y^e Queene hath pardoned thee: if not, yonder fire is prepared for thee. To whom M. Saunders aunswered: it is not I, nor my fellow Preachers of Gods truth, that haue hurt the queenes Realme, but it is your selfe, & such as you are,* which haue alwayes resisted Gods holy word: it is you which haue & do marre the Queenes Realme. I do hold no heresies, but the doctrine of God, the blessed Gospel of Christ: that hold I, that beleue I, that haue I taught, and that will I neuer reuoke. With that this Tormentor cryed, away with him and away from him went M. Saunders with a mery courage towards the fire. He fell to the ground, and prayed: he rose vppe agayn, & tooke the stake to which he shuld be chayned, in his armes and kissed it saying: Welcome the Crosse of Christ, welcome euerlasting life: and being fastened to the stake, and fire put to him, full sweetely he slepte in the Lord.

And thus haue ye the full history of Laurēce Saūders whom I may well compare to S. Laurence, or any other of the old Martyrs of Christes church: both for the feruent zeale of the truth and Gospell of Christ, & the most cōstant pacience in his suffering: as also for the cruell tormēts that  he in his paciēt body did susteine in the flame of fire. For so his cruell enemies hādled him, that they burned him with greene woode, & other smothering rather then burning fewell, which put him to much more payne, but that y^e grace & most plentifull consolation of Christ, which neuer forsaketh his seruauntes, & gaue strength to S. Laurence gaue also pacience to this Laurence, aboue all that his tormēts could worke agaynst: which well appered by his quiet stāding, and sweet sleeping in the fire, as is aboue declared.

And to the intent to geue to the Reader to vnderstand the better, what the grace of Christ worketh in his seruāts, and agayne, * how feeble & weake man is of himselfe without this grace geuen from aboue, though he seeme otherwise neuer so stout in himselfe: here therfore haue we added to the foresayd story of Laurence Saunders, the communication which in the beginning of his trouble, was be'twene him and Doct. Pendleton, * by the example whereof, such as stand, may learne to vnderstād and take heed with due feare, & not to bragge: to leane to the grace of the Lord, and not to presume in themselues.

¶A certayne communication betwene Laurence Saunders and Doctor Pendleton, in the beginning of Queene Maries tyme.

*AT the chaunge of religion in this Realme, and the beginning of Queene Maries reigne, Doct. Pendleton and M. Saunders men knowne to the world, not only to be learned but also earnest preachers of Gods word in the time of blessed king Edward, met together in the country, where by occasiō they were at that time, and as the case required (by reason of the persecution that was then at hand) fell to debate what was best for them to doe, in so daungerous a season. Whereupon M. Saunders, whether thorow very fraylty in deed of his weake flesh that was loth to tast of the bitter cup, though his spirite were ready thervnto: or whether it were vpon the mistrust of hys owne strength, that he might receiue the greater power from aboue: or whether it were not for any one of the sayd causes alone, but for both together, or such like: semed so fearefull and feeble spirited, that he shewed himselfe in appearance, like either to fall quite from God and his word, whiche he had taught, or at least to betake him to his heeles and to fly the land, rather then to sticke to his profession and abyde by his tackle: * so as Doctor Pendleton (who on the cōtrary side, appeared not so big of body, but as bold in courage, nor so earnest before in Pulpit, but as ready now to seale the same with his bloud) tooke vppon him to comfort M. Saūders all that he might, admonishing him (as he could do it very well) not to forsake cowardly his flocke when hee had most neede to defend the wolfe from them: neither hauing put to his hand to Gods plough, to start now aside and geue it ouer, nor yet (that is worst of all) hauyng once forsakē Antichrist, to fall either himselfe, or to suffer others by his example to returne to theyr vomit agayne.

After which and such like perswasions bidding him be of good comfort, and to take a good hart vnto him: what man (quoth he) there is a great deale more cause in me to be afeard thē in you, for as much as you see, I cary a greater masse of flesh vpon my backe then you do, and being so laden with a heauier lumpe of this vile carkase ought ther'fore of nature to be more frayle then you: & yet sayth he, * I will see the vttermost drop of this grease of mine moltē away, & the last gobbet of this flesh consumed to ashes, before I wil forsake God and his truth. Wherunto the other answering but litle, & wishing that almighty God woulde geue him more strength thē he presently felt in himselfe, acknowledging his owne weaknes, consēted notwithstanding though it were somewhat fayntly, to ioynē w^t him in the profession of the Gospell, & so to go vp to London & set forth the same: wherupon they gaue ech other theyr hāds.

Now when they were come to London, Lord what a great chaunge was there betwene these two persons. The poore feeble faynt harted Saunders, by the goodnes of almighty God, taking hart of grace to him, seking the same in humility, boldly & stoutly confirmed his flock out of the pulpit, where his charge lay, mightely beating down Antichrist, & lustely preached Christ his maister, for the which he afterward suffered most willingly as is afore declared. Wheras on the other side, Pendleton the proud (who, as it appeared by the sequele, had bene more stout in words,* thē constant in deeds, and a greater bragger, then a good warrior) folowed Peter so iustly in crackes, howsoever he did in repentance (which God onely knoweth) that he came not so soone to London but he chaūged his tipet, & playd y^e Apostata, preaching in stede of sound doctrine, nothing almost but errors & lyes, aduauncing Antichrist, and ouerthrowing poore Christ with all his mayne: so his former boldnes came to nothing, vnlesse it were a contrarye key, becomming of a faithfull pastour a false runnagate, and of a true Preacher a sworne enemy of Gods euerlasting Testament, to the great offence of his brethren, the hurt of hys flock, and the vtter vndoing, with our Gods greater mercy, of his owne soule. Wherein are specially to be considered the deepe and maruellous iudgementes of God, who as he can and doth make strong whome it pleaseth hym, when he seeth his time, & most commonly such as appeare most feeblest: euen so contrariwise throweth he downe other Page 1500 some,* seeme they neuer so stoute, stand they neuer so much in theyr own conceites. Wherefore let him that standeth take heed he fall not, and let vs pray continually to almighty God though we haue fayth, that he will helpe and encrease our faith, that in him it may be made strōg, which of it selfe is so weake, that it is soone ouerthrowne.

This blessed man of God enduring long time in prisō, did not passe all his time in vnfruitfull idlenes, but still frō time to time did visite his frendes (as is sayd) and especially his wife, with many letters full of godly instruction & consolatiō. All which letters it shall not be greatly needful here to insert, partly because they are to be found in the booke of letters, partly because we entēd also (if God will) to prosecute the same more at large. In the meane time it shall not be out of place here presētly to cōprehend certein of them, as in order foloweth.

¶A letter sent to M. Farrar Bishop of S. Davids, Doctor Tailor, M. Bradford, and M. Philpot.

GRace, mercy and peace, in Iesus Christ our Lord. &c. Good fathers and deare brethren, be thankefull vnto our most gracious God, which hath preserued vs, and shall (I doubt not) from blaspheming his blessed name: yea not onely that, but also ex ore Infantium & Lactentium perficiet laudem. &c. i. Out of the mouthes of very babes and sucklinges shall be set forth his praise. They offer vs (forsooth) our liberty & pardon, so that we will rise with them vnto that faith which we with them were fallen from. Yea or no, must be answered in hast. They will not admit any need full circumstances, but all (as heretofore) most detestable & abhominable. Rise with them we must vnto the vnity. And pardon (say I) of me must not be so dearely purchased. A pardon I desire, for to liue with an vnclogged cōscience. The Donatists (say they) sought for such singularitye, but they were not meete to liue in a common wealth, no more be you, as you shall shortly vnderstand. Wherefore away with him, yea the time was named within thys seuen night. There be 12. houres in the day. Death shall be wellcome (say I) as being looked for long since, and yet do iustice ye were best, for Abels bloud cryed ye wot what. The spirite of God be vpon you, & God saue your honors. Thus departed I from thē. Pray, pray. Ah, ah, puer sum, nescio loqui. i. I am a childe, I cannot speake. My brother P. shall shew you more herein. By him send me word what you haue done. Fare ye well, and pray, pray, I woulde gladly meet with my good brother Bradford, on the backside about 11. of the clock. Before that time I cannot start out, we haue such outwalkers, but then will they be at dinner.

Yours as you know, Laurence Saunders.

¶A Letter which L. Saunders did write to his wife, and others of the faythfull, after his condemnation to the fire, written the last of Ianua. 1555. out of the Counter in Breadstreete.

THE grace of Christ, w^t the cōsolation of the holy Ghost, to the keeping of fayth and a good conscience, cōfirme & keep you for euer vessels to Gods glory.* Amen.

Oh what worthy thanks can be geuē to our gracious God for his vnmeasurable mercies plētifully poured vpō vs? And I most vnworthy wretch cannot but poure forth at this present, euē from the bottom of my hart, the beway'ling of my great ingratitude and vnkindnes towardes so gracious a good God and louing father. I beseech you all, as for my other many sinnes, so especially for that sinne of my vnthankfulnessse, craue pardon for me in your earnest prayers, commendyng me to Goddes greate mercyes in Christ.

To number these mercies in particular, where to num'ber the drops of water which are in the Sea, the sandes on the shore, the starres in the skie, O my deare wife & ye the rest of my frends, reioyce with me, I say reioyce w^t thanksgeuing for this my present promotion,* in that I am made worthy to magnifye my God, not onely in my life by my slow mouth & vncircūcised lips, bearing witnes vnto hys truth, but also by my bloud to seale the same, to the glory of my God, and confirming of his true church. And as yet I testify vnto you, that the comfort of my sweete Christ doth driue from my phantasy the feare of death. But if my deare husband Christ doe for my triall, leaue me alone a little to my selfe, alas I know in what case I shalbe thē: but if for my prooffe he do so, yet am I sure he will not be long or far from me. Though he stand behind the wal & hide himselfe (as Salomō saith in his mistical ballet) yet will he peep in by a crest to see how I do. He is a very tender harted Ioseph: though he speak roughly to his brethren & handle thē hardly, yea & threatē greuouse bondage to his best beloued brother Benjamin: yet can he not conteyne hymselfe from weeping with vs & vpon vs, with falling on our neckes, and sweetly kissing vs. Such,* such a brother is our Christ vnto vs all. Wherefore hasten to go vnto him as Iacob did with his Sonnes and family, leauing theyr country and acquayntaunce. Yea this our Ioseph hath obtained for vs, that Pharaο the Infidell shall minister vnto vs chariots, wherin at ease we may be caryed to come vnto him: as we haue experience how our very aduersaries do help vs vnto our euerlasting blisse by theyr speddy dispatch, yea & how all thinges haue bene helpinges hereunto: blessed be our God. Be not afrayde of fraybugges which lye in the way. Feare rather the euerlasting fire: feare the Serpent which hath that deadly sting of which by bodely death they shall be brought to taste which are not grafted in Christ, wanting fayth and a good conscience, and so are not acquainted with Christ the killer of death. But oh my deare wyfe and frends, we, we whom God hath deliuered from the power of darcknes, and hath translated vs into the kingdom of his deare sonne, by putting of the old man, & by fayth putting on the newe, euen our Lord Iesus Christ, his wisdom, holines, righteousnes & redēption, we I say haue to triumph agaynst the terrible spitefull Serpent the Deuill, sinne, hell, death & damnation. For Christ our brasen Serpent hath pulled away the sting of this serpēt,* so that now we may boldly in beholding it spoyled of his sting, triūph & with our Christ & al his elect say: Death where is thy sting? Hell where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, who hath geuen vs [Vs] the victory through our Lord Iesus Christ.

Wherefore be mery my deare wife, & all my deare felow heyres of the euerlasting kingdome alwayes remēber the Lord. Reioyce in hope, be pacient in tribulation, continue in prayer, & pray for vs now appoynted to the slaughter y^t we may be vnto our heauenly father, a fat offering, and an acceptable sacrifice. I may hardlye write to you. Wherefore let these few words be a witnes of commendations to you and all them which loue vs in fayth,* and namely vnto my flocke, among whom I am resident by Gods prouidence, but as a prisoner.

And although I am not so amōg them, as I haue bene to preach to them out of a pulpit, yet doth god now preach vnto them by me, by this my imprisonment and captiuity which now I suffer among them for Christes Gospelles sake, bidding them to beware of the Romish Antichristian religion and kingdome, requiring and charging them to abide in the trueth of Christ, which is shortly to be sealed w^t the bloud of theyr Pastor: who though he be vnworthy of such a ministry, yet Christ there high pastor is to be regarded, whose truth hath bene taught thē by me, is witnessed by my chaynes, & shall be by my death, through the power of that hye pastor. Be not carefull good wife, cast your care on the Lord, & commend me vnto him in repentant praier, as I do you and our Samuell: whom euen at the stake, I will offer as my selfe vnto God. Fare ye wel all in Christ, in hope to be ioyned w^t you in ioy euerlasting. This hope is put vp in my bosome, Amen, Amen, Amen, Pray, pray.

An other Letter to Maystres Lucy Harington, a Godly Gentlewoman, and frendly to him in his troubles.

YOur most gentle commendations,* whereof this messenger made remembraunce vnto me, was for two causes very comfortable. First, for that thereby I vnderstood of the state of your health & bodely welfare, for the which I geue thanks vnto god, who graunt the long continuaunce thereof to his honour and fatherly good will, whereunto I will dayly say, Amen. And farther I was refreshed by the expressing of your mindefull frendship towards me farre vnworthy thereof. Wherein I take occasion of much reioysing in our so gracious a God and mercifull Father, who as he hath in his vnmeasurable mercy by fayth handfasted vs his chosen childrē vnto his deare sonne our Christ, as the spirituall spouse of such an heauēly husband: so he linketh vs by loue one vnto an other, being by that bond cōpact together with charitable readines to doe good one vnto another: so that first to the glory of our God & his Christ, thē to our owne ioying in the testimony of a good cōscience, and last of all to the stopping of the mouthes and confusiō of our aduersaries, we beare the badge as the right spouse of our Christ, which himselfe noted in this saying: Herein shall all men know that ye be my Disciples, if ye loue one another. Then farther, by this bond of mutuall loue,* is sette forth the fatherly prouidence of God towards vs his children, that though it be he that careth for vs, in whome we liue, mooue and be, who feedeth all flesh with bodely sustenance, yet hath he appoynted vs in these present necessities, to stand in his sted one vnto another. Wherein is not onelye sette forth our dignitye, but also that vnspeakeable accorde and vnitye among vs the many members in his mysticall body. And though that either Page 1501 for lacke of ability, or els through distaunce of place, power and oportunity of helping one another doe fayle: yet wonderfull is the working of Gods children through the spirite of prayer, as wherby they fetch all heauenly influence frō Christ theyr celestially head by his spirite▪ to be measured seuerally as maye serue to the mayntenance of the whole body.

Thus doth our faythfull prayer which we make one for another, distribute and scater Gods bountiful blessinges both ghostly and bodely,* when ordinary ability lacketh, and when the arme may not reach forth such Gods riches. According herunto I well perceiue and vnderstand your readines to do good vnto all, and especially I haue experience of your readye good will towardes me in your hartye desire to stretch out your helping hand to relieue my lacke,* and of your helpe to be extended to me in the other spirituall sort by your good prayer, I doubt not: as I also therin assure you of my helpe, being all that I may do, & yet the same not so much as I would do.

My need concerning bodely necessaryes, is as yet furnished by Gods prouision, so that I am not driuē to any extremity wherfore to be burdenous to you, as your gentle beneuolence prouoketh me, the Lord reward you therefore. If God make me worthy to be eis witnes at this present, in geuing this corruptible body to burne for the testimony of his truth, it is enough for me to say vnto you that I haue a poore wife and childe whom I loue in the Lord, and whome I know for my sake you will tender when I am departed hence. &c.

¶An other Letter to Maystres Lucy Harrington.

GRace and mercy. &c. It happeneth oftentimes that aboundance of matter bringing with it much vehemēcy of frendly affection, maketh men dumbe, and euen then chiefly when there is most eger purpose of speaking,* silence doth suppress, and causeth the party so affected, vnperfectly to expresse that he goeth about to vtter. Such impediment by much matter mingled with feruency of affection, feele I some times in my selfe, letting the vtteraunce either by tongue or writing, of the aboundance of the hart. The loue of our most gracious God and heauenly Father bestowed vpon vs in the merites of Christ our Sauour, who may by cōcept of minde comprehend, passing in deed al vnderstanding? much lesse may the same by any meanes be expressedly vttered. And as suche heauenlye blessinges which by fayth we fetch from aboue, be inexplicable: so is it hard to vtter, when the faythfull are set on fire by loue, theyr readines to reach forth and to geue by charity, as by fayth they haue receiued. But (alas) we cary this treasure in earthen vessels. Many times fayth is feble and then loue loseth her feruor.* Pray we therfore, Lord encrease our fayth, and loue forthwith will be on fire. And immortall thanks be geuen vnto our God, who in our Christ hath bestowed vpon vs the first fruites of his spirite, who cryeth in our hartes Abba Father. And (as S. Paule sayth) seeing we haue the same spirit of fayth,* according as it is written: I beleueed and therfore haue I spoken? we also beleue and therfore we speak: Yea God knoweth this spirit putteth in vs a minde to speake, but in attempting therof, we are driuen w^t Moyses to say: O Lord, I am slow mouthed and of vncircumcised lippes: & with Ieremy:* O Lord I cannot speake.

Albeit that this infancy restraineth the opening of such abundance of hart in my tender Christian duety to be declared towards you, yet I beseech you let this be settled in your vnderstanding, that as S. Paule expresseth vnto his Corinthians that they were in his hart eyther to liue or to dye, with many other such sayings vttered vnto them and the Galathians, expressing his vehement affection towards them: so in some part I would be like affected towards all Gods children, and especially towards you whō I know in Christ, and to whom I will not say, how much I am indebted. I thanke you for your great frendshyp and tender good will towards my wife: yea that good gracious God recompēce you, which may worthely with the more counteruayle the same, and fulfill that which lacketh of thankfull duety in vs. And because of that which heretofore I haue conceiued of you and of your more then naturall loue towards me and mine: I make my selfe thus bold to lay this burdē vpon you, euen the care and charge of my sayd poore wife I meane, to be vnto her a mother & mistres to rule and direct her by your discreet counsell.* I know she conceiueth of you the same that I do, & is thankfull vnto God with me for such a frend, and therfore I beseech you euen for Christes sake, put neuer from you thys frendly charge ouer her, whether I liue longer or shortly depart. But to charge you otherwise, thanks be to God, neither I neither she haue any such extreme need: if we had I would be as bold with you as mine owne mother. I beseech you geue my hartly salutations vnto M. Fitzwilliams & my good Lady, with thanks also for my poort wife and child, the Lord recompence them.

Laurence Saunders.

Furthermore as touching his fatherly care & affection to his wife and his litle child, the same is liuely set forth in an other letter, which he did write to his wife: wherein he admonished her, that she should not resort much to the prison, where he was, for daūger of trouble that might ensue, the tenour of whose letter here foloweth.

¶An other letter to his wife with a certayne remembraunce to M. Harrington and M. Hurland.

GRace and comfort. &c. Wife you shall do best not to come often vnto the Grate where the Porter may see you.* Putte not your selfe in daunger where it needes not: you shall I think, shortly come farre enough into daunger by keeping fayth and a good conscience: which (deare wife) I trust you do not slacke to make reckoning and account vpon by exercising your inward man in meditation of Gods most holy word, being the sustenance of the soule, and also by geuing your selfe to hūble prayer: for these two thinges be very meanes how to be made members of our Christ meet to inherite his kingdome.

Do this (deare wife) in earnest, and not leauing of, and so we two shall with our Christ and all his chosen children, enioye the mery world in that euerlasting immortality, wheras here will nothing els be found but extreme misery, euen of them which most greedely seeke this worldlye wealth: and so, if we two continue Gods children graffed in our Christ, the same Goddes blessing which we receiue, shall also settle vpon our Samuel. Though wee do shortly depart hence and leaue the poore Infant (to our seeming) at all aduentures, yet shall he haue our gracious God to be his God: for so hath he sayd and he cannot lye: I will be thy God (sayth he) and the God of thy seed. Yea if you leaue him in the w^ol^dernes destitute of all helpe, being called of God to do his wil either to dye for the confession of Christ,* either any worke of obedience: that God which heard the crye of the litle poore infant of Agar Saraes handmayden and did succour it, wil do the like to the child of you or any other fearing him and putting your trust in him. And if we lacke fayth (as we do in deede many times) let vs call for it and we shall haue the encrease both of it and also of any other good grace needefull for vs: and be mery in GOD, in who also I am very mery and ioyfull. O Lord what great cause of reioycing haue we, to thinke vpō that kingdome which he voucheth safe for his Christes sake, freely to geue vs, forsaking our selues and folowing him? Deare wife this is truely to follow him,* euen to take vp our crosse and followe him, and then as we suffer with him, so shall we raigne with him euerlastingly. Amen. Shortly, Shortly, Amen.

An other letter to his wife, to Mayster Robert Harrington, M Hurland. &c.

GRace and comfort, &c. Deare wife reioyce in our gracious God, and his our Christ,* and geue thanks moste humbly and hartely to him for this dayes worke, that in any part I most vnworthy wretch should be made worthy to beare witnes vnto his euerlasting verity, which Antichrist with his, by mayne force (I perceyue) and by moste impudēt pride and boasting, wil go about to suppres. Remember God alway my deare wife, and so shal gods blessing light vpon you and our Samuel. O remēber alwaye my wordes for Christes sake: be mery and grudge not agaynst God, and pray, pray. We be al mery here thanks be vnto God, who in his Christ hath geuē vs great cause to be mery, by whō he hath prepared for vs such a kingdom, and doth and will geue vnto vs some litle taste therof, euē in this life, and to all such as are desirous to take it.Blessed (sayth our Christ) be they which hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, for such shall be satisfied. Let vs goe, yea let vs run to seeke such treasure, and that with whole purpose of hart to cleaue vnto the Lord, to finde suche Riches in his heauenly word through his spirite obteyned by prayer. My deare Frenches and Brethren Mayster Harryngton and Mayster Hurland, pray, pray. Spiritus quidem promptus est, caro autem infirma. That is. The spirite is ready, but the fleshe is weake. When I looke vpon my selfe, quid ego stupidus & attonitus habeo quod dicam, nisi illud Petri, exi a me Domine quia homo peccator sum? i. Being astonished and confoūded, what haue I els to say, but those wordes of Peter: Lorde goe from me: for I am a sinnefull man? But then feele I that sweete comforte: Lucerna pedibus meis verbum Domini, lumen semitis meis, & haec mea est consolatio in humilitate mea. i. The word of the Lorde is a Lanterne to my feete, and a light vnto my pathes: and this is my comfort in my trouble. Then waxe I bolde with the same Peter to say: Domine ad quem ibimus, verba vitae aeternae habes. i. Lord to whom shall we go? Page 1502 thou hast the wordes of euerlasting life. This comfort haue I when the geuer thereof doth geue it. But I looke for battels with the roote of vnfaythfulnes, the which I feele in me, will most egerly geue vnto my conscience, when wee come once to the combate. We be (I wene) within the soūd of the triumpe of our enemies. Play ye that be abroade the part of Moyses,Orantes in omni loco, sustollentes puras manus. i. Praying in all places, lifting vp pure hands, & Gods people shal preuayle: yea our bloud shalbe theyr perdition who do most triumphantly spill it, & we then being in the handes of our God, shall shine in his kingdome, and shal stād in great stedfastnes, agaynst thē which haue dealt extremely with vs: And whē these our enemies shall thus see vs, they shalbe vexed with horrible feare, and shall wonder at the hastines of the sodaine health, and shall say with themselues, hauing inward sorow and mourning for very anguish of minde: These are they whom we sometime had in derision and iested vpon: we fooles thought their liues to be verye madnes, and their end to be without honor, but loe how they are accounted among the childrē of God. The blessing of God be with you all. &c.

¶To his wife a litle before his burning.

GRace and comfort in Christ, Amen. Deare wife be mery in the mercies of our Christ,* & ye also my deare frendes. Pray, pray for vs euery body. We be shortly to be dispatched hēce vnto our good Christ. Amen, Amen. Wife I would you sent me my shyrt which you know wherunto it is cōsecrated. Let it be sowed down on both the sides and not open. Oh my heauenly father look vpon me in the face of thy Christ,* or els I shall not be able to abide thy countenance: such is my filthines. He will do so, and therefore I will not be afrayd what sinne, death, hell, and damnation cā do agaynst me. O Wyfe alwayes remember the Lord. God blesse you, yea he will blesse thee good wyfe & thy poore boy also: onely cleaue thou vnto him, and he will geue thee all thinges. Pray, pray, pray.

¶An other letter to M. Robert and Iohn Glouer, written the same morning that he was burnt.

GRace and consolatiō in our sweet Sauour Christ, Oh my deare brethren whom I loue in the Lord, being loued of you also in the Lord, be mery & reioyce for me, now ready to go vp to that mine inheritance, which I my selfe in deed am most vnworthy of, but my deare Christ is worthye, who hath purchased the same for me with so deare a price. Make haste my deare brethrē, to come vnto me, that we may be mery, eo gaudio quod nemo tollet a nobis. i. with that ioy which no man shall take from vs. Oh wretched sinner that I am, not thankfull vnto this my Father, who hath vouched me worthy to be a vessell vnto his honor. But O Lorde, nowe accept my thanks, though they proceed out of a not enough circumcised hart. Salute my good Sisters your wiues, & good sisters feare the Lord. Salute all other that loue vs in the trueth. Gods blessing be with you alwayes. Amen. Euen now towards the offering of a burnt sacrifice. O my Christ helpe, or els I perish.

¶After these godly letters of M. Saūders diuersly dispersed and sent abroad to diuers of the faythfull cōgregation of Christ, as is afore to be seene, now in the latter end we will adioyne two other letters writtē not by Mayster Saunders the martyr, but by M. Ed. Saunders the Iustice his brother, sent to this our Saunders in prison, although conteining no great matter worthy to be known, yet to this intent that the reader may see in these two brethren so ioyned in nature, and so deuided in religiō, y^e word of the Lord verified, truely saying: brother shalbe agaynst brother.* &c. as by the contentes of these two letters folowing may appeare.

¶A letter of Iustice Saunders, to his brother Laurence.

After my most harty commendations, these bene to a certaine you that I haue spoken with M. Basset, who hath shewed me that 4. pound (all deductions being allowed) is the whole that hath come to his handes of the profite of the Prebēdary at York, the which you shall haue although as he thinketh, it was not due vnto you by the reason of your depriuation: before it was due. As concerning your conscience in Religion, I beseech God it maye be lightened by the holy Ghost, and that you may also haue the grace of the holy Ghost to follow the counsell of Sainct Paule to Timothe. 2. Recte tractare verbum veritatis. That is. To handle rightly the word of truth. Wherein you ar dissenting from many holy and Catholicke men, especieally in the Sacramēt, maketh me in my conscience to condemne yours. For althoughe I haue not hitherto fancied to read Peter Martir & other such. &c. yet haue I had great desire to see Theophilact and diuers others of his sort and opinion both notable and holy Fathers (if any credit be geuen to the writinges of our auncient fathers before vs) and surely the sentences and iudgementes of two or three of them hath more confirmed my conscience then 300. of the Zuinglians or as many of the Lutherians can or should doe. Thus in haste willing to reliefe you to the end you might conuert, if you shall need towards your finding, if you shall require it of me, you shall vnfaynedly finde my mony ready, as knoweth our Lord, who send vs al thinges good for vs. Scribled this Thursday by your brother and petitioner to God.

¶An other letter of Iustice Saunders to his brother wherein he seeketh to winne him to Popery.

AS nature and Brotherly loue with godly charity requireth,* I send you by these letters (quantum licet) most hartly cōmendation, being sory for your fault and your disobedient handlyng of your selfe towards my Lord Chauncellour, who I assure you, mindeth your good and preseruacion, if you can so consider and take it. I would be glad to know whether you haue not had with you of late some learned men to talk with you by my Lord Chaūcellours appoyntment, and howe you can frame your selfe to reforme your errour in the opinion of the moste blessed and our most comfortable Sacrament of the aultar. Wherein I assure you I was neuer in all my life more better affected then I am at thys present, vsing to my great comforte hearing of Masse,* and somewhat before the sacring time, the meditation of S. Barnard, sette forth in the third leafe of this present booke. The accustomed vsing whereof I am fullye professed vnto during my life, and to geue more fayth vnto that confessiō of holy Barnarde, thē to Luther &c. or Latimer. &c. for that the antiquity, the vniuersality of the open church, and the consent of all holy Saynts and Doctors do confirme the same, acertayning you that I haue bene earnestly moued in mine owne cōscience these ten or twelue daies past, and also betweene God and my selfe, to mooue you to the same, most earnestly desiring you, and as you tender my naturall, godly, or frendly loue towards you, that you would read ouer thys booke this holy time, at my request, although you haue alreadye seene it, and let me know wherein you cannot satisfy your owne conscience. Thus fare you well for this time.

By yours, from Seriantes Inne. Ed. Saunders.

¶The Life and Martyrdome of Mayster IOHN HOOPER Byshop of Worcester and Glocester, burnt for the defence of the Gospell at Glocester. Anno. 1555. February. 9.

IOHN HOOPER Student and graduate in the vniuersity of Oxford, after the study of other sciēces,* wherin he had abundantly profited and proceeded, through Gods secret vocation was styrred with feruēt desire to the loue & knowledge of the Scriptures. In the reading & seaching whereof, as there lacked in him no diligence, ioyned with earnest prayer: so neyther wanted vnto him the grace of the holy Ghost to satisfy his desire, and to opē vnto him the light of true Diuinity.

Thus Mayster Hooper growing more and more by Gods grace, in ripenes of spirituall vnderstanding, and shewing withall some sparckles of his feruent spirite being then about the beginning of the 6. Articles, in the time of king Henry the 8. fell eftsoones into displeasure & hatred of certaine Rabbines in Oxford, who by and by began to styr coales agaynst him, wherby, and especially by the procurement of Doctour Smith, he was compelled to voyde the Uniuersity, and so remouing from thence, was retayned in the house of Syr Thomas Arundell, and there was his Steward, till the time that Syr Thomas Arundell hauing intelligence of his opinions & religion, which he in no case did fauor, and yet exceedingly fauourynge the person & conditions of the man,* found the meanes to send him in a message to the Bishop of Winchester, writing his letter priuily to the bishop, by conference of learning to do some good vpon him, but in any case requiring him to send home his seruauent to him agayne.

Winchester after long conference with M. Hooper 4. or 5. dayes together, when he at length perceiued that neither he could do that good, which he thought, to him, nor that he would take any good at his hand, according to M. Arundels Page 1503 request, he sent home his seruauent agayne, right well commending his learning and wit, but yet bearing in his brest a grudging stomacke agaynst Mayster Hooper still.

It followed not long after this (as malice is alwayes working mischief) that intelligence was geuen to master Hooper to prouide for himselfe,* for daunger that was wor'king agaynst him. Whereupon M. Hooper leauing M. Arundels house, and borrowing an horse of a certayne friend (whose life he had saued a little before from the gallows) tooke his iourney to the Sea side, to goe to Fraunce, sending backe the horse agayne by one, which in deede did not deliuer him to the owner. M. Hooper being at Paris taried there not long, but in short time returned into England agayne, & was retayned of M. Sentlow, till the tyme that he was agayne molested and laid for: whereby he was cōpelled (vnder the pretence of being Captayne of a ship going to Ireland) to take the Seas, and so escaped he (although not without extreme perill of drowning) through Fraunce,* to the higher partes of Germany. Where he entring acquaintance with the learned men, was of thē frēdly and louingly entertained, both at Basil, and especially at Zuricke of Mayster Bullinger, being his singuler frend. Where also he maryed his wife, which was a Burgonian, and applied very studiously the Hebrue toung.

At length when God saw it good to stay the bloody time of the 6. Articles, and to geue vs king Edward to raygne ouer this Realme, with some peace and rest vnto the gospel, amongst many other English exiles, which thē repared homeward, M. Hooper also, moued in cōsciēce, thought not to absent himselfe, seing such a time and occasion offered to helpe forward the Lords worke,* to the vttermost of his ability. And so comming to M. Bullinger, and other of his acquayntance in Zuricke (as duty required) to geue them thanks for their singuler kindnes and humanity toward him manifolde wayes declared, with like humanity agayne purposed to take his leaue of thē at his departing, & so did. Unto whom M. Bullinger agayne (who had alwayes a speciall fauor to M. Hooper) spake on thys wyse: M. Hooper (sayde he) although we are sory to parte wyth your company for our own cause, yet much greater causes we haue to reioice, both for your sake, and especially for the cause of Christes true religion, that you shall now returne out of long banishment vnto your natiue country agayn, where not onely you may enioy your own priuate liberty but also the cause and state of Christes Church by you may fare the better as we doubt not but it shall.

An other cause moreouer why we reioyce with you & for you, is this, that you shal remoue not only out of exile, into liberty: * but you shall leaue here a baren, a sower, & an vnpleasant country, rude & sauage, and shal go into a land flowing with milke and hony, replenished w^t al pleasure & fertility. Notwithstanding w^t this our reioycing, one feare and care we haue, least you being absent, and so far distant from vs, or els comming to such aboundance of wealth & felicity, in your new welfare, and plenty of al thinges, and in your flourishing honors, where ye shall come peraduenture to be a Bishop, and where ye shall finde so many new frends, you wil forget vs your old acquaintance & welwil'lers. Neuertheles howsoeuer you shall forget & shake vs of, yet this perswade your selfe, y^t we will not forgette our old frend & fellow M. Hooper. And if you shal please not to forget vs agayne, then I pray you let vs heare from you.

Whereunto M. Hooper aunswering agayne, first gaue to M. Bullinger and the rest right harty thanks, for that their singuler good will, and vnderesued affection, appearing not onely now, but at all times towards him: declaring moreouer that as the principal cause of his remouing to his countrey was the matter of Religion: so touching the vnpleasantnes and barrennes of that couⁿtry of theirs, there was no cause therein, why he could not finde in his hart to continue his life there, as soone as in any place in the world, and rather then in his owne natiue country, if there were nothing els in his cōscience that moued hym so to do. And as touching the forgetting of his olde frendes, although (sayd he) the remembraunce of a mans countrey naturally doth delight him, neither could he deny, but god had blessed his country of England with many great commodities: yet neither the nature of country nor pleasure of commodities, nor newnesse of frendes should ouer induce him to the obliuion of such frendes and benefactors, whō he was so intirely bound vnto: & therefore you shall be sure (sayde he) from time to time to heare from me, and I wyll write vnto you as it goeth with me. But the last newes of al I shal not be able to write: for there (sayd he) taking M. Bullinger by the hand) where I shall take most paynes, there shall you heare of me to be burned to ashes: * and that shalbe the last newes which I shal not be able to write vn'to you, but you shall heare it of me. &c.

To this also may be added an other like propheticall demonstration, forshewing before the maner of his Martyrdome wherewith he should glorify God, which was this. When M. Hooper being made Bishop of Worcester and Glocester should haue his armes giuē him by the Herold, * as the maner is here in Englād, euery Bishop to haue his armes assigned vnto him (whether by the appoyntment of M. Hoper, or by y^e Herold I haue not certainly to say) but the armes which were to him allotted was this: a Lambe in a fiery bush, and the sunne beames from heauen descending downe vpon the Lambe, rightly deuoting (as it seemed) the order of his suffering, which afterward folowed.

But now to the purpose of our story againe: * Thus whē M. Hooper had taken his farewell of M. Bullinger and his frends in Zurick, he made his repayre agayn into Enland in the raigne of K. Edward 6. where he comming to London vsed continually to preach, most tymes twyse, at least once euery day, and neuer fayled.

In his Sermons, according to his accustomed maner, he corrected sinne,* and sharply inueyed agaynst the iniquity of the world, and corrupt abuses of the Church. The people in great flocks and companies, daily came to heare his voyce, as the most melodious sounde and tune of Orpheus harpe, as the Prouerbe sayth: Insomuch that often times, when he was preaching, the Church shoulde be so ful, that none could enter further then the doores therof. In his doctrine he was earnest, in tong eloquent, in the scriptures perfect, in paynes indefatigable.

Moreouer, besides other his giftes and qualities, this is in him to be maruelled, that euen as he began so he cōtinued still vnto his liues end.* For neither could his labour and payne taking breake him, neither promotion chaunge him, neither daynty fare corrupt him. His life was so pure and good, that no kinde of sclāuder (although diuers went about to reprove it) could fastē any fault vpō him. He was of body strong, his health whole & soūd, his wit very pregnant, his inuincible pacience able to sustein whatsoever sinister fortune and aduersity could doe. He was constant of iudgement, a good lusticer, spare of dyet, sparer of words, & sparest of time. In housekeping very liberall, and sometime more free then his liuing would extend vnto. Briefly, of all those vertues and qualities required of S. Paul in a good B. in his epistle to Timothe, I know not one in this good B. lacking. He bare in countenaūce & talke alwayes a certayn seuer & graue grace, which might peraduenture be wished sometimes to haue bene a little more populare and vulgarlike in him: but he knewe what he had to doe best himselfe.

This by the way I thought to note, for that there was once an honest Citizen, & to me not vnknowne, which hauing in himselfe a certaine cōflict of conscience, came to his doore for couंसell: but being abashed at his austere behauior durst not come in, but departed, seeking remedy of his troubled minde at other mens hands, which he afterward by y^e help of almighty God did finde & obtayn. Therefore in my iudgement, such as are appointed & made gouernours ouer y^e flock of Christ, to teach and instruct them, ought so to frame their life, maners,* countenance and externall behauour, as neither they shew themselues to familiar & light whereby to be brought in contempt, nor in the other side a'gayn, that they appeare more lofty and rigorous, then appertayneth to the edifyng of the simple flocke of Christ. Neuertheles, as euery mā hath his peculiar gift wrought in him by nature, so this disposition of fatherly grauitie in this man neither was excessiue, neither did hee beare that personage which was in him without great consideratiō. For it seemed to him peraduenture, that this licentious and vnbrideled life of the common sorte, ought to be chastened, not onely with wordes and discipline, but also with the graue and seuer countenance of good men.

After he had thus practised himself in this popular and common kinde of preaching: at length, and that not wythout the great profite of many, he was called to preache before the kinges maiestie, and soone after, made Bishop of Gloucester by the kinges commaundement.* In that office he continued two yeares, and behaued himself so wel, that his very enemies (except it were for his good doings, and sharpe correcting of sinne) could finde no fault with hym: and after that he was made Bishop of Worcester.

But I cannot tell what sinister & unlucky contention concerning the ordering and consecration of Bishops, and of their apparell, with suche other like trifles, began to disturbe y^e good & lucky beginning of this godly byshop. For notwithstanding that godly reformation of religion then begon in the church of England, besides other ceremonies more ambitious then profitable or tending to edification, they vsed to weare suche garmentes and apparrell as the popish Bishops were wont to doe: first a Chymere,* & vnder Page 1504 that a white Rochet: then a Mathematicall cap wyth iiij. angles, deuiding the whole world into foure partes. These trifles tending more to superstition thē otherwyse, as he could neuer abide,* so in no wise could he be perswaded to weare them. For this cause he made supplication to the kings maiestie, most humbly desiring his highnes, eyther to discharge him of the bishopricke, or els to dispense with him for such ceremoniall orders. Whose petition the kyng graunted immediately, writyng his letter to the Archb. after this tenour.

¶The Kings letters or grant, for the dispensation of Iohn Hooper elected B. of Gloucester, written to the Archbishop of Caunterbury and other Bishops.

*Right reuerend father, and right trusty and welbeloued, wee greete you well. Whereas we by the aduise of our Counsaile, haue called and chosen our right welbeloued and well worthy, M Iohn Hooper, professor of Diuinitie, to be our B. of Glocester, as well for his great knowledge, deepe iudgement and long study, both in the scriptures and other prophane learnyng, as also for his good discretion, ready vtteraunce and honest life for that kynd of vocation: to the intent all our louing subiects which are in his sayd charge and elsewhere, might by his sound and true doctrine, learne the better their duety towards God, theyr obedience towards vs, and loue towards their neighbors: from consecrating of whom, we vnderstand you do stay, because he would haue you omit and let passe certayne rites and ceremonies offensiue to his conscience, wherby ye thynke you should fall in Premunire of lawes: we haue thought good by the aduise aforesaid, to dispense and discharge you of all maner of dangers, penalties and forfeitures, you should run and be in any maner of way, by omitting any of the same. And these our letters shall be your sufficient warrant and discharge therfore.

Besides this letter of the kyng, also the Earle of Warwicke (which was afterward D. of Northumberland) adioined his letter to the foresayd Archb. of Cant. to this purpose and effect, that M. Hooper might not be burdened with the oth vsed then commonly in the consecratiō of bishops, which was against his conscience, as by the purport of the letter here is to be seene, as followeth.

*After my most hartly commendatiōs to your grace, these may be to desire the same, that in such reasonable things, wherein this bearer my L. elect of Glocester, craueth to be borne withall at your hands, you would with safe to shew him your graces fauour the rather at this my instaunce: which thyng partly, I haue taken in hand by the kyngs Maiesties owne motion. The matter is wayed by his highnes, none other but that your grace may facily condescend vnto. The principal cause is, that you would not charge this said bearer with an oth burdenous to his conscience. And so for lacke of tyme I commit your grace to the tuition of almighty God.

From Westm. the 23. of Iuly, 1550.

Your graces most assured louing friend. I. Warwike.

¶ Both this graunt of the King, and also the Earles letters aforesayd notwithstanding, the bishops still stode earnestly in the defence of the foresayd ceremonies, sayeng it was but a small matter, and that the fault was in the abuse of the thyngs, and not in the thyngs themselues: adding moreouer, that he ought not to be so stubburne in so light a matter,* and that his wilfulnesse therein was not to be suffered.

To be short, whilst both parties thus contended about this matter more then reason would, in the meane tyme occasion was geuen, as to the true Christians to lament, so to the aduersary to reioyce. In conclusion, this Theologicall contentiō came to this end, that the bishops hauyng the vpper hand, M. Hooper was faine to agree to this condition, that sometymes he should in hys Sermon shewe himselfe appparelled as the other Bishoppes were. Wherefore, appoynted to preach before the king as a new player in a strange apparel, he commeth forth on the stage. His vpper garment was a long scarlet Chymere downe to the foote, and vnder that a white linnen Rochet that couered all his shoulders. Upon his head he had a Geometriall, that is, a foure squared cap, albeit that his head was round. What cause of shame the straungenes hereof was that day to that good preacher, euery mā may easily iudge. But this priuate contumely and reproch in respect of the publike profite of the Church, which he onely sought, hee bare and suffered paciently. And I would to God in lyke maner, they which tooke vpon them the other part of that tragedy, had yelded their priuate cause whatsoever it was to the publike concord and edifieng of the Church: for no man in all the Citie, was one haire the better for that hote contention.

I will name no body, partly for that hys oppugners beyng afterwards ioyned in the most sure frendship with him, in one & for one cause, suffred martyrdome, and partly for that I commonly vse accordyng to my accustomed maner,* to keep my pen from presumptuous iudging of any person: yet I thought to note the thyng for this consideration, to admonish the reader hereby, how wholesome & necessary the crosse of Christ is sometye in the church of Christ, as by the sequele hereof did afterward appeare. For as in a ciuill gouernance & common wealth, nothyng is more occasion of warre, then ouermuch peace: so in the church, and among churchmen, as nothyng is more pernitiuous then too much quietnes, so nothyng more ceaseth priuate contentions oftentimes rising amongst thē, then the publike crosse of persecution.

Furthermore, so I perswaded my selfe, the same not to be vnexpedient, to haue extant such examples of holy and blessed men. For if it do not a little appertaine to our publike consolation and comfort, when we read in the scriptures of the foule dissension betweene Paule and Barnabie: of the fall of Peter, and of Dauids murder and adultery: why may or should it not be as well profitable for our posteritie, to heare and know the fals of these godly Martyrs,* whereby we may the lesse despayre in our infirmitie, consideryng the same or greater infirmities to raigh in the holy Saints of God, both Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs.

And this by the way, thou hast heard (good Reader) hitherto the weakenes of these good men, plainly and simply, as the truth was, declared vnto thee,* to the ende theyr fall may minister occasion to vs, eyther of eschewyng the lyke, or els to take hart and comfort in the lyke fall & frailenes of ours. Now agayne on the other part it remayneth to record after the foresayd discord, the godly reconciliations of these good men in tyme of persecution, who afterward beyng in pryson for the truths sake, reconciled them selues agayne with most godly agreement, as appeareth by this letter sent by Bishop Ridley, to the sayd Bishop of Glocester. The copy whereof as it was written wyth hys owne hand in Latine, hereafter followeth translated into English.

¶To my deare brother and reuerend fellow Elder in Christ, Iohn Hooper, grace and peace.

MY dearly beloued brother and fellow Elder,* whom I reuerence in the Lord, pardon me, I beseech you, that hitherto since your captiuity and myne, I haue not saluted you by my letters: where as (I doe in deed confesse) I haue receiued from you (such was your gentlenes) two letters at sundry times: but yet at such tyme as I could not be suffered to write vnto you agayne: or if I might, yet was I in doubt how my letters myght safely come vnto your hands. But now my deare brother, for as much as I vnderstand by your workes, which I haue but superficially seene, that we throughly agree and wholly consent together in those things which are the grounds and substantial points of our Religion, agaynst the which the world so furiously rageth in these our dayes, howsoeuer in tyme past in certaine by matters and circumstances of Religion, your wisdom and my simplicitie (I graunt) hath a little iarred, ech of vs followyng the abundance of hys owne sense and iudgement: now (I say) be you assured,* that euen with my whole heart (God is my witnes) in the bowels of Christ, I loue you in the truth, and for the truthe sake, which abideth in vs, and (as I am perswaded) shall by the grace of God, abide in vs for euermore.

And because the world (as I perceiue brother) ceaseth not to play his pageant, and busily conspireth agaynst Christ our Sauour, with all possible force and power, Exalting high thyngs agaynst the knowledge of God: let vs ioyne handes together in Christ, and if we cannot ouerthrow, yet to our power, and as much as in vs lyeth, let vs shake those high altitudes, not with carnall, but with spirituall weapons: and with all brother, let vs prepare our selues to the day of our dissolution, by the which, after the short tyme of this bodily affliction, by the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, we shall triumph together wyth hym in eternall glory.

I pray you brother salute in my name your reuerend fellowe prisoner and venerable father, D.C. by whome since the first day Page 1505 that I heard of hys most godly and fatherly constancie, in confessing the truth of the gospell, I haue conceyued great consolation and ioy in the Lord. For the integritie and vprightnes of that man, his grauitie & innocency all England I thinke hath known lōg ago. Blessed be God therfore, which in such abundāce of iniquitie and decay of all godlines, hath geuen vnto vs in this reuerend old age, such a witnesse for the truth of hys Gospell. Miserable and hard harted is he, whom the godlynes and constant confession of so worthy, so graue, and innocent a man, wyll not mooue to acknowledge and confesse the truth of God.

I do not now brother require you to write any thing to me agayne: for I stand much in feare lest your letters should be intercepted before they can come to my hands. Neuertheles know you, that it shall be to me great ioy to heare of your constancy & fortitude in the Lordes quarell. And albeit I haue not hitherto written vnto you, yet haue I twice (as I could) sent vnto you my mynde touchyng the matter which in your letters you required to know. Neyther can I yet brother, be otherwise perswaded: I see me thinks so many peryls, whereby I am earnestly moued to counsell you not to hasten the publishing of your works, especially vnder the title of your owne name. For I feare greatly left by this occasion both your mouth should be stopped hereafter, and al thyngs takē away frō the rest of the prisoners, wherby otherwise, if it so please God they may bee able to do good to many. Farewell in the Lord my most deare brother, and if there be any mo in prison with you for Christes cause, I beseech you, as you may, salute them in my name. To whose prayers I doe most humbly and hartily commend my selfe and my fellow prisoners and concaptiues in the Lorde, and yet once agayne, and for euer in Christ, my most deare brother, farewell.

N. Ridley.

*M. Hooper after all these tumults and vexations susteined about his inuesting and priestly vestures, at length entring into his Dioces, did there employ his tyme which the Lord lent hym vnder King Edwardes raigne, wyth such diligence, as may be a spectacle to all bishops, which shall euer hereafter succeed him, not only in that place, but in whatsoeuer Dioces through the whole realme of England, so carefull was he in his Cure, that he left neyther paynes vntaken, nor wayes vnsought, how to trayne vp the flocke of Christ in the true word of saluation, continually labouring in the same. Other men commonly are woont for lucre or promotions sake, to aspire to Bishoprickes, some huntynge for them, and some purchasing or buying them, as men vse to purchase Lordships, & when they haue them, are loth to leaue them, and thereupon also loth to commit that thing by worldly lawes, whereby to loose them.

*To this sort of men M. Hooper was cleane contrary, who abhorred nothing more then gain, labouring alwaies to saue and preserue the soules of his flocke. Who beeyng B. of two Diocesses, so ruled and guided eyther of them, and both together, as though he had in charge but one familie. No father in his household, no gardiner in his garden, nor husbandman in his vineyard, was more or better occupied, then he in his Dioces amongst his flocke, goyng about his townes and villages in teaching and preaching to the people there.

That tyme that he had to spare from preaching, he bestowed either in hearing publike causes, or els in priuate study, prayer, and visiting of schooles, with hys continuall doctrine, he adioyned due & discrete correction, not so much seuer to any, as to them which for abundance of riches, & welthy state,* thought they might do what they listed. And doubtlesse he spared no kind of people, but was indifferent to all men, as well rich as poore, to the great shame of no small number of men now adayes. Whereof many we do see so addicted to the pleasing of great and rich men, that in the meane tyme they haue no regard to the meaner sort of poore people, whome Christ hath bought as dearely as the other.

But now agayne we will returne our talke to maister Hooper, all whose lyfe in fine was such, that to the church and all churchmen, it might be a light and example, to the rest a perpetuall lesson and sermon. Finally, how vertuous and good a bishop he was, ye may conceiue and know euidently by this: that euen as he was hated of none but of them which were euill, so yet the worst of them all could not reprooue his lyfe in any one iote.

I haue now declared hi^e vsage and behaiour abroad in the publike affaires of the Church: and certainly there appeared in him at home no lesse example of a worthy prelates life. For although he bestowed & conuerted the most part of his care vpon the publike flocke and congregation of Christ, for the which also he spent his bloud: yet neuertheles there lacked no prouisiō in him, and to bring vp his owne children in learning and good maners: euen so much that ye could not discern whether he deserued more praise for his fatherly vsage at home, or for his bishoply doyns abroad. For euery where he kept one religion in one vniforme doctrine and integritie. So that if you entered into the Bishops pallace, you would suppose to haue entred in to some Church or temple. In euery corner thereof, there was some smel of vertue, good example, honest conuersation, and reading of holy scriptures. There was not to be seene in hys house any courtly roystyng or idlenesse: no pompe at all, no dishonest word, no swearing could there be heard.

As for the reuenues of both his bishoprikes,* although they did not greatly excede, as the matter was handled, yet if any thing surmounted therof, he pursed nothing, but bestowed it in hospitalitie. Twise I was (as I remember) in his house in Worcester, where in hys common hall I saw a table spread with good store of meate, and beset ful of beggers and poore folke: and I asking hys seruantes what this ment, they told me that euery day their Lorde & maisters maner was, to haue customably to dinner a certayne number of poore folke of the sayd citie by course, who were serued by foure at a messe, with whote & wholesome meats: and when they were serued (being afore examined by him or his deputies of the Lordes praier, the articles of their fayth, and x. commaundements) then he himselfe sate downe to dinner, and not before.

After this sort and maner M. Hooper executed y^e office of a most carefull and vigilant pastor, by the space of two yeres and more, so long as the state of religion in K. Edwards tyme did safely flourish and take place:* and would God that all other bishops would vse the like diligence, care, and obseruance in their function. After this, K. Edward beyng dead, and Mary beyng crowned Queene of England, religion beyng subuerted & chaunged, this good B. was one of the first that was sent for by a pursiuant to be at London, and that for two causes.

First, to answer to D. Heath then appointed Bish. of that Dioces,* who was before in K. Edwards days depriued thereof for papistry.

Secondarily, to render account to D. Boner Bishop of London, for that he in King Edwardes tyme was one of his accusers, in that he shewed hymselfe not conformable to such ordinaunces as were prescribed to hym by the king and his Counsayle, openly at Paules Crosse. And although the said M. Hooper was not ignoraunt of the euils that should happen towards him (for he was admonished by certaine of his frends to get him away and shift for hymselfe) yet hee would not preuent them, but taryed still, sayeng: Once I did flee and tooke me to my feete, but now, because I am called to this place and vocation, I am throughly perswaded to tary, and to liue and dye with my sheepe.

And when at the day of his appearaunce (which was the first of September) he was come to London, before he could come to the foresayd D. Heath and Boner, hee was intercepted & commaunded violently agaynst hys wyll to appeare before the Queene and her Counsaile,* to answer to certaine bonds and obligations, wherein they sayd hee was bound vnto her. And when he came before thē, Winchester by and by receyued hym very opprobriously,* and rayling and ratyng of hym, accused him of Religion. Hee agayne freely and boldly told his tale, and purged hymselfe. But in fine it came to this conclusion, that by them he was commaunded to Ward (it beyng declared vnto hym by his departure,* that the cause of his imprisonment was only for certaine summes of money, for the which he was indebted to the Queene, and not for religion.) This how false and vntrue it was, shall hereafter in his place more plainly appeare.

The next yeare, beyng 1554. the 19. of Marche,* he was called agayne to appeare before Winchester and other the Queenes Commissioners: where, what for the Bishop, and what for the vnruely multitude, when he could not be permitted to plead his cause, he was depriued of hys Bishoprikes. Which how, & in what order it was done,* here now followeth to be seene by the testimonie and report of one, which being present at the doing, committed the same to writyng.

¶A letter or report of a certaine godly man, declaring the order of M. Hoopers depriuation from hys Bishoprike. An. 1554. March. 19.

FOr so much as a rumor is spread abroad of the talk had at my L. Chuancellours,* betweene hym with other Commissioners there appoynted, and M. Hooper cleane contrary to the veritie and truth thereof in deede, and therefore to bee iudged rather to be risen of malice, for the discrediting of the truth by false suggestions Page 1506 and euill reportes, then otherwise, I thought it my duetie, b•yng present thereat my selfe, in writyng to set forth the whole effect of the same: partly that the veritie therof may be knowen to the doubtfull people, and partly also to aduertise them, how vncharitably M. Hooper was handled at their hands: which with all humilitie vsed hymselfe towards them, desiryng that with patience he might haue bene permitted to speake, assuryng all men, that where I stood in a mammeryng and doubt, which of these two religions to haue credited, eyther that set forth by the kings maiesty that dead is, or els that now mainteyned by the Queens maiesty,, theyr vnreuerend behaiour towards M. Hooper, doth mooue me the rather to credite hys doctrine, then that which they with railyng and cruell words defended, considering that Christ was so handled before. And that this which I haue written here, was the effect of theyr talke, as I acknowledge it to bee true my selfe: so I appeale to all the hearers consciences, that there were present, (so they put affection away) for the witnesse to the same.

¶The Bishops of Wint. of London, of Duresme, of Landaffe, of Chichester, sate as Commissioners.

Lord Chauncellour.

AT M. Hoopers commyng in, the L. Chauncellour asked whether he was married.

Hooper.

*Yea, my L. and will not be vnmarried, tyll death vnmary me.

Duresme.

That is matter enough to depriue you.

Hooper.

That it is not my Lord, except ye do agaynst the Law.

The matter concerning mariage, was no more talked of then for a great space: but as well the Commissioners, as such as stood by, began to make such outcries, & laughed,* and vsed such gesture as was vnseemely for the place, and for such a matter. The Bishop of Chichester D. Day, called M. Hooper hypocrite, with vehement wordes, and scornefull countenance. Bekonsall called him beast: so did Smyth one of the clerkes of the Counsayle, and diuers other that stooode by. At length the Bishop of Winchester said, that all men might liue chaste that would, and brought in this text: Castrauerunt se propter regnum coelorum, That is, There he that haue gelded themselves for the kingdom of heauen, Math. 19.

M. Hooper sayd, that text prooued not that all men could lyue chaste, but such onely to whome it was geuen: and read that which goeth before in the text. But there was a clamour and cry,* mocking and scorning, with callyng hym beast, that the text could not be examined. Then M. Hooper sayd, that it did appeare by the olde Canons that marriage was not forbidden vnto Priestes, and named the Decrees. But the Bishop of Winchester sent for another part, namely, the Clementines, or the Extrauagants. But M. Hooper said, that booke was not it which he named.

Then cryed out the Bishop of Winchester, and sayd: You shall not haue any other, vntill ye be iudged by this. And then began such a noyse, tumult, and speakyng together of a great many that faouored not the cause,* that nothyng was done ne spoken orderly, nor charitably. Afterwardes Iudge Morgan began to rayle at M. Hooper a long time, with many opprobrious & fowle words of hys doying at Glocester, in punishing of men, & said, there was neuer such a tyrant as he was. After that D. Day Bishop of Chichester said, that the Councel of Ancyra, which was before the Councell of Nice, was against the marriage of Priestes.

Then cryed out my L. Chancellor, & many with him, that M. Hooper had neuer read the Councels.

*Yes my Lord (quoth M. Hooper) and my L. of Chichester Doctor Day knoweth, that the great Councell of Nice, by the meanes of one Paphnutius, decreed that no Minister should be separated from his wife. But such clamours and cries were vsed, that the Councel of Nice was not seene.

After this long brutish talke, Tonsall Bishop of Duresme, asked M. Hooper whether he beleued the corporal presence in the sacrament. And maister Hooper said plainly that there was none such, neither did he beleue any such thyng.

Then would the Bish. of Duresme haue read out of a booke, for his purpose belike (what booke it was, I cannot tell:) but there was such a noise and confuse talke on euery side, that he dyd not read it. Then asked Winchester of M. Hooper, what authoritie mooued him not to beleue the corporall presence? He said, the authoritie of gods worde, and alleged this text: Quem oportet coelum suscipere, vsque ad tempus restaurationis omnium. i. Whom heauē must hold, vntill the latter day.

Then the B. of Winchester would haue made that text to haue serued nothing for his purpose, & he said, he might be in heauen, and in the sacrament also.

M. Hooper would haue sayd more to haue opened the text, but all men that stood next about the Bishop, allowed so his saying with clamours and cries, that M. Hooper was not permitted to say any more agaynst the Byshop. Whereuppon they bade the Notaries write that hee was married, and sayd, that he would not goe from hys wyfe,* and that he beleued not the corporall presence in the Sacrament, wherfore he was worthy to be depriued from his bishoprike.

This is the truth of the matter (as far as I can truly remember) of the confuse and troublesome talke that was betweene them, and except it were hasty and vncharitable words, this is the whole matter of their talk, at that time. At{que} haec ille hactenus.

¶The true report of M. Hoopers entertainment in the Fleete, written with his owne hand, the seuenth of Ianuary. 1554.

The first of September, 1553.* I was committed vnto the Fleete, from Richmount, to haue the liberty of the prison: and within sixe dayes after, I payd for my liberty v. pounds sterling to the Warden for fees: who immediately vpon the payment therof, complayned vnto Steuen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester,* and so was I committed to close prison one quarter of a yeare, in the Tower chamber of the Fleete, vsed very extremely. Then by the meanes of a good Gentlewoman, I had liberty to come downe to dinner and supper, not suffered to speake wyth any of my friends: but as soone as dinner & supper was done, to repaire to my chamber agayne. Notwithstādyng whilst I came downe thus to dinner and supper, the Warden and his wyfe picked quarels with me, and complayned vntruly of me, to their great friend the bishop of Winchester.

After one quarter of a yeare and somewhat more.* Babington the Warden and his wife fell out with me for the wicked Masse: and thereupon the Warden resorted to the B. of Wint. & obteyned to put me into the wardes, where I haue continued a long tyme, hauing nothing appointed to me for my bed, but a little pad of straw, and a rotten couering with a tike and a few fethers therein, the chamber being vile and stinking, vntill by gods meanes good people sent me bedding to lye in. Of the one side of which prison is the sinke and filth of the house, and on the other side the towne ditch, so that the stinch of the house hath infected me with sundry diseases.

During which tyme I haue bene sicke: & the doores,* barres, haspes, and chaines being all closed, and made fast vpon me, I haue mourned, called and cried for helpe. But the Warden when he hath knowen me many tymes redy to dye, and when the poore men of the wardes haue called to helpe me, hath commanded the doores to be kept fast, and charged that none of his men should come at me, saying: let him alone, it were a good riddance of hym. And among many other tymes, he did thus the 18. of October, 1553. as many can witnes.

I payed alwayes like a Baron to the sayd Warden, as well in fees, as for my boord, which was xx. s. a weeke, besides my mans table, vntill I was wrongfully depriued of my bishoprike, and since that tyme I haue payed hym as the best gentleman doth in his house: yet hath he vsed me worse and more vilely, then the veriest slaue that euer came to the hall Commons.

The said Warden hath also imprisoned my man William Downton,* & stripped him out of his cloths to search for letters, & could find none but only a little remembrance of good peoples names, that gaue me their almes to relieue me in prison: and to vndoe them also, the Warden deliuered the same bill vnto the said St. Gardiner, Gods enemy and myne.

I haue suffered imprisonment almost eightene monethes, my goods, liuyng, friends,* and comfort taken from me, the Queene owing me by iust account 80. poundes or more. She hath put me in prison, and geueth nothyng to finde me, neither is there suffred any to come at me, wherby I might haue reliefe. I am with a wicked man and woman, so that I see no remedy (sauing gods helpe) but I shall be cast away in prison before I come to iudgement. But I commit my iust cause to God, whose will be done, whether it be by life or death. Thus much wrote he hymselfe of this matter.

¶Another examination of M. Hooper.

THE xxij. of Ianuary followyng, 1555. Babington the Warden of the Fleete was commaunded to bryng M. Hooper before the Bishop of Winchester,* with other Bishops and Commissioners at the sayd Winchesters house at S. Mary Oueries, where as in effect thus much was done.

The Bishop of Winchester in the name of hymselfe and the rest, moooued Maister Hooper earnestly to forsake the euill and corrupt doctrine (as he termed it) preached in the dayes of K. Edward the sixt,* and to returne to the vnitie of the Catholique Church, and to acknowledge the Popes holynesse to bee head of the same Churche, accordyng to the determination of the whole Parliament, promising, that as he hymselfe, with other his brethren had receyued the Popes blessing and the Queenes mercye: euen so mercy was ready to be shewed to him and others, if he would arise with them, and condescend to the Popes holynesse.

M. Hooper aunswered: that for as much as the Pope taught doctrine altogether contrarye to the doctrine of Christ,* he was not worthy to be accounted as a member of Christes Church, much lesse to be head thereof: wherefore he would in no wyse condescend to any such vsurped iurisdiction, neither esteemed he the Church, whereof they call hym head, to be the Catholicke Church of Christ: for the Church onely heareth the voyce of her spouse Christ, & flieth the straungers. Howbeit (saith he) if in any point to me vnknown, I haue offended the Queenes maiestie, I shall most humbly submit my selfe to her mercy, if mercye may be had with safetie of conscience, and without the displeasure of God.

Aunswer was made, that the Queene would shew no mercy to the Popes enemies.* Whereuppon Babington was commanded to bring him to the Fleete againe: who did so, and shifted him from his former chamber into another, nere vnto the Wardens owne chamber, where he remayned sixe days: and in the meane tyme, his former chāber was searched by D. Martin and others, for writyngs and bookes, which M. Hooper was thought to haue made but none was found.

¶Here followeth another examination of M. Hooper.

The 28. of Ianuary, Winchester and other the Commissioners, sate in iudgement at S. Mary Oueries, whereas M. Hooper appeared before them at after noone agayne, and there after much reasonyng and disputation to and fro, hee was commaunded aside, tyll M. Rogers (which was then come) had bene likewise examined. Examinations beyng ended, the two Shiriffes of London were commaunded about foure of the clocke, to cary them to the Counter in Southwarke, there to remayne vntill the morow at ix. a clocke, to see whether they would relent and come home agayne to their Catholicke Church. So M. Hooper went before with one of the Shiriffes, and M. Rogers came after with the other, and beyng out of the Church doore, M. Hooper looked backe and stayed a little tyll M. Rogers drewe neare, vnto whom he sayd: Come brother Rogers, must we two take this matter first in hand, and beginne to fry these fagots? Yea Sir (sayd M. Rogers) by Gods grace. Doubte not (sayde M. Hooper) but God wyll geue strength. So goyng forwardes, there was such a prease of people in the streetes, which reioyced at theyr constauncie, that they had much adoe to passe.

By the way the Shiriffe sayd to M. Hooper: I woonder that ye were so hastie and quicke with my L. Chancellour,* and dyd vse no more pacience? He aunswered: M. Shiriffe, I was nothyng at all impacient, althogh I was earnest in my maisters cause, and it standeth me so in hand for it goeth vpon life and death: not the life and death of this world only, but also of the world to come. Then were they committed to the Keeper of the Counter, and apointed to seuerall chambers, with commaundement that they should not be suffred to speake one with another, neyther yet any other permitted to come at them that night.

Upon the next day followyng, the 29. of Ianuary, at the houre appoynted they were brought agayne by the Shiriffes, before the sayd Bishop and Commissioners in the Churche,* where they were the day before. And after long and earnest talke, when they perceyued that M. Hooper would by no meanes condescend vnto them, they condemned hym to be disgraded, and read vnto hym his condemnation.* That done, M. Rogers was brought before them, and in lyke maner entreated, and so they deliuered both of them to the secular power the two shirifs of London, who were willed to cary them to the Clinke, a prison not far from the B. of Winchesters house, and there to remayne till night.

When it was darke, M. Hooper was led by one of the Shiriffes, with many bils and weapons, first through the B. of Winchesters house, and so ouer London bridge, thorough the Citie to Newgate. And by the way some of the Sergeaunts were wylled to goe before, and put out the Costerdmongers candles who vse to sit with lyght in the streetes: eyther fearyng (of lykelihooode) that the people would haue made some attempt to haue taken him away from them by force,* if they had seene hym goe to that prysonne: or els beyng burdened with an euill conscience, they thought darcknesse to be a most fitte season for such a businesse.

But notwithstanding this deuise, the people hauyng some foreknowledge of his comming,* many of them came foorth of their dores with lights and saluted hym, praying God for his constancie in the true doctrine which he had taught them, and desiring God to strengthen hym in the same to the ende. M. Hooper passed by, and required the people to make their earnest prayers to God for hym, and so went through Chepeside to the place appoynted, & was deliuered as close prisoner, to the Keeper of Newgate, where he remained sixe dayes, no body beyng permitted to come to him, or to talke with him, sauynge his Keepers. and such as should be appoynted thereto.

During this tyme, Boner B. of London, and others at his appoyntment, as Fecknam, Chedsey,* and Harpsfield, &c. resorted diuers tymes vnto hym, to assay if by any meanes they could perswade him to relent and become a member of their Antichristian church. All the ways they could deuise, they attempted. For besides the disputations and allegations of testimonies of the Scriptures, and of auncient writers wrasted to a wrong sense, accordyng to their accustomed maner, they vsed also all outward gentlenes and significations of friendship, with many great profers and promises of worldly commodities, not omitting also most grieuous threatnyngs, if with gentlenesse they could not preuaile, but they found hym alwayes one man, stedfast and immoueable.

When they perceiued that they could by no means reclayme him to their purpose, with such perswasions and offers as they vsed for his conuersion,* then went they about by false rumours and reports of recantations (for it is well knowen, that they and their seruaunts dyd spread it first abroade) to bring hym and the doctrine of Christ which he professed, out of credite with the people. So the brute beyng a little spread abroad, and beleueed of some of the weaker sort, by reason of the often resort of the Byshop of London and other, it encreased more, & at the last came to M. Hoopers eares. Wherewith he was not a little greued, that the people should geue so light credite vnto false rumors, hauyng so simple a ground, as it may appeare by a letter which he wrote vpon that occasiō, the copy wherof followeth.

A letter of Maister Hooper for the stoppyng of certayne false rumours spread abroad of hys recantation.

THE grace of our Lord Iesus Christ bee wyth all them that vnfainedly looke for the comming of our Sauour Christ, Amen.*

Deare brethren and sisters in the Lord, and my fellowe prisoners for the cause of Gods gospell: I do much reioice and geue thanks vnto God for your constancie and perseuerance in affliction, vnto whom I wish continuaunce vnto the end. And as I do reioyce in your fayth and constancie in afflictions that be in prison: euē so do I mourne and lament to heare of our dere brethren that yet haue not felt such dangers for gods truth, as we haue, and do feelee, and be daily lyke to suffer more, yea, the very extreme and vile death of the fire: yet such is the report abroade (as I am credibly enformed) that I Iohn Hooper a condemned man for the cause of Christ, should now after sentence of death (beyng in Newgate prisoner, and looking daily for execution) recant and abiure that which heretofore I haue preached. And this talke ariseth of this, that the B. of London and his chaplains resort vnto me. Doubtlesse, if our brethren were as godly as I would wish thē, they would thinke, that in case I did refuse to talke with them,* they might haue iust occasion to say, that I were vnlearned, & durst not speake with learned men, or els proud and disdainfull to speake with them. Therefore to auoyd iust suspition of both, I haue and do daily speake with thē when they come, not doubting but that they report that I am Page 1508 neither proud, nor vnlearned. And I would wish all men to do as I doe in this poynt. For I feare not their arguments, neither is death terrible vnto me, praying you to make true report of the same, as occasion shall serue: and that I am more cōfirmed in the truth which I haue preached heretofore by their commyng.

Therefore, ye that may send to the weake brethren, pray them that they trouble me not with such reports of recantations as they do. For I haue hitherto left all thinges of the world, and suffred great paynes and imprisonment, & I thanke God I am as ready to suffer death, as a mortall man may be. It were better for them to pray for vs, then to credite or report such rumors that be vntrue. We haue enemies enough of such as know not God truely. But yet the fals report of weake brethren is a double crosse.* I wish you eternall saluation in Iesus Christ, and also require your continuall prayer, that he which hath begon in vs, may continue it to the end.

I haue taught the truth with my tong, and with my pen heretofore, & hereafter shortly will confirme the same by Gods grace with my bloud.

Forth of Newgate the 2. of February, an. 1554.

Your brother in Christ, Iohn Hooper.

Upon Monday mornynge the B. of London came to Newgate, and there disgraded M. Hooper, the sentence of which his degradation here followeth.

¶ Degradatio Hooperi.

IN nomine ✚ patris, ✚ & filij, ✚ & spiritus sancti. Amen. Quoniam per sententiam diffinitiuam à reuerendo in Christo patre & Domino Stephano permissione diuina,* Winton. After the sentence of degradation thus declared, nowe let vs see the forme and maner of their degradyng, which here also followeth. But first here is to be noted, that the disgrading of this blessed B. did not proceed agaynst hym as against a B. but as onely against a Priest, as they termed him: for such as he was, these Baalamites accompted for no Bishop.

Here followeth the forme and maner vsed in the disgrading of B. Hooper.

THE fourth day of February, the yere aboue mentioned, in the Chappell in Newgate, the Bishop of London there sitting with his Notarie and certaine other witnesses. came Alexander Andrew the Gaoler,* bringyng wyth hym M. Hooper and M. Rogers, beyng condemned before by the Chauncellor: where the sayd Bishop of London, at the request of the foresayd Winchester, proceeded to the degradation of the parties aboue mentioned, M. Hooper and M. Rogers, after this forme and maner. First, he put vpon them all the vestures and ornaments belonging to a Priest, with all other things to the same order appertainyng, as though (beyng reuested) they should solemnly execute in their office. Thus they beyng apparelled and inuested, the B. beginneth to plucke of, first the vttermost vesture, and so by degree and order commyng downe to the lowest vesture,* which they had onely in takyng Bennet and Collet: and so beyng stript and deposed, he depriued them of all order, benefite and priuiledge belonging to the Clergy: and consequently, that beyng done, pronounced, decreed, and declared the sayd parties so disgraded, to be geuen personally to the secular power, as the Shiriffes beyng for that yere, M. Dauy Woodrofe, and M. William Chester:* who receiuing first the sayde M. Rogers at the hands of the B. had him away with them, bringyng hym to the place of execution where he suffered. The witnesses there present. were M. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Londō, Rob. Cosin, and Rob. Willerton, canons of Paules, Th. Mountague, & George Howe clerkes, Tristram Swadocke, and Richard Clunney Sumner, &c.

The same Monday at night beyng the 4. of February, his keeper gaue hym an inkeling that he should be sent to Glocester to suffer death, whereat he reioyced very much, lifyng vp his eyes and hands into heauen, & praising god that he saw it good to send him amongst the people,* ouer whom he was pastor, there to confirme with his death the truth which he had before taught them: not doubting but the Lord would geue him strength to performe the same to his glory: and immediately he sent to his seruāts house for his bootes, spurs, and cloke, that he might be in a redines to ride when he should be called.

The next day following, about foure of the clocke in the morning before day, the Keeper with others came to him and searched him, & the bed wherin he lay, to see if he had written any thing, and then he was led by the shiriffs of London and other their officers forth of Newgate, to a place appoynted not farre from S. Dunstanes Church in Fleetestreete, where sixe of the Queenes Garde were appoynted to receiue hym & to cary hym to Gloucester, there to be deliuered vnto the shiriffe, who with the L. Shandois, M. Wickes,* and other Commissioners were apointed to see execution done. The which Gard brought hym to the Angel, where he brake his fast with them, eating his meat at that tyme more liberally then he had vsed to doe a good while before. About the breake of the day he went to horse, and lept cheerefully on horsebacke without help, hauyng a hood vpon his hed vnder his hat that he should not be known, and so tooke his iourney ioyfully towards Glocester, and alwayes by the way the Gard learned of hym where he was accustomed to bait or lodge, and euer caried hym to an other Inne.

Upon the Thursday following, he came to a towne in his Dioces, called Ciceter, xv. miles frō Gloucester,* about eleuen of the clocke, and there dynd at a womans house which had always hated the truth, and spoken all euil she could of M. Hooper. This woman perceiuing the cause of his commyng, shewed him all the frendship she could, and lamented his case with teares, confessing that shee before had oftē reported, that if he were put to the trial, he would not stand to his doctrine.

After dinner he rode forwardes,* & came to Gloucest•r about v. of the clocke, and a mile without the towne was much people assembled which cried & lamented his estate: in so much, that on of the Gard rode post into the town, to require ayde of the Mayor and shiriffes, fearyng least hee should haue bene taken from them.

The Officers and their retinue repayed to the Gate with weapons,* and commanded the people to keepe theyr houses, &c. but there was no man that once gaue any signification of any such rescue or violence. So was he lodged at one Ingrams house in Gloucester, and that nyght (as he had done all the way) he did eate hys meat quietly, and slept his first sleepe soundly, as it was reported by thē of the Gard and others. After his first sleepe he continued all that night in prayer vntil the morning, and then he desired that he might go into the next chamber (for the Gard wer also in the chamber where he lay) that there being solitary, he might pray and talke with God: so that all that day, sauing a litle at meat, and when he talked at any time with such as the Gard licenced to speake with hym, he bestowed in prayer.

Amongest other that spake with hym, Sir Anthony Kingston Knight, was one. Who seemyng in tymes past his very friend, was then appointed by the Queenes letters, to be one of the commissioners, to see execution done vppon hym. Maister Kingston beyng brought into the chamber, found him at his prayer,* and as soone as he sawe M. Hooper, he burst forth in teares. Maister Hooper at the first blush knew hym not. Then sayde maister Kingston, Why my Lord, doe ye not know me an olde friend of Page 1509 yours Anthony Kingston.

Yes M. Kingston, I do now know you well, and am glad to see you in health, and do prayse God for the same.

But I am sorry to see you in this case: for as I vnderstand you bee come hether to dye.* But (alas) consider that lyfe is sweete, and death is bitter. Therefore seeyng lyfe may bee had, desire to lyue: for lyfe hereafter may doe good.

In deed it is true M. Kingston, I am come hether to end this lyfe,* and to suffer death here, because I wyll not gainsay the former truth that I haue heretofore taught amongst you in this Diocesse, and els where, and I thank you for your friendly counsail, although it be not so frendly as I could haue wished it. True it is (M. Kingstone) that death is bitter, and lyfe is sweete: but (alas) consider that the death to come is more bitter, and the lyfe to come is more sweete.

Therefore for the desire and loue I haue to the one, and the terror and feare of the other,* I do not so much regard this death, nor esteeme this lyfe, but haue settled my selfe through the strength of gods holy spirit, paciently to passe through the torments and extremities of the fire, now pre|pared for me, rather then to denye the truth of his worde, desiring you and others in the meane tyme, to commende me to Gods mercy in your prayers.

Well (my Lorde) then I perceyue there is no remedye,* and therefore I wyll take my leaue of you: and I than•e God that euer I knew you, for God did appoynt you to call me beyng a lost child: and by your good instructions,* where before I was both an adulterer and a fornicator, God hath brought me to the forsaking and detesting of the same.

If you haue had the grace so to do, I do highly prayse God for it: and if you haue not, I pray God ye may haue, and that you may continually lyue in hys feare.* After these and many other woordes, the one tooke leaue of the other, M. Kyngston with bitter teares, M. Hooper with teares also tricklyng downe hys cheekes. At which departure M. Hooper tolde hym, that all the troubles he had sustained in prison, had not caused hym to vtter so much sorrow.

The same day in the after noone, a blind boy, after long intercessiō made to the Gard,* obtained licence to be broght vnto M. Hoopers speache. The same boy not long afore had suffered imprisonment at Gloucester for confessyng of the truth. M. Hooper after hee had examined hym of hys fayth,* and the cause of his imprisonment, beheld hym stedfastly, and (the water appearing in his eyes) sayde vnto hym: Ah poore boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward sight, for what consideration he best knoweth: but he hath geuen thee an other sight much more precious: for he hath endued thy soule with the eie of knowledge and fayth. God geue thee grace continually to pray vnto him, that thou loose not that sight: for then shouldest thou bee blynd both in body and soule.

After that another came to him, whom he knew to be a very papist and a wicked man, which appeared to be sory for M. Hoopers trouble, saying: Sir, I am sory to see you thus. To see me? Why (said he) art thou sory? To see you (sayth the other) in this case. For I heare say ye are come hither to dye, for the which I am sory. Be sory for thy selfe man (sayd M. Hooper) and lament thine owne wickednes: for I am well, I thanke God, and death to mee for Christes sake is welcome.

The same night he was committed by the Gard (their Commission beyng then expired) vnto the custodie of the Sheriffes of Gloucester. The name of the one was Ienkins,* the other Bond, who with the Mayor & Aldermen repaired to M. Hoopers lodgyng, and at the first meetyng saluted hym, and took hym by the hand. Unto whom Hooper spake on this maner. M. Mayor, I geue most heartie thanks to you, and to the rest of your brethren, that you haue vouchsafed to take mee a prysoner and a condemned man by the hand: wherby to my reioysing it is some deale apparant that your olde loue and friendshippe towards me, is not altogether extinguished: and I trust also, that all the thynges I haue taught you in tymes past,* are not vtterly forgotten, when I was here by the godly K. that dead is, appoynted to be your bishop and Pastor. For the which most true and sincere doctrine, because I wyll not now account it falsehood and heresie, as many other men doe, I am sent hither (as I am sure you knowe) by the Queenes commaundement, to dye, and am come where I taught it, to confirme it with my bloude. And now M. Shiriffes I vnderstand by these good men, and my verye friends, (meanynge the Gard) at whose handes I haue found so much fauour and gentlenesse by the way hitherward, as a prisoner could resonably require (for the which also I most hartily thanke them) that I am committed to your custodie, as vnto them that must see me brought to morrow to the place of execution.* My request therefore to you shall be onely, that there may be a quicke fire, sho•tl• to make an end, and in the meane tyme I will be as obedient vnto you, as your selues would wish. If you thinke I do amisse in any thyng, hold vp your finger, and I haue done. For I come not hether as one enforced or compelled to dye (for it is well knowen, I might haue had my lyfe w^t worldly gayne:) but as one willing to offer and geue my lyfe for the truth, rather then to consent to the wicked papisticall religion of the Bishop of Rome, receiued and set forth by the maiestates in England, to Gods high displeasure and dishonor: and I trust by Gods grace to morow to dye a faithfull seruaunt of God, and a true obedient subiect to the Queene.

These and such lyke wordes in effect vsed M. Hooper to the Mayor, Shiriffes, and Aldermen, whereat manye of them mourned and lamented. Notwithstanding, the two Shiriffs went aside to consult, and were determined to haue lodged him in the common gaole of the towne called Northgate,* if the Gard had not made earnest intercession for hym: who declared at large how quietly, mildlye, and patiently he had behaued himselfe in the way, addyng therto, that any child might keepe him well enough, & that they themselues would rather take paines to watch with him, then that he should be sent to the common prison. So it was determined at the length he should still remaine in Rob. Ingrams house,* and the shiriffes and the sergeants and other officers did appoynt to watch with him y^t nyght themselues. His desire was that he might goe to bed that night betimes, saying that he had many things to remember: and so did at fiue of the clocke, and slepte one sleepe soundly, and bestowed the rest of the night in prayer. After he gate vp in the morning, he desired that no man should be suffred to come into the chamber, that he might be solitarie till the houre of execution.

About 8. of the clocke came sir Iohn Bridges L. Shādoys, with a great band of men, sir Anthony Kingston,* sir Edmund Bridges, & other Commissioners appoynted to see execution done. At nine of the clocke M. Hooper was willed to prepare hymselfe to be in a readines, for the time was at hand. Immediately he was brought downe from his chamber by the shiriffes, who were accompanied with bils, glaues, and weapons. When he saw the multitude of weapons, he spake to the Shiriffes on this wyse: Maister Shiriffes (sayd he) I am no traytor, neyther needed you to haue made such a businesse to bryng me to the place where I must suffer: for if ye had wylled me, I woulde haue gone alone to y^e stake, & haue troubled none of you al. And afterward lookyng vppon the multitude of people which were assembled, beyng by estimation to the number of seuen thousand (for it was market day, and manye also come to see his behaiour towards death) hee spake vnto those that were about hym, saying: Alas, why bee these people assembled and come together? Peraduenture they thinke to heare some thyng of me now, as they haue in tymes past, but alas speach is prohibited me. Notwith'standing the cause of my death is well known vnto them. When I was appointed here to bee their Pastor, I preached vnto them true and sincere doctrine, and that out of the worde of God. Because I will not now accompt the same to be heresie and vntruth, this kinde of death is prepared for me.

So he went forward led betwene the two Shiriffes, (as it were a Lambe to the place of slaughter) in a gowne of his Hosts, his hat vpon his hed, & a stasse in his hand to stay himself withall. For the grieve of the Sciatica, which he had taken in prison, caused him something to halt.* All the way being straitly charged not to speake, he could not bee perceiued once to open his mouth, but beholding the people all the way which mourned bitterly for him, he would sometimes lift vp his eyes towards heauen,* & looke very cherefully vpon such as he knew: & he was neuer known during the tyme of his beyng amongst them to looke with so chearefull and ruddish a countenance as he did at that present. When he came to the place appoynted where hee should dye, smilingly he beheld the stake and preparation made for him,* which was neare vnto the great Elme tree ouer against the colledge of priestes, where he was woont to preach. The place round about the houses, & the bowes of the tree were replenished with people, and in the chamber ouer the colledge gate stood the priests of the colledge. Then kneeled he downe (for as much as he could not bee suffred to speake vnto the people) to prayer, and beckened vnto him sixe or seuen times whom he knew wel, to heare the said praier, to make report therof in time to come (pouryng Page 1510 teares vpon his shoulders & in his bosome) who gaue attentue eares vnto the same: the which prayer hee made vpon the whole Creede, wherein he continued for the space of halfe an houre. Now after he was somewhat entred into his prayer, a boxe was brought and laid before him vpon a stoole, with his pardon (or at the least wise it was fained to be his pardon) from the Queene, if he would turne. At the sight thereof he cried: If you loue my soule, away w^t it, if you loue my soule, away with it. The boxe being taken away,* the Lorde Shandoys saide: Seeing there is no remedie, dispatch quickly. Master Hooper sayde: Good my Lord, I trust your Lordship wil geue me leaue to make an ende of my prayers.

Then said the Lorde Shandoys to sir Edmund Bridges his sonne (which gaue eare before to maister Hoopers prayer at his request:) Edmond, take heede that he do nothing els but pray: if he doe, tel me, and I shall quickly dispatche hym. Whiles this talke was, there stepped one or two in vncalled, whych hearde hym speake these woordes folowing▪

Lorde (sayd he) I am hell, but thou art heauen: I am swill and a sinke of sinne, but thou art a gracious God and a mercifull redemer.* Haue mercy therefore vpon me most miserable and wretched offender, after thy great mercy, and accordinge to thine inestimable goodnesse. Thou that art ascended into heauen, receiue me hel to be partaker of thy ioyes, where thou sittest in equal glory wyth thy father. For well knowest thou Lorde wherefore I am come hither to suffer, and why the wicked doe persecute thys thy poore seruant: not for my sinnes and transgressions committed against thee, but because I will not allowe their wicked doings, to the contaminating of thy bloude, and to the deniall of the knowledge of thy truth, wherewith it did please thee by thy holy spirit to instruct me: the which with as much diligence as a pore wretch might (being thereto called) I haue set foorth to thy glorye. And well seest thou my Lord and God, what terrible paines and cruell torments be prepared for thy creature: such, Lord, as without thy strength none is able to beare, or paciently to passe. But al things that are impossible with man, are possible with thee. Therefore strengthen mee of thy goodnesse, that in the fire I breake not the rules of pacience, or els asswage the terroure of the paines, as shall seeme most to thy glory.

As soone as the Mayor had espied these menne whyche made report of the former wordes, they were commanded away, and could not be suffered to heare any more. Prayer being done,* he prepared himself to the stake, and put off his hostesse gowne, and deliuered it to the sheriffes, requiring them to see it restored vnto the owner, and put off the rest of his geare, vnto his doublet and his hose, wherein he would haue burned. But the Sheriffes woulde not permit that, (such was their greedinesse) vnto whose pleasures (good man) he very obediently submitted him selfe: and his doublet, hose, and peticote were taken off. Then being in hys shirt, he tooke a poynt from his hose him selfe, & trussed hys shirt betweene his legges, where he had a pound of gunne powder in a bladder, and vnder each arme the like quantitie deliuered him by the Garde. So desiring the people to say the Lordes prayer with him, and to pray for hym, (who performed it with teares, during the time of his paines) he went vp to the stake. Now when he was at the stake, three yrons made to binde him to the stake, were brought: one for his necke, an other for his middle, and the thirde for his legges. But he refusing them said: ye haue no neede thus to trouble your selues. For I doubt not but God will geue strength sufficient to abide the extremitie of the fire, w^tout bands: notwithstanding, suspecting the frailty and weakenesse of the flesh, but hauing assured confidence in Gods strength, I am content ye doe as ye shall thinke good.

So the hoope of yron prepared for hys middle,* was brought, whych being made somewhat too shorte (for hys belly was swolne by imprisonment) he shranke and put in his belly w^t his hand, vntil it was fastened: and when they offered to haue bound his necke & his legs wyth the other two hoopess of yron, he vtterly refused them, & would haue none, saying: I am wel assured I shall not trouble you.

Thus being ready, he looked vpon the people, of whom he might be wel sene (for he was both tal, and stode also on an high stoole) and behelde rounde about him:* and in euery corner there was nothing to be seene but weeping and sorowful people. Then lifting vp his eyes and handes vnto heauen, he praied to himselfe. By and by hee that was appointed to make the fire, came to him, and did aske him forgeuenesse. Of whom he asked why he should forgeue hym, saying:* that he knewe neuer any offence he had committed against him. Oh sir (said the mā) I am appoynted to make y^e•ire. Therein (said M. Hooper) thou doest nothing offend me: God forgeue thee thy sinnes & doe thine office, I pray thee. Then the Reedes were cast vp, and he receiued two bundels of them in hys owne handes, embraced them, kissed them, and put vnder either arme one of them, and shewed with his hand how the rest shoulde be bestowed, and poynted to the place where any did lacke.

Anone commandement was geuen that fire should be set too, and so it was.* But because there were put to no fewer greene fagots then two horses could carry vpon their backs, it kindled not by and by, and was a prety while also before it tooke the Reedes vppon the fagottes. At length it burned aboute him, but the winde hauing full strength in that place (it was also a lowring & a cold morning) it blew the flame from him, so that he was in a maner no more but touched by the fire.

[illustration]

The burning of M. Iohn Hooper, Bishop at Glocester. An. 1555. Februarie 9.

Page 1577 Within a space after, a few dry fagottes were brought, and a newe fire kindeled wyth fagottes, (for there were no more Reedes:) and that burned at the neather partes, but had small power aboue, because of the winde, sauinge that it did burne his haire,* and scorch his skinne a litle. In the time of which fire, euen as at the first flame, hee prayed, saying mildely and not verye loude (but as one wythoute paynes:) O Iesus the sonne of Dauid haue mercye vpon me, and receiue my soule. After the seconde was spent, he did wipe both his eyes with his hands, and beholding the people, he sayde with an indifferent loud voyce: For Gods loue (good people) let me haue more fire.* And all this while his nether partes did burne: for the fagottes were so fewe, that the flame did not burne strongly at his vpper partes.

The third fire was kindled within a while after, which was more extreeme then the other two: and then the bladders of gonnepouder brake, which did him small good, they were so placed, and the winde hadde suche power. In the whych fire he prayed with somewhat a loude voyce: Lorde Iesu haue mercye vppon me: * Lorde Iesu haue mercy vppon mee: Lorde Iesus receiue my spirite. And these were the last woordes hee was heard to vtter. But when he was blacke in the mouth, and his tongue swolne, that he coulde not speake, yet hys lippes went till they were shronke to the gummies: and he knocked his breast with his handes, vntill one of his armes fell off, and then knocked still with the other,* what time the fat, water, and bloud dropped out at his fingers ends, vntill by renuing of y^e fire▪ his strength was gone, and his hande did cleaue fast in knocking to the yron vpon hys brest. So immediately bowing forwardes, he yelded vp his spirite.

Humanae mentis potuit complectier vnquam,

Qualia, quanta Deus seruet sua bona beatis.

Thus was he three quarters of an houre or more in the fire. Euen as a Lambe, paciently he aboade the extremitie therof,* neither mouing forwardes, backwards, or to any side: but hauing his nether partes burned, and his bowels fallen out, he died as quietly as a childe in his bedde: and hee now raigneth as a blessed Martyr in the ioyes of heauen prepared for the faithfull in Christ, before the foundations of the worlde: for whose constancie all Christians are bound to praise God.

A letter which M. Hooper did wryte out of prison to certaine of his frendes.

THE grace of God be with you. Amen. I did write vnto you of late,* and told you what extremity the parliament had concluded vpon, concerning Religion, suppressing the truth, and setting foorth the vntruth, intending to cause all men by extremitie to forswear them selues, and to take againe for the head of the Church, him that is neither head nor member of it, but a very enemy, as the word of God & al ancient wryters do record: and for lacke of lawe and authoritie, they wil vse force and extremitie, which haue bene the arguments to defend the Pope and Poperie, sith thys wicked authority began first in the world. But now is the time of triall,* to see whether we feare more God or man. It was an easie thing to holde with Christ whiles the Prince and world held with him: but now the world hateth him, it is the true triall who be his.

Wherefore in the name and in the vertue, strength, and power of his holy spirit, prepare your selues in any case to aduersitie and constancie. Let vs not runne away when it is most time to fight. Remēber none shalbe crowned, but such as fight manfully: and he that endureth vnto the end, shalbe saued. Ye must now turne al your cogitations from the pearil you see, and marke the felicitye that foloweth the pearil: either victorie in this world of your enemies,* or else a surrender of this life to inherite the euerlasting kyngdom. Beware of beholding too much the felicitie or miserie of this worlde: for the consideration and too earnest loue or feare of either of them draweth from God.

Wherefore thinke with your selues as touching the felicitie of the worlde, it is good: but yet none otherwise then it standeth with the fauour of God. It is to be kept: but yet so farre foorth as by keeping of it we loose not God. It is good abiding and tarrying still among our friendes heere: but yet so, y^t we tary not therewithall in Gods displeasure, and hereafter to dwell with the deuils in fire euerlasting. There is nothing vnder God but may be kept, so y^t God being aboue all things we haue, be not lost.

Of aduersitie iudge the same. Imprisonment is painfull, but yet libertie vpon euell conditions is more painful.* The prisons stincke, but yet not so much as sweete houses, where as the feare and true honour of God lacketh. I must be alone and solitary. It is better so to be and haue God w^t me, then to be in company with the wicked. Losse of goods is great, but losse of Gods grace & fauour is greater. I am a poore simple creature, & can not tel how to answer before such a great sort of noble, learned, & wise men: It is better to make answere before the pompe & pride of wicked men, then to stand naked in the sight of all heauen and earth before the iust God at the latter daye.* I shall die then by the handes of the cruell man, he is blessed that looseth thys life full of miseries, and finedeth the life of eternall ioyes. It is paine and griefe to departe from goods and frends: but yet not so muche, as to departe from grace and heauen it selfe. Wherefore, there is neither felicitye nor aduersitye of this world, that can appeare to be great, if it be wayed with the ioyes or paines in the world to come.

I can do no more, but pray for you: do the same for me, for Gods sake. For my parte (I thanke the heauenly Father) I haue made mine accompts, and appoynted my selfe vnto the wil of the heauenly father: as he will, so I will by hys grace. For Gods sake as soone as ye can, send my poore wife and children some letter from you, and my letter also which I sent of late to D. As it was tolde me, shee neuer had letter from me sithens the cōming of M.S. vnto her: the more to blame the messengers, for I haue wrytten diuers times. The Lord comfort them, and prouide for them for I am able to doe nothing in worldly things. Shee is a godly and wise woman. If my meaning had bene accomplished, she should haue hadde necessary things: but that I meant, God can performe, to whom I commend both he• and you all.* I am a precious Iewell nowe and daintely kept, neuer so daintely: for neither mine owne man, nor any of the seruants of the house may come to me, but my keeper alone: a simple rude mā (God knoweth) but I am nothing carefull thereof.

Fare yee well

the 21. of Ian. 1555.

Yours bounden, Iohn Hooper.

Amongst many other memorable acts and notes worthy to be remembred in the hystorie of M. Hooper, thys also is not to be forgotten, which happened betwene hym, and a bragging Frier a little after the beginning of his imprisonment: the storie whereof heere followeth.

A Frier came from Fraunce to England wyth greate vaunt,* asking who was the greatest hereticke in all England, thinking belike to doe some great act vpon hym. To whom aunswere was made, that M. Hooper had then the greatest name to be the chieftest ringleader: who was then in the Fleete. The Frier comming to him, asked whye hee was committed to prison. He sayd for debt. Nay, sayde he, it was for heresie, Which when the other had denyed, what sayst thou (quoth he) to hoc est corpus meum? M. Hooper being partly mooued at the sodaine question, desired that hee mighte aske of him againe an other question, whyche was thys: What remained after the consecration in the Sacrament: any breade or no? No breade at all sayeth hee. And when yee breake it, what doe yee breake:* either bread or the body, sayde Maister Hooper? No bread sayd the Frier, but the body onely. If you doe so, sayd M. Hooper, ye do great iniurie, not onely to the body of Christe, but also yee breake the Scriptures, which saye: Yee shall not breake of hym one bone. &c. Wyth y^t the Frier hauing nothing be like to aunswere, recoyled backe, and with his circles and crosses began to vse exorcisme against M. Hooper, as though. &c.

Thys and more wrote master Hooper, to mistres Wilkinson in a letter, which letter was read vnto her by Iohn Kelke.

Comparison betwene M. Hooper and Polycarpus.

When I see and beholde y^e great patience of these blessed Martyrs in our daies, in their sufferings so quietly and cōstantly abiding the torments that are ministred vnto them of princes for Gods cause: * mee thinkes I maye wel and worthely compare them vnto the olde Martyrs of the primatiue Church. In the number of whome, if comparison be to be made betwixt Saint and Saint: Martyr and Martyr, with whom, might I match this blessed martyr M. Iohn Hooper better throughe the whole catalogue of the olde Martyrs, then with Polycarpus the aunciente Bishop of Smirna, * of whome Eusebius maketh mention in the Ecclesiasticall storie? For as both agreed together in one kinde of punishmēt, being both put to the fire, so which of them shewed more patience and constancie in the time of their suffering, it is hard to be sayde. And though Polycarpus being set in the flame (as the storie saith) was kepte by myracle from the torment of the fire, till hee was stricken downe with weapon, and so dispatched: yet Hooper by no lesse myracle armed with patience & feruent spirit of Gods comfort, so quietly despised the violence thereof, as though he had felt litle more then did Polycarpus in y^e fire flaming round about him.

Moreouer, as it is wrytten of Polycarpus when hee should haue bene tied to the stake, * he required to stand vntied, saying these woordes: Sinite me, qui namque ignem ferre posse dedit, dabit etiam vt sine vestra clauorum cautione immotus in rogo permaneam. That is, Let me alone, I pray you, for he that gaue me strength to come to this fire, will also geue mee patience to abide in the same, without your tying. So likewise Hooper, with the like spirite, when hee shoulde haue bene tied with thre chaines to the stake, requiring them to haue no such mistrust of him, was tied but with one, who and if he had not bene tied at all, yet (no doubt) would haue no lesse aunswered to that great patience of Polycarpus. *

And as the ende of them bothe was much agreeing, so the life of them both was such, as might seme not farre discrepant. In teaching, like diligent both, in zeale feruent, in life vnspotted, in manners and conuersation inculpable, Bishops & also martyrs both. Briefly, in teaching so pithy and fruitful, that as they both were ioyned together in one Spirite, so mighte they be ioyned in one name together of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, * to wit, much fruitful. to which name also 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 is not much vnlike. In thys the Martyrdome of M. Hooper may seeme in suffering to goe before, though in time it followed the Martyrdome of Polycarpus, for that he was bothe longer in prisone, * and there also so cruellye handled by the malice of hys keepers, as I thinke none of the olde martyrs euer suffered the like. To thys also adde howe hee was disgraded by Boner, wyth suche contumelies and reproches, as I thinke in Polycarpus time was not vsed to any.

And as wee haue hitherto compared these two good Martyrs together, * so nowe if we should compare the enemies and authours of their death one wyth the other, wee should finde no inequalitie betwixt them both, but that the aduersaries of M. Hooper semed to be more cruell and vnmerciful. For they that put Polycarpus to death, yet ministred to him a quicke dispatch, mooued belike by some compassion not to haue him stande in the torment: where the tormentors of M. Hooper suffred him without all compassion to stand three quarters of an houre in the fire. And as touching the chiefe doers and authors of his martyrdome, what Consul or Proconsul was there to be conferred with the Chancelour heere, which brought this Martyr to burning? Let this suffice.

*This good Bishop and seruaunte of God being in prison, wrote diuers Bookes and Treatises, to the number of 24. wherof some he wrote to the parlament in Latine, and one to the Bishop of Chichester D. Day: besides he wrote of the sacraments, of the Lordes praier, and of the x. Commaundements, with diuers other.

Here folowe certaine of M. Hoopers letters.

AS you haue hearde the whole storie of the life and martyrdome of thys good manne declared: so now let vs consequently adioyne some parte of hys letters, wrytten in the time of hys imprisonment, moste fruitfull and worthy to be read, especially in these daungerous dayes, of all true Christians, which by true mortification seeke to serue and followe the Lorde, through all tempests and stormes of thys malignaunt worlde, as by the readyng and perusing of the sayde letters, you shall better feele and vnderstande.

A letter of M. Hooper to certaine godly professors and louers of the truth, instructing them howe to behaue them selues in that wofull alteration and change of Religion.

THE grace, mercye, and peace of God the father through oure Lorde Iesus Christ, be w^t you my deare• brethren,* and withal those that vnfaignedly loue and embrace his holy Gospel. Amen.

It is told me, that the wicked Idol the Masse is stablished again by a law, & passed in the parlamēt house. Learn the truth of it, I pray you, & what penaltie is appointed in the Acte, to such as speake against it: also whether there be any compulsion to constraine men to be at it. The statute thorowly knowen, such as be abroad & at liberty,* may prouide for themselves, & auoid the danger the better. Doubtles there hath not bene seene before our time, such a parliament as this is, y^t as many as were suspected to be fauourers of Gods word, shuld be banished out of both houses. But we must geue God thanks for that truth he hath opened in the time of his blessed seruant king Edward y^e sixth, and pray vnto him that we deny it not, nor dishonour it w^t Idolatrie, but that we may haue strength and pacience rather to die ten times, then to denie him once. Blessed shall we be, if euer God make vs worthy of that honor, to shed our bloude for hys names sake: And blessed then shall we thinke y^e parents which brought vs into this worlde, that we shoulde from this mortalitie be caried into immortalitie. If we followe the commaundement of S. Paule, that sayth: If ye then be risen againe with Christ,*seeke those thynges which are aboue, where Christ sitteth at the right hande of God. We shall neither departe from the vaine transitorie goodes of this world, nor from this wretched and mortal life, with so great paines as other doe.

Let vs pray to our heauenly father, that we may know and loue his blessed will, and the glorious ioy prepared for vs in time to come, and that we maye knowe and hate all things contrary to his blessed will, and also the paine prepared for the wicked in the world to come. Ther is no better waye to be vsed in this troublesome time for your consolation, then many times to haue assemblies together of such men and women as be of your religion in Christ, and there to talke and renewe among your selues the truthe of your Religion, to see what ye be by the worde of God,* and to remember what yee were before yee came to the knowledge thereof, to weigh and conferre the dreames and false lies of the Preachers that nowe preache, with the worde of God that retaineth all truth, and by such talke and familiar resorting together, ye shall the better find out all their lies, that nowe goe about to deceiue you, & also both know and loue the truth that God hath opened to vs. It is much requisite, that the members of Christe comfort one an other, make prayers together, conferre one wyth an other,* so shal ye be the stronger, and Gods spirite shal not be absent frō you, but in the midst of you, to teach you, to comfort you, to make you wise in all godly things, pacient in aduersitie, and strong in persecution.

Ye see how the congregation of the wicked by helping one an other, make their wicked religion and them selues strong against Gods truth and his people. If ye may haue some learned man that can oute of the Scriptures, speake vnto you of faith and true honouring of God, also that can shewe you the descent of Christes Church from the beginning of it vntill this day, that ye may perceiue by the life of youre forefathers these two things: the one, that Christes worde, which said, that all his must suffer persecution and trouble in the worlde, be true: the other, that none of al his before our time, escaped trouble: then shal yee perceiue that it is but a follie for one that professeth Christ truely, to looke for the loue of the world.

Thus shal ye learne to beare trouble,* & to exercise your religion, and feele in dede that Christes wordes be true: In the worlde ye shall suffer persecution. And when ye feele your religion in dede, say, ye be no better then your forefathers, but be glad, that ye may be counted worthy souldiours for this warre: and pray to God when yee come together, that hee will vse and order you and youre doings to these three endes, which ye must take heede of: the first, that ye glorifie God: the next,* that yee edifie the Church and Congregation: the thirde, that ye profite your owne soules.

In all your doings beware ye be not deceiued. For although thys time be not yet so bloudye and tyrannous as the time of our forefathers, that coulde not beare the name of Christ, wythout daunger of lyfe and goodes:* yet is oure time more perillous both for body and soule. Therefore of vs Christ sayde: Thinke ye when the sonne of manne commeth, hee shall finde faithe vppon the earth? Hee sayd not, Thinke ye he shal find any man or woman Christened, & in name a Page 1513 Christian? but he spake of the faith that saueth the Christian man in Christe: and doubtlesse the scarcitie of Faith is nowe more (and will, I feare, encrease) then it was in the time of the greatest tyrannes that euer were: and no marueil why.* Read ye the 6. chap. of s. Iohns Reuelation, and ye shall perceiue amongst other thinges, y^t at the opening of the fourth Seale, came out a pale horse, and hee that sate vpon him was called death, and hell followed hym. This horse is the time wherin hipocrites and dissemblers entred into the Churche vnder the pretence of true Religion,* as Monkes, Friers, Nounes, Massing Priestes, wyth suche other, that haue killed moe soules with heresie and superstition, then all the tyrannes that euer were, killed bodies w^t fire, sword, or banishment, as it appeareth by hys name that sitteth vpon y^e horse, who is called death: for all soules that leaue Christe, and trust to these hypocrites, liue to the deuill in euerlasting paine, as is declared by him that foloweth the pale horse, which is hell.

These pretended and pale hypocrites, haue stirred the earthquakes,* that is to witte, the Princes of the worlde, against Christes church, & haue also darkened the Sunne, and made the Moone bloudy, and haue caused the Starres to fal from heauen, that is to say, haue darkned with mists and daily doe darken (as ye heare by theyr Sermons) the cleare sunne of Gods most pure worde: the Moone, which be Gods true Preachers, whych fetche onely lighte at the Sunne of Gods word, are turned into bloud, prisons, and chaines, that theyr light can not shine vnto the worlde as they woulde: whereuppon it commeth to passe, that the Starres, that is to say, Christian people fall from heauen, that is to wit, from Gods most true woorde, to hypocrisie, most deuilish superstition and Idolatrie. Let some learned man shew you al the articles of your beliefe & monuments of Christian faith, from the time of Christ hitherto, and yee shall perceiue that there was neuer mention of suche articles as these hypocrites teach. God blesse you, and pray for me, as I do for you.

Out of the Fleete,

by your brother in Christ, Iohn Hooper.

To maister Ferrar Bishop of S. Dauies, D. Tailor, M. Bradford, and M. Philpot, prisonners in the kings benche in Southwarke.

The grace of God be with you. Amen. I am aduertised by diuers,* as well such as loue the truthe, as also by suche as yet be not come vnto it, that ye and I shalbe caried shortly to Cābridge, there to dispute in the faith, and for the religion of Christ (which is most true) that we haue and doe professe. I am (as I doubt not ye be) in Christ readie, not only to goe to Cambridge, but also to suffer by Gods helpe,* death it selfe in the maintenaunce thereof. Weston and his complices haue obtained foorth the commission already, and spedily (most like) he wil put it in execution. Wherefore deare brethren, I doe aduertise you of the thing before for diuers causes. The one to comfort you in the Lorde, that the tyme draweth nigh and is at hand, that we shall testifie before Gods enemies, Gods truth. The next, that ye shoulde prepare your selues the better for it. The third, to shew you what wayes I think were best to vse our selues in this matter, and also to hear of euery one of you, your better aduise, if mine be not good. Ye knowe such as shallbe Censors and Iudges ouer vs, breath and thirst our bloud, and whether we by Gods help ouercome after the word of God, or by force and subtiltie of our aduersaries be ouercome, this will be the conclusion, our aduersaries wil say, they ouercome, and ye perceiue howe they reporte of those great learned men and godly personages at Oxforde.

Wherefore I minde neuer to aunsweare them, except I haue bookes present,* because they vse not onely false allegation of the Doctors, but also a peece of the Doctors against the whole course of the Doctors minde. The next, that we may haue sworne Notaries, to take things spoken indifferently: which will be very harde to haue, for the aduersaries will haue the ouersight of all thinges, and then make theirs better then it was, & our worse then it was. Then if we see that two or three, or more will speake together, or with scoffes and tauntes illude and mocke vs: I suppose it were best to appeale, to be hearde before the Queene and the whole Counsaile, and that would much set foorth the glory of God. For many of them knowe already the truthe, many of them erre rather of zeale then malice, and the others that be indurate, shoulde be aunsweared fully to their shame (I doubte not) althoughe to oure smart and bloudshedding. For of this I am assured that the Commissioners appoynted to heare vs and iudge vs, meane nothyng lesse then to heare the cause indifferently, for they be ennemies vnto vs & vnto our cause, and be at a poynt already to geue sentēce against vs: so that if it were possible with S. Stephen to speak, so that they could not resist vs, or to vse suche silence & pacience as Christ did, they will proceede to reuenging.

Wherefore my deare brethren, in the mercy of Iesus Christe, I would be glad to knowe your aduise this day or to morowe, for shortly we shall be gone, and I verily suppose that we shall not cōpanie together, but be kept one abroad from an other. They will denie our appeale: yet let vs chalenge the appeale, and take witnesse thereof of suche as be present, and require for indifferencie of hearing and iudgement to be heard, either before the Queene and the Counsaile, or els before all the Parliament, as they were vsed in king Edwardes dayes. Further, for my part I will require both bookes and time to answeere. Wee haue bene prisoners now three quarters of a yeare, and haue lacked oure bookes, and oure memorie by close keeping, and ingratitude of their partes, be not as present and quicke as theirs be. I trust God will be with vs, yea I doubt not but he will, and teache vs to doe all thinges in hys cause godly and cōstantly. If our aduersaries that shalbe our iudges, may haue their purpose, we shall dispute one day, be condemned the next day, and suffer the third day.* And yet is there no law to condemne vs (as farre as I knowe) and so one of the Conuocation house sayde this weeke to Doct. Weston. To whome Weston made this answeere: It forceth not, quoth hee, for a lawe, wee haue commission to proceede with them: when they be dispatched, let their frendes sue the lawe.

Nowe, howe soone a man may haue such a commission at my Lord Chancelors hand, you know. It is as hard to be obtained, as an enditement for Christ at Cayphas hande. Besides that, the Byshoppes hauing the Queene so vpon their sides, may do all thinges both without the aduise, and also the knowledge of the rest of the Lordes of the temporaltie: who at this present haue found out the marke that the Bishops shote at, and doubtles be not pleased with their doings. I pray you helpe that our brother Sanders and the rest in the Marshalsey may vnderstande these thinges, and sende me your answeere betime. Iudas non dormit: nec scimus diem neque horam. i. Iudas slepeth not: neither know we the day nor the hour. Dominus Iesus Christus suo sancto numine nos omnes consoletur & adiuuet. Amen. i. The Lord Iesus Christ with his holy spirite comfort and strengthen vs all Amen.

May 6. 1554.

Yours and with you vnto death, in Christ, I Hooper.

An exhortation to pacience, sent to his godly wife Anne Hooper: whereby all the true members of Christ may take comfort and courage, to suffer trouble & affliction for the profession of his holy Gospel.

OUr sauour Iesus Christ (dearely beloued & my godly wife) in s. Mathewes Gospell said to his disciples,that it was necessary sclaunders shoulde come: and that they coulde not be auoided, he perceiued as wel by the cōdition of those that should pearish & be lost for euer in the world to come, as also by their affliction that should be saued. For he sawe the greatest part of the people would contemne & neglecte, whatsoever true doctrine or godly wayes should be shewed vnto them, or els receiue it & vse it as they thought good to serue their pleasures without any profite to their soules at all, not caring whether they liued as they were cōmanded by Gods word or not: but would thinke it sufficient to be counted to haue the name of a Christian man, wyth such workes and frutes of his profession and Christianitie, as his fathers and elders after their custome & maner, esteeme and take to be good fruites and faithful works, and wil not try them by the worde of God at all. These men by the iust iudgement of God, be deliuered vnto the crafte and subtiltie of the deuill,* that they may be kept by one sclaunderous stūbling blocke or other, that they neuer come vnto Christ, who came to saue those that were lost: as yee may see howe God deliuereth wicked menne vp vnto their owne lustes, to do one mischief after an other carelesse,* vntil they come into a reprobate minde, that forgetteth it selfe and can not knowe what is expedient to be done, or to be least vndone, because they close their eyes, and will not see the lyght of Gods woorde offered vnto them, and being thus blinded, they preferre their owne vanities before the truth of Gods woorde. Whereas such corrupt mindes be,* there is also corrupt election and choyse of Gods honor: so that the minde of man taketh falsehoode for truthe, superstition for true religion, death for life, damnation for saluation, hell for heauen, and persecution of Christes members, for Gods seruice and honour. And as these men wilfully and voluntarily reiect the woorde of God: euen so God most iustly deliuereth them into the blindnes of mind & hardnes of heart, that they can not vnderstand,* nor yet consent to any thyng that God would haue preached and set foorth to his glory, after his owne will and worde: wherefore they hate it mortally, & of all things most detest Gods holy worde. And as y^e deuill hath entred into their hearts, that they them selues can not, nor will not come to Christ to be instructed by hys holy woord: euen so can they not abide any other man to be a Christian man, and to lead his life after the word of God, but hate him, persecute him, robbe him, imprisone hym, yea and kil him, whether he be man or womā, if God suffer it. Page 1514 And so much are those wicked men blinded, that they passe of no law, whether it be Gods or mans, but persecute such as neuer offended, yea, do euil to those that daily haue praied for them, and wish them Gods grace.

In their Pharaonical and blind furie they haue no respect to nature.* For the brother persecuteth the brother, the father the sonne: and most deare frends, in diuelish sclaunder and offence are become most mortal ennemies. And no marueile, for when they haue chosen sundrye maisters, the one the deuill, the other God, the one shall agree with the other, as God and the deuell agree betweene them selues. For this cause, that the more parte of the worlde doth chuse to serue the deuill vnder cloaked hypocrisie of Gods title, Christ sayd:*It is expedient and necessary that sclanders should come, and many meanes be deuised to keepe the litle babes of Christ from the heauenly father. But Christ sayth: Wo be vnto him by whome the offence commeth: Yet is there no remedy, man being of such corruption and hatred towardes God, but that the euil shalbe deceiued, & persecute the good: and the good shall vnderstand the truth, and suffer persecution for it vntill the worlds ende. For as he that was borne after the flesh, persecuted in times past, him that was born after the spirite:euen so is it now. Therefore, for so much as we liue in this life amongst so many great pearils and daungers, we must be wel assured by gods word how to beare them, and how patiently to take them, as they be sent to vs frō God. We must also assure our selues that there is no other remedy for Christians in the time of trouble, then Christ himself hath appoynted vs. In S. Luke he geueth vs thys commandement: Ye shall possesse your liues in pacience, sayeth he. In the which words, he geueth vs both commaundement what to doe, and also great comfort and consolation in all troubles. Hee sheweth also what is to be done, and what is to be hoped for in troubles:* and when troubles happen, he biddeth vs be patient, and in no case violently nor seditiously to resist our persecuters, because God hath such care and charge of vs, that he wil keepe in the mids of all troubles the very heares of our heade, so that one of them shall not fall away without the wil and pleasure of our heauenly father. Whether the haire therfore tarie in the head, or fal from the head, it is the wil of the father. And seeing he hath such care for the haire of our head, howe much more doeth he care for our life it selfe? Wherefore let Gods aduersaries do what they lust, whether they take life or take it not, they can do vs no hurt: for their crueltye hath no further power then God permitteth them: and that which commeth vnto vs by the will of our heauenly father, can be no harme, no losse, neither destruction vnto vs, but rather gain, wealth, and felicitie. For all troubles and aduersitie that chaunce to such as be of God, by the wil of the heauenly father, can be none other but gaine and aduantage.

That the spirite of manne may feele these consolations, the geuer of them the heauenly father must be prayed vnto for the merites of Christes passion: for it is not the nature of man that can be contented,* vntill it be regenerated and possessed with Gods spirit, to beare patiently the troubles of the minde or of the body. When the minde and heart of a man seeth of euery side sorow and heauines, & the worldly eye beholdeth nothing but suche things as be troublous & wholely bent to robbe the poore of that hee hath, and also to take from him hys life: except the man weighe these brittle and vncertaine treasures that be taken from him, with the riches of the life to come, and this life of the body with the life in Christes precious bloud, and so for the loue and certaintie of the heauenly ioyes contemne all thyngs present, doubtles he shall neuer be able to beare the losse of goodes, life, or any other things of this world.

Therefore S. Paule geueth a very godly and necessary lesson to all men in this short and transitorie life, and therein sheweth howe a man may best beare the iniquitie and troubles of this world: If ye be risen againe with Christ (sayth he) seeke the things which are aboue,* where Christ sitteth at the right hande of God the father. Wherefore the Christian mans faith must be alwayes vppon the resurrection of Christe, when he is in trouble, and in that glorious resurrection he shall not onely see continuall and perpetuall ioy and consolation: but also the victorie and triumph of all persecution, trouble, sinne, death, hell, the deuil, and al other tyrants and persecuters of Christ and of Christes people, the teares and weepings of the faithfull dried vppe, theyr woundes healed, their bodies made immortall in ioy, their soules for euer praising the Lord, and coniunction and societie euerlasting, wyth the blessed company of Gods electes in perpetuall ioy. But the woordes of S. Paule in that place, if they be not marked, shall doe little profite to the reader or hearer, and geue him no pacience at all in this impacient and cruell world.

In this first part S. Paule commaundeth vs, to thinke or set our affections on things that are aboue.* When he biddeth vs seeke the thyngs that are aboue, hee requireth that oure mindes neuer cease from prayer and studie in Gods word, vntill we see, knowe, and vnderstande the vanities of thys worlde, the shortnesse and miserie of thys life, and the treasures of the worlde to come, the immortalitie thereof, and the ioyes of that life, and so neuer cease seeking, vntill suche time as we know certainly, and be perswaded what a blessed man hee is, that seeketh the one and finedeth it, and careth not for the other though hee loose it: and in seekynge to haue ryght iudgement betwene the life present and the life to come, wee shall finde howe little the paines, imprysonment, sclaunders, lies, and death it selfe is in thys worlde, in respect of the paines euerlasting, the prisonne infernall, and dungeon of hell, the sentence of Gods iust iudgement, and euerlasting death.

When a man hath by seeking the woorde of God, found out what the things aboue be: then must hee (as S. Paule saith) set his affections vpon them. And this commaundement is more harde then the other. For mans knowledge many times seeth the best, and knoweth that there is a life to come, better then thys life present, as you maye see howe daily men and women can praise and commende, yea, and wishe for heauen, and to be at rest there? yet they sette not their affection vpon it, they do more affect and loue in dede a trifle of nothing in this worlde that pleaseth their affection, then the treasure of all treasures in heauen, which their owne iudgement sayth is better then all worldly things. Wherefore we must set our affections vpon the things that be aboue: that is to say, when any thing worse then heauen vpon the earth, offereth it selfe to be ours, if we wil geue our good willes to it, and loue it in our heartes, then ought we to see by the iudgement of Gods woorde, whether we may haue the worlde without offence of God, and suche thyngs as be for this worldly life, wythout his displeasure. If wee can not, S. Paules commaundement must take place: Set your affections on things that are aboue. If the riches of thys world may not be gotten nor kept by Gods lawe, neyther our liues be continued without the deniall of hys honour, we must set our affection vpon the riches and lyfe that is aboue, and not vpon things that be on the earth. Therefore this second commaundement of S. Paul requireth,* that as our minds iudge heauenly things to be better then thyngs vpon the earth, and the life to come better then the life present: so we should chuse them before other, & preferre them, and haue such affection to the best, that in no case we set the worst before it, as the most part of the world doth and hath done, for they choose the best and approoue it, and yet follow the worste.

But these thyngs (my godly wife) require rather cogitation, meditation, and praier, then wordes or talke. They be easie to be spoken of, but not so easie to be vsed and practised. Wherefore, seeing they be Gods gyftes,* and none of ours, to haue as our owne when we would, we must seke them at our heauenly fathers hand, who seeth and is priuy how poore and wretched we be, and how naked, how spoiled, and destitute of all his blessed giftes we be by reason of sinne. He did commaund therefore his Disciples, when he shewed them that they shoulde take paciently the state of thys present life full of troubles and persecution,* to praye that they myghte well escape those troubles that were to come, and be able to stande before the sonne of man. When ye finde your selfe too much oppressed (as euery man shalbe sometime wyth the feare of Gods iudgement) vse the 77. Psalme, that beginneth: I will crie vnto God with my voyce,* and he shall hearken vnto me. In which Psalme is both godly doctrine and great consolation vnto the man or woman that is in anguish of minde.

Use also in suche trouble the 88. Psalme, wherein is contained the praier of a man, that was brought into extreme anguish & misery, and being vexed with aduersaries & persecutions, saw nothing but death & hel. And although hee fealt in hym selfe, that hee had not onely man, but also God angry towards him: yet he by praier humbly resorted vnto God, as the only port of consolation, and in the midst of his desperate state of trouble, put the hope of his saluation in him, whome he fealt his enemie. Howbeit no man of him selfe can doe this,* but the spirite of God that stryketh the mans heart with feare, prayeth for the man stricken and feared with vnspeakeable gronings. And when you feelee your selfe, or know any other oppressed after suche sorte, be glad: for after that God hath made you to know what you be of your selfe, he wil doubtles shew you comfort, and declare vnto you what you be in Christ his onely sonne:* and vse praier often, for that is the meanes whereby God will be soughte vnto for hys giftes. These Psalmes be for the purpose, when the minde can take no vnderstandinge, nor the hart any ioy of gods promises: and therefore were these Page 1515 Psalmes also made .6.22.30.31.38.69. from the whiche you shall learne buthe pacience and consolation. Remember, that although your life (as all Christian mens be) be hid and appeareth not what it is, yet it is safe (as S. Paule sayth) with God in Christ:* and when Christ shall appeare, then shall our liues be made open with him in glorie. But in the meane time wyth seeking and setting our affections vpon the things that be aboue, we must paciently suffer whatsoever God shal send vnto vs in this mortal life. Notwithstanding it might fortune some woulde say. Who is so perfect, that can lette all things passee as they come, & haue no care of the: suffer all things, and feelee nothing: be attempted of the Deuill, the worlde, and the flesh, and be not troubled? Uerely no man liuing. But this I say, that in the strength of Iesus Christ things that come,* maye passe with care, for we be worldly, and yet are we not caried with them from Christ, for we be in him godly. We may suffer things and fele them as mortall men, yet beare them and ouercome them as Christian men. We may be attempted of the deuill, the flesh, and the worlde: but yet although those things pinche, they doe not pierce, and although they worke sinne in vs, yet in Christe no damnation to those that be grafted in him.* Hereof may the christian man learne both consolation & patience. Consolation, in that he is compelled both in his body & goodes to feelee paine and losse, and in the soule heauinesse and anguish of minde: howbeit none of them both shall separate him from the loue that God beareth him in Christ.* He may learne patience, for as much as his enemies both of the body and soule, and the paines also they vexe vs wythall for the time,* if they tarie with vs as long as we liue, yet when death commeth, they shall auoide, and geue place to suche ioyes as be prepared for vs in Christ: for no paines of the world be perpetuall, and whether they shall afflict vs for all the time of our mortal life, we know not, for they be the seruauntes of God to goe and to come, as he commandeth them.* But we must take heede we meddle not forceablye nor seditiously, to put away the persecution appoynted vnto vs by God, but remember Christes saying: Possesse you your liues by your patience. And in thys commādemēt God requireth in euery man and woman this pacient obediēce.* Hee sayeth not, it is sufficient that other holy Patriarkes, Prophetes, Apostles, Euangelists, and Martyrs continued their liues in pacience, and pacient suffering the troubles of this world: but Christ saith to euery one of his people: By your owne pacience ye shall continue your life: not that man hath pacience of him selfe,* but that he must haue it for him selfe of God, the onely geuer of it, if he purpose to be a godly man. Nowe therefore, as our profession and religion requireth pacience outwardly wythout resistance and force: so requireth it pacience of the mind, and not to be angry with God, although he vse vs that be as hys owne creatures, as him listeth.

We may not also murmure against God, but say alwaies his iudgements be right & iust, and reioyce that it pleaseth him by troubles to vse vs, as he vsed heeretofore such as he most loued in this worlde, and haue a singular care to this commandemēt: Gaudete, & exultate, Be glad & reioyce, for he sheweth great cause why: Your rewarde (sayth he) is great in heauen.* These promises of him that is y^e truth it selfe, shal by Gods grace) worke both cōsolation and pacience in the afflicted christian person. And when our sauior Christ hath willed menne in trouble to be content and pacient, because God in the ende of trouble in Christ hath ordained eternall consolation: he vseth also to take from vs all shame and rebuke, as though it were not an honor to suffer for christ, because y^e wicked world doth curse & abhorre such poore troubled Christians.* Wherefore Christe placeth all his honourably, and sayeth: Euen so persecuted they the Prophetes that were before you. Wee may also see with whome the afflicted for Christes sake, be esteemed by S. Paul to the Hebrews, where as the number of the blessed and glorious company of Saintes appeare nowe to our faith in heauen in ioy: yet in the letter, for the time of this life, in such paines and contempt, as was neuer more. Let vs therefore consider both them and all other thinges of the worlde sithens the fall of man, and we shall perceiue nothing to come to perfection, but wyth such confusion and disorder to the eye of y^e world, as though things wer rather lost for euer, then like to come to any perfection at all. For of godly men, who euer came to heauen (no not Christ him selfe) vntill suche time as the world had thought verely y^t both he & al his had ben cleane destroyed and cast away? as the wise man sayth of the wicked people: We thought them to be foles, but they be in peace.

*Wee may learne by things that nourish and maintaine vs, both meat and drinke, to what lothsomnes and (in maner) abhorring they come vnto, before they worke theyr perfection in vs. From life they be brought to the fire, and cleane altered from that they were when they were aliue: from the fire to the trencher and knife, and all to hacked: from the trencher to the mouth, and as small ground as the teethe can grinde them: and from the mouth into the stomach, and there so boyled and digested before they nourish, that who soeuer saw the same, would loth and abhorre hys owne nourishment, before it come to hys perfection.

Is it then any marueile if suche Christians as GOD delighteth in, be so mangled and defaced in thys worlde, whych is the kitchin and mill to boyle and grinde the flesh of Gods people in, till they atchieue their perfection in the worlde to come? And as a man looketh for the nutriment of his meate when it is ful digested, and not before: so must hee looke for hys saluation when hee hath passed thys troublous worlde, and not before.* Rawe fleshe is not meate wholesome for man: and vnmortified men and women, be not creatures meete for God. Therefore Christ sayeth, that his people must be broken, and all too torne in the mill of thys worlde, and so shall they be moste fine meale vnto the heauenly father. And it shall be a Christian mannes parte, and the duetie of a mynde repleanished wyth the spirite of God, to marke the order of God in all his things, howe he dealeth wyth them, and howe they suffer and be content to lette God do his will vpon them, as S. Paule sayeth: They waite vntill the number of the electes be fulfilled, and neuer be at rest,*but looke for the time when Gods people shall appeare in glorie.

We must therefore paciently suffer, and willingly attend vppon Gods doings, althoughe they seeme cleane contrary after our iudgement, to our wealth and saluation: as Abraham did, when hee was bid to offer his sonne Isaac,* in whom God promised the blessing and multiplying of hys seede. Ioseph at the last came to that which God promised him, although in the meane time, after the iudgemēt of the worlde, he was neuer like to be (as God said he should be) Lorde ouer hys brethren. When Christe would make the blinde man to see, he put clay vppon hys eyes, whych after the iudgement of man,* was meanes rather to make hym double blind, then to geue him his sight: but he obeyed, and knew that God could worke his desire, what meanes soeuer he vsed contrary to mans reason: and as touching this world, he vseth all hys after the same sort. If any smart,* his people be the first: if any suffer shame, they begin: if any be subiecte to sclaunder, it is those that hee loueth: so that hee sheweth no face or fauour, nor loue almost in thys worlde outwardly to them, but laith clay vpon their sore eyes, that be sorowfull: yet the pacient man seeth (as S. Paul sayeth) life hid vnder these miseries and aduersities, and sight vnder soule clay, and in the meane time he hath the testimony of a good conscience, and beleueth Gods promises to be his consolation in the worlde to come, whych is more woorth vnto him, then all the worlde is woorth besides: and blessed is that man in whom Gods spirite beareth recorde that he is the sonne of God, what soeuer troubles he suffer in thys troublesome worlde.*

And to iudge things indifferently (my godly wife) the troubles be not yet generally, as they were in our good fathers time, soone after the deathe and resurrection of oure Sauour Christ Iesu, whereof hee spake in S. Mathewe.* Of the whych place you and I haue taken manye tymes greate consolation, and especially of the latter parte of the Chapter, wherein is contained the last daye and ende of all troubles (I doubt not) both for you and me, and for suche as loue the comming of our sauour Christe to iudgement. Remember therefore that place, and marke it againe, and yee shall in thys time see great consolation, and also learne muche pacience. Was there euer suche troubles, as Christe threatned vppon Ierusalem? was there sithens the beginning of the worlde, suche affliction? who was then best at ease? The Apostles that suffered in body persecution, and gathered of it ease and quietnesse in the promises of God. And no marueile, for Christ sayeth: Lifte vp your heades, for your redemption is at hande, that is to saye, your eternall rest approacheth and draweth neare. The world is starke blind,* and more foolish then foolishnesse it selfe, and so be the people of the worlde. For when God sayth, trouble shal come, they will haue ease. And when God sayeth, be merrie and reioyce in trouble, we lament and mourne, as thought we were castawayes. But this our flesh (which is neuer merry with vertue, nor sorrie with vice,* neuer laugheth wyth grace, nor euer weepeth wyth sinne (holdeth fast wyth the worlde, and letteth God slippe. But (my dearely beloued wife) you knowe howe to perceiue and to beware of the vanitie and craftes of the deuill wel enough in Christ. And that yee may the better haue pacience in the spirite of God, reade againe the 24. chap. of S. Mathew, and marke what difference is betwene the destruction of Ierusalem,* and the destruction of the whole world, and you shall see, that then here were left aliue many offenders to repent: but at the Page 1516 latter day there shall be absolute iudgement and sentence (neuer to be reuoked) of eternall life and eternal death vppon all mē,* and yet towards the end of the world, we haue nothing so much extremitie, as they had then, but euen as we be able to beare. So doth the mercifull father lay vpon vs now imprisonment (and I suppose for my part, shortly death,) now spoile of goodes, losse of frends, and the greatest losse of all, the knowledge of Gods word.* Gods wyll be done. I wish in Christ Iesu our onely mediatour and Sauour, your constancie and consolation, that you may liue for euer and euer, whereof in Christ I doubt not: to whome for his blessed and most paynefull passion I commit you. Amen. 13. October. 1553.

To a certayne godly woman, instructing her how she should behaue her selfe in the time of her wydowhoode.

The grace of God, and the comfort of his holy spirite, be with you and all them that vnfaynedly loue hys holy Gospell.* Amen.

I thanke you (deare sister) for your most louing remembrance, and although I can not recompence the same, yet do I wish with all my hart, that God would do it, requiring you not to forget your duty towards God in these perilous dayes, in the whiche the Lorde will trie vs. I trust you do encrease by reading of y^e scriptures, the knowledge you haue of God, and that you diligently apply your selfe to folow the same: for the knowledge helpeth not, except the life be according thereunto. Further, I do hartily pray you, to consider the state of your wydowhoode, and if God shall put in your minde to change it, remember the saying of Saint Paule 1. Corinth. 7.* It is lawfull for the wydow or mayden to marry to whome they list, so it be in the Lord: that is to saye,* to suche a one as is of Christes Religion. Dearely beloued in Christ, remember these words, for you shall fynde thereby great ioy and comfort, if you chaunge your state. Whereof I wyll when I haue better leysure (as now I haue none at all) further aduertise you. In the meane time, I commend you to God, and the guiding of his good spirit, who stablish and confirme you in all well doing, and keepe you blamelesse to the day of the Lorde. watch and pray, for this day is at hand.

Yours assured in Christ, Iohn Hooper.

¶To all my deare breethren, my relieuers and helpers in the Citie of London.

The grace of God be with you. Amen. I haue receaued frō you (dearely beloued in our Sauour Iesus Christ) by the hands of my seruaunt William Downton,* your liberalitie, for the which I do most hartely thanke you, and I prayse God hyghly in you for you, who hath mooued your hartes to shewe this kyndnes towards me, praying him to preserue you from all famine, scarcitie, and lacke of the truth of his worde, whiche is the liuely foode of youre soules, as you preserue my body from hunger & other necessities, which should happen vnto me, were it not cared for by y^e beneuolence and charitie of godly people. Such as haue taken all worldly goodes and lands from me, & spoiled me of all that I had, haue imprisoned my body and appointed no one halfe peny to feede or relieue me withal: but I do forgeue them, and pray for them dayly in my poore prayer vnto God,* and from my hart I wishe their saluation, and quietly & patiently beare their iniuries, wishing no farther extremitie to be vsed towards vs. Yet if it seeme contrary best vnto our heauenly father, I haue made my reckening, & fully resolved my selfe to suffer the vttermost that they are able to do against me,* yea death it selfe, by the aide of Christ Iesu, who died the most vile death of y^e crosse for vs wretches & miserable sinners. But of this I am assured, y^t the wicked world w^t all his force & power, shal not touch one of y^e heares of your heads without leaue & licēce of our heauenly father, whose wil be done in all things. If he will life, life be it: if he will death, death be it. Onely we pray, that our willes may be subiect vnto his will, & then although both we & all the world see none other thing but death, yet if he thinke life best, we shal not die, no, although the sword be drawen out ouer our heades: as Abraham thought to kill his sonne Isaac, yet when God perceaued that Abraham had surrendred his will to Gods will, and was content to kill his sonne, God then saued his sonne.

Dearely beloued, if we be contented to obey Gods will, and for his commandements sake, to surrender our goods and our selues to be at his pleasure,* it maketh no matter whether we keepe goodes and lyfe, or lose them. Nothyng can hurt vs that is taken from vs for Gods cause, nor nothing can at length do •s good, that is preserued contrary vnto Gods commaundement. Let vs wholly suffer God to vse vs and ours after his holy wisdom, and beware we neither vse nor gouern our selues contrary to his will by our own wisdom, for if we do, our wisdom will at length proue foolishnes. It is kept to no good purpose y^t we keepe contrary vnto his commandements. It can by no meanes be taken from vs that he would should tary w^t vs. He is no good Christian that ruleth himselfe & his, as worldly meanes serueth: for he y^t so doth shall haue as many changes as chāceth in the world. To day with y^e world he shall like and prayse the truth of God,* to morow as the world will, so will he like and prayse the falshood of man: to day with Christ, and to morow with Antichrist. Wherefore deare brethren, as touching your behauiour towards God, vse both your inward spirites and your outward bodyes, your inward and your outward man (I say) not after the meanes of men, but after y^e infallible word of god.

Refraine from euill in both, and glorifie your heauenly father in both. For if ye thinke ye can inwardly in the hart serue him,* and yet outwardly serue with the world in externall service, y^e thing that is not God, ye deceaue your selues, for both the body and the soule must together concur in the honour of God, as S. Paule plainly teacheth. 1. Cor. 6. For if an honest wife be bound to geue both hart and body to fayth and service in mariage, and if an honest wiues fayth in the hart cannot stand with an whorishe or defiled body outwardly: muche lesse can the true fayth of a Christian in the true service of Christianitie, stand with the bodely service of externall Idolatry: for the mistery of mariage is not so honorable betweene man and wife, as it is betweene Christ & euery christian man, as S. Paule saith.

Therefore deare brethren, pray to the heauenly father, that as he spared not the soule nor the body of his dearely beloued sonne, but applyed both of them with extreame payne, to work our saluation both of body and soule: so he will geue vs al grace to apply our bodyes and soules to be seruauntes vnto him: for doubtles he requireth as wel the one as the other, and cannot be miscontented with the one and well pleased with the other. Either he hateth both, or loueth both: he deuideth not his loue to one and his hatred to the other. Let not vs therfore good brethren, deuide our selues, and say our soules serue him whatsoeuer our bodyes doe the contrary, for ciuill order and pollicy.

But (alas) I know by my selfe, what troubleth you, that is, the great daunger of the worlde, that will reuenge (ye thinke) your seruice to God, with sword and fire, with losse of goodes and landes. But (deare brethren,) way of the other side, that your enemies, and Gods enemies, shal not do so much as they would, but as much as God shall suffer them, who can trap them in their own counsels,* and destroy them in the midst of their furies. Remember ye be the workemen of the Lord, and called into his Vineyard, there to labour till euening tide, that ye may receaue your peny, which is more worth then al the kinges of the earth. But he that calleth vs into hys vineyard, hath not told vs how sore and how feruently the sunne shall trouble vs in our labour: But hath bid vs labour and committe the bitternes thereof vnto him: who can and will so moderate al afflictions, that no man shall haue more layd vpon him, then in Christ hee shall be able to beare: Unto whose mercifull tuition and defence I commend both your soules and bodyes.

2. September. 1554.

Yours with my poore prayer, Iohn Hooper.

To a Marchant of London, by whose meanes he had receaued much comfort in his great necessitie in the Fleete.

GRace, mercy, and peace in Christ Iesus our Lorde. I thanke God and you for the great helpe and consolation I haue receaued in the time of aduersity by your charitable meanes but most reioice that you be not altered from trueth,* although falshood cruelly seeketh to distayne her. Iudge not (my brother) truth by outward appearaunce, for truth now worse appeareth and more vilely is reiecte then falshood. Leau the outwarde shewe, and see by the worde of God what truth is,* and accept truth, and dislike her not though man call her falshood. As it is now, so hath it bene heretofore, the truth reiecte and falshode receaued. Such as haue professed truth, for truth haue smarted, and the frendes of falshode laughed them to scorne. The tryall of both hath bene by contrary successe: the one hauing the cōmendation of truth by man, but the condemnation of falshode by God, flourishing for a tyme with endles destruction, the other afflicted a little season, but ending with immortall ioyes. Wherefore deare brother aske and demaund of your booke, the Testament of Iesus Christ in these woefull and wretched dayes, what you should thinke, and what you should stay vpon for a certayne truth, and whatsoeuer you heare taught try it by your Page 1516 booke, whether it be true or false. The dayes be dangerous and full of perill, not only for the world and worldly things, but for heauen and heauenly things. It is a trouble to lose the treasures of this life, but yet a very payne if they be kept with the offence of God. Cry, call, pray, and in Christ dayly require helpe, succour, mercy, wisdom, grace, and defence, that the wickednes of this world preuaile not against vs. We began well, God preserve vs vntill the end. I would write more often vnto you, but I do perceiue you be at so much charges with me, that I feare you would thinke when I write I craue. Send me nothing till I send to you for it, and so tell the good men your partners, and when I neede, I will be bold of you.

3. December 1554.

Yours with my prayer, Iohn Hooper.

¶To Maistres Wilkinson, a woman hartly in Gods cause, and comfortable to his afflicted members.

The grace of God, and the comforte of his holy spirit be with you, Amen.

I am very glad to heare of your health, and do thanke you for your louing tokens. But I am a great deale more glad to heare how Christianly you auoyd Idolatry, & prepare your selfe to suffer y^e extremity of the world, rather thē to endaunger your selfe to God. You doe as you ought to do in this behalfe, and in suffering of t^rāsit^ry paynes, you shall auoyd permanent tormēt^s in the world to come. Use your life, and keepe it with as much quietnes as you can, so that you offende not God. The ease that commeth wyth his displeasure, turneth at length to vnspeakeable paynes, and the gaynes of the world, with the losse of his fauour, is beggery and wretchednes. Reason is to be amended in this cause of Religion: For it will choose and follow an errour with the multitude if it may be allowed, rather then turne to faith and folow the truth with the people of God. Moyses found the same fault in himselfe, and did amende it, choosing rather to be afflicted with the people of God, then to vse the libertie of the kings daughter, that accounted him as her sonne.* Pray for contentation and peace of the spirit, and reioyce in such troubles as shall happen vnto you for the truthe sake, for in that part Christ saith you be happy. Pray also for me I pray you, that I may do in all things the will of our heauenly father: to whose tuition and defence I commend you.

To my deere frendes in God Mayster Iohn Hall and his wyfe.

The grace of God be with you, Amen. I thanke you for your louing and gentle frendship at all times,* praying God to shew vnto you such fauour, that whatsoeuer trouble and aduersitie happen, y^e go not backe from him. These dayes be daungerous and full of perill, but yet let vs comfort our selues in calling to remembrance the dayes of our forefathers, vpon whom the Lord sent such troubles, that many hundrethes, yea many thousandes dyed for the testimonie of Iesus Christ, both men and women, suffering with patience and constancie as much cruelty as Tyrants could deuise, and so departed out of this miserable world, to the blisse euerlasting, where as now they remaine for euer, lookyng alwayes for the end of this sinfull world, when they shall receiue their bodies againe in immortalitie, and see the number of the elects associated with them in full and consummate ioyes.* And as vertuous men suffering Martyrdome, and taryng a little whyle in this world with paynes, by and by rested in ioyes euerlastyng, and as their paynes ended their sorowes and began ease,* so dyd their constancie and stedfastnes animate and confirme all good people in the truth, and gaue them encouragement and lust to suffer the like, rather then to fall with the world to consent vnto wickednes and Idolatry. Wherefore my deare frends, seeing God of his part, hath illuminated you with the same gift and knowledge of true fayth, wherein the Apostles, the Euangelistes, and all Martyrs suffered most cruell death, thanke him for his grace in knowledge, and pray vnto him for strength and perseuerance, that through your owne fault, you be not ashamed nor afeard to confesse it. Ye be in the truth, and the gates of hell shall neuer preuaile against it, nor Antichrist with all his impes proue it to be false. They may kill and persecute, but neuer ouercome. Be of good comfort, and feare more God then man. This life is short and miserable: happy be they that can spende it to the glory of God. Pray for me as I do for you, and commende me to all good men and women.

22. December 1554.

Your brother in Christ, Iohn Hooper.

¶To my dearely beloued sister in the Lord Maistres Anne Warcop.*

The grace of God be with you. Amen. I thanke you for your louing token. I pray you burden not your selfe too much. It were meete for me rather to beare a payne, then to be a hinderaunce to many. I did reioice at the comming of this bearer, to vnderstand of your constancie, and how y^t you be fully resolved by Gods grace, rather to suffer extremitie, then to go frō that truth in God which you haue professed. He that gaue you grace to begin in so infallible a truth, will folow you in the same vnto the end. But my louing Sister, as you be traueling this perilous iourney, take this lesson with you, practised by wise mē: wherof ye may reade in the second of S. Mathewes Gospell. Such as traueled to finde Christ, followed only the starre, and as long as they saw it, they were assured they were in the right way, and had great mirth in their iourney. But when they entred into Ierusalem, where as the starre led them not thether but vnto Bethelē, and there asked the Citizens the thing that the starre shewed before: as lōg as they taried in Hierusalem and would be instructed where Christ was borne,* they were not only ignorant of Bethelē, but also lost the sight of the starre that led them before. Whereof we learne, in any case whiles we be going in this life, to seeke Christ that is aboue, to beware we loose not the starre of Gods word, that onely is y^e marke that sheweth vs where Christ is, and which way we may come vnto him. But as Ierusalem stood in y^e way,* and was an impediment to these wise men: so doth the sinagogue of Antichrist, that beareth the name of Ierusalem, which by interpretation is called the vision of peace, and amōgst the people now is called the Catholicke Church, stand in the way that pilgrimes must go by thorough this world to Bethelē the house of saturitie and plentifulnes,* and is an impediment to all Christian trauellers: yea and except the more grace of God be, will keepe the pilgrimes still in her that they shal not come where Christ is at all. And to stay them in deede, they take away y^e starre of light which is Gods word that it can not be sene: as ye may see how the celestial star was hid frō the wise men, whē they asked of the Phariseis at Hierusalem where Christ was borne. Ye may see what great dangers hapned vnto these wise men, whiles they were a learning of liars where Christ was. First they were out of their way, and next they lost their guide & conductour, the heauenly starre. Christ is mounted frō vs into heauen, & there we seeke him (as we say:) let vs therfore go thetherward by the star of his word, & beware we happen not to come into Hierusalem the Church of men and aske for him. If we do,* we go out of the way & lose also our cōductour and guide that only leadeth vs straight thether.

The Poets write in fables, that Iason when he fought with the Dragon in the Ile of Colchis, was preserued by the medicines of Medea, and so wan the golden fleese. And they write also that Titan, whome they faine to be sonne and heyre of the high God Iupiter, would needes vpon a day haue the conduction of y^e sunne round about y^e world, but as they faine, he missed of the accustomed course: wherupon whē he went too high, he burned heauē,* and when he went too low, he burned the earth & the water. These prophane histories do shame vs that be Christian men, Iason against the poyson of the dragon, vsed only the medicine of Medea. What a shame is it for a Christian man against the poyson of the deuill, heresie, & sinne, to vse any other remedy, then Christ & his word? Titan for lacke of knowledge, was afeard of euery signe of the Zodiacke that the Sunne passeth by: wherfore he now went too low, & now too high, and at length fell downe and drowned himselfe in the sea. Christian men for lacke of knowledge, and for feare of such daungers as christian men must needes passe by, go cleane out of order, and at length fall into the pit of hell.

Sister take heede, you shall in your iourney towards heauen, meete with many a monstrous beast:* haue salue of Gods word therfore ready. You shal meete husbād, children, louers and frends, that shall if God be not with them (as God be prayed he is, I would it were with all other alike) be very lettes and impedimentes to your purpose. You shall meete with sclaunder and cōtempt of the world, and be accoumpted vngracious & vngodly: you shal heare & meete with cruell tyranny to do you all extremities: you shall now and then see the troubles of your own cōscience, and feele your owne weakenes: you shall heare that you be cursed by the sentence of the Catholicke Church, wyth such like terrours: but pray to God, and follow the starre of his word, and you shall ariue at the port of eternall saluation, by the merites only of Iesus Christ: to whome I commend you and all yours most hartily.

Yours in Christ Iohn Hooper.

¶Unto these letters of Maister Hooper heeretofore recited, we thought not inconuenient, to annexe also another certaine Epistle, not of Maister Hoper, but writtē to hym by a famous learned man Henry Bullinger, chiefe superintendent Page 1518 in the Citie of Zuricke. Of whose singulare loue and tender affection toward Maister Hooper, ye heard before in the beginning of Maister Hoopers life discoursed. Now how louingly he writeth vnto him, ye shall heare by this present letter, as followeth.

¶To the most reuerend father M. Iohn Hooper Byshop of Worcester and Glocester, and now prisoner for the Gospel of Iesus Christ, my fellow Elder and most deare brother, in England.

THE heauenly father graunt vnto you, and to all those which are in bands and captiuitie for his name sake, grace and peace through Iesus Christ our Lord,* with wisdom, patience and fortitude of the holy Ghost.

I haue receiued from you two letters (my most deare brother:) the former in the moneth of September of the yere past, the latter in the moneth of May of this present yere, both written out of prison. But I doubting least I should make aunswere to you in vayne, whilst I feared that my letters should neuer come vnto your handes, or else increase and double your sorrow: did refrayne from the duety of writing. In the which thing I doubt not, but you will haue me excused, especially seeing you did not vouchsafe, no not once in a whole yere, to aunswere to my whole libels rather then letters, whereas I continued still notwithstanding in writing vnto you: as also at this present, after I heard that you were cast in prison, I did not refraine from continuall prayer, beseeking our heauenly Father through our onely mediatur Iesus Christ, to graunt vnto you and to your fellowe prisoners, faith and constancie vnto the ende. Now is that thyng happened vnto you (my brother) the which we did oftentimes prophecie vnto our selues at your being with vs, should come to passe, especially when we did talke of the power of Antichrist and of his felicitie and victories. For you know the saying of Daniell: * His power shall be mighty, but not in his strength, and he shall wonderfully destroy and make hauocke of all things, and shall prosper and practise, and he shall destroy the mighty and the holy people after his owne will. You knowe what the Lord warned vs of before hand by Mathew, in the tenth chapter, by Iohn in the 15. chapter, and the 16. and also what that chosen vessell Saint Paule hath written in the second to Timothy and the third chapter. Wherefore I do nothing doubt (by Gods grace) of your faith and patience, whilst you knowe that those things which you suffer are not looked for or come by chaunce, * but that you suffer them in the best, truest, and most holy quarell▪ for what can be more true and holy, then our doctrine, which the Papistes, those worshippers of Antichrist do persecute? All things touching saluation, we attribute vnto Christ alone, and to his holy institutions, as we haue bene taught of him and of his disciples, but they would haue euen the same things to be communicated as well to their Antichrist and to his institutions. * Such we ought no lesse to withstand, then we reade that Helias withstoode the Baalites. For if Iesus be Christ, then let them knowe that he is the fulnes of his Church, and that perfectly: but and if Antichrist be King and Priest, then let them exhibite vnto him that honor. How long do they halt on both sides? * Can they geue vnto vs any one that is better then Christ? Or who shall be equall with Christ, that may be compared with him, except it be he whome the Apostle calleth the Aduersarie? But if Christ be sufficient for his Church, what needeth this patching and peeing? But I know well enough, I neede not to vse these disputations with you which are sincerely taught, and haue taken roote in Christ, being perswaded that you haue all things in him, and that we in hym are made perfect.

Go forwardes therefore constauntly to confesse Christ, and to defye Antichrist, * being mindfull of this most holy and most true saying of our Lorde Iesus Christ: He that ouercommeth, shall possesse all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my sonne: but the fearefull, and the vnbeleeuing, and the abhominable, and the murtherers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and Idolaters, and all lyers, shall haue theyr part in the lake which burneth with fyre and brimstone, whych is the second death. The fyrst death is soone ouercome, although a man must burne for the Lordes sake: for they say well that do affyrme thys our fyre to be scarcely a shadowe of that which is prepared for the vnbeleeuers, and them that fall from the trueth. Moreouer, the Lorde graunteth vnto vs, that wee may easily ouercome by his power the fyrst death, the which he hymselfe dyd taste and ouercome, promising withall such ioyes as neuer shall haue ende, vnspeakeable, and passing all vnderstanding, the which we shall possesse so soone as euer we departe hence. For so agayne sayeth the Angell of the Lord: If any man woorship the beast and his Image, and receyue hys marke in hys forehead, or on his hande, the same shall drinke of the wrath of God, * yea of the wyne which is poured into the cup of his wrath, and he shall be tormented in fire and brimstone before the holy Angels, and before the Lamb: and the smoke of their tormēts shal ascend euermore, and they shall haue no rest day nor night, which worship the beast & his Image, and whosoever receiue the print of his name. Here is the patiēce of Saintes: here are they that keep the commandements of God, * and the fayth of Iesus. To this he addeth by and by: I heard a voyce saying to me, write: blessed be the dead that dye in the Lord, frō henceforth (or speedely they be blessed. Io. 5) euen so sayth the spirite, for they rest frō their labours, but their works follow thē: for our labour shall not be frustrate or in vayne.

Therefore seeing you haue such a large promise, be strong in the Lorde, fight a good fight, be faythfull to the Lorde vnto the ende: consider that Christ the sonne of God is your Captaine, and fighteth for you, and for that all the Prophets, Apostles and Martyrs, are your fellow souldiours. They that persecute and trouble vs, are men, sinfull, and mortall, whose fauour a wise man would not buy with the value of a farthing: & besides that, our life is frayle, short, brickle, and transitory. Happy are we, if we depart in the Lorde, who graunt vnto you, and to all your fellow prisoners fayth and constancy. Commend me to the most reuerend fathers and holy Confessours of Christ, Doctor Cranmer Bishop of Canterbury, D. Ridley Bishop of London, and the good old father D. Latimer. Them and all the rest of the prisoners with you for the Lordes cause, salute in my name, and in the name of all my fellow Ministers, the whiche do wish vnto you the grace of God, and constancy in the truth.

Concerning the state of our Church, it remayneth euen as it was when you departed from vs into your countrey. God graunt we may be thankfull to him, and that we doe not onely professe the faith with wordes, but also expresse the same effectually with good workes to the praise of our Lord. The word of God increaseth dayly in that part of Italy that is neare vnto vs, and in Fraunce.

In the meane while the godly sustaine greeuous persecutions, and with great constancy and glory, through tormentes they goe vnto the Lord. I and all my houshold, with my sonnes in law and kinsmen, are in good health in the Lord. They doe salute you, and pray for your constancie, being sorrowfull for you and the rest of the prisoners. There came to vs Englishmen Studentes, both godly and learned: They be receaued of oure Magistrate. Tenne of them dwell together, the rest remayne here and there with good men. Amongest the other, Mayster Thomas Leuer is deare vnto me and familiar. If there be anye thing wherein I may doe any pleasure to your wife and childrē,* they shall haue me wholly at commaundement: whereof I will write also to your wife, for I vnderstand shee abideth at Franckford. Be strong and mery in Christ, wayting for his delirauce, when, and in what sort it shall seeme good vnto hym. The Lorde Iesus shewe pittie vppon the Realme of Englande, and illuminate the same with his holy Spirite to the glorye of his name, and the saluation of soules. The Lorde Iesus preserue and deliuer you from all euill, with all them that call vpon hys name. Farewell, and farewell eternally.

The history of D. Rouland Taylour, which suffered for the truth of Gods word, vnder the tyranny of the Romaine Byshop .1555. the 9. day of February.

THE towne of Hadley was one of the first that receaued the worde of God in all Englande at the preaching of M. Thomas Bilney:* By whose industrie the Gospell of Christ had such gracious successe, and took such root there, that a great number of that parishe became exceeding wel learned in the holye scriptures, as well women as men: so that a man might haue found among them many that had often read the whole Bible through, and that coulde haue sayt• a great part of

S. Paules epistles by hart, and very wel & readily haue geuen a godly learned sentence in any matter of controuersie. Their children and seruantes were also brought vp and trayned so dilligently in y^e right knowledge of Gods worde, that the whole towne seemed rather an Uniuersitie of y^e learned, then a town of Clothmaking or labouring people: And that most is to be commended, they were for the more part faythfull followers of Gods word in their liuing.

In this towne was D. Rouland Taylor, Doctour in both the Ciuill and Canon lawes,* and a right perfect Diuine, parson. Who at his first entring into his benefice, did not, as the common sort of beneficed mē do, let out his benefice to a Farmar, that should gather vp the profites, and set in an ignoraunt vnlearned Priest to serue the Cure, & so they may haue the fleece, litle or nothing care for feeding the flocke: But contrarily he forsooke the Archbishop of Canterbury Tho. Cranmer,* with whome he before was in housholde, and made hys personal abode and dwelling in Hadley among y^e people cōmitted to his charge. Where he as a good shepheard, abiding and dwelling among has sheepe,* gaue himself wholly to the study of holy scriptures most faythfull endeuouring himselfe to fulfill that charge, which the Lord gaue vnto Peter, saying, Peter louest thou Page 1519 me?Feede my Lambes, Feede my sheepe, Feede my sheepe. This loue of Christ so wrought in him, that no Sondag nor holy day passed, nor other time when he might get the people together, but he preached to them the worde of God, the doctrine of their saluation.

Not onely was his worde a preaching vnto them, but all his lyfe and conuersation was an example of vnfayned christian life, and true holynes. He was voyde of all pride, humble,* and meeke as any childe: so that none were so poore, but they might boldly as vnto their father, resorte vnto him, neither was his lowlines childish or fearefull, but as occasion, time and place required, he would be stout in rebuking the sinfull and euill doers, so that none was so rich but he would tell him playnely his fault, with such earnest and graue rebukes as became a good Curate and Pastor. He was a man very milde, voyde of all rancour, grudge or euill will, ready to do good to all men, readely forgeuing his enemies, and neuer sought to do euil to any.

To the poore that were blinde, lame, sicke, bedred, or that had many childrē,* he was a very Father, a carefull patrone, and diligent prouider, in so much that he caused the parishioners to make a generall prouision for thē: and he himselfe (beside the continuall reliefe that they alwayes found at his house) gaue an honest portion yearly,* to the common almes boxe. His wife also was an honest, discrete, and sober matrone, and his children well noutried, brought vp in the feare of God and good learning.

To conclude, he was a right and liuely image or paterne of all those vertuous qualities described by S. Paule in a true Byshop, a good salt of the earth sauourly biting the corrupt maners of euill men, a light in Gods house set vpō a Candlesticke for all good men to imitate and folow.

Thus continued this good Shepeheard among hys flocke, gouerning and leading them through this wildernes of the wicked world, all the dayes of the most innocent and holy King of blessed memory, Edward the vj. But after it pleased God to take King Edward from this vale of misery vnto his most blessed rest,* the Papistes, who euer sembled and dissembled, both with King Henry the eight, and king Edward his sonne, now seing the time conuenient for their purpose, vttered their false hypocrisie, openly refusing all good reformation made by the sayd two most godly Kings, and contrary to that, they had all these two Kings dayes preached, taught, written, and sworne, they violently ouerthrew the true doctrine of the Gospell, and persecuted with sword and fire all those that would not agree to receaue againe the Romaine Byshop as supreme head of the vniuersall Church, and allow all the errorrs, superstitions, and idolatries, that before by Gods worde were disproued and iustly condemned, as though nowe they were good doctrine, vertuous, and true Religion.

In the beginning of this rage of Antichrist, a certayne Petigentleman after the sort of a Lawyer, called Foster, being Steward and keeper of Courtes,* a man of no great skil, but a bitter persecutour in those daies, with one Iohn Clerke of Hadley, which Foster had euer bene a secrete fauourer of all Romish Idolatry, cōspired w^t the said Clerke to bring in the Pope & his maumentry againe into Hadley Church. For as yet Doct. Taylour, as a good shepheard, had retained and kept in his Church, the godly Churchseruice and reformation made by king Edward, & most faithfully and earnestly preached against the popish corruptions, which had infected the whole countrey round about.

Therefore the foresayde Foster and Clerke hyred one Iohn Auerth,* Person of Aldam, a very money Mammonist, a blinde leader of the blinde, a Popish Idolatour, and an open Aduouterer and whoremonger, a very fit Minister for their purpose, to come to Hadley, and there to geue the onset to begin againe the Popish Masse.

To this purpose they builded vp with all haste possible the altuar, entending to bring in their Masse agayn, about the Palme Monday.* But this their deuise tooke none effect: for in the night the altuar was beaten down. Wherefore they built it vp againe the second time, and layde diligent watch, least any should againe breake it downe.

On the day following came Foster and Iohn Clerke, bringing with them their Popish Sacrificer, who brought with him all his implements and garmentes, to play his Popish Pageant, whome they and their men garded with swords and buklers, least any man should disturbe him in his Missall Sacrifice.

When Doctour Taylour, who (according to hys custome) sate at his booke studying y^e word of God,* heard the bells ring, he arose and went into the Church, supposing some thing had bene there to be done, according to his Pastorall office: and comming to the Church, he founde the Church dores shut and fast barred, sauing the Chauncell dore, which was onely latched: Where he entring in, and comming into the Chauncell,* saw a Popishe Sacrificer in his robes, with a broad new shauen crown, ready to begin his Popish sacrifice, beset roūd about with drawne swords and bucklers, lest any mā should approach to disturbe him.

Then said Doctour Taylour: Thou Deuill, who made thee so bold to enter into this church of Christ, to prophane and defile it with this abhominable Idolatry? Wyth that start vp Foster, and with an irefull and furious countenance, sayd to Doctour Taylour: thou Traytour, what doest thou heere, to let and disturbe the Queenes proceedings? Doctour Taylour aunswered: I am no traytour, but I am the shepheard that God & my Lord Christ hath appointed to feed this his flocke: wherfore I haue good authoritie to be here: & I command thee, thou popish Wolfe, in the name of God to auoyd hēce, and not to presume here with such a Popish Idolatry, to poyson Christes flocke.

Then said Foster: wilt thou traytourly hereticke make a commotion, & resist violently the Queenes proceedings.

Doctour Taylour answered: I make no cōmotion, but it is you Papistes that maketh commotions and tumults. I resist onely with Gods word, agaynst your Popish Idolatries, which are against Gods word, y^e Queenes honor, & tend to y^e vtter subuersiō of this realme of England. And further thou doest against the Canon law, which cōmandeth that no Masse be said, but at a consecrate aultar.

When the Parson of Aldam heard that, hee began to shrinke backe, & would haue left his saying of Masse. Thē start vp Iohn Clerke, and said: M. Auerth, be not afrayd, ye haue a * Superaltare. Go forth with your busines man.

Then Foster with his armed mē, tooke Doctour Taylour, and led him with strong hand out of the Church, and the Popish Prelate proceeded in his Romishe Idolatry. Doct. Taylours wife, who folowed her husband into the Church, when she saw her husband thus violently thrust out of his Church, she kneeled downe, & held vp her hāds, and with loude voyce sayd: I beseeche God the righteous Iudge to auenge this iniury, that this Popish Idolatour this day doth to the bloud of Christ. Then they thrust her out of the Church also, and shut to the dores: for they feared that the people woulde haue rent their Sacrificer in peeces. Notwithstāding, one or two threw in great stones at the windowes, and missed very little the popish masser.

Thus you see how without consente of the people, the Popishe Masse was agayne set vp, wyth battayle array, with swordes and buckelers, with violence and tyranny: which practise the Papistes haue euer yet vsed. As for reason, lawe, or Scripture, they haue none on their parte. Therefore they are the same that saith: The law of vnrighteousnes is our strength: Come, let vs oppresse the righteous without any feare, &c.

Within a day or two after, with all haste possible, this Foster and Clerke made a complaint of Doctour Taylour, by a letter written to Steuen Gardiner Byshop of Winchester, and Lord Chauncellour.

When the Byshop heard this, he sent a letter missiue to Doct. Taylour, commaunding him within certaine daies, to come and to appeare before him vpon his allegiance,* to aunswere such complayntes as were made against him.

When Doctour Taylours frends heard of thys, they were exceeding sory and agreeued in minde: which then foreseing to what end the same matter would come, seeing also all truth and iustice were troden vnder foote, and falsehode with cruell tyranny were set aloft and ruled all the whole route: his frendes I say came to him, and earnestly counselled him to departe and flye, alledging and declaring vnto him,* that he could neyther be indifferently heard to speake his conscience and mind, nor yet looke for iustice or fauour at the sayd Chauncellours handes, who as it was well knowne, was most fierce and cruell: but must needes (if he went vp to him) wayte for imprisonment and cruell death at his hands.

Then sayd D. Taylour to his frends: Deare frendes,* I most hartely thanke you, for that ye haue so tender a care ouer me. And although I knowe, that there is neither iustice nor truth to be looked for at my aduersaries handes, but rather imprisonment and cruell death: yet know I my cause to be so good and righteous, and the truth so strong vpon my side, that I will by Gods grace go and appeare before them and to their beardes resist their false doings.

Then sayd his frendes: M. Doctour, we thinke it not best so to do. You haue sufficiētly done your duety, and testified the truth, both by your godly Sermons, and also in resisting the Parson of Aldam, with other that came hytherto bring in againe the popish Masse. And for as much as our Sauour Christ willeth and biddeth vs, that when they persecute vs in one City, we should flie into another:* we thinke in flying at this time ye should do best, keeping your selfe against another time whē the Church shall haue Page 1520 great neede of such diligent teachers, and godly Pastors.

Oh (quoth Doct. Taylour) what will ye haue me to do? I am now olde, and haue already liued too long to see these terrible and most wicked dayes. Flye you, and do as your conscience leadeth you.* I am fully determined (with Gods grace) to go to the Bishop, & to his beard to tell him that he doth nought, God shall well hereafter raise vp teachers of his people, whiche shall with much more diligence and fruite teach them, then I haue done. For God will not forsake his Church, though now for a time he trieth and correcteth vs, and not without a iust cause.

As for me, I beleeeue before God, I shall neuer be able to do God so good seruice, as I may do now: nor I shall neuer haue so glorious a calling, as I now haue, nor so great mercy of God profered me, as is now at this present. For what Christian man woulde not gladly dye against the Pope and his adherents? I know that the Papacie is the kingdome of Antichrist, altogether full of lyes, altogether full of falsehood: so that all their doctrine, euen from Christes Crosse be my speede and S. Nicholas,* vnto the end of their Apocalyps, is nothing but Idolatry, superstition, errours, hypocrisie and lyes.

Wherefore I beseech you, and all other my frendes, to pray for me, & I doubt not, but God will geue me strēgth and his holy spirit, y^t all mine aduersaries shal haue shame of their doings.

When his frends saw him so constaunt, and fully determined to go, they with weeping eyes commended him vnto God: and he within a day or two prepared himselfe to his iourney, leauing his cure with a godly olde Priest, named Syr Richard Yeoman, who afterward for Gods truth was burnt at Norwich.*

There was also in Hadley one Alcocke, a very godly man, well learned in the holy Scriptures, who (after Sir Richard Yeoman was driuen away) vsed dayly to reade a chapter, and to say the English Letany in Hadley Church. But him they fet vp to London, and cast him in prison in Newgate: where after a yeare imprisonment, he died.

But let vs returne to Doctour Taylour agayne, who being accompanied with a seruaunt of his owne, named Iohn Hull, tooke his iourney towards London. By the way this Iohn Hull laboured to counsell and perswade him very earnestly to flie, and not to come to the Byshop, and profered himselfe to go with him to serue him, and in all perils to venter his li•e for him, and with him.

*But in no wise would Doctour Taylour consent or agree thereunto, but sayd: Oh Iohn, shall I geue place to this thy counsell & worldly perswasion, and leaue my flock in this daunger? Remember the good shepeheard Christ, whiche not alonely fed his flocke, but also died for hys flocke. Him must I follow, and with Gods grace will do.

Therefore good Iohn pray for me: and if thou seest me weake at any time, * comfort me, and discourage me not in this my godly enterprise and purpose. Thus they came vp to London, and shortly after Doctour Taylour presented himselfe to the Bishop of Winchester Steuen Gardiner, then Lord Chauncellour of England.

For this hath bene one great abuse in Englande these many yeares, that such offices as haue ben of most importance and waight, haue commonly bene committed to Bishops and other spirituall men, whereby three diuelish mischiefes and inconueniences haue happened in this Realme, to the great dishonour of God, and vtter neglecting of the flocke of Christ: the which three be these.

First, they haue had small leysure to attende to theyr pastorall cures, which thereby haue bene vtterly neglected and left vndone.

Secondly, it hath also pufte vp many Byshops and other spirituall persons into such hautines and pryde, that they haue thought no noble man in the Realme worthy to be their equall and fellow.

Thirdly, where they by this meanes knew the very secretes of Princes, * they being in such high offices, haue caused the same to be knowne in Rome, afore the kings could accomplish and bring their ententes to passe in England. By this meanes hath the Papacy bene so maintained, and things ordered after their wils and pleasures, that much mischief hath happened in this Realme and others, sometime to the destruction of Princes, and sometime to the vtter vndoing of many common wealthes.

Now when Gardiner saw Doctour Taylour, he according to his common custome, all •o reuiled him, calling him knaue, Traytor, hereticke, with many other villanous reproches: which all Doctour Taylour heard patiently, and at the last sayd vnto him:

*My Lord (quoth he) I am neither Traytour nor hereticke, but a true subiect, and a faithfull Christian man, and am come according to your cōmandement, to know what is the cause that your Lordship hath sent for me.

Then sayde the Bishop, art thou come, thou villaine? How darest thou looke me in the face for shame? Knowest thou not who I am?

Yes (quoth Doctor Taylor) I knowe who yee are. * Ye are Doctor Steuen Gardinar Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chauncellour, & yet but a mortall man I trow. But if I shoulde be afrayde of your Lordly lookes, why feare you not God, the Lord of vs all? Howe dare yee for shame looke any Christian man in the face, * seeing ye haue forsaken the trueth, denyed our sauoure Christ and hys word, & done contrary to your own othe & writing? With what countenance wil ye appeare before the Iudgement seate of Christ, and aunswere to your othe made, first vnto that blessed king Henry 8. of famous memorye, and afterward vnto that blessed king Edward the 6. his sonne?

The bishop answered: Tush, tush,* that was Herodes othe, vnlawfull, and therfore worthy to be broken. I haue done well in breaking it: and (I thanke God) I am come home agayne to our mother to the Catholicke Church of Rome, and so I would thou shouldest doe.

Doctor Taylor answered: Should I forsake y^e Church of Christ, which is founded vpon the true foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes, to approue those lyes: erroures, superstitions and Idolatries, that the Popes and their company at this day so blasphemously do approue? Nay God forbid.*

Let the pope and his returne to our sauioure Christ, and his word, and thrust out of the Churches such abhominable Idolatries as he maintayneth, and then wil christen men turne vnto him. You wrote truely agaynst hym, and were sworne agaynst him.

I tell thee (quoth the Bishop of Winchester) it was Herodes oth, vnlawfull, and therfore ought to be broken and not kept, and our holy father the Pope hath discharged me of it.

Then sayd D. Taylor:* but you shall not so be discharged before Christ, who doubtles will require it at youre handes, as a lawfull othe made to your liege & soueraigne Lorde the king, from whose obedience no man can assoyle you, neither the Pope nor none of his.

I see (quoth the Bishop) thou art an arrogant knaue,* and a very foole.

My Lord (quoth Doctor Taylor) leaue your vnseemly rayling at me, which is not seemely for such a one in authoritie as you are. For I am a Christian man, and you know that He that sayeth to his brother Racha, is in daunger of a Counsell, and he that sayth thou foole, is in daunger of hel fire.

The Bishop answered, ye are all false, and lyars all the sort of you. Nay (quoth D. Taylor) we are true men, and know that is written: Os quod mentitur, occidit animam: & agayne, Perdes omnes qui loquuntur mendacium. i. The mouth that lyeth slayeth the soule. And agayne Lord God thou shalt destroy all that speake lyes. And therefore we abide by the truth of gods word which ye contrary to your own conscience deny and forsake.

Thou art maryed (quoth the B.) Yea, (quoth Doctour Taylor) that I thank God I am,* and haue had nine children, and all in lawfull matrimony, and blessed be God y^t ordayned matrimony, and commaunded that euerye man that hath not the gift of continency shoulde mary a wife of his owne, and not liue in adultery, or whoredome.

Then sayd the bishop: thou hast resisted the Queenes Proceedinges,* and wouldest not suffer the Parson of Aldam a very vertuous and deuout Priest, to say Masse in Hadley. Doctor Taylor answered. My Lorde I am Parson of Hadley, and it is agaynst all right, conscience and lawes, that any man shall come into my charge & presume to infect the flock committed vnto me,* with venome of the Popish Idolatrous Masse.

With that the Bishop waxed very angry, & said, Thou art a blasphemous hereticke in deede, that blasphemest the blessed sacrament (and put of his cap) and speakest agaynst the holy Masse, which is made a sacrifice for the quick and the dead. D. Taylor answered, Nay I blaspheeme not the blessed sacrament which Christ instituted, but I reuerence it as a true christian ought to doe,* and confesse that Christ ordayned the holy communion in the remembrance of his death and passion,* which• when we keepe according to his ordinaunce, we (through fayth) eat the body of Chryst, and drinke his bloud geuing thanks for our redemption, and this is our sacrifice for the quicke & the dead, to geue God thanks for his mercifull goodnes shewed to vs, in that he gaue his sonne Christ vnto the death for vs.*

Thou sayst well (quoth the Bishop) It is all y^t thou hast sayd, and more to, for it is a propitiatory sacrifice for y^e quick & dead. Thē answered D. Taylor: Christ gaue hymselfe Page 1521 to die for our redemption vpon the Crosse, whose body there offered, was the propitiatory Sacrifice, full, perfect, and sufficient vnto saluation, for all them that beleue in him. And this sacrifice did our Sauour Christ offer in his owne person himselfe once for all,* neither can any Priest any more offer him, nor we neede no more propitiatory sacrifice, and therefore I say with Chrysostome, and all the Doctours: Our Sacrifice is only memoratiue, in the remembrance of Christes death and passion, a sacrifice of thankesgeuing, and therefore Fathers called it Eucharistia: And other sacrifice hath the Church of God none.

It is true (quoth the Byshop) the Sacrament is called Eucharistia, a thankesgeuing, because we there geue thanks for our redemption, and it is also a sacrifice propitiatory for the quicke and the dead, which thou shalt confesse ere thou and I haue done. Then called the Bishop his men, and sayde: haue this fellow hence, and carry him to the Kings bench, and charge the keeper he be straitly kept.

Then kneeled Doctor Taylour down and held vp both his hands, and said: Good Lord, I thanke thee, and from the tyranny of the Byshop of Rome,* and all his detestable errours, Idolatries, and abominations, good Lord deliuer vs: And God be praysed for good King Edward. So they caried him to prison, to the Kings Bench, where he lay prisoner almost two yeares.

☞ This is the summe of that first talke, as I sawe it mentioned in a Letter that Doctour Taylour wrote to a frend of his, thanking God for his grace, that he had confessed his truth, and was founde worthy for truth to suffer prison and bands, beseeching his frendes to pray for him, that he might perseuere constaunt vnto the ende.

Being in prison, Doctour Taylour spent all hys tyme in prayer, reading the holy Scriptures, and writing, and preaching,* and exhorting the prisoners and such as resorted to him, to repentance and amendement of life.

Within a fewe dayes after, were diuerse other learned and godly men in sondry countreys of England committed to prison for Religion, so that almost all the prisons in England were become right Christian schooles & Churches,* so that there was no greater comfort for Christian harts, then to come to the prisons, to beholde their vertuous conuersation, and to heare their prayers, preachings, most godly exhortations, and consolations.

Now were placed in Churches, blinde and ignoraunt Massemongers, with their Latine babblings and apishe ceremonies: who lyke cruell Wolues spared not to murther all such, as any thing at all, but once whispered against their Popery. As for the godly preachers which were in King Edwardes tyme, they were either fled the Realme, or else,* as the Prophets did in Kinge Achabs dayes, they were priuely kept in corners. As for as many as the Papistes could lay hold on, they were sent into prison, there as Lambes waiting when the Butchers would call them to the slaughter.

When Doctour Taylour was come into y^e prison called the Kings Bench, hee founde therein the vertuous and vigilant preacher of Gods word, M. Bradford: which mā for his innocent and godly liuing,* his deuout, & vertuous preaching, was worthyly counted a miracle of our time, as euen his aduersaries must needes cōfesse. Finding this man in prison, he began to exhort him to faith, strength, & patience, and to perseuere constant vnto the end. M. Bradford hearing this, thanked God that he had prouided hym such a cōfortable prison felow: & so they both together lauded God, and cōtinued in prayer, reading, & exhorting one the other: In so much that D. Taylour told his friends y^t came to visite him, that God had most graciously prouided for him, to send him to that prison where he founde such an anngell of God, to be in his company to comfort him.

¶Doctour Taylour brought foorth to be depriued.

¶After that Doct. Taylour had lyen in prison a whyle, he was cited to appeare in the Arches at Bow Church to aunswere vnto such matter, as there should be objected against him. At the day appoynted, he was led thether, hys keeper wayting vpon him. Where, whē he came, he stoutly and strongly defended his Mariage, affirming by the Scriptures of God, by the Doctours of the primitiue Church,* by both Lawes Ciuill and Canon, that it is lawfull for Priests to marry, and y^t such as haue not the gift of continencie, are bounde in paine of damnation to marry. This did he so plainely proue, that the Iudge could geue no sentence of diuorce against him, but gaue sentence hee should be depriued of his benefice because he was married.*

You do me wrong then (quoth Doctour Taylour) and alledged many lawes and constitutions for himselfe, but al preuailed not. For he was againe caried into prison, & his liuings taken away, and geuen to other. As for Hadley benefice, it was geuen or sold, I wote not whether,* to one Maister Newealle, whose great vertues were altogether vnlike to Doctour Taylour his predecessour, as the poore Parishioners full well haue proued.

Doctour Taylour brought agayne before Winchester, and other Bishops.

AFTER a yeare and three quarters, or thereabout, in the which time the Papistes got certaine olde tyrannous lawes, which were put downe by King Henry the eight,* and by king Edward, to be againe reuiued by Parlament: so that now they might Ex officio▪ cite whome they would, vpon their owne suspicion, and charge hym wyth what Articles they lusted, and except they in all things agreed to their purpose, burne them: when these lawes were once stablished, they sent for Doctour Taylour with certaine other prisoners, which were agayne conuented before the Chauncellour and other Commissioners about the 22. of Ianuary. The purpose and effect of which talke betwene them, because it is sufficiently described by himselfe in hys owne letter written to a frend of his, I haue annexed the sayd letter heere vnder as foloweth.

¶A Letter of Doctour Taylour, contayning and reporting the talke had betweene him and the Lord Chauncellour and other Commissioners, the 22. of Ianuary.

WHereas you would haue me to write the talke betweene the King and Queenes most honourable Counsell and me on Tuesday, the xxij. of Ianuary, so farre as I remember: First my Lord Chauncellour sayd: You, among other are at this present time sent for,* to enioy the Kings and Queenes Maiestis fauour and mercy, if you will now rise againe with vs from the fall whiche wee generally haue receaued in this Realme, from the which (God be praised) we are now clearely deliuered, miraculously. If you will not rise with vs now, and receaue mercy now offered, you shall haue iudgement according to your demerites. To this I aunswered: that so to rise, should be the greatest fall that euer I could receiue: for I should so fall from my deare Sauour Christ, to Antichrist.* For I do beleue that the Religion set foorth in King Edwards dayes, was according to the veyne of the holy Scripture, which containeth fully all the rules of our Christian Religion, from the which I do not intend to decline so long as I liue, by Gods grace.

Then Mayster Secretary Bourne sayde: whyche of the Religions meane ye of in King Edwards dayes? For ye knowe there were diuers bookes of Religion set foorth in his dayes. There was a Religion set foorth in a Cathechisme by my Lord of Caunterbury. Do you meane that you will sticke to that?

I aunswered: My Lorde of Caunterbury made a Cathechisme, to be translated into English, which booke was not of his owne making: yet he set it foorth in his owne name, and truely that booke for the time did much good. But there was after that set foorth by the most innocent King Edward (for whome, God bee prayesd euerlastingly) the whole Churchservice, with great deliberation, and the aduise of the best learned men of the Realme, and authorised by the whole Parliament, and receiued and published gladly by the whole Realme: which booke was neuer reformed but once, and yet by that one reformation it was so fully perfited, according to the rules of our Christian Religion in euery behalfe, that no Christian conscience could be offended with any thing therein contayned: I meane of that booke reformed.

Then my Lord Chauncellour sayd: Diddest thou neuer reade the booke that I set foorth of the Sacrament?

I aunswered that I had read it.

Then he sayd: How likest thou that booke? With that,* one of the Counsell (whose name I know not) sayd: My Lord, that is a good question: for I am sure, that booke stoppeth all their mouthes. Then sayd I: My Lord, I thinke many things be farre wide from the truth of Gods word in that booke.

Then my Lord sayd: Thou art a very varlet.* To that I aunswered: that is as ill as Racha or Fatue. Then my Lord sayd: thou art an ignoraunt beetill brow.

To that I aunswered:* I haue read ouer and ouer agayne the holy Scriptures, and S. Augustines workes through, S. Cyprian, Eusebius, Origine, Gregory Nazianzen, with diuers other bookes through once: therefore I thanke God I am not vtterly ignoraunt. Besydes these, my Lorde, I professed the Ciuill lawes, as your Lordship did, and I haue read ouer the Canon law also.

Then my Lord sayd: with a corrupt iudgement thou readest all things, Touching my profession it is Diuinitie, in whiche I haue written diuers bookes. Then I saide: my Lord, ye did write one booke De vera obedientia: I would you had bene constant in that: for in deede you neuer did declare a good conscience, that I heard of, but in that one booke.

Page 1522 Then my Lord sayd: tut, tut, tut, I wrote agaynst Bucer in Priestes Mariages: but such bookes please not such wretches, as thou art, which hast bene maryed many yeares.

To that I aunswered: I am maryed in deed, and I haue hadde nine children in holy Matrimonye, I thanke God: and this I am sure of,* that your proceedinges now at this present in this Realme agaynst Priestes Mariages is the maintenance of the doctrine of deuils, agaynst naturall lawe, Ciuill lawe, Canon law, generall Counsels, Canons of the Apostles, auncient Doctours, and Gods lawes.

Then spake my Lord of Duresme, saying: You haue professed the Ciuill law, as you say. Then you know that Iustinian writeth, that Priestes shoulde at theyr taking of orders sweare, that they were neuer maryed: and he bringeth in to proue that, Canones Apostolorum.

To that I aunswered: that I did not remember any such lawe of Iustinian. But I am sure that Iustinian Writeth in Titulo de indicta viduitate,* in Cod. that if one would bequeath to his wife in his Testamēt a legacy, vnder a conditiō that she shuld neuer mary agayne, and take an othe of her accomplishing of the same, yet she may mary agayne if he die, notwithstanding the aforesayd cōdition and othe taken and made agaynst Mariage: and an othe is an other maner of obligation made to God, then is a Papisticall vow made to man.

Moreouer in the Pandects it is contained, that if a man doth manumit his handmayde vnder a condition, that shee shall neuer mary: yet she may mary, and her Patrone shall loose ius patronatus, for his adding of the vnnaturall, and vnlawfull condition agaynst Matrimony.

Then my Lord Chauncellor sayd: thou sayst that Priestes may be maryed by Gods law. How prouest thou that?

*I aunswered: by the playne wordes and sentences of S. Paul, both to Timothy, & to Titus, where he speaketh most euidentlye of the mariage of Priestes, Deacons, and Byshoppes. And Chrysostome writing vpon the Epistle to Timothy sayth: It is an heresye to say that a Bishop may not be maryed.

Then sayd my Lord Chauncellor: thou lvest of Chrysostome. But thou doest, as all thy companions doe, belye euer without shame, both the Scriptures and the Doctors. Diddest thou not also say, that by the Canon lawe Priestes may be married? whiche is most vntrue: and the contrary is most true.

I aunswered: We read in the Decrees, that the foure generall Councils, Nicene, Constantinopolitane, Ephesine, and Chalcedone, haue the same authority that the foure Euangelistes haue. And we read in the same decrees (which is one of the chiefe bookes of the Canon law) that the Councell of Nicene, by the meanes of one Paphnutius,* did allow Priestes & bishops mariages. Therefore by the best part of the Canon law, Priestes may be maried.

Then my Lord Chauncellour sayd: thou falsifiest the generall Councell. For there is expresse mention in the sayde Decree, that Priestes shoulde be diuorced from their wiues,* whiche bee maried.

Then said I: if those words be there, as you say, then am I content to lose this great head of mine. Let the booke be fetched.

*Then spake my Lord of Duresme: Though they be not there, yet they may be in Ecclesiastica historia, which Eusebius wrote, out of which booke the Decree was taken.

To that sayd I: it is not like that the Pope woulde leaue out any such sentence, hauing such authority, & making so much for his purpose.

Then my Lord Chauncellor sayd: Gratian was but a patcher, & thou art glad to snatch vp such a patch as maketh for thy purpose.* I answered my Lord, I can not but maruell that you do call one of the chiefe Papistes that euer was▪ but a patcher.

Then my Lord Chauncellor sayd: Nay I call thee a snatcher & a patcher To make an end: wilt thou not returne agayne with vs to the Catholicke Church? and with that he rose.

And I sayd. By Gods grace I will neuer departe from Christes Church. Then I required that I might haue some of my frendes to come to me in prison: and my Lord Chauncellour sayde: thou shalt haue iudgement within this weeke: and so was I deliuered agayne vnto my keeper,* My Lord of Duresme would that I should beleue as my father and my mother. I alledged S. Augustine: that we ought to preferre Gods word before all men.

And thus muh was conteined in the foresayd letter of Doctor Taylour for that matter.

Besides this letter moreouer he directed an other writing in like maner to an other frend of his concerning the causes wherfore he was condemned, whiche we thought likewise here to expresse as foloweth.

¶The copy of an other Letter to his frend touching his assertions of the Mariage of Priestes, and other causes for the which he was condemned.

IT is heresy to defend any doctrine agaynst the holy scrip|ture. Therefore the Lord Chauncellour and Bishops cōsenting to his sentence agaynst me, be heretickes. For they haue geuen sentence agaynst the mariage of priests, know'ing that S. Paul to Timothe and Titus writeth playnly,* that Bishops, Priestes, & Deacons may be maried: know'ing also that by S. Paules doctrine, it is the doctrine of y^e deuils to inhibite Matrimony. And S. Paule willeth euery faythfull Minister to teach the people so, least they be deceiued by the marked Marchauntes. 1. Tim. 4.

These Byshops are not ignoraunt, that it is onely S. Paules counsell, and lawfull, but Gods commaundemēt also to mary, for such as cannot otherwise liue chaste, neither auoyd fornication.*

They know that such as do mary, do not sinne.

They know that God, before sinne was, ordeined matrimony, & that in Paradise, betwene two of his principall creatures, man, and woman.

They knowe what spirite they haue, whiche saye it is euill to mary (seing God sayd: it is not good for man to be alone without a wife) hauing no speciall gift contrary to the generall commaundemēt and ordinance, diuers times repeated in the booke of Genesis,* which is to encrease and multiply.

They know that Abraham caried into the lād of Canaan his old & yet barrayne wife the vertuous womā Sara with him, leauing father and mother,* and country otherwise at Gods commaundement. For though father & mother, and other frendes are deare and neare, yet none are so dearely and nearely ioyned together, as man & wife in ma'trimony, which must needes be holy, for that it is a figure & similitude of Christ and his Church.

They know that S. Paul geueth a great prayse to matrimony, calling it honorable,* and that not onely to and among many, but to and among all men without exceptiō, whosoever haue need of that Gods remedy, for mans and womans infirmity.

They know y^t if there were any sinne in Matrimony,* it were chiefly to be thought to be in the bedcompany. But S. Paul sayth: that the bedcompany is vndefiled.

They know that the hauing of a wife was not an impediment for Abraham, Moyses, Isaac, Iacob, Daud. &c. to talke with God, neither to y^e Leuites, bishops, & priests office in the time of the old Testament or the New.

They know y^t Christ would not be cōceiued,* or borne of his blessed mother the virgine Mary, before she was espoused in mariage, his owne ordinaunce.

They know by S. Cyprian and Sainct Augustine that a vow is not an impediment sufficient to let Matrimony or to diuorce the same.

They know that S. Chrysostome sayth it is heresie to affirme that a bishop may not haue a wife.*

They know that Ambrose will haue no commaundement but counsaile onely to be geuen, touching the obseruing of virginitie.

They know that Christ with his blessed mother & the Apostles were at a mariage, and beautified and honoured the same with hys presence, and first miracle.

To be short: they know that al that I haue here written touching the mariage of Priestes, is true & they know that the papistes themselues do not obserue touching that matter, their owne lawes and Canons, and yet they continue marked in conscience with an hote iron, as detestable heretickes in this behalfe. The Lorde geue them grace to repent, if it be his good will, Amen.

My second cause why I was condemned an hereticke is,* that I denyed Transubstantiation and Concomitation, two iuggling wordes of the papistes, by the whiche they doe beleue and will compel al other to beleue y^t Christes natural body is made of bread, & the Godhead by and by to be ioyned thereunto: so y^t immediately after y^e words (called the wordes of consecration) there is no more bread and wine in the sacrament, but the substaunce onely of the bodye and bloud of Christ together with his Godhead: so that the same being now Christ, both God and man ought to be worshipped with godly honour, and to be offered to God, both for the quick & the dead, as a sacrifice propiciat'ry and satisfactory for the same, This matter was not lōg debated in words: but because I denyed the foresaid papisticall doctrine, (yea rather playne most wicked Idolatry, blasphemy and heresie) I was iudged an hereticke.*

I did also affirme the pope to be Antichrist, and popery Antichristianitie.

And I confessed the Doctrine of the Bible to be a sufficient doctrine, touching all and singular matters of Christian Religion, and of saluation.

I also alledged that the othe against the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, was a lawfull othe,* and so was the othe made by vs all, touching the kings or Queenes preeminence. For Chrisostomus sayth: That Apostles, Euangelistes, Page 1523 and all men in euery realme were euer, and ought to be euer, touching both body and goodes, in subiection to the kingly authority, who hath the sworde in his hand, as Gods principall officer and Gouvernour in euery Realme. I desired the Bishops to repent for bringing the Realme from Christ to Antichrist,* from light to darkenes, from verity to vanity.

Thus you know the summe of my last examination, & condemnation. Pray for me, and I will pray for you.

God be prayسد: since my condemnation, I was neuer frayd to dye:* Gods will be done. If I shrink from Gods truth▪ I am sure of an other maner of death thē had Iudge Hales. But God be prayسد, euen from the bottome of my hart, I am vnmoueably settled vppon the Rocke, nothyng doubting, but that my deare God will performe and finish the worke that he hath begon in me, and other. To him be al honor both now and euer through Christ our onely and whole Sauior. Amen.

And thus much wrote Doctour Taylour concerning this matter, to his frend.

You heard in the former aunsweres a little before certeine allegations touched of Doctour Taylour out of S. Cyprian, Augustine, Chrysostome, and Ambrose, touching the lawfulness of Priestes mariage. Now ye shal heare the places of the sayd Doctors cited and produced out of their owne bookes, as here ensueth,

¶The places of the Doctours alledged before in Doctour Taylours Letter.

S. Cyprian in his 11. Epistle. Lib. 1.

*THIS question was asked of S. Cyprian, what shoulde be done with those religious persons, that could not keepe their chastity as they had vowed. He answered thus: Thou doest aske what we do iudge of Virgins, whiche after they hadde decreed to liue chastly, are afterward found in one bed with a man. Of the which thou sayst that one of them was a Deacon. We do with great sorrow see the great ruine of many persons whiche commeth by the reason of such vnlawfull and perilous cōpanying together. Wherfore, if they haue dedicate themselues vnto Christ in fayth, to liue purely and chastly, then let them so remayne without any fable and stronglye & stedfastly abide the rewarde of virginitye. But & if they will not abide, or els cannot abide: then it is better to mary, then for to fall into the fire of concupiscence: And let thē geue to the brethren & sisterne none occasion of sclaunder. &c.

¶Saynt Augustine in his booke, De bono coniugali ad Iulianum.

CERTayne men doe affirme, those men to be aduouterers, that doe marry,* after that they haue vowed chastity. But I do affirme that those men do greuously sinne, the whiche do separate them. &c.

¶Ambrose. 32. Quest. 1. Cap. Integritas.

*CHastitye of the bodye ought to bee desired of vs: the whiche thing I do geue for a counsell, and do not commaund it imperiously. For Virginity is a thing that alonelye ought to be coūselled, but not to be commaunded: it is rather a thing of voluntary will and not a precept.

¶A briefe recapitulation out of Doctour Taylours causes afore touched for the Reader, more euidently to see how the Papistes do agaynst their own knowledge, in forbiddinge Priests Mariage.

THE Popes Clergy forbidding Ecclesiastical persons to mary, do against their conscience & knowledge as may well be proued by these causes hereunder folowing.

1. First, they know that Matrimony in the old testament, De iure institutionis, is indifferently permitted to all menne without any exception.
2. Secondly, they know, that in the old Testament, De facto, both Priestes, Leuites, Prophets, Patriarches, and al other had theyr wiues.
3. Thirdly, they know that Matrimony was permitted & instituted of God for two principall endes: to wit, for procreation, and auoyding of sinne.
4. Fourtly, they know, that in the old testamēt, God, not onely instituted and permitted Matrimony to be free, but also induceth & appoynteth mē to mary and take wiues, in these wordes: It is not good for a man to be alone. &c.

5 Fiftly, they know, that in the new testament S. Paule permitteth the state of Matrimony free to all men, hauing not the gift of continency, and forbiddeth none.

6. Sixtly, they know that in the new Testament the sayd S. Paule not only permitteth, but also expressly willeth & chargeth men hauing not the gift, to mary, saying: For auoyding fornication let euery man haue his wife. &c.

7. Seuently, they know that in the new Testament the sayd S. Paul, not onely permitteth and commaūdeth, but also commendeth and prayseth the state of Matrimonye, Hebr. 13. Calling it honorable: and the bedcompany to be vndefiled. &c.

8. Eightly, they know, that in the new testament Christ himselfe, not onely was not conceiued nor borne of the vir^gine before she was espoused in matrimonye, but also that both he and his blessed mother did beutify and honour the state of matrimony with their presence: yea in the same began his first miracle.

9. Ninthly, they know, both by the old testament & new, that mariage is no impediment to walke in the obediēce of Gods commandement, for both Abraham caryed into the land of Canaan his old, yea and barrayne wife, the vertuous woman Sara with him: & also to Isaac, Iacob, Moses, Daud, and other, their mariage was no impedemēt to them to talk with God: neither to other Leuites, bishops, and Priestes in the time both of the old testament, & of the new. Agayne, neither was it a let to Peter, Philip, & other both to haue their wiues with them, and also to supply the office of Apostleship.

10. Tenthly, they know both by the old testamēt & new, y^t sinnefull fornicatiō & adultery depriueth man of Gods fauor & graces of the holy Ghost, which graces especially be requisite in men of the Church.

11. Eleuently they know in theyr owne secret conscience, & by experience, that neither they which enioyne this vow of chastity, nor they which take it, doe obserue the vowe of chastity. Whereupon rise inconueniences more then can be expressed: but the Lord aboue knoweth all, besides the secret murders peraduenture of many a poore infant. &c.

12. Twelfthly, they knowe, by S. Cyprian. Epist. 11. and S. Augustine. Lib. De bono coniugali ad Iulianum, that a vowe is no impediment sufficient to let Matrimony, or to diuorce the same.

13. Thirtenthly, they know that Chrysostome affirmeth it to be an heresy to say, that a byshop may not haue a wife.

14. Fourtenthly, they know that S. Ambrose. 32. q. 1. Integritas, will haue no commaundement, but counsel onely to be geuen, touching the obseruing of virginity.

15. Fiftenthlye, they knowe that before the time of Pope Hildebrand, that is, during that time of 1000. yeares after Christ, mariage was neuer restrained by any forceable necessity of vow, from men of the Church.

16. Sixtenthly, they know, that S. Paul calleth it the doctrine of deuils, to forbid meates, and maryage which God hath left free with thankes geuing for necessity of man and woman.

After that Doct. Taylour thus with great spirite and courage had aunswered for himselfe, and stoutly rebuked his aduersaries for breaking their oth made before to king Henry and to king Edwarde his sonne, and for betraying the realme into the power of the Romain bishop, they per'ceiuing that in no case he could be styrred to their wils and purpose, that is, to turne with them from Christ to Antichrist, committed him therupon to prison againe, where he endured till the last of Ianuary.

D. Taylour the fourth tyme with M. Bradford, and M. Saunders, brought before Winchester and other Byshops.

Vpon which day & yeare aforesayd,* D. Tailour and M. Bradford, and M. Saüders were agayne called to appeare before the byshop of Winchester, the bishop of Norwich, of London, of Salisbury, and of Duresme, and ther were charged agayne with heresy & schisme, and therfore a determinate answeere was required: whether they woulde submit themselues to the Romaine byshop & abiure there errors or els they would according to theyr lawes proceed to theyr condemnation.

When D. Taylour and his felowes, M. Bradford and M. Saunders heard this, they answered stoutly and boldly,* that they would not depart frō the truth which they had preached in king Edwards dayes, neither would they sub'mit themselues to the romish Antichrist but they thanked God for so great mercy, that he would cal them to be worthy to suffer for his word and truth.

When the Bishops saw them so boldly, constanly, and vnmoueably fixed in the truth,* they read y^e sentēce of death vpon them, which whē they had heard, they most ioyfully gaue God thankes, and stoutly sayde vnto the Byshops: We doubt not but God the righteous Iudge, will require Page 1524 our bloud at your handes, and the proudest of you all shall repent this receiuing agayne of Antichrist, and your tyranny that ye now shew agaynst the flocke of Christ.

So was Doctor Taylour nowe condemned, committed to the Clinke, & the keepers charged straitlye to keepe him:,* for ye haue nowe an other maner of charge (quoth the Lord Chauncellour) then ye had before: therefore looke ye take heed to it.

Whē the keeper brought him toward the prison, y^t people flocked about to gase vpō him: vnto whō he sayd: God be praysed (good people) I am come away from thē vndefiled,* & will confirme the truth with my bloud. So was he bestowed in the Clincke till it was toward night, and thē he was remoued to the Counter by the Poultry.

When D. Taylour had lyen in the sayd Counter in the poultry a seuennight or there aboutes prisoner, the fourth day of February, Anno 1555. Edmund Boner Byshop of London with others, came to the said Counter to disgrade him, bringing with them such ornaments, as do appertein to theyr massing Mūmery. Now being come, he called for the sayd D. Taylor to be brought vnto him (the bishop being then in the chamber,* where the keeper of the Counter and his wife lay.) So D. Taylour was brought downe frō the chamber aboue that, to the sayd Boner. And att his comming, the Bishop sayd: Mayster Doctour, I woulde you would remember your selfe, and turn to your mother holy Church: so may you do wel enough, and I wil sue for your pardon. Wherunto M. Taylor aunswered: I would you and your felowes would turne to Christ. As for me I will not turne to Antichrist. Well (quoth the byshop) I am come to disgrace you: wherfore put on these vestures. No (quoth Doct. Taylour) I will not. Wilt thou not, said the Bishop? I shall make thee, ere I goe. Quoth Doct. Taylor, you shal not by the grace of God. Thē he charged him vpon his obedience to do it: but he would not do it for him.

So he willed another to put them on his backe: & whē he was throughly furnished therewith, he set his handes by his side, walking vp and down, and sayd: how say you my Lord, am I not a goodly foole? how say you my maysters? If I were in cheape, should I not haue boyes enough to laugh at these apish toyes, & toying trumpery? So the byshop scraped his fingers thūbes, & the crowne of his head, and did the rest of such like deuilish obseruaunces.

At the last, when he should haue geuen D. Taylour a stroke on the brest with his Crosierstaffe, the Bishoppes Chapleine sayd: my Lord strike him not, for hee wyll sure strike agayne. Yea by S. Peter will I, quoth Doct. Taylour. The cause is Christes: and I were no good Christian if I would not fight in my Maysters quarrell. So the byshop laid his curse vpon him, but stroke him not. Then D. Taylor sayd: though you do curse me, yet God doth blesse me.* I haue the witnes of my conscience, that ye haue done me wrong and violence: And yet I pray God (if it be hys will) forgeue you. But from the tyranny of the Byshop of Rome, & his detestable enormities, good Lord deliuer vs. And in going vp to his chamber, he still sayd: God deliuer me from you, God deliuer me frō you. And when he came vp, he told Maister Bradford (for they both lay in one chāber) that he had made the Byshop of London afearde: for (sayth he laughingly) his Chapleine gaue him counsel not to strike me with his Crosierstaffe, for that I would strike agayne: and by my troth (sayde he rubbing his handes) I made him beleue I would do so in deed.

The night after that he was disgraded, his wyfe and his sonne Thomas resorted to him,* and were by the gētlenes of the keepers permitted to suppe with hym. For this difference was euer found betweene the keepers of the byshops prisons, and the keepers of the kinges prisons: that the Bishops keepers were euer cruell, blasphemous, and tyrannous, like theyr Maysters: but the Keepers of the kinges prisons shewed for the most part, as much fauor, as they possible might.

So came Doctor Taylours wife, his sonne, and Iohn Hull his seruaunt, to sup with him: and at their comming in afore supper, they kneeled downe and praied, saying the Letany.

*After supper walking vp and downe, he gaue GOD thanks for his grace, that had so called him and geuen him strength to abide by his holy worde: and turning to hys sonne Thomas: My deare sonne (sayd he) almighty God blesse thee, & geue thee his holy spirit, to be a true seruaunt of Christ, to learn his word, and constantly to stand by his trueth all thy long life. And my sonne, see that thou feare God alwaies. Flee from all sinne & wicked liuing: be vertuous, serue God with dayly prayer, and apply thy booke. In any wise see thou be obedient to thy Mother, loue her, and serue her: be ruled by her now in thy youth, and folow her good counsell in all thinges. Beware of lewd company of young men that feare not God, but folowe theyr lewde lustes and vayne appetites. Flye from Whooredome, and hate all filthy liuing, remembring that I thy father do dye in the defence of holy mariage. And another day whē god shall blesse thee, loue & cherish the poore people, & coūt that thy chiefe riches is to be rich in almes: and when thy mother is waxed old, forsake her not, but prouide for her to thy power, and see that she lacke nothing: For so will GOD blesse thee, and geue the long life vpon earth and prosperity: which I pray God to graunt thee.

Then turning to his wife: * My deare wife (quoth he) continue stedfast in the feare and loue of God, keepe your selfe vndefiled from theyr Popysh Idolatryes, and superstitions. I haue bene vnto you a faythfull yokefellow, and so haue you bene vnto me, for the which I pray GOD to reward you, and doubt you not deare wife, but God wyll reward it.

Now the time is come that I shall be taken from you, & you discharged of the wedlocke bond towards me: therfore I will geue you my counsell what I thinke most expedient for you. You are yet a childbearing woman, and therfore it will be most conuenient for you to marry. For doubtlesse you shall neuer be at a conuenient stay for your selfe and our poore children, nor out of trouble, tyll you be maryed. Therefore as soone as God will prouide it, marry with some honest faythfull man that feareth God. Doubt you not, God will prouide an honest husband for you, & he wil be a mercifull father to you▪ and to my children: whom I pray you, bring vp in the feare of God, & in learning, to the vttermost of your power, and keep them from this romish Idolatry. When he had thus said, they with weping teares prayed together, and kissed one the other: * & he gaue to his wife a booke of the Church seruike, set out by Kyng Edward, which in the time of his imprisonment he daylye vsed. And vnto his sonne Thomas he gaue a Latin booke, cōteining the notable sayings of the old martyrs, gathered out of Ecclesiastica historia: & in the end of that book he wrote his Testament and last Vale, as hereafter foloweth.

¶ The last will and Testament of Doctor Rowland Taylour, Parson of Hadley. *

I Say to my wife, and to my children: The Lord gaue you vnto me, and the Lord hath taken me from you, and you from me: blessed be the name of the Lord. I beleue that they are blessed which dye in the Lord. God careth for Sparowes, and for the heares of our heades. I haue euer founde him more faythfull and fauorable, thē is any father or husband. Trust ye therefore in him by the meanes of our deare Sauior Christes merites: beleue, loue, feare and obey him: pray to him, for he hath promised to helpe. Count me not dead, for I shall certainly liue, and neuer dye. I go before, and you shal folow after, to our long home. I go to the rest of my children, Susan, George, Ellen, Robert and Zachary: I haue bequeathed you to the onely omnipotent.

I say to my deare frendes of Hadley, and to all other which haue heard me preache: * that I depart hence with a quiet conscience, as touching my doctrine: for the which I pray you thanke God w^t me. For I haue after my little talent declared to other, those lesiōs y^t I gathered out of gods booke, the blessed Bible. Therefore if I or any Aungell from heauen should preach to you any other Gospell, then that ye haue receiued, Gods great curse vpon that Preacher.

Beware for Gods sake, that ye deny not God, * neyther decline from the word of fayth, lest God decline from you, & so do ye euerlastingly perishe. For Gods sake beware of Popery: for though it appeare to haue in it vnitye, yet the same is in vanity, and Antichristianity, and not in Christs fayth and verity.

Beware of the sinne agaynst the holy ghost, * now after such a light opened so playnly and simply, truly, throughly and generally to all England.

The Lord graunt all men his good and holy spirit, encrease of his wisdom, condemning the wicked world,* har'ty desire to be with God & the heavenly company, through Iesus Christ our only Mediator, Aduocate, righteousnes, life, sanctification, and hope, Amen, Amen, Pray, Pray.

¶Rowland Taylour departing hence in sure hope, without all doubting of eternal saluatiō, I thāke God my heavenly father, through Iesus Christe my certeine Sauour. Amen.

Psalm. 30.

In thee O Lord haue I trusted, let me neuer be confounded.

On the next morow, after that Doct. Tailour had supped with his wife in the Counter (as is before expressed) which was the fift day of February, the Shiriffe of London, with his Officers came to the Counter by two of the clocke in the morning, and so brought forth Doctor Taylour, and without any light lead him to the Wolsacke, an Inne without Algate. D. Taylours wife suspecting that her husband should that night be caried away, watched all night within S. Butolphes Churchporch beside Algate, hauing with her two children,* the one named Elizabeth of xiiij. yeares of age (whom being left without father or mother, Doctour Taylour had brought vp of almes from iij. yeares olde) the other named Mary, D. Taylours owne daughter.

Now, when the Shiriffe & his company came against S. Butolphes church,* Elizabeth cried saying: O my deare father. Mother, mother, here is my father led away. Then cried his wife: Rowland, Rowland, where art thou? for it was a very darcke morning, that the one could not see the other. D. Taylour aunswered: deare wife, I am here, and stayed. The Shiriffes men would haue led him forth, but the Shiriffe sayd:* stay a litle maysters, I pray you, and let him speake with his wife, and so they stayed.

Then came she to him, and he tooke his daughter Mary in his armes, and hee, his wife, and Elizabeth kneeled downe & sayd the Lordes prayer. At which sight the Sheriffe wept apase, & so did diuers other of y^e company. After they had prayd, he rose vp & kissed his wife, & shooke her by the hand, & sayd: Farewell my deare wife, be of good cōfort, for I am quiet in my conscience. God shal stirre vp a father for my children. And then he kissed his daughter Mary and sayd: God blesse thee, and make thee his seruant: & kissing Elizabeth, he sayde: God blesse thee. I pray you all stande strong & stedfast vnto Christ & his word, & keepe you from idolatry. Thē said his wife: God be with thee deare Rowland. I will with Gods grace meet thee at Hadley.

And so was he led forth to the Woolsacke, and his Wife folowed him. As soone as they came to the Woolsacke, hee was put into a chamber, wherein he was kept with foure Yeomen of the Gard, and the Shiriffes men. Doctor Tailor, as soone as he was come into the chamber, fell downe on his knees & gaue himselfe wholly to prayer. The Sheriffe then seing D. Taylours wife there,* would in no case graunt her to speake any more with her husband, but gētly desired her to go to his house and take it as her owne, & promised her she should lack nothing, & sent two Officers to conduct her thither. Notwithstanding, she desired to go to her mothers, whither the Officers led her, and charged her mother to keep her there, till they came agayne.

Thus remayned Doctour Taylour in the Woolsacke, kept by the Shiriffe and his company,* till 11. of the clocke. At which time the Sheriffe of Essex was ready to receyue him: and so they set him on horseback within the Inne, the gates being shut.

At the comming out of the gates, Iohn Hull (before spokē of) stood at the rayles with Thomas Doctour Taylours sonne. When Doctour Taylour saw them, he called them, saying: Come hither my sonne Thomas. And Iohn Hull lifted the child vp, and set him on the horse before hys father. And Doct. Taylour put of his hatt and sayd to the people that stood there looking on him:* good people, this is mine owne sonne, begottē of my body in lawful matrimony: and God be blessed for lawful matrimony. Then lift he his eies towards heauen, & prayed for his sonne, layd his hat vpon the chilles head, & blessed him, and so deliuered y^e child to Iohn Hull, whō he tooke by the hand: & sayd: farewell Iohn Hull,* the faythfullest seruaunt y^t euer man had. And so they rod forth, the Shriffe of Essex with foure yeomen of the Gard, and the Shriffes men leading him.

When they were come almost at Burntwood, one Arthur Faysie,* a man of Hadley, who before tyme had bene Doctour Taylours seruaunt, met with them, and he supposing him to haue bene at liberty, sayd: Mayster Doctor I am glad to see you agayne at liberty, and came to him, & tooke him by the hand. Soft Syr (quoth the Shiriffe) he is a prisoner: what hast thou to do with him? I cry you mercy (sayd Arthur) I knewe not so muche, and I thought it none offēce to talk to a true man. The Shyriffe was verye angry with this, and threatned to cary Arthur with him to prison: notwithstāding, he bad him get him quickly away & so they rode forth to Burntwood:* where they caused to be made for D. Taylour a close hood, with two holes for hys eyes to looke out at, & a slit for his mouth to breath at. This they did, that no man should know him, nor he speak to any man. Which practise they vsed also with others. Theyr owne consciences told them,* that they lead innocent lābes to the slaughter. Wherefore they feared, least i• the people should haue heard them speake, or haue seene them, they might haue bene much more strengthened by theyr godlye exhortatiōs, to stand stedfast in Gods word, and to •ye the superstitions and Idolatries of the Papacy.

All the way Doct. Taylour was ioyfull and mery, a• one that accounted himselfe goyng to a most pleasant banquet or bridall.* He spake many notable things to the Shiriffe and Yeomen of the Gard that conducted him, and oftē moued them to weepe through his much earnest calling vpon them to repēt, and to amend theyr euill and wicked liuing. Oftentimes also he caused them to wonder and reioyce, to see him so cōstant and stedfast, voyd of all feare, ioifull in hart, & glad to dye. Of these yeomē of the gard,* three vsed D. Tailour frendly, but the fourth (whose name was Homes) vsed him very homely, vnkindly, and churlishly.

At Chelmesford mette them the Shiriffe of Suffolke, there to receiue him, and to carye him forth into Suffolke.* And being at supper, the Shiriffe of Essex very earnestlye labored him to returne to the Popish Religion, thinkyng with fayre words to perswade him, and sayd good mayster Doctor, we are right sory for you, cōsidering what losse is of such one as ye might be if ye would: God hath geuē you great learning and wisdomē, wherefore ye haue bene in great fauor and reputation in times past with the Counsell and highest of this realme. Besides this,* ye are a mā of goodly personage, in your best strength, & by nature like to liue many yeares, and without doubt, ye should in time to come be in as good reputation as euer ye were, or rather better. For ye are well beloued of all men, as well for your vertues as for your learning: and me thinke it were great pity you shoulde cast away your selfe willingly, & so come to such a paynfull and shamefull death. Ye should do much better to reuoke your opinions, and returne to the Catholicke Church of Rome, acknowledge the Popes holinesse to be the supreme head of the vniuersall church, & reconcile your selfe to him. You may do well yet, if you will: doubt ye not but ye shall finde fauor at the Queenes handes, I & all these your frends will be suters for your pardon: which no doubt, ye shall obteine. This counsell I geue you, good Mayster Doctor, of a good hart, a good will towarde you: and thereupon I drinke to you. In like maner sayd all the yeomen of the Gard: vpon that condition Maister Doctor we will all drinke to you.

When they had all dronke to him, & the cup was come to him, he stayed a litle,* as one studying what aunswere he might geue. At the last, thus he aunswered and sayd: Maister Shiriffe, and my Maysters all, I hartely thanke you of your good will. I haue harkened to your wordes and marked wel your counsels. And to be playne with you, I do perceiue that I haue bene deceiued my self, and am like to deceiue a great many of hadley, of their expectatiō. With that woorde they all reioyced. Yea good Mayster Doctour (quoth the Shiriffe) Gods blessing on your hart: holde you there still. It is the comfortablest word, that we heard you speake yet. What? should ye cast away your selfe in vayne? Play a wise mans part, & I dare warrant it, ye shall finde fauour. Thus they reioyced very much at the worde, and were very mery.

At the last: good Mayster Doctor (quoth the Shiriffe) what meant ye by this, that ye sayd ye thinke ye haue bene deceiued your selfe, and thinke ye sh•• deceiue many one in Hadley? Would you know my meaning plainly, quoth he? Yea (quoth the Shiriffe) good Mayster Doctour, tell it vs playnely.

Then sayd Doctour Taylour, I will tell you how I haue bene deceiued, and as I think, I shall deceiue a great many. I am as you see, a man that hath a very great carkase,* which I thought should haue bene buried in Hadley Churchyarde if I had dyed in my bed, as I well hoped I shoulde haue done: but herein I see I was deceyued: and there are a greate number of wormes in Hadley Churchyard, which should haue had ioly feeding vpon this cariō, which they haue looked for many a day. But now I know we be deceiued, both I and they: for this carkase must bee burnt to ashes and so shall they lose theyr bayt and feding, that they looked to haue had of it.

When the Shiriffe and his company heard him say so, they were amased, and looked one on another, maruelling at the mans constaunt minde, that thus without all feare, made but a iest at the cruell torment, and death now at hād prepared for him. Thus was theyr expectation clean disapoynted. And in this appeareth what was his meditation in his chiefest wealth & prosperity: namely,* that he shoulde shortly dye & feed wormes in his graue: which meditation if all our Bishops, & spirituall men had vsed, they had not for a litle worldly glory forsaken the word of God, & truth, Page 1526 which they in king Edwardes dayes had preached and set forth, nor yet to mayntaine the Bishop of Romes authority, haue committed so many to the fire as they did.

But let vs returne to Doctor Taylour, who at Chelmesford was deliuered to the Shiriffe of Suffolke; and by him conducted to Hadley, where he suffered. When they were come to Lanham,* the Shiriffe staid there two daies: and thither came to him a great number of Gentlemē and Iustices vpon great horses, which all were appointed to ayde the Shiriffe. These Gentlemen labored Doctor Tailor very sore, to reduce him to the Romish religiō, promising him his pardō (which said they) we haue here for you. They promised him great promotions, yea a Bishopricke if he would take it: but all theyr labor & flattering wordes were in vayne. For he had not built his house vpon the sand in perill of falling at euery puffe of wynde, but vpon the sure and vnmoueable rocke Christ. Wherefore he abode constant and vnmoueable vnto the end.

After two dayes, the Shiriffe & his company led Doctor Taylour towardes Hadley,* and comming within a two mile of hadley, he desired to light of his horse to make water: which done, he lept, and set a friske or twain, as mē commonly do in daunsing. Why Maister Doctour (quoth the Shiriffe) how do you now? He aunswered: Well God be prayسد, good Mayster Shiriffe. Neuer better: for now I know I am almost at home. I lacke not past two stiles to go ouer, and I am euen at my fathers house. But mayster Shiriff (sayd he) shall not we go through Hadley? Yes sayd the Shiriffe, you shall go through Hadley. The sayd he: O good Lord, I thanke thee. I shall yet once ere I dye see my flocke, whom thou Lord knowest I haue most hartely loued, and truly taught. Good Lord blesse them, & keep them stedfast in thy word and truth.

Whē they were now come to Hadley, and came riding ouer the bridge,* at the bridgefoote waited a poore man with fiue small children: who when he saw D. Taylour, he and his children fell down vpon theyr knees, and held vp their handes, and cryed with a loud voice, and sayd: O deare father, and good shepheard, Doctour Taylour: God helpe & succour thee, as thou hast many a time succoured me, and my poore children. Such witnes had the seruant of God of his vertuous & charitable almes geuē in his life time. For God would now the poore should testify of his good deeds, to his singuler comfort, to the example of others, and confusion of his persecutors and tyrannous aduersaryes. For the Shiriffe and other that lead him to death, were wonderfully astonied at this: and the Shiriffe sore rebuked the poore man for so crying. The streets of Hadley were beset on both sides the way with men and women of the towne and countrey, who wayted to see him: whome when they beheld so led to death, w^t weeping eyes and lamētable voy^{ces} they cryed, saying one to another: ah good Lord, there goeth our good shepheard from vs,* that so faythfullye hath taught vs, so fatherly hath cared for vs, & so godly hath go^uerned vs. O mercifull God: what shal we poore scattered Lambes do? What shall come of this most wicked world? Good Lord strengthen him and comfort him: with such other most lamemtable and pitious voyces. Wherefore the people were sore rebuked by the Shiriffe and the Catchpoles his men, that led him. And Doct. Taylour euermore sayde to the people:* I haue preached to you Gods word & truth, and am come this day to seale it with my bloud.

Comming agaynst the Almes houses, which hee well knew, he cast to the poore people money, which remayned of that good people had geuen him in time of his imprisonment. As for his liuing, they tooke it from him at his fyrst going to prison, so that he was susteined all the time of his imprisonment by the charitable almes of good people that visited him.*

Therefore the money that now remayned, he putte in a gloue ready for the same purpose, & (as is sayd) gaue it to the poore Almesmē standing at theyr dores to see him. And comming to the last of the almes houses, and not seing the poore that there dwelt readye in theyr dores, as the other were, he asked: is the blinde man and blinde woman, that dwelt here, aliue? It was aunswered yea: they are there within. Then threw he gloue and all in at the window, & so rode forth.

*Thus this good father and prouider for the poore, now tooke his leaue of those, for whom all his life he had a singuler care and study. For this was his custome, once in a fourtnight at the least, to call vpō Syr Henry Doyll, and others the rich Clothmakers, to go with him to the almeshouses, and there to see howe the poore liued: what they lacked in meat, drinke, clothing, bedding, or any other necessities. The like did he also to other poore men that had many children, or were sicke. Then would he exhort & cōfort them, and where he found cause, rebuke the vnruely, and what they lacked, that gaue he after his power: and what he was not able, he caused the rich and wealthy men to minister vnto them. Thus shewed he hymselfe in all thinges an example to his flocke, worthy to be folowed: & taught by his deede, what a great treasure almes is to all such, as cherefully for Christes sake do it.

At the last, comming to Aldam Common, the place assigned where he should suffer,* and seing a great multitude of people gathered thither, hee asked what place is this, & what meaneth it that so much people are gathered hyther? It was answered: It is Aldham Cōmon,* the place where you must suffer: and the people are come to looke vpō you. Then sayd he: thanked be God, I am euen at home, and so light from his horse, and with both his handes, rent the hood from his head.

Now was his head notted euilfaoredly, and clypped much like as a man would clippe a fooles head: which cost the good Bishop Boner had bestowed vpon him,* when he disgraded him. But whē the people saw his reuerend and aūcient face, with a long white beard, they burst out with weeping teares, and cryed saying: God saue thee good D. Taylor. Iesus Christ strengthen thee, and helpe thee. The holy Ghost comfort thee: with such other like Godly wishes. Then would he haue spoken to y^e people:* but the yeomen of the Gard were so busy about him, that as soone as he opened his mouth, one or other thrust a tip staff into his mouth, and would in no wise permit him to speake.

Then desired he licence of the Shiriffe to speake:* but y^e Shiriffe denyed it to him, and bad him remember hys promise to the Counsell.

Well (quoth Doctour Taylour) promise must be kept. What this promise was, it is vnknown: but the common fame was, that after he and others were condemned, the Consell sent for them, and threatned them, they would cut theyr tongues out of theyr heades, except they would promise, that at theyr deathes they would keep silence, and not speake to the people: Wherefore they desirous to haue the vse of theyr tongues, to call vpō God as long as they might liue, promised silence. For the Papistes feared muche, least this mutation of religion, from truth to lies, from Christs ordinances to the Popish traditions, should no• so quietly haue bene receiued, as it was, especially this burning of y^e Preachers: but they measuring others myndes by theyr own, feared lest the tumult or vprore might haue bene stirred, the people hauyng so iust a cause not to bee contented with theyr doinges, or els (that they most feared) y^e people should more haue bene confirmed by their godly exhortatiōs to stand stedfast agaynst their vaine Popish doctrine, & idolatry. But thanks to God, which gaue to his witnesses fayth and pacience, with stout and manly hartes to despise all tormentes: * neither was their so much as any one man that once shewed any signe of disobedience toward y^e magistrates. They shed theyr bloud gladly in the defēce of y^e trueth, so leauing example vnto all men of true & perfect obedience: which is to obey God more then mē, and if need require it, to shed theyr owne bloud rather then to depart from Gods truth.

Doctor Taylor perceiuing that he could not be suffred to speake, sat down, and seing one named Soyce, * he called him and sayd: Soice, I pray thee come & pull of my bootes & take them for thy labor. Thou hast long looked for thē, now take them. Thē rose he vp, * and put of his clothes vnto his shirt, and gaue thē away. Which done, he saide with loud voyce: Good people, I haue taught you nothing but Gods holye word, and those Lessons that I haue taken out of Gods blessed booke, the holy Bible: * and I come hyther this day to seale it with my bloud. With that woorde Homes, yeoman of the Gard, aforesayd, who had vsed doctour Taylour very cruelly all the waye, * gaue him a great stroke vpon the head with a waster, and sayd: Is that the keeping of thy promise, thou hereticke: Then he seying they would not permit him to speak, kneled down and prayed, & a poore woman that was among the people, * stepped in & prayed with him: but her they thrust away, and threatned to tread her down with horses: notwithstanding she would not remoue, but abode and prayed with him. When he had prayed, he went to the stake and kissed it, and set hymselfe into a pitch barrell, which they had set for him to stand in, and so stood with his backe vpriight agaynst the stake, with his handes folded together, and his eyes toward heauen, & so he continually prayed.

Then they bound him with chaynes: and the Shiriffe called one Richard Doningham a Butcher, and commaūded him to set vp Fagots: but he refused to do it, and sayd: I am lame Syr, and not hable to lift a Fagot. * The Shyrriffe threatned to send him to prison: notwithstanding hee would not do it.

Then appoynted he on Mulleine of Carsey, a man for Page 1527 his vertues fit to be a hang man, and Soice a very dronkard, and Warwicke, who in the commotion time in king Edwardes dayes, lost one of his eares for his sedicious talke, amongst whō was also one Robert King a deuiser of Enterludes, * who albeit was there present & had doying there with the gunnepowder, what he ment and did therein (he himselfe sayth he did it for the best, and for quicke dispatch) the Lord knoweth which shal iudge al, more of this I haue not to say.

These foure were appoynted to set vp the Fagots and to make the fire, which they most diligently did: and this Warwicke cruelly cast a Fagot at him, which lyght vpon his head, and brake his face, that the bloud ran downe his visage. Then sayd Doctour Taylour: Oh frend, I haue harme enough, what needed that.

Furthermore Syr Iohn Shelton there standing by as Doct. Taylour was speaking and saying the Psalme Miserere in Englishe, stroke him on the lippes: ye knaue,* sayd he, speake Latine, I will make thee. At the last they set to fire: and Doctour Taylour holding vppe both hys handes, called vpō God, and sayd:* Mercifull father of heauen, for Iesus Christ my Sauours sake, receiue my soule into thy handes.* So stood he still without either crying or mouing, with his handes folded together, till Soice with an Halberd stroke him on y^e head that the braynes fell out, and the dead corpes fell downe into the fire.

Thus rendred the man of God his blessed soule into the handes of his mercifull father, and to his most deare and certeine Sauour Iesus Christ, whome he most entyrellye loued, faithfully and earnestly preached obediently folowed in liuing, and constantly glorified in death.

with this Doctour Tailour, reported of him, that they neuer did see in him any feare of death,* but especially & aboue all the rest which besides him suffered at the same time, alwayes shewed himselfe mery and cherefull in tyme of hys imprisonment, as well before his condēnation as after: he kept one countenance and like behaiour. Whereunto he was the rather confirmed by the company and presence of maister Iohn Bradford, who then was in prison & chamber with him.

The same morning, when he was called vp by the shiriffe to goe to his burning (about three of the clocke in the morning) being sodenly awaked out of his sound sleepe he sat vp in his bed, and putting on his shyrt, had these wordes (speaking somewhat thicke after his accustomed maner:) Ah horson theeues, ah horson theues, robbe God of his honor, robbe God of his honor? Afterward being risen and tying his poyntes, hee cast his armes about a balke whiche was in the chamber betwene Mayster Bradfordes bed & his:* and there hanging by the handes, sayde to M. Bradford: O Maister Bradford (quoth he) what a notable sway should I geue if I were hanged, meaning for that he was a corpulent and bigge man. These thinges I thought good here to note: to set forth and declare to those that shall read this history, what a notable and singuler gift of spirit and courage God had geuen to this godly and blessed martyr.

At what time Doctour Taylour was depriued of hys benefice of Hadley, there was one called Syr Robert Bracher, a false pretensed Protestant in king Edwardes dayes, and afterward a deadly enemy to the same Religiō: who was also one of them that so vnmercifully thrust Doctor Taylors wife and children out of the dores, as she her selfe yet can testify: & notwithstanding the same, now since became a Protestant agayne.

This Syr Robert Bracher aforesayde,* comming to Hadley to the buriall of a certayne frend of his and Gods great enemy one Walter Clarke, albeit he came somewhat to late to the market (as he sayd) yet desirous to vtter such Popishe pelfe and packeware as he brought with him, hee opened there his baggage of pestilent doctrine,* preaching in the same towne of Hadley agaynst iustification of fayth, of the corporall presence, of praying for the dead, and Auricular confession. Whereof Doctour Taylour hauing vnderstanding by Letters, writeth agayn to them of Hadley directing his Letter to his wife in confutation of the sayde Popish poysoned Sermon: the Copy of which Letter we thought not vnworthy here in the ende of this story to bee annexed, as vnder foloweth.

¶ A Letter of Doctor Taylour of Hadley, written to his wife.

DEare wife,* I pray God be euer with vs through Christ our onely Mediator. Amen.

I thanke you for my cap: I am something proud of it: for it is one steppe from the Clergy in these dayes. I thanke God my hart is cleane deuided from theyr proceedinges: for I knowe that no Page 1528 man can serue two maisters, specially if they agree no better thē Christ and Antichrist do. I am glad that Hadley can skill of such packing ware as was brought thether the first day of May last past. Christes sheepe can discern Christes voyce from the voice of straungers, theeues, or hirelings. The packebringer was sory that he came to late to the funerall market of his faithfull friend.* But here I will leaue them both to Gods iudgement, and somethyng touch the matter whereof the packer made mention on his openyng day. At the first he called the Scripture (as I heare) full of darke sentences, but in deed it is called of Dauid, a candle to our feete, and a light to our pathes. Our Sauior Christ calleth hys word, the light which euill doers do flee from and hate, least their deeds should be reprooued thereby, S. Paule would haue vs to walke as children of light, and in any wyse not to continue in ignorance or darkenes. But all we in the world pertaine to two princes, eyther to the father of light & truth, or els to the prince of darkenes and lyes.

In these dayes preachers declare euidently of whome they are sent, and with what spirit they speake, & to what prince they belong.* For they cry out against Gods, Lightes, Sunne, Moone, Starres, torches, lampes, lanternes, cressets, and candles in Gods booke the Bible, prouided of Gods great goodnes and mercy to auoyd all foule darknes; cloudes, and mistes, or dangerous doutfull wayes in this our iourney to our heauēly father, long home, mansion houses, and dearely purchased heritage. Esay gods faithfull messenger sayth: Woe be vnto them that call sweete sower, good euill, and light darkenes. Therefore commeth my people into captiuitie, because they haue no vnderstanding. Our Sauior Christ pronounceth errors and heresies to remaine among the people, so long as ignorance of the scriptures remayneth. And hereby it appeareth to all good consciences, what they meane, which defame or accuse Gods blessed word beyng full of light, as though it were full of darkenes. These Owles would haue all day lights scraped out of bookes, hartes, and Churches. Oh Lord turne their heartes and tongues: bowe them from the waye of darkenesse, least they goe to the prince of darkenesse, and be cast into the pit of vtter darkenes, where is weepyng and gnashyng of teeth.

Now, touching the packes of wooll, and the packes of cloth, I feare they were as all other wares bee, transubstantiate into flockes,* euen his very finest packing stuffe against onely faith iustifieng, and for the corporal presence of Christes body in the sacrament, for praying for soules departed, and for auricular confession. Abrahams iustification by fayth, by grace, by promise and not by workes, is plainly set forth both in the epistle to the Rom. cap. 4. and to the Gal. ca. 3. and Abrahams works of obedience in offring vp his sonne so long after his iustification, must needes be taken as a fruite of a good tree iustifieng before men, and not of iustification before God: for then had man to glory in, then dyd Christ die in vayne.

And where as the 6 chap. of Iohn was alledged, to proue that Christ did geue his body corporally in his supper, euē as he had promised in the sayd 6. chap. it is most vntrue.* For onely he gaue his body sacramentally, spiritually, and effectually in his supper to the faythfull Apostles, and corporally he gaue it in a bloody sacrifice for the lyfe of the worlde vppon the crosse once for all. There in hys owne person,* in hys owne naturall body he bare all our sinnes. By whose stripes we were healed, as S. Peter proueth 1. Pet. 2. and Esay. 53. In deed receiuyng Christs sacrament accordingly as it was instituted, we receyue Christes body & Christs bloud, euen as I sayd before, the Apostles dyd.

But the popish Masse is another matter. The Masse as it is now, is but one of Antichrists youngest daughters, in the which the deuill is rather present and receyued,* then our sauour, the second person in Trinitie, God and man. O Lord God heauenly father, for Christes sake we beseeche thee to turne agayne England to the right way it was in in K. Edwards tyme, from this Babylonicall stewish spirituall whoredome, conspiracie, tyranny, detestable enormities, false doctrine, heresie, hardnes of hart, and cōtempt of thy word and commaundements, from this euident and open idolatry, sacriledge, simonie, blasphemy, superstition, hypocrisie, transubstantiate angell of lyght and day deuill, kyngdome of lyes, foule vayne schismes, sects, sedition, apostasie, gay sweete poyson, honied and sugred viperous venome, wily woluishnesse, sathanicall subtletie, and abomination in the sight of God, and of all such as put on the true spectacles of holy scripture. I am the more playne now in this matter, because I feare greatly, that many will be to much ready to go from Christ to Antichrist, frō the Bible, true Gods seruice and religion, to Latine lying Legendes, Portases, Masse bookes and superstition. They say theyr Church cannot erre in any poynt, whē in deed they be not of gods church and therfore they can do nothyng but erre, euen as they doe almost in all cases of true fayth.

But to come agayne to the packer rather then preacher, hee bringeth S Chrysostome writyng Ad populum Antiochenum,* where he makyng a comparision betweene Christes flesh and Elias cloke cast downe to Elizeus, when Elias was taken vp in the fiery Chariot, at length he sayeth, that Christ ascendyng vp to heauen, tooke hys flesh with hym, and also left hys flesh behynd hym in earth.

The meanyng of it is, he dyd ascend with hys flesh,* and left a memoriall cloke of the same body and flesh, which he calleth hys flesh, as he in the sacramentall phrase calleth bread his body, because it representeth his body: and as in the lyke manner of Sacramentall speach, a Lambe was called the Passeouer, the Circumcision, Gods couenaunt. He tooke vp hys flesh corporally, & least his flesh in mystery and sacrament spiritually.* Or it may be sayd, that he left hys flesh vpon earth: that is, hys mysticall body, his faythfull people, whom S. Paule calleth the members of hys body, of hys flesh, of hys bones, Ephes. 5. In the 49. chap. of Genesis, there is no word of Christes sacrament, but there is a prophesie of Christes passion, wherein hys Fole was bound, that is, hys body. And where hee speaketh there of grapes and wyne, it is as that is spoken of Christ in an other place, where hee sayeth: Ego solus torcular calcaui: I alone dyd treade the wyne presse meanyng thereby, that Christ alone suffered paynefull passion for the remission of sinnes, and for the consolation of all hys faithfull souldiors.

It is not true that the packer sayd, that Christs infinite power may make his body to bee in a thousand places at once, as a loafe to be in a thousand bellies.* for then myght Christ deuide the partes of hys body, as a loafe is deuided and so consumed, & then myght scripture be false, appointyng Christes body to bee but in one place. Act. 3. Phil. 3. Heb. 3. The articles of our faith tel vs sufficiently where Christes body is. It was neuer in two places at once, neyther euer shall be, neither euer can be corporally and naturally, neither euer was, is, can,* or shall be eaten so with any corporall mouthes, as the Capernaites and the papistes most erroneously and heretically doe iudge. If our sauour Iesus Christ hath no other body natural then is made of the substāce of bread and is in a thousand places at once, as I haue often sayd in Hadley: we are not yet redeemed, neyther shall our bodies ryse againe, & be made lyke vnto his glorious body. We are sure that our sauour Christs body is made of none other substaunce then of his mother the blessed virgin Maries substaunce. We are sure, that he taketh not the nature of Angels, much lesse of bread. Only he taketh on hym the seed of Abraham. Heb. 2. In all thynges lyke vnto vs, sin only except.* And this is a comfortable doctrine to vs christians, beleuing stedfastly as the true catholike fayth is, that Christ hath but two natures, perfect God, and perfect man. Vpon this rocke Christs church is builded, and the gates of hell shall neuer preuayle agaynst it. Math. 16.

I speake nothing now of auricular confession and praying for soules departed,* because I do not heare what authors the packer brought in for this purpose. Sure I am that he can bryng no authentically and canonically warrant for such his packware. He may say what hee wyll of Hebricians and Graecians,* and fleshe vnder formes, and not aboue formes, or aboue the bound. He may coniure and conuey, passe & repasse, euen what he wil in such clouds and mystes. He reproued the scriptures as full of darkenes, & yet is full of darkenes hymselfe. He did wittily, to bring proofes out of Iewry, Turkey, and other strange places, for his rounde whyte cake, for that such his pedlary pelfe packe is contrary to the plain simplicity of Christes supper. He glaunced at priests mariage.* He myght agaynst that haue brought as auncient a Doctor as any be alledged out of Hebrue, for hys masse and wafer cake, that is, D. Deuill. 1. Tim. 4.

I meruaile that he dyd not confute and confound S. Paul for the sentences written aboue the aultar, of the which, hee made mention in the pulpit. For he and his fellowes of Oxford bee so profound, so excellent, so glorious, and triumphant clarkes, that they can easily prooue a man an asse, and writers in the Bible ignorant, simple, full of errors, full of heresies, & beggerly fooles. Yet they wil be called catholikes, faithfull true christian people, defenders of the holy mother the Church: but truely they take part with the prince of darknes, with Antichrist, with Iezabell, Apoc. 2. They wyll not be called Papists, Pharises, Iewes, Turkes, heretikes, and so forth: but whatsoever they will be called, Gods religion had neuer more euident aduersaries, and that in all the chiefe points of it: no not then, when our sauour Christ whypt such Merchants out of the temple, callyng them a company of theeues Math. 21. God geue them grace to repent. God be thanked that the Nobilitie somethyng of late hath spied and stopped their tyranny. O vnhappy England: Oh more vngrate people,* sooner bewitched then the folish Galathians. We haue now none excuse.

We haue vndoubtedly seene the true trace of the prophetically Apostolically primatiue catholike church. We are warned to beware, least we be led out of that way, societie, and rule of Religion. Now we shall shew what countrey men we bee, whether spirituall and heauenly, or carnall and worldly. We had as true knowledge as euer was in any countrey, or in any tyme, since the beginnyng of the world, God be prayed therfore. If Hadley beyng so many yeares perswaded in such truth, will now willingly and wittingly forsake the same, and defile it selfe withe the Cake god, Idolatry, and other Antichristianitie thereunto belongyng, Page 1529 let it surely looke after many and wonderfull plagues of God shortly. Though another haue the Benefice, yet as God knoweth, I cannot but be carefull for my deare Hadley. And therefore as I could not but speake, after the first abhominable Masse begun there, I beyng present, no more I can not but write now beyng absent,  hearyng of the wicked prophanation of my late pulpit, by such a wily Wolfe. Gods loue, mercy, goodnes and fauour hath bene vnspeakable, in teachyng vs the right way of saluation and iustification: Let vs all haue some zeale, some care how to serue him accordyng to his good will written. The God of loue and peace be euer in Hadley, through Christ our onely aduocate. Amen.

Rowland Taylor.

After that Steuen Gardiner Bish. of Winchester, had got the lawes,  and the secular arme on his side (as ye haue heard) with full power and authoritie to raigne and rule as he listed, and had brought these godly bishops and reuerend preachers aforesayd vnder foote, namely, the Archbishop of Cant. D. Ridley B. of London, M. Latimer, M. Hooper B. of Worcester and Gloucester, M. Rogers, M. Saunders, D. Taylor, and M. Bradford, all which he had now presently condemned, and some also burned, he supposed now all had bene cocke sure, and that Christ had bene conquered for euer, so that the people beyng terrified with example of these great learned men condemned, neuer would ne durst once route against their violent religion: not much vnlike in this behalfe, to the manner of the Turkes, who when they cannot maintaine their sect by good learnyng and truth of Gods word, thinke by violēce of sword to force whome they can to their beliefe, and that done, afterward make lawes, no man vnder payne of heresie to dispute or once to call in question any •f their proceedyngs.  Euen so St. Gardiner and his fellowes, when they see they cannot preuaile by triall of Gods word, and discourse of learnyng, neither are disposed simply to seeke for truth where it is to be found, they take exceptions agaynst Gods word to bee intricate, obscure, and insufficient to bee his owne iudge, and therefore that of necessitie must bee iudged by the Popes Church, and so hauyng Kyngs and Queenes of theyr side, they seeke not to perswade by the worde of God, nor to winne by charitie, but in stead of the law of God, they vse (as the Prouerb saith) 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉,  compelling men by death, fire, and sworde, (as the Turkes do) to beleue that in very deed they think not. And in deed after flesh and bloud this seemeth to bee a sure way. Neither peradventure are they ignoraunt how gaily this way thriueth with the Turkes, and therefore thinke they to practise the same, at least wise so they do, vpon what example so euer they doe it. And thus condemned they these godly learned preachers and bishops aforesayd, supposing (as I said) that all the rest would soone be quailed by their example. But they were deceiued, for wⁱn 8. or 9. dayes after that Ste. Gardiner had geuen sentence against M. Hooper, M. Rogers, M. Saunders, D. Taylor,  and M. Bradford, being the 8. of Febru. sixe other good men wer brought likewyse before the bishops for the same cause of religion, to be examined, whose names were W. Pigot butcher, * St. Knight Barber, Th. Tomkins Weauer, Th. Hawkes gentleman, Ioh. Laurence priest, Will. Hunter prentise.

St. Gardiner seyng thus his deuise disappointed, and that cruelty in this case would not serue to his expectation gaue ouer the matter as vtterly discouraged,  & from that day medled no more in such kinde of condemnations, but referred the whole doying therof to Boner B. of London: who supplied that part right doughtily, as in the further processe of this hystory hereafter evidently and too muche may appeare. Thus B. Boner taking the matter in hand, called before him in his Consistory at Paules, the L. Maior and certaine Aldermen sitting with him, the 6. persons aforesaid, vpon the 8. day of Febr. in the yere aforesaid, and in the next day beyng the 9. of Febr. red the sentence of condemnation vpon them, as appeareth in Boners own registers. Such quicke speed these men could make in dispatching their busines at once. Notwithstandyng, because the death of these condemned martyrs did not folow incontinently before the next month of March,* I wyll deferre the prosecuting of their matter, til I come by y^e grace of the Lord, to the tyme and day of their suffering.

In the meane tyme, what was the cause that their execution was so long deferred after their condemnation, I haue not precisely to say, vnlesse peraduenture the sermon of Alphonsus the Spanish Frier, and the kings Confessor did some good. For so I find, that when these sixe persons aforesaid, were cast vpon saterday the 9. of Febr. vpō sonday following, which was the x. of February, the sayd Alphonsus a Gray Frier, preached before the king, in which sermon he did earnestly inuey against the bishops for burning of men,* saying plainly that they learned it not in scripture to burne any for his conscience: but the cōtrary, that they should lyue & be conuerted, with many other things more to the same purport. But touchyng the lingeryng of these mens death, as I haue not certainly to affirme, so I let it passe.

Upon the 14. of February, M. Rob. Ferrar B. of S. Davids, was sent toward S. Davids,* there to be cōdemned and executed. Touching whose martyrdome, for so much as it fell not before the month of March, we wil deferre the history thereof till we come to the day and tyme of his suffering.

Furthermore, this foresaid 14. day of February,* the L. Chauncellor & other his felow Bishops, caused the image of Thomas Becket, that olde Romish traitor, to be set vp ouer the Mercers Chappell dore in Chepeside in Londō, in the forme and shape of a bishop, with Miter and Cro••er. Howbeit within two dayes after his erection, his two blessing fingers were first broken away, and on the nexte day (beyng the 17. of February) his head also was stricken of: wherupon arose great trouble, and many were suspected: among whom one M. Ioh. Barnes Mercer, dwellyng ouer agaynst the same Chappel, was vehemently by the Lord Chancellour charged withall, as the doer therof & the rather, for that he was a professour of truth. Wherefore he and three of his seruauntes were committed to pryson: and at his deliury (although it coulde not be prooued vpon him) he was bound in a great summe of money, as well to build it vp agayne as often as it should be broken downe, as also to watch and keepe the same. And therfore at this his compelled charges,* the Image was agayne set vp the secōd day of March, then next ensuing, but (for lack belike of carefull watching) the 14. day of the same moneth in the night, the head of that daungerous beast (ouer whō there was suche a charge geuen) was agayne the seconde tyme broken of: which thing was so heynously taken, that the next day (being the 15. day) there was a Proclamation made in London, that who soeuer woulde tell who did strike of his head (though he were of counsayle, and not the principall doer) he shoulde haue not onely his pardon, but also one hundreth crownes of gold, with harty thāks. But it was not knowne who did it.

The 18. day of February, Queene Mary at length after long delaye,* made full aunswere to the kinge of Denmarke's letters, who had written before two letters to the sayd Queene, in y^e behalfe of M. Couerdale, for his deliuerance, who at that time went vnder sureties, and was in great danger, had he not bene rescued by the great suite & letters of the sayd K. of Denmarke.

The matter and copy of which his sute and letters, as they came to our hands, we haue here set forth and exprest where by the singular loue of this good king towards the truth of Gods word and the professors thereof might the better appeare to the world.

First this vertuous and godly king Christianus, hearyng of the captiuitie of Myles Couerdale,* of whome hee had had some knowledge before (being there in Denmark in King Henry the eight his tyme) and lamentyng hys daungerous case, and partly thorough the intercession of M. Machabeus Superintendent in Denmarke, who was partly of * kinne to Maister Couerdales wife, made intercession by letters to Queene Mary, desiring and requestyng the sayd Myles Couerdale to be sent vnto hym. The date of which hys first letters, was about the Calends of May. An. Dom. 1554. The copy whereof here followeth.

¶ Christianus Dei gratia, Daniae, Noruegiae, &c. Rex. &c.
eadem gratia Serenissimae ac potentissimae principi D.
Mariae, Angliae, Galliae, & Hyberniae Reginae, consanguineae nostrae chariss. salutem.

Serenissima princeps, consanguinea charissima pro necessitudine mutua ac coniunctione,* non solum regij nominis inter nos, sed etiam sanguinis, maximè vero vtrunque inter haec regna nostra à vetustissimis vsque temporibus propagata ac seruata, nō modo commertiorum, sed omnium officiorum vicissitudine & fide, facere non potuimus quin pietatis & doctrinae excellentis commendatione, verè reuerendi viri Ioannis Machabaei, sacrae Theologiae doctoris & professoris praestantiss subditi ac Ministri nostri imprimis dilecti, supplicibus grauissimisque praecibus cōmoti, ad serenitatem vestram has literas daremus. Exposuit is nobis, in hac recenti perturbatione ac motu regni Angliae (quem ex animo euenisse dolemus, & nunc indies in melius verti speramus) quendam nomine Milonem Couerdalum, nuper dioecesis Exoniensis, piaae laudatissimaeque memoriae proximi Regis Serenitatis vestrae fratris, consanguinei itidem nostri chariss. autoritate Page 1530 constitutum Episcopum, nunc in tristiss. calamitates, carcerem, ac periculum vitae, nulla atrocioris delicti culpa, sed illa fatali temporum ruina incidisse. Quae quidem hic Machabaeus noster, quod ei affinitate (& quod grauius est) pietatis, eruditio nis ac morum similitudine, tanquam frater deuinctus sit, non minus ad se pertinere existimat. Itaque nostram opem implorat, vt quam ipse gratiam & fauorem apud nos meretur, hominis innocentis calamitati ac periculo (quod ipse non minus suum putat) accommodemus. Mouemur profecto non temere, illius viri (cui suo merito imprimis bene volumus) commiseratione, eiusque maximè testimonio de captiui Antistitis innocentia atque integritate▪ de qua quidem est vt eo melius speremus, quod multis iam morte mulctatis sontibus, de ipso integrum adhuc deus esse voluit. Proinde non dubitauimus serenitatem vestram quanta possimus diligentia atque animi propensione rogare, vt nostra causa captiui illius D. Milonis rationem clementer habere dignetur, eum{que} vt à sceleris: ita à poenae etiam atrocitate alienum esse voluit, & temporum offensam, qua ipsum quo{que} affligi verisimile est, nobis nostrae{que} amicitiae regiae & precibus, praesertim hoc primo auditu, benigne condonare, saltem eatenus, vt si fortè hoc rerum statu grauis eius praesentia sit, incolumis ad nos cum suis dimittatur. Id nobis summi beneficij loco, & Serenitati vestrae inflorentiss. regni auspicijs (quae augusta, fausta, ac fortunata serenitati vestrae ex animo optamus) ad clementiae laudem honorificum erit: & nos dabimus operam, vt cum amicitiae nostrae habitam rationem intellexerimus, eo maiore studio in mutuam vicem gratitudinis omniumque officiorum erga Serenitatem vestrā eiusque vniuersum regnum & subditos incumbamus. Deum optimum maximum precamur, vt Serenitati vestrae ad gloriam sui nominis & publicam salutem foelices omnium rerum successus & incolumitatem diuturnam largiatur.

Vester consanguineus, frater & amicus Christianus Rex.

To these letters of the king, Queene Mary aunswering againe,* declared that the sayd Miles Couerdale was in no such captiuitie for any religion, but for certayn debt: so neither plainly graunting, nor expresly denying his request, but vsing a colorable excuse for shifting of the matter, as appeareth by his second letter sent to the Queene, dated the 24. day of Sept. as followeth.

¶Christianus Dei gratia Daniae, Norwegiae, Gottorum, & Vandalorum Rex: Sleswici, Holsatiae, Stormariae, ac Dithmersiae Dux: Comes in Oldenburgh & Delmenhorst, Serenis. principi dominae Mariae, Angliae, Franciae, & Hyberniae Reginae, fidei defens. &c Sorori & consanguineae nostrae chariss. salutem, & omnium rerum optatos & faustos successus.

REdditae sunt nobis literae Serenitatis vestrae, quibus benigne admodum ad deprecationem nostram, qua pro D. Milonis Couerdali ecclesiae Exon. nuper nomin ati Episcopi incolumitate vsi sumus, respondetur: ita vt intelligamus, licet alterius causae quam quae nobis innotuerat, periculum sustineat, tamen Sereniss. vestram nostrae intercessionis eam rationem habiturā esse, vt illā sibi profuisse ipse Couerdalussētiat. Cui quidē promissioni regiae cum tantum meritum tribuamus, vt ea freti non dubitauerimus eius captiui propinquos (nobis inprimis charos) à moerore ac sollicitudine ad spem atque expectationem certae •alu is vocare, sacere nō potuimus, quin & gratias sereni. vestrae pro tā prōpta ac benigna volūtate, non modo huius beneficij, sed etiā perpetuae inter nos ac regna nostra conseruandae ac colende amicitiae ageremus, & quantum in nobis esset, quod ad applectanda persequendaque haec auspicata initia pertineret, nihil praetermitteremus. Neque vero nobis de clementia ac moderatione Sere. vestrae vnquam dubium fuit, quam deus opt. max. ad gloriam sui nominis & fructum pub. vtilitatis vt magis ac magis efflorescere velit, ex animo optamus. Proinde cum ob rationes aerarias, neque aliud grauius delictum D. Couerd. teneri Sere. vestra scribat, est sanè, vt ipsius causa laetemur, eoque minus ambigamus, liberationem incolumitatemque eius nostris precibus liberaliter donati. Nam & accepimus ipsum episcopatu, cuius nomine aerario obstrictus fuerat, cessisse, vt inde satisfactio peteretur: maxime cum neque diu eo potitus fuisse, neque tantum emolumenti inde percepisse dicatur. Quinetiam si qua rationum perplexitas, aut alia forte causa reperiri posset, tamen sollicitudinem ac dubitationem nobis Serenitatis vestrae tam amice, atque officiose deferētes literae omnem exemerunt: vt existimemus Sere. vestrā, quoad eius fieri posset, magis honorem nostrum, quam quid ab eo exigi possit, consideraturam▪ Itaque Sere. vestram repetitis precibus vrgere non constituimus: sed potius testatum facere, quam accepta nobis Sere. vest. gratificatio sit, cuius ralem euentum omnino speramus, vt ipse Couerd. coram vobis suae incolumitatis à Sere. vest. exoratae beneficium propediem repraesentare possit. Illud vero imprimis Seren. vest. vicissim persuasum esse cupimus, nos non solum referendae gratiae, sed etiam stabilendae prouehēdae que inter nos ac regna vtrunque nostra amicitiae ac necessitudinis mutuae occasionem aut facultatem nullam esse praetermissuros. Deus opt. max. Sere. vest. diu foeliciter ac beate incolumem esse velit.

¶Christierne by the grace of God King of Denmarke Norway, Gotland, and of the Vandales: Duke of Sleswike, Holston, Stormar, and Detmarsh: Earle of Oldenburgh, and Delmenhorst, &c. To the most noble princesse & Lady Mary Queene of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the fayth, &c. Our most dearely beloued sister and cosin, wisheth prosperitie, with good and luckie successe of all thyngs.

WE haue receiued your Maiesties letters, whereby aūswere is rendred,* & that very graciously vnto our petitiō, which we made for the safegard of maister Couerdall late called bish. of Exon. So that we perceiue, though he be in daūger for an other cause then was signified vnto vs afore, yet your maiestie will so regard our intercession that Couerdale him selfe shall vnderstand it to haue done him good. To the which regall promise, seyng we (as reason is we should do) attribute so much, that trusting vnto y^e same, we doubt not, where as he beyng in captiuitie, his frendes (whom we specially tender) are therfore in heauinesse and care, your good promise doth call them from such sorow & solicitude, to the hope & expectation of his assured welfare: we could not do otherwise, but rēder thākes vnto your maiesty for such your ready & gracious good will, not onely in respect of this benefite, but also of the cōseruation & keping of perpetuall amitie betwene vs & our realmes, & so as much as in vs lyeth, to omit nothing that to the no'rishing & cōtinuance of these fortunate beginnings might appertaine. Neither had we euer any doubt cōcerning the clemēcie & moderation of your goodnes, whom we hartily beseech almighty God, euer more and more prosper, vnto the glory of his name, & profite of the cōmon weale. Wherefore seyng your Maiestie writeth that maister Couerdale is in daūger for certaine accomptes of money, & not for any other more greeuous offence, we haue cause on his behalfe to reioyce: & therefore we doubt so much the lesse, that at our request he shall graciously haue his deliuerāce geuē him, and be out of daunger. For as touching the Byshoprike, by reason whereof he came in debt, we vnderstād he yelded it vp, that paymēt might thereof be required, specially seing he is reputed neither to haue enioyed it lōg, neither to haue had at any time so great cōmodity of it. More ouer, though it be possible to finde some perplexitie in the accōpt, or happily some other cause, yet your maiesties letters offering such fauour and benignitie, haue taken from vs all carefulnesse and doubt: In so much that we thinke your maiestie (as much as may be) will haue more respect vnto our honour, then vnto that whiche might of hym be required. And therefore wee purpose not to trouble your Maiestie by repeting of our petition, but to declare howe greatly we esteeme it, that your maiestie would gratify vs herein: whereof we plainely hope for such an end, that Couerdale him selfe shall shortly in our presence make declaration concerning the benefite of his welfare obtayned of your maiestie. And of this wee desire your maiestie to be specially assured agayne, that wee will not onely omit no occasion or oportunitie to requite this benefite, but also to establish and amplifie our mutual loue & amitie betweene vs and our realms on either side. Almighty God preserue your maiestie in prosperous health and felicitie. Geuen at our Citie of Otton the 24. of Septemb. Ann. D. 1554.

To these letters it was a great while before the queene would aunswere. At length through great sute made, the next yeare, the 18. of February, she aunswered agayne in this wise.

¶Sereniss. principi D. Christiano Dei gratia Daniae, &c. Regi Sleswici, &c. Duci: Comiti in Oldenburgh, &c. fratri & amico nostro charissimo.

Et quanquam ille natus subditus noster nondum explicatus fuerat a debitione certae cuiusdam pecuniae qua nostro aerario soluere iure tenebatur, tamen maiorem vestri desyderij quam nostri debiti rationem habendam esse duximus. Serenitatem diutissimè seruet incolumen. Ex Regia nostra Westmonasterij, 18. Febr. 1555.

The same month, the 19. day was a certaine intimation set foorth and printed in the name of Boner, * wherein was conteyned a general monition and strait charge geuen to euery man and woman within his Dioces, * to prepare themselues against Lent, then neare approchyng, to receyue the glad tidynges of peace and reconciliation sent from Pope Iulius 3. by Poole his Cardinall and Legate De Latere, and so receyue also the ioyfull benefite of absolution, beyng sent first from the Cardinall to Boner, and from him to euerich of his Archdeacons to be ministred to euery priuate person within his Dioces, that would come the said holy tyme of Lent to his Pastor or Curate to bee confessed, and to receyue of hym wholesome counsaile, penance and absolution: Signifiyng moreouer, that as he was authorised by the foresayd Cardinall, so he for y^e same purpose had indued with the like authoritie, al and singular Pastors and Curates within his Dioces, to reconcile and assoyle from their former heresie and schisme, & from the censures of the Church, such as would resort vnto thē. And lest any scruple or doubt rising peradventure in their consciences, should be any stay or let in this behalfe, he had assigned and deputed therfore through his Dioces certain learned men, to whom they might resort, or els myght open their griefes to any of his Archdeacons, or els come to hys owne person, and so should be resolved.

And therefore all manner of doubtes and obstacles set aside, hee straightly willed and commaunded euery man and woman to come to confession, and to enioy this benefite of reconciliation and absolution, agaynst the first Sunday next after Easter ensuyng, and not to fayle, For the which purpose he had specially commaunded the Pastours and Curates of euery parish, to certifie vp in writyng the names of euery man and woman so reconciled, and so forth. The copy of which intimation here vnder followeth.

¶The declaration of the B. of London, to be published to the lay people of his diocesse, concernyng their reconciliation.

EDmund by the permission of God, B. of London, vnto all and singuler the lay people of his Diocesse, doth send greeting in our sauour Iesu Christ.

Whereas this noble realme of England, diuidyng it selfe from the vnitie of the catholike church, and from the agreement in religion with all other christian Realmes, hath bene, besides many other miseries & plagues, which Gods indignation hath poured vpon it, grievously also vexed, and sore infected with many and sondry sortes of sects of heretikes, as Arrians, Anabaptistes, Libertines, Zuinglians, Lutherans, and many other, all which sectes be most repugnant: and contrary one agaynst another, & all agaynst Gods truth, and Christes Catholicke fayth: whereupon hath growen such slaunder to the realme, such malice and disagreement among our selues, the inhabitants thereof, such treasons, tumultes, and insurrections agaynst our prince, such blasphemy and dishonour vnto God, as no mans tong or pen is able to expresse: It hath pleased the goodnes of God to cast his eye of mercy & clemency vpon vs, and to mooue the Popes holines to send his most godly messenger, the most Reuerend father in God, the L. Cardinall Poole Legate de Latere, to bryng vs the glad tidings of peace, and reconciliation, & to reduce and bryng home vnto the folde, the lost sheepe that were gone astray, whose message as it hath bene honourably receyued of the Kyng and Queenes maiesties, euen so the Lords spirituall and temporall, and commons at the last Parliamente hath receyued it, reuokynge all lawes (the which in the tyme of schisme were promulgate against the authoritie of the Popes holynes, and restoryng the same and the church of Rome to all that power which they had in this realme before the sayd schisme, the which reconciliation was also most glad and ioyfully embraced as well of all the clergy and conuocation of the prouince of Cant. as also of many other persons, and beyng so great & necessary, to be extended to euery person of the Realme, it hath pleased the sayd L. Legates grace to geue, & imparte vnto me the sayd B. of London, for my sayd Diocesse, and to all such as I shall appoynt in that behalfe, power & authoritie to absolue and reconcile all and euery person ther'of, as well of the Clergy as of the Laitie, and as well men as women, the which will renounce their errors, and (beyng penitent) will humbly require to be restored to the vnitie of the Catholike church, as by the letters of the sayde L. Legates grace sent vnto me, and from me sent vnto euery of the Archdeacons within my dioces, more at large may, and doth appeare. And forasmuch as in myne owne person, as well for the multitude of people, as distaunce of places, I cannot minister this benefit vnto euery priuate person my selfe, and for that also the holy tyme of Lent is now at hande, in which euery true christen man ought to come vnto his owne Pastor and Curate, to be of him confessed, and to receyue at his hand wholesome counsaile, penance and absolution: these are therefore as well to geue knowledge vnto euery one of you, as also to signifie & declare, that for that purpose, I haue by the sayd authoritie chosen, named and deputed, and so by these presentes, doe chuse, and depute all and singuler pastors and curates, hauing cure of soules within my Diocesse, and beyng themselues reconciled herein, that they and euery of them by authoritie hereof, shall haue full power and authoritie to absolue all such as be lay persons of their parishes, from heresie and schisme, and from the censures of the Church, into y^e which they be fallen by occasion therof also, & to reconcile to the church al such which shal declare themselues penitent, and desirous to enioy the benefit of the sayde reconciliation. And whereas diuers pastors and curates in sondry parishes, peradventure bee not able to satisfye the myndes, and to appease the consciences of some of theyr parishioners, in cases that shal trouble them, I haue therfore geuen also authoritie to euery Archdeacon of my dioces, within his Archdeaconry, to name and appoynt certayne of the best learned in euery Deanry of their Archdeaconry, to supply that lacke, so that euery man so troubled, may repaire to any one of thē within the said Deanry, whom he shall lyke best, to be instructed and appeased in that behalfe, And also I haue appoynted, that if this beyng done, there shall yet remayne any scruple in the parties conscience, and himselfe not satisfied, then the said partie to repaire vnto one of myne Archdeacons or chaplens, vnto whom his mynd shal be most inclined vnto, or els to repaire vnto myne owne selfe, to bee resolued in his saide scruple or doubt, and to receiue and take such order therin as to one of the sayd Archdeacons, or vnto me shall therin appeare to be most expedient.

Further certifieng and declaring vnto you, that I haue geuen commaundement herein to all my Archdeacons, that they monish and commaund euery pastor, & Curate within their Archdeaconries, that they hauing knowlege hereof, doe in the first holiday next then followyng, at the masse tyme, when the multitude of people is present, declare all these thyngs vnto their parishioners, and exhort them that they esteeme this grace accordingly, and reconcile themselues to the church before the first Sonday after Easter next ensuyng, which thyng I also do commaunde by the tenour hereof, with intimation that the sayd tyme beyng once past, and they not so reconciled, euery one of them shall haue processe made agaynst hym, accordyng to the Canons, as the cause shall require: for which purpose the pastours and Curates of euery parish shall be cōmanded by their Archdeacon, to certifie me in writyng, of euery man and womans name, that is not so reconciled.

Further, herewith I do signify and declare vnto you, that our holy father the Pope, Iulius the 3. of that name, lyke a most tender and naturall father, hearyng of the returne and recouery of his prodigall child this Realme of England, hath hymselfe made much ioy and gladnes here at, and also all other true christen Realmes haue done the lyke. Exhorting you therefore in our Lord, not to bee vnthankfull your selues, or negligent in this behalfe, but diligently to seeke for it, ioyfully to embrace it, and fruitfully to vse it, remembryng with all the monition and charge which came from me the last yere, concernyng your commyng to confession in Lent, and receiuyng the sacrament at Easter, which monition to all effects and purposes, I haue now here repeated and renewed, charyng you, and also al your Curates therwith. And because al our dueties is, earnestly and deuoutly to pray for the prosperous estate of our soueraignes, the King and Queene of this Realm, I do finally require and pray you, as hartily as I can, to pray for their maiesties accordingly, and specially that it may please almighty God, to send vnto her grace a good tyme, and to make her a glad mother, which cannot be but vnto vs all great ioy, much comfort, and inestimable profite. Geuen at London the 19th day of the moneth of Febr, Page 1532 in the yere of our Lord God, after the computation of the church of England, 1554. and of my translation, the 16.

The forme of absolution, to be kept by the Pastors and Curates, in priuate confessions, concernyng this reconciliation.

OvR Lord Iesus Christ absolue you, and by the Apostolike authoritie to me graunted and committed,* I absolue you from the sentences of excommunication, and from all other censures and paynes, into the which you be fallen by reason of heresie, or schisme, or any other wayes: and I restore you vnto the vnity of our holy mother the Church, and the Communion of all Sacramentes, dispensing with you for all manner of irregularitie: and by the same authoritie, I absolue you from all your sinnes, In the name of the father, and of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost. Amen.

¶The lamentable history of Maister Iames Hales, Iudge.

IN the history of M. Hooper mention was touched a little before of Iudge Hales,* wherefore somethyng would be sayd more in this place touching that matter. But because the story of that man and of his ende is sufficiently comprehended in our first booke of Acts and Monumēts, we shall not greatly need to stand vpon rehersall of euery perticular matter touching the whole, but only taking the chieftest, and leauyng the rest, we will report somewhat of the communication betwene the B. of Winchester & hym: declaring withal how false and vntrue the excuse is of our aduersaries, which so precisely by the law defend thēselues and say, that in all their doyngs they did nothing but by y^e Law, to beare them out. Which if it be so, how did they thē to Anne Askew? What law had they when they had condemned her first for a dead woman, then afterward to rack her? By what law did they cal vp M. Hooper & prison him for the Queenes debt, when the Queene in very deede did owe hym foure score pounds, and kept hym a yeaere and a halfe in prison, and gaue hym neuer a penny? pag. 1577. By what law did B. Boner condemn and burne Richard Mekins, a lad of xv. yeaeres, when the first Iurie had quit hym, and at the stake reuoked all heresies, and praised the sayd Boner to be a good man: and also hauing him in prison, would not suffer his father and mother to come to hym, to comfort their owne chylde? pag. 1168. What lawe had they to put Maister Rogers in prison, when hee dyd neyther preache nor reade Lecture after the tyme of the Queenes inhibition, and when they had kept hym in his owne house halfe a yeaere, beyng not depriued of anye liuyng, yet would not let hym haue a halfe peny of his owne liuyngs to relieue hym, his wyfe, and xi. childrē? pag. 1574. By what law was Thomas Tomkins hand burnt, and afterward his body consumed to ashes? What good law or honestie was there to burne the 3. poore womē at Garnsey, with the infant chyld fallyng out of the mothers wōbe when as they all before theyr death recanted their wordes and opinions, and were neuer abiured before? So here likewyse in this case, what order or right of law did Steuen Gardiner follow in troubllyng & imprisoning Iudge Hales, when he had done nothyng neither agaynst Gods law, nor mans law, in proceeding by order of law against certayne presumptuous persones, which both before the law, and agaynst the law then in force, tooke vpon them to say their Masse? as ye shall heare in these his answers and communication had with Steuen Gardiner here vnder ensuyng.

¶The communication betwene the Lord Chauncellour and Iudge Hales, beyng there among other Iudges, to take his oth in Westminster hall. An. 1553. October. 6.

Lord Chauncellour. I. Hales.

MAister Hales ye shall vnderstand, that lyke as the Queenes highnes hath heretofore conceiued good opinion of you, especially for that ye stood both faithfully & lawfully in her cause of iust succession, refusing to set your hand to the booke among others y^t were against her grace in that behalf: * so now, through your owne late desertes against certaine her highnes doings, ye stand not well in her graces fauor: and therefore, before ye take any othe, it shall be necessary for you to make your purgation.

Hales.

I pray you my L. what is the cause?

Chaune.

Information is geuen, that he haue indited certaine priests in Kent, for saying masse.

Hales.

My L. it is not so, I indited none, but in deed certaine inditements of like matter were brought before me at y^e last assises there holden, & I gaue order therin as the law required. For I haue protested y^e law, against which, in cases of iustice, I wil neuer (God willing) proceede, nor in any wise dissemble, but w^t the same shew forth my cōscience, & if it wer to do again, I would do no lesse thē I did.

Chanc.

Yea, M. Hales, your conscience is knowen well enough. I know ye lacke no conscience.

Hales.

My L. ye may do well to search your owne conscience, for myne is better known to my selfe, then to you: & to be plaine, I did as wel vse iustice in your said masse case by my conscience, as by lawe, wherein I am fully bent to stand in trial to the vttermost that can be objected. And if I haue therin done any iniury or wrong, let me be iudged by the law, for I will seeke no better defence, considering chiefly that it is my profession.

Chaunc.

Why M. Hales although you had the rigor of the lawe on your side, * yet ye might haue had regarde to the Queenes highnes present doyngs in that case. And further, although ye seeme to be more then precise in the law, yet I thinke ye would be very loth to yeld to the extremitie of such aduantage as might be gathered agaynst your proceedings in the law, as ye haue sometime taken vpon you in place of iustice, and if it were well tried, I beleue ye should not be well able to stand honestly therto.

Hales.

My L. I am not so perfect, but I may erre for lacke of knowledge. But both in conscience and such knowlege of the law as God hath geuen me, I will doe nothing but I will maintaine it, & abide in it: and if my goods and all that I haue be not able to counterpeise the case, my bodye shalbe redy to serue the turne, for they be all at y^e Queenes highnes pleasure.

Chanc.

Ah sir, ye be very quicke & stout in your aunswers,* But as it should seeme, that which you did was more of a will, fauouring the opinion of your religion agaynst the seruice now vsed, then for any occasion or zeale of Iustice, seyng the Queens highnes doth set it foorth as yet, wishing all her faithfull subiects to embrace it accordingly: & where you offer both body & goods in your triall, there is no such matter required at your hands, and yet ye shal not haue your owne will neither.

Hales.

My L. I seeke not wilfull wil, but to shew my selfe as I am bound in loue to God, & obedience to y^e Queenes maiestie, in whose cause willingly for iustice sake, all other respects set apart, I did of late (as your Lordship knoweth) aduenture as much as I had. And as for my religion, I trust it be such as pleaseth God, wherein I am ready to aduenture as well my life, as my substance, if I be called therunto. And so in lacke of myne owne power and wyll, the Lords will be fulfilled.

Chanc.

Seeying ye be at this point M. Hales, I wyll presently make an ende with you. The Queenes hyghnesse shall be informed of your opinion and declaration. And as her grace shall thereupon determine, ye shall haue knowledge. Until which time ye may depart as ye came, without your oth: for as it appeareth, ye are scarce worthy the place appoynted.

Hales.

I thanke your Lordship, and as for my vocation, beyng doth a burthen and a charge more then euer I desired to take vpon me: when so euer it shall please the Queenes highnes to ease me thereof, I shall most humbly with due contentation obey the same: and so hee departed from the barre.

Not many dayes after this communication or colloquie in Westminster hall,* which was October 6. An. 1553. Maister Hales at the commaundement of the Bish. was committed to the Kynges Benche, where hee remayned constant vntill Lent: then was remooued to the Counter in Breadstreete, and afterward from thence was caried to the Fleete.

Beyng in the Fleete, what it was that he had granted vnto the Byshops by their fraudulent assaults and perswasions, namely, of D. Day bishop of Chichester, and of Iudge Portman (as it is thought) ouercome at last, I haue not to say.

This is certaine, that shortly after callyng hymselfe better to remembraunce,* he was brought to great repentaunce and terror of conscience. In so much, that for very anguish of hart, he was redy with his penknife to kil him selfe there in the prison, and had (no doubt) so done, had not the mercifull prouidence of the Lord, rescued hym miraculously, as ye shall heare.

It hapned when supper tyme came that he should be called downe, M. Hales hauing little mynd either to eate or drink, gate him straight way to bed, where he lay al the night sobbing & groning, & tooke (God knoweth) litle rest or sleepe. At length when morning came, about sixe of the clock, he sent his seruant for a cup of beere, vnder pretence Page 1533 as though he were thirsty, and desirous to drink, whether the cause were true or fained, it is vnknown: but this folowed, y^t his man was yet scarce out of the chamber, when he with his penknife had wouëd himself in diuers places of his body, and was purposed (no doubt) to haue destroyed himselfe, had not the goodnesse of the Lord geuen present helpe in tyme of oportunitie. Wherby it is euident for all men to vnderstand, how gods fauour was not absent from the man, although he thought hymselfe vtterly forsaken for his deniall, as by the sequele may wel apeare.

For as soone as he had sent his man out of his chamber (see what God would haue done) euen afore the chamber dore eftsoones the Butler met him:  who being desired to fil the drinke, & taking the cup, the other returned agayne vnto his M. at the same very tyme when he was working his owne destructiō: wherby M. Hales at that time was stopt of his purpose, & preserued not without gods manifest good will & prouidence. When Winchester had knowledge of it,  straightway he taketh occasion thereby to blaspheme the doctrine of the Gospell, which he openly in the starre chāber called the doctrine of desperation. M. Hales being within a while after recouered of those woundes, & deliuered out of prison, getteth hymselfe home vnto hys house: where he, either for the greatnes of his sorrow, or for lacke of good counsell, or for that he would auoyde the necessitie of hearing masse, hauing all things set in an order a good while before that, pertaining to his testament, casting himself into a shalow riuer, * was drowned therein: which was about the beginning of the month of February, or in the month of Ianuary before, an. 1555.

The vnhappy chance of this so worthy a Iudge, was surely the cause of great sorrowe and grieve vnto all good men, & it gaue occasion besides vnto certayne Diuines, to stand some thyng in doubt with themselues, whether hee were reprobate, or saued, or no: about which matter it is not for me to determine either this way or that: * for he that is our Iudge, the same shalbe his Iudge: and he it is that will lay all things open when the time commeth. This in the meane time is certaine & sure, that the deed of the man in my mind ought in no wise to be allowed, which if he did wittingly, then do I discommend the mans reason. But if he did it in phrenesie & as beyng out of his wit, thē do I greatly pity his case.

Yet notwithstanding, seeing gods iudgements bee secret, and we likewise in doubt vpon what entent hee dyd thus punish himselfe, neither againe is any man certaine, whether he did repent or no, before the last breth went out of his body, me seemeth their opinion is more indifferent herein, which do rather disallow the example of the dead, then dispayre of his saluation.

Otherwyse, if we wyll adiudge all those to hell, that haue departed the world after this sort, how many examples haue wee in the first persecutions of the Churche, of those men and women, who beyng registred in the works of worthy writers, haue notwithstanding their praise and commendation.

For what shall I thinke of those yong men, who being sought for to do sacrifice to heathen Idols,* did cast downe themselues headlong, and brake their owne neckes, to auoyd such horrible pollution of themselues? What shall I say of those virgins of Antioch, who to the end they might not defile themselues with vncleannes, and with idolatry through the perswasio of their mother, casting themselues headlong into a riuer together with their mother, did fordo themselues,* although not in the same water, yet after the same maner of drouning, as this M. Hales did? What shall I say of other two sisters which for the self same quarell did violently throw themselues headlong into the sea, as Eusebius doth record? In whome though perchaunce there was no lesse confidence to beare out the pains which should be ministred of the wicked vnto them, yet that their good desire to kepe their faith and religion vnspotted, was commended and praised.

Another like example of death is mentioned by Nicephorus,* & that in an other virgin likewise, whose name is expressed in Hierome to be Brassila Dyrachina, who to keepe her virginie, fayned her selfe to be a witch, and so conuenting with the yong man which went about to defloure her, pretended that she would geue hym an Hearbe which should preserue hym from all kynd of weapons: & so to prooue it in her selfe, layd the herbe vpon her owne throte, bidding him smite, wherby she was slayne, and so with the losse of her lyfe, her virginie was saued.

Hreunto may be ioyned the like death of Sophronia a Matrone of Rome, who whē she was required of Maxentius the tyrant to be defiled, and saw her husband more slacke then hee ought to haue bene in sauynge her honesty, bidding them that were sent for her, to tary a whyle tyll she made her ready, went into her chamber, and wyth a weapon thrust her selfe through the brest and dyed. Now who is he that would reprehend the worthy acte of Achetes, which biting of his owne tong, did spit it out into the harlots face?

These examples I do not here inferre as going about either to excuse, or to mainteyne the hainous facte of M. Hales, which I would wish rather by silence might bee drowned in obliuion: but yet notwithstanding as touching the person of the man, whatsoever his fact was, because we are not sure whether he at the last breath repented: Againe, because we do not know, nor are able to comprehend the bottomles depth of the graces and mercies which are in Christ Iesu our sauour, we will leaue therfore the final iudgement of him, to the determination of him who is only appointed iudge both of the quicke and the dead.

¶The history of Thomas Tomkins, hauyng first his hand burned, after was burned hymselfe by B. Boner, for the constant testimonie of Christes true profession.

MENTion was made before of sixe prisoners,* brought & examined before B. Boner, the 8. of February, whole names were Tomkins, Pigot, Knight, Hanks, Laurence, and Hunter. All which, though they receiued theyr condemnation together the next day after, yet because the tyme of their execution was then driuen of from February til the next month of March, I did therefore referre the story of them to this present moneth of March aforesayde, wherin now remayneth seuerally to entreat of the Martyrdome of these 6. persons, as the order and time of their suffrings seuerally do require. Of the which 6. aforenamed martyrs, the first was Tho. Tomkins burned in Smithfield, the 16. day of March, an. 1555.

This Thomas Tomkins a Weauer by his occupation, dwellyng in Shordich, and of the Dioces of London,* was of such conuersation and disposition so godly, that if any woman had come vnto him with her web, as sometyme they did three or foure in a day, hee would alwayes begin with praier. Or if any other had come to talk of any matter, he would likewyse first begin with prayer. And if any had sought vnto hym to borrowe money, he would shew him such money as he had in his purse, and bid hym take it.

And when they came to repay it agayne, so far of was he from seeking any vsury at their hand, or from straight exaction of his due, that he would bid them keepe it longer, while they were better able. And these were the conditions of Thomas Tomkins, testified yet to this present day by the most part of all his neighbors, and almost of all his Parish which knew him, as M. Skinner, M. Leeke, and other moe. Of whom moe then halfe a dosen at once came to me discrete and substantiall men, reporting y^e same vnto me, recording moreouer as followeth: That Doct. Boner B. of London kept the sayd Tomkins with hym in prison halfe a yeare. Duryng which tyme the sayd Bishop was so rigorous vnto hym, that he beat hym bitterly about the face, whereby his face was swelled. Where vpon the Bish. caused hys beard to be shauen, and gaue the Barbour xij.d.

Touching whiche shauyng of Thomas Tomkyns beard, this is more to be added:* Bishop Boner hauyng Tomkins with him prisoner at Fulham, in the month of Iuly, did set him with his other worke folkes, to make hay. And seing him to labour so well, the Bishop sittynge him downe, sayd: Wel, I like thee well, for thou labourest well: I trust thou wilt be a good Catholicke. My Lord, sayd he, Saint Paule sayth: He that doth not labour, is not worthy to eate. Boner said: Ah, s. Paul is a * great man w^t thee. And so after such other talke, the B. inferring moreouer, wished his beard of, saying, that so he would loke like a catholike. My L. said Tomkins, before my beard grew. I was, I trust a good christian, & so I trust to be my beard beyng on. But Boner in fine sent for the Barber, & caused his beard to be shauē of. The very cause was for that Boner had pluckt of a peece of his beard before.

The burning of Thomas Tomkins hand by Bishop Boner, who not long after burnt also his body.

The rage of this bishop was not so great against him, but the constancie of the partie was much greater with pacience to beare it:  who although he had not the learning as other haue, yet hee was so endued with Gods mighty spirite, and so constantly planted in the perfect knowledge of Gods truth, that by no meanes he could be remooued from the confession of truth, to impietie and error. Whereuppon Boner the Byshop being greatly vexed agaynste the poore man, when he sawe that by no perswasions he coulde preuaile with him, deuised an other practise not so straunge as cruel, further to try his constancie, to the intent, that seeing he could not otherwise conuince him by doctrine of Scriptures, yet he might ouerthrow him by some forefeeling and terror of death. So hauing with him M. Harpsfielde, M. Pendleton, Doctor Chedsey, maister Willerton, and other standing by, hee called for Thomas Tomkins, who comming before the Bishop, and standing as he was woont in defence of his faith, the bishop fel from beating to burning. Who hauing there a taper or waxe candle of three or foure wikes standing vpon the table, thought there to represent vnto vs,  as it were, the olde Image of king Porsenna. For as he burned the hand of Scaeuola, so this Catholike bishop tooke Tomkins by the fingers, and held his hand directly ouer the flame, supposing that by the smart and pain of the fire being terrified, he wold leaue off the defence of his doctrine, which he had receiued.

*Tomkins thinking no otherwise, but there presently to die, began to commend him selfe vnto the Lord, saying: O Lorde into thy handes I commend my spirite. &c. In the time that hys hand was in burning, the sayde Tomkins afterwarde reported to one Iames Hinse, that hys spirite was so rapte vp, that he fealt no paine. In the whiche burning he neuer shronke, till the vaines shronke, and the sinewes braste, and the water did spirte into maister Harpsfieldes face: In so much that the sayd maister Harpsfield mooued wyth pitie, desired the Byshop to stay, saying, that he had tried hym enough. This burning was in the Hall at Fulham.

And where the Byshoppe thought by that meanes to driue him from his opinions, it prooued muche otherwise: for this Christian Scaeuola, so valiauntly did despise, abide, and endure that burning, that we haue lesse cause heereafter to meruaile at the manfulnesse of that Romaine Scaeuola: I would to God the other had as well followed the example of that Hetruscan Tyrant. For he, after the left hand of Scaeuola was halfe burned, either satisfied with his punishment, or ouercome by his manhoode, or driuen away by feare, sent hym home safe vnto his people: wheras Boner hitherto not contented with the burning of hys hande, rested not vntill he had consumed his whole body into ashes, at London in Smithfield.

But before we come to his suffering, we will firste entreat of some parte of his examination & articles, with hys answeres and confession thereunto annexed, as it is credibly in Register recorded.

The first examination of Thomas Tomkins.

THis faithfull and valiaunt souldiers of God Thomas Tomkins, * after he had remained the space (as is sayde) of halfe a yere in prison, about the 8. day of Februarye, was broughte with certaine other before Boner sitting in hys Consistorie, to be examined. To whome first was brought forth a certaine bill or schedule subscribed (as it appeared) with his owne hande, the fifte day of the same moneth laste before, conteining these wordes folowing.

Thomas Tomkins of Shordiche, and of the Dioces of London, hath beleueed and doth beleeeue,* that in the sacrament of the aultare, vnder the formes of breade and wine, there is not the very body and bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ in substaunce, but only a token and remembraunce thereof, the very body and bloude of Christ onely being in heauen and no where els.

By me Thomas Tomkins.

Wherupon he was asked whether he did acknowledge the same subscription to be of his own hand. To the which he graūted, confessing it so to be. This being done, the Byshop went about to persuade him, (w^t wordes,* rather then w^t reasons) to relinquish his opinions, & to returne againe to the vnity of the catholicke church, promising if he would so do, to remit all that was past: but he constantly denied so to do. When the Bishop saw he could not so conuince him, he brought forth and read to him an other wryting containing Articles and Interrogatories whereunto he shoulde come the next day and answer: in the meane time he shuld deliberate vnto himself what to do, & so the next day, being the 9. day of March, at 8. of the clocke in the morning, to be present in the same place againe, to geue his determinate answer what he would do in the premisses, and then either to reuoke and reclaime himself, or els in the after noone the same day to come againe & haue iustice (as he called it) ministred vnto him: the copy of which articles here foloweth.

Articles obiected and ministred the 8. day of Februarie against Tho. Tomkins, with his owne hand subscribing to the same.

THou doest beleeeue that in the Sacrament of the aultare vnder the formes of bread and wine there is not,* by the omnipotent power of almighty God and his holy woorde, really, truely, and in very deede, the very true and naturall body of our Sauour Iesus Christ, as touching the substaunce thereof, which was conceiued in the wombe of the virgine Mary, and hanged vpon the crosse, suffering Passion and death there for the life of the worlde.

I doe so beleeeue.

*Thou doest beleeeue that after the consecration of the breade and wine prepared for the vse of the Sacramente of the aultare, there doth remaine the very substance of material bread and materiall wine, not changed nor altered in substance by the power of almighty God, but remaining as it did before.

I doe so beleeeue.

*Thou doest beleeeue that it is an vntrue doctrine, and a false beliefe to thinke or say that in the Sacrament of the aultare there is after the consecration of the bread and wine, the substaunce of Christes naturall body and bloude, by the omnipotent power of almighty God and his holy worde.

I doe so beleeeue.

Thou doest beleeeue that thy parents, kinsfolkes, frendes, and acquaintaunce,* and also thy Godfathers and Godmother, and all people did erre, and were deceiued, if they did beleeeue that in the Sacrament of the aultar there was, after the consecration, the body and bloude of Christe, and that there did not remaine the substaunce of materiall bread and wine.

I doe so beleeeue.

By me Thomas Tomkins.

The second examination of Thomas Tomkins.

THE next day, being the 9. of Februarie, at 8. of the clocke before noon,* the said Thomas Tomkins, (according to the former commaundement) was brought againe into the place afore named, before the Bishoppe and other hys assistants, where the foresayd Articles were propounded vnto him: whereunto he aunswered as foloweth.

*To the first he said, that he did so beleeeue, as in the same is contained.

To the second he sayd that it was onely bread, & a participatiō of Christes death and passion, and so do the scriptures teach.

To the third he said and did beleeeue, it was a false doctrine, to beleeeue and thinke as is contained in this Article.

To the fourth, he did also beleeeue the same.

After this aunswere, he did also subscribe hys name to the sayd Articles. Whereupon the Bishop drawing out of his bosome another confession subscribed wyth Tomkins owne hande, and also that article that was the first day obiected against him, caused the same to be openly read, and then willed him to reuoke and deny his sayd opinions: the which he vtterly refused to do, and therefore was commanded to appeare before the Byshop againe in the same place at two of the clocke in the after noone.

The Bishop repeateth againe the confession of Thom.
Tomkins wrytten before by the sayd Bishop of London, and subscribed by the sayd Tomkins, the 26. day Septemb. An.
1554. which is this.

I Thomas Tomkins of the Parish of Shordich, in the Diocesse of London,* hauing confessed and declared openly heeretofore to Edmund Bishop of London mine Ordinarie, that my beliefe hathe bene many yeares past, and is at this present: that the body of our Sauour Iesus Christ is not truely and in very deede in the Sacrament of the aultare, but onely in heauen, and so in heauen, that it can not nowe in deede be really and truely in the Sacramente of the altare.

And moreouer, hauing likewise confessed and declared to my said Ordinarie openly many times, that although the church, called the Catholicke Church, hathe allowed and doeth allowe the Masse and sacrifice made and done therein, as a wholesome, profitable, & a godly thing: yet my beliefe hath ben many yeres past, & is at this present, that the said Masse is full of superstition, plaine idolatrie, and vnprofitable for my soule, & so haue I called it many times, and take it at this present.

*Hauing also likewise confessed and declared to my said Ordinarie, that the Sacrament of Baptisme oughte to be onely in the vulgar tounge, and not otherwise ministred, and also without any such ceremonies, as customably are vsed in the Latine church, and otherwise not to be allowed.

Finally, being many times and ofte called openly before my said Ordinarie, and talked withall touching all my sayd confessions and declarations,* both by the saide mine Ordinarie & diuers other learned men, aswel his Chaplaines as other, and counselled by all them to embrace the truthe, and to recant mine errour in the premisses, which they tolde me was plaine heresie and manifest errour: do testifie and declare hereby, that I do and wil continually stand to my saide confession, declaration, and beliefe, in all the premisses & euery part therof, and in no wise recant or go frō any part of the same. In witnesse wherof I haue subscribed, & passed this wryting the 26. day of Septemb. the yeare aforesayd.

By me Thomas Tomkyns aforesaid.

The names of them that sate vppon Thomas Tomkins at this Session, were these, Edmund Boner,* Iohn Fecknam Deane of Paules, Iohn Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, Iohn Morwen master of Art, Thomas Morton parson of Fulham, Tristram Swadell, Thom. More, Thomas Beckinsaw, Iames Cline, clearkes.

The last appearance of Tho. Tomkins before Boner and the Commissioners.

THE same daye and place, at two of the clocke in the after noone, he was (the last time) brought forth before the bishops of London, Bath, and Saint Dauids, with others: where hee was earnestly exhorted by the sayd Bishoppe of Bath, to reuoke & leaue off his opinions. Unto whome he answered: My Lord, I was borne & brought vp in ignoraunce vntill nowe of late yeares. And nowe I know the truthe, wherein I will continue vnto the death.

Then Boner caused all his articles and confession to be again openly red, and so in hys accustomed maner persuaded with hym to recant. To whome hee finally sayde: My Lord, I can not see but that you would haue me to forsake the truth, and to fall into errour and heresie. The Byshop seeing he would not recant, did proceede in his law, and so gaue sentence of condemnation vpon him.

The burning of the blessed Martyr, Thomas Tomkyns.

Then he deliuered him to the sheriffe of London,* who caried him straighte vnto Newgate, where hee remayned most ioyous and constant, vntill the 16. day of March next after: on which day, hee was by the sayde Sheriffe conueied into Smithfield, and there sealed vp his faith in the flaming fire, to the glory of Gods holy name, and confirmation of the weake.

A notable historie of W. Hunter, a yong man of 19. yere, pursued to death by iustice Browne for the Gospels sake, worthy of all young men and parents to be red.

The 26. day of the sayde moneth of Marche, the yeare aforesayde, followed the Martyrdome of William Hunter, a right godly young man of the age of xix. yeares, and borne of like godly parents: by whome hee was not onely instructed in true religion and godlinesse, but also confirmed by them vnto death, after a rare and strange example, Page 1536 worthy to be noted and had in admiration of all parentes. Wherein may appeare a singulare spectacle, not onely of a maruelous fortitude in the partie so young: but also in hys parents, to beholde nature in them striuing with religion, and ouercome of the same.* Wherby Christian parents may learne what is to be done not only in their children, but also in them selues, if neede at any time do require, or godlynnesse should demaund the duetie of a christian man against naturall affection. Example whereof in the sequele of thys hystorie we haue here presēt before our eyes. Which hystorie as it was faithfully drawen out by Robert Hunter hys owne brother (who being present with his brother William, & neuer left him till his death, sent the true report vnto vs) we haue heere with like faithfulness placed and recorded the same, as followeth.

*William Hunter being a prētise in London, in the first yeare of Queene Marie, was commaunded at the Easter next following, to receiue the Communion at a Masse, by the Priest of the Parish where hee dwelte, called Colman streete: whyche, because hee refused to doe, hee was verye much threatned that he shoulde be therefore brought before the Bishop of London. Wherefore William Hunters master, one Thomas Tailour, a silke weauer, required William Hunter, to go and depart from him, lest that he shuld come in daunger, because of him, if hee continued in hys house. For the which causes, William Hunter tooke leaue of his said maister, and thence came to Burntwoode where his father dwelt, with whome he remained afterwarde, about the space of halfe a quarter of a yeare.

After this it happened, within 5. or 6. wekes, that William going into the chappell of Burntwoode, and finiding there a Bible lying on a deske, did reade therein. In the meane time there came in one father Atwell a Sumner, which hearing William read in y^e Bible, said to him, what medlest thou with the Bible? Knowest thou what thou readest, and canst thou expound the Scriptures?

To whome William aunswared and sayde: father Atwell,* I take not vppon me to expounde the Scriptures, except I were dispensed withall, but I finiding the Bible here when I came, red in it to my comfort. To whome father Atwell sayde: it was neuer mery since the Bible came abroad in English.

*To the which words William answered, saying: Father Atwell, say not so for Gods sake, for it is Gods booke, out of the which euery one that hath the grace, may learne to knowe what things both please God, & also what displeaseth him. Then sayd father Atwel: could we not tell before this time, as well as now, how God was serued: William answered: no father Atwel, nothing so wel, as we maye now, if that we might haue his blessed word amongst vs still as we haue had. It is true sayde father Atwell, if it be as you say.

Well sayd William Hunter, it liketh me very well, and I pray God that we may haue the blessed Bible amongst vs continually.* To the which wordes father Atwell sayd, I perceiue your minde well enoughe, you are one of them that misliketh the Queenes lawes, and therefore you came frō London, I heare say. You learned these waies at London, but for all that, sayde father Atwel, you must turne an other leafe, or els you and a great sorte moe heretickes wil broyle for this geare, I warrāt you. To the which wordes William sayd: God geue me grace that I may beleue hys worde, & confesse his name, whatsoeuer come therof. Confesse his name, quoth olde Atwell? no, no, ye will goe to the deuill all of you, and confesse his name.

What, sayde William? you say not well father Atwell. At the which wordes hee went oute of the Chappell in a great furie,* saying: I am not able to reason with thee, but I will fetch one straight way which shall talke with thee, I warrant thee thou hereticke. And hee leauing William Hunter reading in the Bible, straight wayes brought one Thomas Wood, who was then vicar of Southweld, which was at an alehouse euen ouer against the sayde Chappell:* who hearing olde Atwell say, that William Hunter was reading of the Bible in the chappel, came by and by to him, and finding him reading in the Bible, tooke the matter very hainously, saying: Sirha, who gaue thee leaue to reade in the Bible and to expound it?

Then William answered: I expound not the Scriptures Syr, but reade them for my comfort. What medlest thou with them at all, sayde the Uicar? It becommeth not thee, nor none suche to meddle with the Scriptures, But William answered: I wil read the Scriptures God willing, while I liue, and you ought (M. vicar) not to discourage any mā for that matter, but rather exhort men diligētly to read the scriptures for your discharge and their own.

Unto the which the Uicare answered: It becommeth thee well to tell me what I haue to doe. I see thou arte an hereticke, by thy wordes, William sayd, I am no hereticke for speaking the truthe. But the Uicar sayde,* it is a merye worlde when such as thou arte, shall teache vs what is the truthe, Thou art meddling, father Atwel telles me with the 6. of Iohn, wherein thou maist perceiue, how Christ saith: Except that yee eate the flesh of Christ and drinke his bloude, yee haue no life in you. William sayd, I reade the 6. of Iohn, in deede: howbeit, I made no exposition on it.

Then said father Atwel, when you read it I saide, that you there might vnderstande howe that in the Sacrament of the aultar is Christes very natural body and bloud: vnto the which you answered, howe that you would take the scriptures as they are, & that you would meddle wyth no great exposition, except that ye were dispensed with all.

Ah, sayd the Uicar? what say you to the blessed (Sacrament of the aultar) beleueest thou not in it,* & that the bread and wine is transubstantiated into the very body & bloude of Christ? William answered, I learne no such thing in the 6. of Iohn, as you speake of. Why sayde the Uicare, doest thou not beleue in the Sacrament of the aultare? I beleue sayde William Hunter, all that Gods word teacheth. Why sayd the Uicar thou mayest learne this which I say plainly in the 6. of Iohn.

Then sayde William, you vnderstand Christe wordes muche like the carnall Capernaites,* whych thoughte that Christe woulde haue geuen them his flesh to feede vppon, which opinion our sauour Christ corrected, when he said. The wordes which I speake to you, are spirite and life.

Now, quoth the Uicar, I haue found you out: now I see that thou art an hereticke in deede, and that thou doest not beleue in the sacrament of the aultar.

Then said William Hunter,* wheras you doubt my beliefe, I would it were tried whether that you or I woulde stand faster in our faith. Yea thou hereticke, (sayde the Uicar) wouldest thou haue it so tried? William Hunter aunswered, that which you call heresie, I serue my Lorde God withall.
